PREFACE.

WHOEVER ſeriouſly reflects upon the powers and capacities of the human mind, regarding them as the work of him who doeth nothing in vain, and compares them with thoſe of the inferior creatures; will readily perceive that man alone was created to be religious. Of all the inhabitants of the earth, none elſe are capable of receiving any knowledge of their Creator, or of rendering him any worſhip and praiſe: Man alone poſſeſſes the capacity of diſtinguiſhing betwixt Truth and Falſhood; betwixt moral good and evil; and of being inſtructed in ſocial and relative duties, with the obligations which he lies under to perform them, and the advantages of ſo doing: He alone is capable of being governed by a law, and of underſtanding and being influenced by the propoſal of rewards and puniſhments; of acting under the eye of an inviſible obſerver, and with reference to the future ſeaſon of retribution. From theſe premiſes we infer, with abſolute certainty, that the all-wiſe Creator thus conſtituted our minds, and conferred upon us theſe diſtinguiſhing powers, in order to render us capable of Religion, for the purpoſes of his own glory, and our felicity.

When further we conſider what this word Religion implies; and define it, in it's moſt general acceptation, to be ſuch an habitual regard to the one, true, living, and eternal God, the Creator, Governor, and Judge of all, as influences us to ſeek his favour, do his will, and aim at his glory, in the temper of our hearts, and the regulation of our actions, both in the worſhip we render to him, and the duties we perform to man for his ſake, and according to his will: we ſhall be conſtrained to allow, that Religion is the moſt reaſonable and excellent thing in the world.—Doubtleſs the exerciſes of true devotion form the nobleſt effort of the human mind, which in them emulates the angelic nature: This conſcientious regard to the all-ſeeing eye of a righteous and omnipotent Judge, is the beſt bond of human ſociety, and regulator of our relative conduct: and were this principle of action univerſal and complete, human laws and tribunals would be entirely unneceſſary. This would alſo moſt effectually moderate our appetites and paſſions, and produce the greateſt poſſible proportion of peace, contentment, and felicity, perſonal and ſocial, of which our nature in its preſent ſtate is capable. And when we look forwards beyond the grave, to that immortality and future world of recompence, which Reaſon itſelf pronounces at leaſt highly probable; the abſolute neceſſity of Religion to our felicity in that eternal ſtate appears ſelf-evident.

Hence with certainty we alſo determine that Religion is that great buſineſs, to which all men ſhould attend; and that bleſſing, after which all men ſhould ſeek, whatever elſe is neglected, or ſuperſeded.

But tho' it be demonſtrable that man is capable of religion, and in duty and intereſt bound thereto; yet when we come to facts, we muſt conclude, that, left to himſelf, he would never be religious.—According to the general definition above given, where ſhall we find religion upon earth, in any age or nation, which hath not poſſeſſed in a greater or leſſer degree the advantage of thoſe writings, which we will now take for granted, and hereafter prove to be, a divine Revelation?—An aſſemblage of the wildeſt abſurdities in opinion, the moſt ſtupid ſuperſtitions in worſhip, and the moſt dangerous miſtakes, as well as the moſt abandoned licentiouſneſs in morals, forms that Religion, (if it may be dignified by ſo venerable a name,) which forces itſelf upon our obſervation, wherever the light of revelation hath not ſhone. And we cannot ſo much as except one nation, or one city, or ſcarce one family from this general rule. If there have been a few individuals, who have manifeſted ſomewhat not totally diſſimilar from true religion; and we are diſpoſed to allow, that indeed it was ſuch: it would be more rational to aſcribe it to the remains of original tradition, or even to a perſonal revelation afforded them for their own benefit, tho' not authenticated for the good of others; than to make it an exception from the general rule, that without revelation, there never was on earth, ſince Adam's fall, any true religion.

Men-

Men indeed living under the light of revelation, and making what uſe they chooſe of that light, may draw up ſyſtems of natural religion plauſible enough, and apparently very rational. But it ſhould be remembered, that it is all borrowed originally from the Bible, tho' with equal abſurdity and ingratitude, ſet up in oppoſition to it's ſacred and ſublime truths: and univerſal experience demonſtrates that no ſuch natural religion ever was diſcovered, and delineated by men, who had never ſeen any part of the Bible, or any thing deduced from that ſource.

However reaſonable and excellent many of thoſe truths and precepts are, which are propoſed to us as the oracles of reaſon; not one of them ever was diſcovered and propoſed by Reaſon alone, with ſuch certainty, clearneſs, and authority, as to become a conſtant principle and rule of action, in ſecret, and in public, towards God, and towards man.

Indeed, after all the ſuppoſed improvements and diſcoveries of modern times, if we reject the peculiar Doctrines of the Bible, what darkneſs and uncertainty reſt upon points the moſt important?—Even in reſpect of the immortality of the ſoul, when Reaſon, at her beſt advantage, has done her utmoſt; her boaſted power of Demonſtration fails: much more in uncertainty does ſhe leave us about the nature of the future world, and the rule of judgment, with which our whole conduct, and our hope and peace are ſo connected. The conſiſtency of perfect juſtice with boundleſs mercy is hard, if not impoſſible by her light, to be perceived: it ſtill remains dubious whether God will puniſh at all, or pardon at all; or by what rules he means to puniſh, or pardon: and indeed a thick cloud veils our underſtandings, and diſcourages our enquiries, wherever we turn, if we leave the light of God's teſtimony, to bewilder ourſelves in ſpeculations about matters evidently beyond our reach. How much worſe hath it been with almoſt all the nations of the earth, and generations of men? and ſo far have men been from advancing in religious knowledge, where revelation hath not been afforded; that ſuch nations evidently ſeem to have ſunk deeper and deeper into ignorance, and ſeveral of them almoſt into abſolute Atheiſm: as if the little glimmering that ſhone amongſt them, was the effect of original tradition; which gradually expiring, hath left them in utter darkneſs.

But the moſt complete information of truths, and duties, would be inadequate to the production of the deſired effect; except ſuch information was enforced by ſufficient authority, gave neceſſary encouragement, and propoſed effectual aſſiſtance. The diſcovery of our duty, and of it's reaſonableneſs is utterly unavailing, whilſt we are under the dominion of our head-ſtrong luſts and paſſions. There is in that caſe no diſpoſition in the mind to perform the dictates even of our own conſcience. A Heathen could ſay; Video meliora proboque, deteriora ſequor. The propoſal of virtue as amiable, and excellent, with the feeble recommendation of the moraliſt's pen, is vaſtly inferior in it's energy, to the authoritative command and ſanction of the Almighty, denouncing his awful diſpleaſure againſt the tranſgreſſor: And yet matter of fact undeniably ſhews, that men venture upon ſin, even with the threatenings of everlaſting miſery ſounding in their ears; nay, with the trembling apprehenſions of it diſmaying their hearts: for divine as well as human laws are weak thro' the fleſh, and with all their ſanctions and barriers, are unable to affix boundaries to the ſwelling torrent of human depravity.

Indeed, were men fully acquainted with the whole character and law of God; with the nature and malignity of ſin; with their own real character and ſituation as ſinners; and with the rule and conſequences of the future judgment: and were they left at the ſame time, utterly deſtitute of the encouragements and aſſiſtances which the Goſpel propoſes, and which form the grand peculiarity of the Bible: This their knowledge, ſo far from rendering them religious, would probably, by leaving them without hope, annihilate all appearances of religion: wherever ſuch appearances are found, which have no reſpect to the mediation of Chriſt, and the aſſiſtance of the holy Spirit; they have their foundation, not in men's knowledge, but in their ignorance of God, and of themſelves, of his law, and of the evil of ſin; as might eaſily be evinced even upon rational principles.

But the propoſal of ſuch encouragements, and ſuch aſſiſtance is entirely out of the province of reaſon: theſe are heavenly things, of which we can know nothing but by revelation from God, and of which we can have no aſſurance but his expreſs declaration, and faithful promiſe. He alone can inform us upon what terms, or in what manner, his honour permits him, and his ſovereign pleaſure diſpoſes him, to forgive his offending creatures; and to communicate thoſe gracious influences, which may produce a holy diſpoſition of heart, and enable them to overcome all thoſe obſtacles, which retard their progreſs, who eſſay to lead a ſober, righteous, and godly life.

From ſuch conſiderations, the neceſſity of a revelation from God may be inferred; and it might reaſonably have been expected, that he would afford ſuch a revelation, if he intended to accept of any worſhip and ſervice from fallen man. Indeed this expectation hath been very general in the world. And as counterfeit coin proves the exiſtence of ſterling money, and the value men put upon it; ſo counterfeit revelations, (inſtead of invalidating the argument;) if they do not prove the exiſtence of a real revelation, yet evince that men felt their need of one, were ſenſible that it would be a moſt valuable acquiſition, and were generally diſpoſed to expect one.

Each of theſe pretended revelations have, one after another, been expoſed, and ſunk into general contempt: and, I believe, that in this age and nation, it may be aſſerted without hazard of contradiction, that there is but one book in the world, that ſo much as appears to be of divine original. This we call the Bible, that is, by way of eminence, the Book: And ſuch is the internal and external evidence, which authenticates it's claim; that I am perſuaded, were men as open to conviction in this matter, as they are in a mathematical proceſs, they could no more, after examination, reject it, than they could contradict an evident demonſtration.

It may, therefore, not be improper to inſert in this place a few of the moſt obvious reaſons, which the more ſtudious Chriſtian is ready to render of that hope, which is in him; grounded upon this firſt principle, that the Bible is the word of God. In order to ſhew that tho' faith and reaſon are diſtinct from, yet they are not contrary to each other; but that it is very reaſonable to believe the Bible to be a divine revelation; and if ſo, then equally reaſonable to take all our meaſures of truth and duty from it; and to bow our underſtandings, and inclinations to it's teaching and governing.

I. Then

I. Then I confeſs it has ſome weight with me, that ſuch numbers of the wiſeſt and beſt of men, in ſo many countries, and during ſo many generations; many of them perſons of peculiar ſerioufneſs, deep penetration, eminent erudition, and acknowledged impartiality in judging of men, and things, have concurred in receiving this Book as the word of God; and have made it the rule of their conduct, the ſtandard of their faith, the foundation of their hope, and the ſource of their comfort, living and dying: and have left the world bearing teſtimony to it's divine excellency, and recommending it to thoſe dear friends, whom they left behind, as the richeſt of all treaſures.—Comparing theſe perſons, in their characters, lives, and deaths, with thoſe who have oppoſed, or neglected the Bible; I cannot but conceive, that a perfectly impartial being, poſſeſſed of ſound judgment and an holy diſpoſition of heart, having this ſtriking contraſt repreſented to him, would open the Bible with profound veneration, and a ſtrong prepoſſeſſion.

II. The miracles recorded in the Scriptures form, even to us, at this diſtance of time and place, a powerful argument in proof of their divine authority. The hiſtories of theſe miracles may be proved to have been publiſhed in the very ages and countries, in which they are declared to have been wrought, in the preſence of numerous witneſſes, enemies as well as friends to the cauſe, in ſupport of which they were performed. A public challenge was thereby given to all men, to contradict or diſprove them, if they are able: but none of thoſe, whoſe reputation, intereſt, and authority moſt required it; and who wanted neither inclination nor opportunity, ever ventured to give them a full inveſtigation. Conſcious that they could not diſprove the facts, they either waved the queſtion, or aſcribed them to cauſes evidently falſe and ridiculous.

As a ſpecimen of what might be urged, in good meaſure at leaſt, in behalf of the other miracles, were not brevity to be conſulted; let us examine into that capital miracle, the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt, after his embittered enemies were ſatisfied of his being really dead. For this one event, once eſtabliſhed, proves beyond diſpute the whole Bible to be a divine revelation; his authority and doctrine eſtabliſhes the Old Teſtament; and the witneſſes of his reſurrection either penned, or ſanctioned, every part of the New Teſtament.

In

In order to prepare men's minds to expect, and notice this event, which was intended to be the grand external evidence of the truth of chriſtianity; in addition to the Old Teſtament prophecies, Jeſus himſelf, publicly, and repeatedly predicted it, with the very time, when it would take place: theſe predictions his enemies, the Jewiſh rulers, noticed; and they employed their utmoſt addreſs and power to prevent any poſſible impoſition in the caſe:—yet, notwithſtanding all their precautions, his body was gone; and neither the ſoldiers, who guarded the ſepulchre, nor themſelves, could give any rational account how, nor whither: unleſs they confirmed, or allowed the teſtimony of his diſciples, who declared that he was riſen from the dead. According to the allowance of all civilized nations, two witneſſes of unimpeached characters and underſtandings are ſufficient, even in caſes of life and death, to prove any fact, of which they declare themſelves to have been ſpectators, and concerning which they are competent judges: and by the ſame allowance, men are ſuppoſed competent to diſtinguiſh with certainty one man from all others, and to prove the identity of his perſon; not only upon long and intimate acquaintance, but even upon a ſingle, tranſient, and often confuſed ſight of him.—Now, in this caſe, here were twelve perſons of good character, plain ſenſe, ſober minds, and ordinary education, that had been the intimate companions of Jeſus Chriſt for ſeveral years, who unanimouſly declared that they frequently ſaw, converſed, eat and drank with him, after his crucifixion and reſurrection from the dead; that they had every evidence they could deſire, and were perfectly aſſured that it was he; and that at the end of forty days, he viſibly aſcended from amongſt them, till a cloud received him, and they ſaw him no more; but were aſſured by a viſion of angels, that he was gone into heaven, and ſat down on the right hand of God. Contrary to their moſt manifeſt temporal intereſts, at the expence of renouncing every earthly comfort, and of embracing labours, ſufferings, contempt, and reproach, as their portion; avowedly expecting, and actually experiencing much the ſame treatment as their maſter had met with; expoſed to the oppoſition of all the learning, wealth, and authority of the world, yet unawed by all the terrors of their indignant perſecutors, they perſiſted in this teſtimony unto the end, and cloſed their holy lives, and chearful ſufferings, moſt, if not all of them, by joyfully ſealing it with their blood.

It is doubtful whether any other matter of fact was ever proved by ſuch undeniable evidence: and tho' the reſurrection of a dead perſon to life be an extraordinary event; yet we know that 'tis neither impoſſible, nor difficult to almighty power: and when a ſufficient cauſe requires it, why ſhould it be deemed incredible by us, that God ſhould exert that almighty power?—And to ſtamp, with a ſeal of heaven, a revelation, which is the baſis of all true religion, and which immediately tends to his own glory, and the everlaſting ſalvation of mankind is—the moſt important reaſon for a divine interpoſition that can poſſibly be conceived.

But even this teſtimony forms only a comparatively ſmall part of the whole evidence of the reſurrection. Five hundred brethren ſaw the riſen Jeſus at one time, and bare record thereto. Saul, the perſecutor, beheld him likewiſe, became his diſciple and apoſtle, ſpent his life in teſtifying of him, and ſealed that teſtimony by his death.—Nay, the primitive moſt malicious and cruel oppoſers of Chriſtianity, not attempting to confute the teſtimony of thoſe whoſe blood they ſhed, united their reluctant evidence, that Jeſus was indeed riſen, and they could not deny it. Moreover, the Apoſtles, and firſt preachers of the Goſpel, publicly averred that God confirmed this their teſtimony by the miracles which he enabled them to perform, and by the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, with which he abundantly endued them: and that by laying on of hands theſe ſame powers were communicated to others; who openly exerciſing them in many wonderful works, in the name of the riſen Jeſus, formed an increaſing multitude of unexceptionable witneſſes: nor was this ever contradicted by any of their oppoſers; tho' it was an appeal to facts ſo numerous, public, and notorious.—Finally, the effects of the Apoſtles preaching, though unarmed, unlettered, and obſcure, and every where oppoſed and ſpoken againſt, cloſes this multiplied demonſtration. Not only were tens of thouſands brought to embrace the humbling, holy, and perſecuted religion of Jeſus; but the deep-rooted foundations of pagan ſuperſtition, as well as of the Moſaic ceremonial, were ſpeedily undermined, and within about 300 years, the ſurpriſing ſpread of chriſtianity effected revolutions in the civil, as well as religious ſtate of the then known world; the effects whereof remain to this day, along with that religion whoſe ſucceſs occaſioned them. With a trifling alteration we may quote the words of a cautious oppoſer of chriſtianity, and ſay, "If it had been of man,

" it would have come to nought: but as it was of God it could not be overturned; and " they, who oppoſed it, found it in vain to fight againſt God."

III. Let us next advert to the prophecies of Scripture. Thoſe prophecies, which have had their accompliſhment many ages ago, form a proof ſomewhat ſimilar to that of the miracles, which we have been conſidering. But thoſe, which are fulfilling before our eyes continually, are, if attentively obſerved, equivalent to a ſucceſſion of miracles performed in every age and nation—Let any man candidly and carefully examine the prophecies of the Scriptures, eſpecially thoſe of the New Teſtament, concerning the unbelief, rejection, and diſperſion of the Jewiſh nation; concerning the deſolations of Jeruſalem, and it's being trodden under foot of the Gentiles; and concerning the future calling of that people into the church, which implies their being preſerved ſeparate from other nations: let him then compare theſe prophecies with the paſt and preſent ſtate of the Jews, diſperſed amongſt, deſpiſed by, and yet preſerved diſtinct from other people: and then let him aſk, Is not here a demonſtration that this book, containing theſe prophecies of ſuch diſtant and improbable events, was inſpired by that God who knows the end from the beginning?

Afterwards let him proceed to examine thoſe prophecies of the New Teſtament, which foretel the corruption of Chriſtianity by it's profeſſors; and compare them with the various abuſes of the Goſpel, which prevail in every age and nation: eſpecially let him compare the predictions of the coming, the character, and the abominations of Antichriſt, that man of ſin, and of the myſtical Babylon, &c; (See 2 Theſ. c. ii. 1 Tim. c. iii. v. 1—3. Rev. c. xi—xiii—xvii;) with that ſyſtem of idolatry, ſuperſtition, tyranny, and perſecution, the Roman hierarchy, which forbids to marry, and commands to abſtain from meats, and moſt minutely anſwers the deſcription of thoſe Scriptures: and he will find that even theſe lamentable abuſes ſhall turn unto him for a teſtimony; and ſo will no longer be ſtumbled, by finding that the worſt abominations have been grafted upon the Chriſtian religion; when he diſcovers that thus it is written, and thus, in the myſtery of God's providence, Satan was to be permitted to practiſe and proſper for a ſeaſon.

Finally,

Finally, let a man well conſider what the Scriptures foretel of the oppoſition, which the gates of hell, with all their power and policy, would make to the ſpread of the Goſpel, and their efforts for it's deſtruction; and of the continuance and prevalency of the religion of Chriſt, in defiance of all: let him alſo well attend to the character of the true chriſtian, and the treatment with which he was in all ages and countries to meet; then let him look around him, and ſee whether there are not ſtill ſuch perſons amongſt us who meet with ſuch treatment? And whether true Chriſtianity does not ſtill defy the gates of hell, and, like the burning buſh, continue unconſumed in the midſt of the flames of perſecution, and every ſpecies of oppoſition? All theſe prophecies, and their accompliſhments, are of the nature of miracles, an evident interpoſition of God to produce effects, which could not otherwiſe be produced; namely, the prediction of diſtant and future contingencies in vaſt variety, verified continually by the event: and this is a proof of the divine original of the Scripture, which it contains within itſelf, carries with it wherever it is ſent, and by which it ſhines, like the ſun, by its own light, and by its own beams proclaims its Author. And I am perſuaded that this argument will always prove more and more concluſive, in proportion to the diligence and attention with which it is inveſtigated.

IV. To this we may next ſubjoin the argument deduced from the nature of the Revelation itſelf.—There is no book extant upon earth, except the Bible, and thoſe books that make the Bible their baſis, which ſpeak in a ſatisfactory and rational manner of the Being, Perfections, and Government of God; which uniformly delineate his character, as compriſing all poſſible Excellency, without any mixture of imperfection, and record his whole conduct as conſiſtent with ſuch a character. The Bible alone introduces the Governor of the Univerſe, ſpeaking with that Majeſty, Simplicity, and Authority, which becomes him; and promulgating laws and ordinances, which are worthy of him. In this extraordinary book we meet with uſeful information upon the moſt important ſubjects; and a clear ſolution of the moſt perplexing difficulties. Here we have our only ſatisfactory account of the creation of the world; of the entrance of moral and natural evil; of the preſent ſtate of things, and of the otherwiſe inexplicable phenomena around us; and here we have our only comment upon that difficult book, God's Providential Government of the world; and a plain revelation of the method in which ſin may be pardoned, and ſinners ſaved. 'Tis true the doctrines of the Scriptures are myſterious: but this is ſo far from invalidating the argument, that it exceedingly corroborates it.—A pretended revelation without myſteries, would confute itſelf: a work of God, which we, ignorant, ſhort-ſighted creatures can fully comprehend, involves a contradiction. The ſtyle of Deity is incomprehenſibility: from the creation of an atom, the formation of a mite, or the vegetation of a blade of graſs, to the nobleſt work of Almighty Power; all is to us myſterious, as to the mode of it's production and ſubſiſtence. Men, with proper information, may fully comprehend the moſt intricate devices of men like themſelves: but no inſtruction in this world afforded us, can enable us completely to underſtand the ſimpleſt of the works of God. Should a watch-maker therefore declare that God created his watch, immediately, and in it's preſent form, it would not be a more palpable impoſture, than a pretended revelation from God, devoid of myſtery.

But the myſteries of the Bible are ſublime, intereſting, and uſeful; they tend to diſplay the perfections and operations of God, are connected with our moſt important intereſts, and lay at the foundation of our hope and peace; they tend to excite our admiration, to promote our humility, love, and gratitude; to inſpire confidence, and to draw our minds from earth to heaven. They are, indeed, myſteries, but not abſurdities; they are above, not contrary to our reaſon; and are in part intelligible, tho' not to be wholly comprehended. For a myſtery may be defined to be a divine truth, which we never could have diſcovered, unleſs it had been revealed; and concerning which we can know nothing further, than is revealed: that which is declared unto us, we by faith apprehend, and, in ſome degree, underſtand; that which is not declared, remains in impenetrable darkneſs, notwithſtanding all our reaſonings and enquiries. The information, therefore, which is communicated by myſteries, is capable of being applied to the moſt important practical purpoſes; whilſt the very darkneſs, that ſtill reſts upon thoſe infinite and eternal things to which they relate, reminds us what we are, and where we are; and has a tendency to abate our pride, and to raiſe our expectation of thoſe glorious diſcoveries, which ſhall be made in that world, where we ſhall ſee face to face, and know, even as we are known. But to return from this digreſſion.

The

The tendency of all the truths, and precepts of the Bible, evidently is, to lead men to the knowledge, love, worſhip, and ſervice of Almighty God; to render them humble, and heavenly; and to form their character, and direct their conduct unto every thing that is juſt, holy, ſincere, benevolent, peaceful, and uſeful. Every motive, encouragement, inſtruction, warning, and aſſiſtance are therein propoſed, which are conducive to godlineſs, righteouſneſs, temperance, and every good work.

It has been often obſerved, and it will bear repetition, becauſe it admits not of confutation; that an evil ſpirit could never tempt men to write ſuch a book as the Bible; for then Satan would be divided againſt himſelf: Wicked men could have no inducement to ſuch an undertaking, for they ſtand condemned by it, in every page, and could only thereby expoſe themſelves to the contempt and hatred of the world: and good men never would have invented ſuch a book, and then aſcribed it to divine inſpiration; when, in that book itſelf nothing is more ſeverely condemned than ſuch (not pious, but) impious frauds. But, indeed, the more accurately and impartially any man examines the Scriptures, the fuller will be his conviction, that they are a work, as far beyond all the powers of the human underſtanding, as the ſun exceeds thoſe illuminations, whereby men attempt to imitate his ſplendour, or ſupply his abſence.

Indeed, eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither did it ever enter into man's heart to conceive, ſuch things as God hath revealed in his holy word; and it's contents as fully declare it's Author, as the heavens declare the glory of God their Creator; tho' both in one caſe; and the other, men not liking to retain God in their knowledge, do not chooſe to conſider, and are not willing to be convinced by any evidence.

V. The agreement, which is found amongſt the penmen of the Scriptures, forms another argument of their divine original. Should twenty men, all living in the ſame age and country, all partakers of the ſame education, and in the ſame ſituation and habits of living; yea, all ſubſcribing one common creed; concur in forming a book as large as the Bible, upon religious ſubjects; each ſingly contributing his quota, the attentive and accurate reader would be able to perceive perceive a difference in opinion amongſt them, in ſeveral things, let them beſtow what pains they would to avoid it. This is evidently the caſe in the writings of modern divines: there are not two books to be found of different authors, upon theological ſubjects, wherein diſagreement, in ſome particulars, might not eaſily be pointed out; and the more they are ſtudied and compared, the plainer their diſagreement appears.—

But the penmen of the Scriptures, ſucceeding one another for the ſpace of above 1500 years; being perſons of different ranks in life, princes and peaſants, fiſhermen, &c: of different education, natural abilities, and modes of living: ſome writing hiſtory, ſome giving laws, others uttering prophecies, collecting proverbs, deviſing parables, compoſing poems, pouring out devotions, diſcuſſing doctrines, confuting errors, &c; all concur in ſo wonderful a manner, that the oppoſers of the Scriptures have never yet been able to prove any real diſagreement amongſt them. The more theſe writings are ſtudied and compared, the more evidently it will be perceived, that the penmen were all of one judgment, and aimed to eſtabliſh the ſame principles, and to draw the very ſame inferences: in ſuch inveſtigation every appearance of inconſiſtency, which as a ſnare catches the ſelf-ſufficient and prejudiced reader, will vaniſh from the humble, teachable, and attentive enquirer: And he will plainly ſee, that all of them give exactly the ſame view of the divine character, of human nature, of ſin, of holineſs, of the promiſed Saviour and Salvation, and of every ſubject upon which they had occaſion to touch.

VI. The effect produced by this book, in proportion as it hath been attended to, in all ages and nations, in turning men from ungodlineſs and idolatry to the worſhip and ſervice of the true God; and in that change produced in the moral character and conduct of tens of thouſands, who were otherwiſe irreclaimable, forms a moſt convincing proof that it is a revelation from God, and the inſtrument by which alone he works, in turning men from their iniquities.—But this argument hath been anticipated in ſome meaſure in the preceding part of this Preface. And ſhould any one preſume to object, that this light hath been withheld from ſo vaſt a proportion of the human race: it were obvious to anſwer, that it is a benefit, which none can demand of God, as in juſtice due unto them, and therefore that he confers it as an unmerited favour, upon whom he will, for reaſons with which he hath not been pleaſed to acquaint us. Nor are we in temporal matters generally diſpoſed to undervalue, and refuſe to make uſe of the ſpecial advantages of our climate, or ſuperior ſtation in life, becauſe all the world does not ſhare them with us. And we may add, that if man had been diſpoſed to welcome this light, every nation upon Earth would long ſince have enjoyed it: And that nothing at this day ſtops its progreſs, but the indifference of men about it, the oppoſition they make to it, and the bad uſe which they make of it.

VII. There is in the word of God brevity connected with fullneſs to ſuch a degree, as there never was in any other book. It is indeed an inexhauſtible treaſure of divine knowledge. And whilſt thoſe things, which are immediately neceſſary to ſalvation, are ſo plain, that the moſt illiterate reader, or one of the meaneſt capacity, who has got faith ſimply to believe the teſtimony of God, and a diſpoſition to obey his will, may with very little ſtudy learn thence the way of ſafety, and the path of duty; there is alſo in it that depth of inſtruction, which the moſt learned, acute, and diligent ſtudent, can never in the longeſt life exhauſt; but the more he ſearches the Scriptures, the richer treaſure will he find; and he will feel, when death is about to cloſe his enquiries, that he hath not attained; nay, that what he hath thence learned is little, compared with that of which he ſtill is ignorant. Nor is this a feeble argument of their divine authority.

Laſtly, He that believeth, hath the witneſs in himſelf.

By the light of God's word, he hath made moſt intereſting diſcoveries reſpecting his own heart and character; as well as concerning heavenly things; and theſe diſcoveries have produced abiding effects upon his judgment, choice, diſpoſition, and conduct: he hath alſo, in anſwer to his prayers, had frequent experience of the truth of the promiſes contained in this bleſſed Book, and hath had earneſts and foretaſtes of heaven in communion with God in that way, which is therein revealed; theſe things put the matter with him beyond all doubt. This, this is the grand evidence, which alone ſuffices to the bulk of chriſtians.—The word of God, by it's authority and importance, tance, arreſts their attention, and awakens their concern about eternal things: In the Goſpel they perceive a ſuitable remedy and refuge for their ſouls. They ſee the neceſſity of faith, pray for it, and are enabled to believe, and thus obtain this witneſs in themſelves: and though ſuch chriſtians are not able to diſpute againſt infidels, yet they are enabled to obey, and ſuffer for the goſpel: And though objections may puzzle them; it is as impoſſible by argument to convince them that the Bible is no divine revelation, as it would be to perſuade them that man created that glorious luminary, whoſe light they behold, and with whoſe beams they are cheared.—As to the external, yea, and internal evidences alſo, conſidered as mere arguments, I would ſay with the Apoſtle in another caſe, "Ye do well to take heed to them, until the day dawn, and the day ſtar ariſe in your hearts."

If this plain ſimple demonſtration of the divine original of the Scriptures, excite in any reader double attention, and diſpoſe him to read them with the ſtricter impartiality, and larger expectations of improvement; if it induce any one, who hath hitherto not conſidered the ſubject, to turn his thoughts that way, and examine more fully for himſelf the external, and internal evidences of their being a divine revelation; if it obviate the unhappy prejudices, or confirm the wavering faith of one individual; if it ſtir up any one to ſeek and wait for the witneſs in himſelf: the Author will then have accompliſhed his purpoſe, and attained his end, in prefixing it to this intended publication.

Proceed we next to conſider the nature of a divine revelation, and the reception to which it is entitled. There are different ſorts of knowledge attainable by us. Some things we know by intuition, others by demonſtration: matters, not capable of ſtrict demonſtration, may be ſhewn to be probable in ſuch a degree, that it would be abſurd to doubt of them, and madneſs not to be governed in our conduct by them. Many things we know by the teſtimony of our own ſenſes; and many others by the teſtimony of competent witneſſes. A very ſmall proportion of the actions of men are the effect of demonſtration, intuition, or perſonal knowledge: probabilities and human teſtimony ſet mankind in motion, and form the main ſpring of their perſevering labours, vigorous exertions, and daring adventures. But if the teſtimony of man be great, the teſtimony of God is greater; which is indeed, when evinced to be his, the higheſt poſſible demonſtration. The Bible is then the authenticated Teſtimony of God to truths and facts, not otherwiſe diſcoverable, or not with ſufficient clearneſs and certainty. Things paſt, future, and inviſible; truths important, ſublime, and myſterious, are brought to our knowledge, atteſted by him, who cannot err and cannot deceive. Faith therefore is the only operation of the human mind, which is fitted to receive, and appropriate this information. Faith, ſimply receiving and crediting the teſtimony of God's word, is, to reaſon, what the teleſcope is to the aſtronomer: thereby are diſcovered objects, which are totally hid from the unbeliever; and thoſe are ſeen diſtinctly and accurately, which to him appear obſcure and confuſed. Reaſon, appropriating this information received by faith, adds immenſely to her former ſcanty ſtock; and, in the poſture of a ſcholar, receives that knowledge, which muſt for ever be withheld, whilſt ſhe proudly affects to be a teacher. The weakeſt and moſt illiterate of mankind, poſſeſſed of true faith, and acquainted with the word of God, acquires a knowledge in divine things, as much more uſeful and certain, than ever fell to the ſhare of the wiſeſt unbeliever: as the prince's boſom friend, who is privy to all his ſecret plans and purpoſes, is ſuperior in knowledge to the ſpeculating politician, who argues without information from his own ſuppoſed ſagacity; and predicts, from what he conceives ought to be done, that thus it certainly will be; but finds in the event his ingenious conjectures were groundleſs, and his predictions erroneous. When in reliance upon the divine veracity, we receive the Scriptures, as, in every propoſition, indiſputably true, the whole becomes our own; and we have only to work the mine, and be enriched with the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge therein contained. But this faith is very different from a mere aſſent of the underſtanding to the truth of a propoſition: It has alſo reference to it's importance, and our own concern in it, and is inſeparably connected with a conſiſtent practice.—Noah was informed that the flood would come; we are informed that it actually came: but he was intereſted in the event, we are not: we may therefore aſſent to the truth of the hiſtory, without it's having any influence upon our conduct; he could not believe the divine monition, but he muſt neceſſarily do as he did; "be moved with fear, and prepare the ark." The truths of the Bible are not like the reports of the day, which amuſe and gratify, but are of no conſequence to us, true or falſe: they all relate to our important intereſts, and therefore have reference to practice: and the Bible, received in true faith, will become the foundation of our hope, the ſtandard of our judgment, the ſource of our comfort, the lantern of our feet, and the light of our paths; and implicit faith will produce as implicit obedience.

The Bible alſo is to be conſidered as a complete revelation, ſo that nothing is needful either to be known, believed, or practiſed in religion, except what may be plainly proved thereby. But, on the other hand, it ſhould carefully be remarked, that the whole word of God is our rule; and that the preference which is manifeſted, by many profeſſing Chriſtians for one part above another, is derogatory from the credit of the whole; and ariſes from a latent unbelief, and an indulged doubt, whether the whole Scriptures be of divine authority, or only that part which coincides with their favourite tenets. True Faith receives the whole teſtimony, and allows every part it's proper place, and applies it to it's proper uſe, in ſupporting the believer's hope, directing his conduct, and forming his character; "for all Scripture is given by inſpiration from God, and is profit-"able for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for inſtruction in righteouſneſs; that "the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furniſhed unto all good works."—(2 Tim. C. iii. 16. 17. v.)

But we muſt altogether reject the claim of all unwritten traditions, as well as of apocryphal additions to the written word. Indeed, tradition is ſo uncertain a vehicle, and every thing, thus communicated, is ſo liable to be corrupted, mutilated, or interpolated, that ſcarce any dependance can be placed thereon: and it is no improbable conjecture, that the art of writing itſelf was firſt communicated, by revelation, to Moſes, in order to preſerve and perpetuate the records of thoſe facts, laws, and truths, which he was about to deliver to the children of Iſrael; and it is much to be queſtioned, whether one ſingle particular of the whole revelation made to Prophets and Apoſtles, would have reached our time uncorrupted, had not written records preſerved them. Learned men find no traces of literary writing, not even amongſt the Egyptians, till long after the days of Moſes. The art itſelf of expreſſing an almoſt infinite variety of ſounds, by the interchanges of a ſmall number of letters, ſeems more like a diſcovery made to man from heaven, than an human invention: and it's moſt beneficial effects, and almoſt abſolute neceſſity, for the preſervation and ſpread of true religion, favour the conjecture. But be that as it will, all who love the Bible, ought to be thankful to God for this important advantage; as alſo for the invention of printing, by which copies of the Scriptures are made ſo numerous, and ſo cheap.

Nor is there any need of apocryphal additions, or any benefit from them; but much danger, leſt they ſhould uſurp the authority, and, in ſome points at leaſt, be ſubſtituted inſtead of the Bible. Conſidered as mere human writings, they may have their uſe: but if cuſtom ſanction ſome of them being bound up with the Bible, truth requires, that we ſhould explicitly be reminded that they are not the word of God. Should it be enquired, how we are to diſtinguiſh betwixt the genuine books of Scripture, and ſuch as are apocryphal? the anſwer is obvious: not only ſome, but all the books contained in the canon of the Scriptures, as allowed in the articles of the church of England, and comprized in our common copies of the Bible, have many, or all, of thoſe internal and external evidences of their divine original which have been inſiſted on: but there is not one of thoſe called apocryphal, that might not be proved to be entirely deſtitute of ſuch evidence; and many of them to contain internal evidence of their ſpuriouſneſs.

But what is the province of reaſon reſpecting revelation? Is that noble faculty to be utterly diſcarded and degraded? God forbid. We have already obſerved, that, in the proofs whereby revelation is authenticated, an appeal is made to us, as reaſonable creatures, to judge, but with modeſty and caution, whether it have not a claim to our attention, as coming thus warranted with a meſſage of infinite importance from the moſt high God. Our reaſon alſo muſt be employed in underſtanding the language, and explaining the terms, in which that meſſage is delivered: in matters, wherein we may be ſuppoſed competent to form a judgment, as with reference to the excellency of the commands, the equity of the adminiſtration, and the kindneſs of the conduct of God towards his offending creatures, we are appealed unto, and called upon, to approve the reaſonableneſs of the divine conduct. We may allow alſo, that if any perſon, or body of men, put ſuch a conſtruction upon any Scripture expreſſion, as implies an evident contradiction, (as for inſtance, if any aſſert and bring Scripture to prove, that what we ſee, feel, and taſte to be bread, is indeed the very material body, bones, and blood of a man; which, though a crea creature, is preſent in ten thouſand places at once;) we may reaſonably, nay ought aſſuredly, to reject ſuch interpretation; for no evidence can poſſibly prove that to be true, which our underſtanding and ſenſes demonſtrate to be falſe.—But when doctrines, propoſed as matters of Revelation, and by ſober rules of interpretation ſhewn to be contained in that revelation, involve no real contradiction; but are only myſterious, and above our comprehenſion, or contrary to the general notions of men, and thoſe preconceptions, which we indeed dignify as the dictates of reaſon, but which are more frequently the offspring of pride and ignorance: upon ſuch grounds to reject the teſtimony of God, out of regard to human reaſonings, muſt be the moſt unreaſonable conduct imaginable; unleſs man were indeed wiſer than his Maker.

The penmen of the Holy Scriptures often expreſs themſelves in language, taken from their own habits of living, and the ſcenes with which they were converſant: knowledge therefore of various kinds may be very uſeful, and in ſome inſtances neceſſary, for the full underſtanding of them. We are therein addreſſed as creatures endued with common ſenſe, and expected to employ it, in deducing inſtruction, and forming practical concluſions from what we read, and from comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual.—We are expected alſo to have ſuch a value for divine truth, as to be willing to beſtow ſome pains in ſearching for it as for hid treaſure; otherwiſe revelation is "a price put into "the hands of a fool to get wiſdom, who has no heart to it." A humble, teachable, and dependent ſpirit is alſo requiſite; for, except we receive the divine teſtimony of the kingdom of God, as little children, we ſhall not enter therein: and at laſt we ſhall read and ſtudy in vain, if we are not willing to practiſe what we have already learned; and to aſk in daily prayer further wiſdom of God, "who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not." The author of revelation hath alſo beſtowed on ſome men larger abilities, and afforded them more advantages of education, more leiſure, and more opportunities for ſtudy, than others have; theſe are talents, which the word of God commands them to improve. Some ſuch perſons, in every age, are induced by divine grace to devote theſe endowments to the acquiſition and communication of religious knowledge, for the benefit of thoſe, whoſe time is otherwiſe engaged, whoſe talent does not lie that way, and who have need to be excited to conſider, and aſſiſted in underſtanding thoſe things which belong unto their eternal peace. This is eſpecially the work of the Goſpel miniſtry: men thus qualified of God, by giving themſelves wholly thereunto, become mighty in the Scriptures; and being diligently employed in opening and alledging, in reaſoning and perſuading from them, are his inſtruments to awaken men's minds to a concern about eternal things, and ſtir them up to read for themſelves, and enable them to apply general truths, precepts, and examples to their own caſes and circumſtances, for the purpoſes of encouragement and edification.—And though the bare reading of the Scriptures is often bleſſed to the ſouls of men for their everlaſting ſalvation; yet generally faith comes by hearing the word preached, and not merely by peruſing it. This is God's ordinance, to which from age to age his ſeal hath been affixed; and I am perſuaded univerſal experience decides, that true Chriſtianity hath uniformly flouriſhed in almoſt exact proportion to the degree, in which the word of God, unadulterated, and unmutilated, has been earneſtly, diligently, and publicly preached by men, whoſe diſintereſted labours and holy lives have given ſanction to their doctrine.

But though oral preaching be the grand means of promoting Godlineſs; written preaching, (if I may be allowed the expreſſion,) has had much ſubordinate uſefulneſs in diſſeminating divine truth. A large proportion of the Scriptures themſelves were occaſional writings ſent to thoſe, whom the penmen could not addreſs by word of mouth: and many eminent men, long ſince dead, ſtill ſpeak to good purpoſe in the writings, which they have left as a bequeſt to the church. Provided what is written be truly ſcriptural, and lead men to read, and aſſiſt them in underſtanding the word of God, we can no more have too many religious books than too many faithful preachers of the Goſpel. Falſe and ſuperficial religion will be ſure to be propagated both from the pulpit and from the preſs; and if Satan's miniſters, (2 Cor. c. xi. v. 15.) be induſtrious in ſowing tares; the ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt ſhould not be timid or backward in diſperſing the good ſeed.

No method of conveying truth ſeems more advantageous, than that of plain expoſitory lectures upon Scripture, with practical inferences, and animated addreſſes to the heart and conſcience: and if this be true of preaching, it cannot be far otherwiſe in reſpect reſpect of writing. Where the word of God is ſtill kept in ſight, and the hearer or reader perceives, that he is not amuſed with a pretty fancy, but is indeed informed of the evident meaning of the Bible itſelf, it will have an authority over his conſcience not to be acquired by other means. Not that I would be underſtood as undervaluing critical comments upon the ſacred Scriptures; whatever tends to elucidate their true meaning has an important uſe, and many have done well in that way: but ſtill practical expoſitions ſeem more calculated for general uſefulneſs. Indeed expoſitions are all liable to abuſe, through the pride and luſts of men, who wreſt the Scriptures themſelves to their own deſtruction: but the pious and faithful commentator's labour is no more to be blamed for that abuſe, than the labour of the huſbandman for the intemperate uſe, which men make of the fruits of the earth: and if expoſitions really explaining the Scriptures were multiplied tenfold, there could not be too many; except ſome one had exhauſted the ſubject, (which indeed is inexhauſtible,) and that one was in every perſon's hands, and read by them all. It is impoſſible that all men ſhould hear the ſame preacher; and it is alſo highly improbable that all ſhould read the ſame book.

The formation of men's minds, and their habits of thinking are ſo diverſe, that miniſters of equal faithfulneſs ſeem intentionally to be endued with different qualifications, and directed to varied methods of delivering the ſame truth, and aiming at the ſame object; in order more advantageouſly to engage the attention of diſtinct deſcriptions of hearers: in like manner, ſome are ſuited with the ſtyle, method, and that which may be called the peculiarity of one writer; whilſt others are delighted and profited with ſuch as are in all theſe things the very reverſe. Every man alſo has his connexions; and ſome are diſpoſed to hear or read with attention what he ſpeaks; or writes, who have not the ſame favourable diſpoſition towards another perſon, perhaps of ſuperior excellency.

Thus ſome read one man's book, and ſome another's; and ſome have leiſure and opportunity of reading many, and collect ſome benefit from each; and ſo knowledge is diſperſed, and, it is to be hoped, good done.

Although a man's chief care ſhould be to approve himſelf to God, and to his own conſcience, with reſpect to the ſimplicity and integrity of his intention: yet, when there there are ſo many comments upon the Scripture already, the bold undertaking of adding one more to the number, may ſeem to require an apology to the public. The preceding obſervations introduce the author's, which is ſimply this: experiencing the utility, efficacy, and comfort of that meaſure of acquaintance with the word of God, with which he has been favoured, he would wiſh, were it poſſible, that all the world ſhould enjoy the ſame felicity: and the heart-ſearching God is witneſs, that no motive would have induced him to venture forth in ſo weighty an engagement; had he not hoped to be thereby an inſtrument in promoting the glory of God, and the ſalvation of men.

It is no part therefore of the deſign of this publication, to detract from the merit of former commentators, or to ſuggeſt an idea that any thing will be added, which hath never been advanced before. But the author having for ſeveral years made the Bible his daily and principal ſtudy; and having beſtowed ſome pains to obtain ſatisfaction in his own mind, as to the meaning of moſt parts of Scripture, and the inſtruction contained therein; and ſuppoſing his ſmall talent to lie in ſpeaking plainly and intelligibly to perſons of ordinary capacity; he wiſhes to occupy with it, by communicating his views of divine truth, in connexion with the Scriptures, from which he hath deduced them.

Some comments are too learned for the uſe of plain people, ſome are too voluminous and expenſive; ſome are in very few hands, and not likely to be more generally read; and ſome, which are moſt excellent, are to many readers antiquated, through that faſtidiouſneſs, which reliſhes not the quaintneſs of former, and better times. Were this preſent undertaking therefore entirely upon the plan of former comments, it would not be ſupernumerary, if duly executed. But in arranging old truths, the author purpoſes to adopt ſomewhat of a new method: not indeed entirely new; for Browne's ſelf-interpreting Bible ſuggeſted the hint, which will here be enlarged upon: and the improvements in Dr. Doddridge s Family Expoſitor are propoſed in ſome reſpects, as models for imitation. The author's deſign is to annex expoſitory notes at the bottom of each page; and, at the cloſe of each chapter, to ſum up the inſtruction contained therein, as it occurs to him, in what he calls PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS; not becauſe doctrine and experience will be excluded; but becauſe he would refer the whole to its practical effect upon the heart and life.

Perhaps

Perhaps the barren field of conjectural criticiſm has already been ſufficiently cultivated; at leaſt the author has not at preſent either leiſure, inclination, or talents for it: and he intends to touch but very ſlightly upon chronology, and ſuch other matters, as are of more difficulty than utility. In general, the tranſlation will be commented upon; and if, in ſome inſtances, the author avails himſelf of the learned labours of others; he intends to communicate the information, without attempting to bring forward thoſe critical diſcuſſions upon the original languages, from which it is deduced: being perſuaded that the ordinary reader is not thereby edified, and conſcious that he is incompetent to inſtruct the learned one. The contents of each chapter, expreſſed with all poſſible brevity, are ſolely intended to aſſiſt the reader in finding any ſubject, which he wiſhes to conſider. And upon the whole, to awaken and direct the conſcience, to ſtore the underſtanding with the knowledge of divine truth, to affect and improve the heart, and to promote the fruitfulneſs and comfort of the true Chriſtian, are the leading objects which he has in view, and hopes never to loſe ſight of in this undertaking; avoiding nice diſtinctions, acrimonious controverſy, or ſtudied exactneſs and conſiſtency; chooſing rather to follow the leadings of Scripture, than to preſs it into the ſervice of a pre-eſtabliſhed ſyſtem; and preferring the ſatisfaction of promoting the edification of pious perſons of different ſentiments, to the applauſe of the zealots of any party.

Whatever acceptance this work may meet with from man, the author hopes to be ſatisfied with the teſtimony of his own conſcience, and the expected approbation of his Judge: and would conclude with deſiring an intereſt in the prayers of all, who love the truth, and favour this deſign; that the Father of Lights, the Giver of all Wiſdom and Knowledge, and the God of all Grace would guide his thoughts and pen, enliven and purify his affections, and give him a ſingle eye and a ſimple dependent ſpirit, through the whole of this arduous undertaking, to which, without ſuch aſſiſtance, he is conſciouſly inſufficient: and that, by the divine bleſſing, it may be acceptable and uſeful to the people of God, and tend to the ſpread of true Chriſtianity, and to the glory of God in the ſalvation of men. He truſts his earneſt prayers are, and will be, to the ſame effect; and for the everlaſting good of every one, who ſhall peruſe this publication. AMEN.

INTRODUCTION

TO

THE OLD TESTAMENT, TO THE BOOKS OF MOSES, AND TO THE BOOK OF GENESIS IN PARTICULAR.

IN opening the ſacred Volume, we begin with the "Old Teſtament," ſo called, not in oppoſition to, but as diſtinguiſhed from, the New Teſtament.—The word, tranſlated Teſtament, is more generally rendered, and more commonly ſignifies a Covenant, and hath reſpect to the condeſcending dealings of God with man, in a way of covenant tranſactions. We are not to ſuppoſe that the Old Teſtament has its name from the Old Covenant of Works, as oppoſed to the New Covenant of Grace and Mercy; as if God dealt with his Old Teſtament Church according to the former. When Adam ſinned, that old Covenant was broken; but it never was, or can be, aboliſhed to the end of time, as to its general tenor, "Do this, and live; tranſgreſs, and die:" All unbelievers remain under it, break it by every ſin, and are condemned by it; and all the warnings and threatenings of the Bible originate from it. But when the "Seed of the Woman" was promiſed, the New Covenant of mercy and grace entered, from which all the promiſes of God to ſinners flow, and all their hopes ariſe: The tenor of this Covenant is, "Believe, and thou ſhalt be ſaved;" according to which all true believers have been dealt with from the beginning. But of this Covenant there have been, ſo to ſpeak, ſeveral editions; of which the laſt and moſt complete is called the New Teſtament: in contradiſtinction to which the foregoing editions are called the Old Teſtament; not without reference to the Covenant of peculiarity made with the people of Iſrael, which the introduction of a better Covenant hath cauſed to wax old and to vaniſh away.—The ſubſtance being come, thoſe types and ceremonies, which were but the ſhadow, are aboliſhed, as to their authority over the conſcience: and the boundaries of the church being enlarged, the peculiar temporal bleſſings covenanted conditionally to the Iſraelites, as a nation; and the peculiar ſtatutes enacted for them in their political capacity, are now antiquated, as are all other things in which it accords not with the New Teſtament.—This ſeems the occaſion of the diſtinction betwixt theſe two grand diviſions of the Word of God; yet the whole is of divine original, and important uſe: and even thoſe parts of the Old Teſtament, which we are no longer required to obey as commands, are full of inſtruction, and tend to eſtabliſh and elucidate the New Teſtament; and will grow into the eſteem of every one, in proportion as he rightly underſtands and reliſhes the peculiar doctrines of Chriſtianity.

We firſt enter upon the five Books of Moſes, generally called the Law, to diſtinguiſh them from the Pſalms and the Writings of the Prophets: becauſe the law given by Moſes is contained in theſe books.—Yet much of them is hiſtorical, or prophetical, ſome devotional, and all impreſſed with an evangelical ſtamp.—Probably they were the firſt books which ever were written; we are ſure they are the moſt ancient records now extant. The whole was without doubt given by inſpiration from God; or penned under his infallible ſuperintendency, who ſpake with Moſes face to face, as a man ſpeaketh to his friend. Some of the hiſtory could only be known by revelation; much more could in no other way be ſtated with accuracy and certainty; and all of it is ſo important and uſeful, and is written with ſuch ſimplicity, majeſty, and impartiality, as may ſatisfy us, that the ſacred Penman wrote as he was moved by the Holy Ghoſt.

We begin with "The Book of Geneſis:" the name is not found in the Hebrew original, but is given to it in the Greek tranſlation, called the Septuagint; it ſignifies "The Book of the Beginning," of the Original, or of the Generation; namely, of the Univerſe. It is remarkable that the New Teſtament begins with the ſame two words, "The Book of the Generation;" namely, of Jeſus Chriſt; for as the world was made by him, ſo was it made for him. This Book opens, as its name imports, with the Hiſtory of the Creation of the World, and of the entrance of Sin and Death; and then gives us a brief account of the wickedneſs of men, and the judgments of God upon them, eſpecially by the deluge, and the deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrah by fire: but it more fully records the promiſes of the Saviour, and the Hiſtory of the Church of true believers, from the fall of Adam to the death of Joſeph, for the ſpace of 2369 years, according to the general computation; and we are particularly informed of the faith and obedience, the trials and ſupports, the excellencies and blemiſhes, the lives and deaths, (with the exception of Enoch, who was tranſlated that he ſhould not ſee death,) of a choſen few, who were preſerved uninfected with the general contagion of idolatry and wickedneſs, which overſpread the world around them.—Theſe things are recorded in part for our imitation, and altogether for our inſtruction; that we, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope, and be rendered ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, as knowing that our labour is not in vain in the Lord.

THE FIRST BOOK OF MOSES,

CALLED

CHAP. I.

Contains, 1st. A Revelation of God, the Creator of all things, v. 1. 2d. A distinct account of the Creation of the World in six days, with the particulars of each day's work, v. 3—25. 3d. The creation of man at the close of the sixth day, v. 26, 27. 4th. The blessing pronounced on, the dominion vested in, and the grant made to, him, v. 28—30. 5th. Each part approved as good, and the whole accounted very good by the Creator, v. 4, 10, 12, 18, 21, 25, 31.

IN the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.

2 And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep: and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

3 And God said, Let there be light: and there was light.

4 And God saw the light, that it was good: and God divided the light from the darkness.

5 And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night: and the evening and the morning were the first day.

6 And

NOTES.

V. 1. In the beginning, &c.] It is natural and unavoidable to us, who ourselves are but of yesterday, to enquire about those things, which have been before us, and to carry our reflections back to the original of all things: but our reason is evidently incompetent to the satisfactory solution of these enquiries; as is demonstrated by the uncertainty, contrariety, and absurdity, in which the wisest of the heathens were bewildered upon this subject. However rational it be to conclude, that all things were at first created by the eternal, self-existent, and Almighty God; yet reason hath ever lamentably failed of drawing this conclusion: "And by faith we understand that the "worlds were framed by the word of God; so that "things, which are seen, were not made of things, which "do appear:" (Heb. c. xi. v. 3.) The information, conveyed to us by the word of God, reason can appropriate, approve, and apply, but was unable to anticipate. This knowledge is useful and necessary, but nothing is mentioned about eternity, a parte ante, (a past eternity;) that abyss which swallows up all our thoughts, and involves all our reflections and discourses in confusion; for this could only gratify our curiosity, and increase our stock of barren notions. The Scriptures declare that God is from everlasting to everlasting; and reason allows that it must be so, though it cannot comprehend in what manner.—All else had a beginning. With this the inspired penman commences his history, and with most sublime abruptness breaks forth, "In the begin-"ning:" as if he had said, "This, O man, is enough "for thee to know; here stop thy presumptuous enqui-"ry; call back thy intruding thoughts from things too "high for thee, and learn to know and to adore thy Cre-"ator." The Scriptures are especially intended to teach us the knowledge of God; which is done in the manner best suited to inform and affect us, by recording his words and his works.—From the creation of the world we learn his eternal power and Godhead; and discern, in the things which he hath made, his infinite wisdom and goodness: whilst the simplicity and harmony, subsisting in the midst of the richest variety, lead the mind in the easiest manner to conceive of the Creator, as the One, living, and true God. But it is well known, that the original word, translated God, is plural, in a language that hath three numbers; and that, when thus used, it is joined to singular verbs. Probably the Hebrew was the original language; certainly the Lord made choice of it for the first written Revelation of himself to man: so that this grammatical anomaly, at the very beginning of the Scriptures, seems intended to teach us some important lesson concerning that God, who therein reveals himself to us: and it may reasonably be interpreted as an intimation, that in the unity of the Godhead there was also plurality; that is, one God subsisting in three

6 And God ſaid, Let there be a firmament in the midſt of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.

7 And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament, from the waters which were above the firmament: and it was ſo.

8 And God called the firmament Heaven: and the evening and the morning were the ſecond day.

9 And God ſaid, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry-land appear: and it was ſo.

11 And God called the dry-land Earth, and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas: and God ſaw that it was good.

Perſons. Though it would be improper to lay the whole weight of this important argument upon this intimation; yet it ſhould not be altogether rejected as a mere verbal criticiſm. God created the heaven and the earth, or the whole univerſe viſible, and inviſible. The word heaven is ſometimes uſed in Scripture for that place, where the divine glory is eſpecially diſplayed, and where angels and happy ſpirits have their reſidence: at other times for the vaſt expanſe, wherein the ſun, moon, and ſtars are placed; and at others for the circumambient air, even to the very ſurface of the earth: it muſt therefore be interpreted as the context requires.—We can collect nothing from hence concerning the angels, except that in the beginning they were created of God. But this viſible world was formed in ſix days. The chaotic maſs ſeems to have been firſt inſtantaneouſly created out of nothing; and then gradually reduced to order and beauty.

V. 2. The earth, &c.] This earth, with the heavenly luminaries immediately connected with it, was at firſt an unformed maſs of the component elements; void, or deſtitute of plants, trees, animals, &c; and covered with thick darkneſs, reſting on the abyſs, or the unformed chaotic maſs, till diſperſed by the agency of the Spirit of God: thus, at the very opening of the ſacred Volume, we have an intimation of that divine Spirit, whoſe influences and operations form ſo conſpicuous and diſtinguiſhing a part of Revelation; for, as the efficient cauſe of the creation, He moved upon the ſurface of the waters. Let the impartial reader here turn his attention to thoſe texts in the New Teſtament, (John, c. 1. v. 3. Col. c. 1. v. 16, 17. Heb. c. 1. v. 2, 3;) which, in the moſt emphatic language, aſcribe all creation to Jeſus Chriſt, the Son and Word of God: and, comparing them with the account of the agency of the divine Spirit in the work of creation, and with thoſe Scriptures, (as in particular v. 1,) which declare that God created all things, he muſt allow, that from the beginning of the Bible there is a real foundation for the doctrine of three divine Perſons in the unity of the Godhead.

V. 3. Let there be, &c.] The ſublimity of this paſſage has been univerſally admired by men of learning and taſte; and indeed this ſimplicity is unſpeakably more majeſtic, than thoſe ſtudied ornaments of ſtyle and language, which are generally affected. But it is more to our purpoſe to obſerve, that St. Paul, ſpeaking of converſion, which he frequently terms a new creation, makes a plain alluſion to this paſſage; (2 Cor. c. iv. v. 6;) intimating thereby, that the dark, diſordered, and unholy ſtate of a ſinner's heart reſembles this chaos: until the Spirit of God moves upon it, and cauſes light to ſhine into the underſtanding, regulates the diſorder of the affections, furniſhes the heart with holineſs, reſtores the ſoul to beauty and harmony, and prepares it as an habitation for his own immediate reſidence.

V. 5. And the evening, &c.] There was, it ſeems, before the formation of the ſun, moon, and ſtars, a regular ſucceſſion of light, and darkneſs, on the different parts of the chaotic maſs, which thus meaſured out the firſt day.

V. 6. Let there be a firmament, &c.] The word firmament ſeems to ſignify the whole expanſe, which ſurrounds the earth, even to the fixed ſtars, which are ſet "in the open "firmament of Heaven;" "as the fowls" are ſaid "to "fly in the open firmament of Heaven;" and again, "he called the firmament Heaven."—It muſt therefore be underſtood according to the context.

V. 9. Let the waters be gathered, &c.] The waters, being ſeparated from the dry ground, were divided into thoſe under the firmament, which are depoſited in the oceans, ſeas, lakes, &c; and thoſe above the firmament, which are ſuſpended in the air, form the clouds, and deſcend in rains and dews, &c.—Inſtead of attempting a further explanation of the terms here uſed, I would rather call the reader's attention to the power, wiſdom, and goodneſs of God diſplayed in this part of creation.—In the vaſt reſervoir of the oceans and ſeas the waters are primarily treaſured up, being by their ſaltneſs and inceſſant motion preſerved from becoming putrid: theſe facilitate commerce and friendly intercourſe betwixt diſtant nations, ſupply immenſe quantities of wholeſome proviſions, and are in many ways ſerviceable to mankind. From them originally, in one mode of conveyance or other, the whole earth is ſupplied with water, rendered freſh and fit for uſe, and communicated in the gentleſt method. Hereby the ſurface of the ground is fertilized; hence all living creatures quench their thirſt; and thus all the purpoſes of cleanlineſs are anſwered. Thence returning to the ſea by brooks and rivers, the waters enrich and beautify the adjacent countries, and confer manifold benefits upon mankind through the whole of their courſe. Let this hint ſuffice to demand from the reader a tribute of grateful praiſe to the kind giver of all our comforts.

V. 10. And God called, &c.] It is obſervable that God himſelf gave names to thoſe creatures, over which Adam could not exerciſe dominion; but left him to give names to the reſt.—Without doubt, theſe names were expreſſive of the nature of the creatures, whether we can now underſtand them, or not.

V. 11.

11 And God ſaid, Let the earth bring forth graſs, the herb yielding ſeed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after his kind, whoſe ſeed is in itſelf, upon the earth: and it was ſo.

12 And the earth brought forth graſs, and herb yielding ſeed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whoſe ſeed was in itſelf, after his kind: and God ſaw that it was good.

13 And the evening and the morning were the third day.

14 And God ſaid, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide the day from the night: and let them be for ſigns, and for ſeaſons, and for days, and years.

15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon the earth: and it was ſo.

16 And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the leſſer light to rule the night: he made the ſtars alſo.

17 And God ſet them in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon the earth;

18 And to rule over the day, and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkneſs; and God ſaw that it was good.

19 And the evening and the morning were the fourth day.

20 And God ſaid, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven.

21 And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: and God ſaw that it was good.

22 And God bleſſed them, ſaying, Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the ſeas, and let fowl multiply in the earth.

23 And the evening and the morning were the fifth day.

24 And God ſaid, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beaſts of the earth after his kind: and it was ſo.

25 And God made the beaſt of the earth after his kind: and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind: and God ſaw that it was good.

26 And

V. 11, 12.] Hitherto the whole was inert and lifeleſs: but the vegetable ſyſtem was next produced, in all its vaſt variety and numerous tribes, for the uſe of man and beaſts. Each of theſe was created, not only for individual vegetation, but with the ſurpriſing power of propagating, and multiplying almoſt infinitely its peculiar ſpecies, by ſeeds, often very minute, and ſcarce diſcernible from each other; and yet they never fail to produce the ſame kind of plant, from which they ſprang. Thus creation is carried on from year to year, and, in an incomprehenſible manner, the earth is filled with the riches, and liberality of the Lord.

V. 14—19.] By the Creator's Word, the light was, as it were, treaſured up for the uſe of man in theſe heavenly orbs, (as water is in the ocean;) and with it warmth and fertility have ever ſince been conveyed to the ſeveral regions of the globe; whilſt by their regular circuits time is meaſured out for our convenience—Modern experiments prove that the moon is an opaque body, much leſs than the planets: and it is with great probability ſuppoſed, that the fixed ſtars are lights in themſelves immenſely large; yet the moon is here called a great light, in diſtinction from the ſtars: which is a plain proof that the penmen of the Scriptures were not inſpired to ſpeak of natural things with philoſophical exactneſs; but were left to uſe popular language, and to diſcourſe of ſuch matters according to their appearance. Ignorance or error in theſe reſpects is not fatal, and the moſt exact knowledge is comparatively of ſmall value: "Unto man he ſaid, the fear of the Lord, that is wiſ-"dom, and to depart from evil, that is underſtanding." (Job c. xxviii. v. 28.)

V. 20—25.] The earth reduced to order and beauty, repleniſhed with vegetable treaſures, and lighted up with unſpeakable ſplendour, had yet remained deſtitute of inhabitants: but in theſe verſes we have a conciſe account of the formation of the various ſpecies of animals, which inhabit the waters, the air, and the dry land. A very ſuperficial acquaintance with their numerous tribes, and different ſizes, immenſely large, or inviſibly minute; their diſtinct modes of exiſtence in different elements, and on different ſuſtenance; the ſurpriſing exactneſs, and kind contrivance, with which the organized body in every ſpecies is formed; and the various ways, in which they ſubſerve the uſe and pleaſure of man, may ſuffice to ſhew us that we have abundant reaſon to admire and adore the great Creator. Whilſt the nature of life itſelf, its production, continuance, and propagation in every diſtinct ſpecies, forms a very proper ſubject for our ſpeculations; if we would be convinced how incomprehenſible the works of God are, and how very ignorant man is. The great Creator need not deſcend to minute enumeration of his works, to diſplay his glory; though we may probably deſcend to the minute inveſtigation of them. We may, therefore, juſt obſerve, that there is no particular mention here made of many things, which

26 And God ſaid, Let us make man in our image, after our likeneſs: and let them have dominion over the fiſh of the ſea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and are to us of the greateſt importance. The air, which modern experiments have evinced to be of abſolute neceſſity to animal and vegetable life, and in which ſuch traces of divine wiſdom and goodneſs are diſcovered, is not here explicitly mentioned. Whilſt the ſurface of the earth is clothed with vegetable riches, and inhabited by uſeful animals; we know that underneath are ſtored moſt valuable treaſures, placed thus out of our way, but not out of our reach. "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! In wiſdom haſt thou made them all: the earth is full of thy goodneſs!"

V. 26. And God ſaid, &c.] This is not only the language of deliberation, but of conſultation alſo; and intimates much more than the ſuperior excellency and dignity of the creature about to be formed.—It is not to be conceived, that the infinite God, by ſpeaking in the plural number, ſhould employ a language, which, though uſed by, reflects no honour on, earthly princes; and, which, (in its original invention at leaſt,) favours of mean oſtentation, and little vanity; and forms one of thoſe trifling expedients, which have been deviſed to prevent monarchs, who were not poſſeſſed of more ſubſtantial diſtinctions, from ſinking to the level of their ſubjects:—But it would be ſtill more intolerable to ſuppoſe that the eternal God in theſe words addreſſed any of his own creatures, as fellow workers with him in the creation of man. Yet as far as I can ſee, theſe are the only expedients, which can be employed by thoſe who allow the divine inſpiration of the whole Scripture, and yet refuſe their aſſent to the doctrine of the Trinity: whereas, admit this doctrine to be ſcriptural, and the expreſſions are ſuitable, natural, and need no further explanation. The three Perſons in the ſacred Trinity at firſt concurred in counſel and operation in forming man, as afterwards in his recovery from the fall.—Nor let it be imagined, that in avoiding one difficulty, we run ourſelves into another, and a greater. For it can never be ſhewn impoſſible, that the ſame infinite Being ſhould be Three in one reſpect, and One in another. We know, and it is abſurd to deny, the ſoul and body to be diſtinct ſubſtances; yet they form one man, who is two in one reſpect, and one in another: but who can comprehend the bond of union betwixt his own ſoul and body, or explain how they mutually operate upon each other? And if we are incomprehenſible to ourſelves, how ſhould it be poſſible for us to comprehend our great Creator?—This indeed ſeems the limitation of human knowledge: by experiments the natural philoſopher diſcovers, that things indeed are ſo, and have ſuch properties and powers: but how and why they are, and operate in ſuch a manner, remains ſtill an impenetrable ſecret: the proceſs of nature in the vegetation of a grain of corn, from its being caſt into the earth until the gathering in of the harveſt, lies no more within the powers of our comprehenſion, than the doctrine of the Trinity:—and he who will believe no more than he can comprehend, rejecting all myſteries as incredible, muſt queſtion his own exiſtence, or be inconſiſtent with himſelf. The authenticated teſtimony of God is ſurely as ſufficient to eſtabliſh the doctrine, as to its truth and certainty, in matters of revelation, as experiments are to eſtabliſh the fact in philoſophy: the manner how is no more matter of faith in the one, than of ſcience in the other: nor are the difficulties greater, except as infinity is more beyond the ſcanty graſp of our finite capacities.

None, but a God, can comprehend a God.

The great Creator then ſaid, Let us make man, in our image, after our likeneſs: and the expreſſion is doubled and varied, that it may more engage our attention, and enſure our belief.—This image and likeneſs of God cannot be in the body; for God is a Spirit, which no bodily ſhape can in any reſpect reſemble. In the ſoul, therefore, we muſt look for it; and there we ſhall find it according to that meaſure, wherein finite can reſemble infinite being. The ſoul of man even in his preſent ſtate bears ſome reſemblance of its Maker: the underſtanding, memory, and imagination in their ſeveral operations give a faint ſhadow of the divine wiſdom and knowledge; the will, and the active powers which it poſſeſſes, have ſome ſimilitude to the almighty effects of the divine volitions; and ſhew that mind can act upon matter, though we cannot explain in what manner. Nay, conſcience, in the exerciſe of her dictatorial and judicial functions, gives ſome feeble reflection of the juſtice and holineſs of the Judge of all: whilſt the derived and dependent immortality of the human Soul reminds us of him, who is ſelf-exiſtent and eternal. But fallen angels, who poſſeſs theſe powers in ſuperior meaſure, are never ſaid to bear the image of God; and little, if any thing, in Scripture can be fairly interpreted of fallen man's being like his Maker, till renewed unto his image by divine grace: we muſt therefore conclude that there was a higher and nobler ſenſe in which Adam was formed in the image and likeneſs of God.—We allow that no adequate conception can be formed of Adam's primeval ſtate and powers, from the brief account, which is given of him in Scripture: but we may alſo avail ourſelves of the revelation given us, concerning the moral attributes of God; we may contemplate the character of Jeſus Chriſt, who in human nature diſplayed the divine image in full perfection; we may examine the moral law which deſcribes, and the Chriſtian's character, who, being renewed in knowledge righteouſneſs and true holineſs, exemplifies, the image of God; whilſt the expreſſion, renewed, implies that it is the ſame image, which ſin had defaced. From theſe ſeveral ſources of information we may deduce ſome ſatisfactory concluſions. God alone can have perfect, infallible, immutable knowledge: but Adam was created in his meaſure after the divine image, both in his capacity of receiving, and in the diſpoſition of his heart to entertain true knowledge; and he actually poſſeſſed from the gift of God a right underſtanding and a competent knowledge of his Creator, of himſelf, of his own ſituation, his duty, his intereſts, of his obligations to obedience, and of the odious nature, as well as evil conſequences of diſobedience.—In theſe and ſimilar concerns, we may be aſſured, he knew, and judged according to and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

27 So God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

28 And God bleſſed them, and God ſaid unto them, Be fruitful and multiply, and repleniſh the earth, and ſubdue it; and have dominion over the fiſh of the ſea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

29 And God ſaid, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing ſeed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding ſeed: to you it ſhall be for meat.

30 And to every beaſt of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life, I have given every green herb for meat: and it was ſo.

31 And God ſaw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good, and the evening and the morning were the ſixth day.

the knowledge and judgment of his Maker; though not infallibly nor immutably.—Reſulting from this ſtate of the underſtanding and judgment, we may conclude, that, in conformity to God, he poſſeſſed a diſpoſition to value or contemn, to approve or diſapprove, to love or deteſt every object, which preſented itſelf to his mind, according to its real excellency, worthleſsneſs, or hatefulneſs.—In ſuch a ſtate of the heart, that is, of the judgment will and affections, the divine image muſt evidently conſiſt: and we may thence certainly infer, that in theſe things Adam reſembled his Maker. Knowledge in a creature muſt be limited; error may follow, and thence a change of judgment and diſpoſition may be induced: that is, a holy creature may fall, and become unholy: but imperfection in the original diſpoſition of the heart ſuppoſes the creature formed unholy, and is inconſiſtent with being created after the image of God.

In an underſtanding enlightened with true knowledge, a judgment free from corrupt bias, a will diſpoſed to obedience, and affections regulated according to reaſon and truth, we determine the image of God, in which Adam was created, to have conſiſted; nor can we conceive it to conſiſt in any thing elſe. From ſuch a ſtate of mind, godlineſs in all its internal exerciſes, and external expreſſions; righteouſneſs, truth, benevolence, purity, and an exact regulation and government of every appetite and paſſion, muſt neceſſarily reſult; and every duty to God and man be conſtantly and delightfully attended to.

The ſame diſpoſition of heart would enſure his belief of every truth, that God ſhould afterwards reveal; his obedience to every precept which he ſhould enjoin; his cordial acceptance of every propoſal, which he ſhould make; and admiration of every diſcovery of the divine glory, with which he ſhould be favoured: and could it have been poſſible for him to have ſinned, without impairing this divine image; it would have diſpoſed him to repent; and, in faith love and joy, to receive the Mediator, in whom believers truſt; and to exerciſe all thoſe graces, and practiſe all thoſe duties, which ſpring from the character of a redeemed ſinner.

Man, thus created in the divine image, was conſtituted ruler over the other creatures. This dominion has been frequently termed a part of the divine image; but it ſeems more natural to conſider the capacity for exerciſing dominion, as the reſult of that image; and that the actual grant of dominion was made to man in conſequence of that capacity, and as ſhadowing forth the divine ſovereignty over all his works. The ſubjection of the animals, had not ſin entered, would have been more entire and voluntary, and the exerciſe of man's authority more benign and gentle, than at preſent.—Man is now too often a ſevere tyrant over the animals within his reach, and under his power; and numbers ſeem to have ſhaken off, or fled away from his abuſed dominion.

V. 28. And God bleſſed them, &c.] Having formed them with capacities for enjoyment, and furniſhed them with all things externally conducive to it; the beneficent Creator thus aſſured them of his favour and bleſſing, to conſummate their felicity, and ſecure his continuance: and it is probable that Adam was taught to expect, that after a term of probation upon earth, he, and his deſcendants, if they perſevered in obedience, would be tranſlated into heaven; or be favoured with ſome confirmation in happineſs equivalent to it.

The increaſe of the human ſpecies formed a part of the Creator's benediction: and had not ſin entered, it would have been a progreſſive communication and multiplication of felicity! In this method creation is ſtill carried on, and the divine perfections are exerciſed and diſplayed in the continuance, as well as in the firſt production of the creatures: though the former excites leſs ſurpriſe in us, becauſe cuſtom leads us to expect it.

V. 29, 30. Neither our wants and inclinations, nor the ſuitableneſs of the creatures to ſupply and gratify them, give us our right to uſe them; but the grant of the great proprietor: in this grant the animals are joined, as equally entitled to proviſion from the Creator's bounty.—Animal food ſeems not to have been granted till after the flood; nor to have been deſired, or thought of, before the fall.

V. 31. Very good.] Each production of creative power was before pronounced Good.—After man's creation the whole was declared to be very Good. A ſuperior excellency, from an harmonious connexion of perfect parts in one perfect whole, was ſuperadded, each deriving from, and reflecting beauty upon the reſt: and the creation of man, the image, and vicegerent of his Maker, the only worſhipper in this auguſt temple, who in reaſonable adoration might render to him the glory of the whole, completed the deſign, and ſtamped it very good. The perfections of God are worthy of being exerciſed, diſplayed played, contemplated, admired, and adored: man was formed capable of perceiving that manifeſted glory, rendering the tribute of vocal praiſe, and finding felicity in his Maker's worſhip and love. This was well pleaſing to the Lord, who moſt perfectly acquieſced in his work, "Whilſt the morning ſtars ſang together, and all the "ſons of God ſhouted for joy." Thus the creation of the heavens and the earth was completed in ſix days; which doubtleſs the Creator could have effected in an inſtant; but he deemed it more ſuited to his majeſty and wiſdom to do it gradually, and by progreſſive advances; that we, leiſurely contemplating theſe his wonders, might note more carefully the glories diſplayed in them; and ſeeing each, majeſtically riſe ſuperior to all, that went before, might be more ſuitably affected with admiring gratitude, and ſtirred up to adoring praiſe.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The account given us in this chapter of the Author and original of all things is ſo rational, ſatisfactory, and ſublime; and the viſible creation, as it ſubſiſts at this day, diſplays ſuch wiſe contrivance, powerful operation, and beneficent attention to the wants, and welfare of all creatures; that atheiſts, and all others, "who" with the Bible in their hands, and the creation before their eyes, "honour not the Creator as God, neither are thankful," muſt be for ever left without excuſe; and infidelity and impiety muſt manifeſtly appear to be as abſurd and fooliſh, as they were wicked. The Creator of all things is without controverſy the ſole proprietor, and ſovereign Lord of all. Our very bodies and ſouls are his, and not our own; for "he made us, and not we ourſelves:" he hath therefore an undoubted right to diſpoſe of us, and of all creatures, as he pleaſes. To him an account muſt be rendered of the uſe, which we make of his gifts, according to the tenor of his holy law. Nor ſhould we allow ourſelves, for one moment, to loſe ſight of this important truth: for by ſuch conſiderations we ſhall not only be reſtrained from abuſing the work and gift of God in the practice of ſin; but excited to employ all we are, have, and enjoy in the ſervice, and to the glory of our liberal Benefactor. As our obligations to him are ſo vaſt, his largeſt demands of our love, worſhip, and ſervice are perfectly reaſonable: yet tried by this plain rule, our own hearts muſt certainly condemn our paſt and preſent conduct. In our own private hiſtory, as well as that of the world in all ages, we may read what havock ſin hath made in the creation of God, once by infallible wiſdom pronounced very good! eſpecially in man created in his own image and likeneſs! and we ſhall ſhortly hear the Creator ſpeak of him in other language.—In the mean time let us bleſs God for the Goſpel of Chriſt, and take warning from the conſideration of the almighty power of that God, againſt whom we have ſinned, (the effects of which we have been contemplating,) to flee from the wrath to come, and to ſeek reconciliation to him; that his powerful arm may be engaged in our ſalvation, and not to our deſtruction. Being thus protected from, and made victorious over all our enemies, and being new created unto the image of God in holineſs; we ſhall be rendered meet for, and at length obtain admiſſion into the "new heavens, and new earth wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs."

NOTES.

CHAP. II.] V. 1, All, &c.] All the parts of the viſible creation are arranged in, and fill up, their proper places, like ſoldiers in a well diſciplined army: ſo that number and variety connect with regularity and beauty; and conduce to the perfection of the whole, according to the plan, and for the glory of the great Creator.

V. 2. On the, &c.] The Lord was pleaſed to complete his deſign, juſt when the ſixth day ended, and the ſeventh commenced; and then he reſted from all his work: not that the exertion of creating power had cauſed wearineſs, or that his reſt was quieſcent; for he ſtill upholds, preſerves, renovates, and governs the whole: in which ſenſe Chriſt ſays, "The Father worketh hitherto, and "I work." But he ceaſed from creating, and added no more; and acquieſced with entire ſatisfaction in the whole, as worthy of himſelf, and expreſſive of his glory.

V. 3. And God bleſſed, &c.] This is evidently hiſtorical, and not mentioned by way of anticipation; for we have here both the appointment of the ſabbath, and the reaſon for it: "Becauſe that in it the Lord reſted," &c. which reaſon ſubſiſted from the beginning, and ſeems more cogent immediately, than it could be, after having lain dormant above 2000 years; and when not adduced, till ſin had marred the beauty of the great Creator's works. This is confirmed by the cuſtom of meaſuring time by weeks, that hath generally prevailed in all ages and nations of the world; and which may moſt reaſonably be accounted for, by ſuppoſing it to be the remains of an original tradition, handed down to all the poſterity of Adam, and Noah. And the ſilence of Moſes concerning the obſervation of the ſabbath by the Patriarchs,

4 These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth, when they were created: in the day that the LORD God made the earth and the heavens;

5 And every plant of the field, before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field, before it grew: for the LORD God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not a man to till the ground.

6 But there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground.

7 And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life: and man became a living soul.

8 And the LORD God planted a garden eastward in Eden: and there he put the man whom he had formed.

9 And out of the ground made the LORD God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food: the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

so far from proving that they were not commanded to observe it, will not render it so much as probable, that they did not actually keep it; in the judgment of such persons, as have attentively considered, how much darkness rests upon many similar subjects, in the Scripture history of the Old Testament Church.

The sabbath being made for man, was coeval with his creation.—Even in the state of innocence, Adam and Eve were employed in dressing, and keeping the garden: and though they were exempt from sin and suffering, yet their rational nature was capable of a far more exalted state; and they were taught to consider themselves as preparing for it by progressive improvement: the seventh day, therefore, being blessed and sanctified of God, separated from common employments, and consecrated to religious worship; they would be required, upon it especially, to remember their Creator, to contemplate his works, and render him their tribute of thankful praise; and this would even in Paradise be conducive to the glory of God, and beneficial to them; perhaps absolutely necessary to their safety and felicity. (Exod. c. xx. v. 8—11.)

V. 4, These, &c.] This is the real and true account of their origin, in opposition to the fables of poets, and the fancies of speculating philosophers.

V. 5, 6.] In general God employs both the genial warmth of the sun, and the refreshing rains, and also the labour of man, in producing the fruits of the earth: but he needs them not; therefore these first productions, (which were probably in full perfection,) were prepared before the sun was created, the rain descended, or man was formed: but from the time that the vegetables were produced, a mist arose from the earth, and descended on them in gentle dews, for their refreshment, and preservation.

V. 7. The dust of the ground, &c.] This is mentioned to excite our admiration of the Maker's skill, who formed so exquisite a structure as the human body, of such mean materials; to abate our pride and vanity, and over solicitude about these bodies, which are of so low original; and to prepare us for the solemn sentence, "Dust thou "art, and to dust thou shalt return." Yet the Lord not only gave man life in common with the other animals, whose bodies were formed of the same materials, but immediately communicated from himself the rational soul; which is denoted by the expression of breathing. This should remind us to give our souls, which are thus nobly descended, a decided preference above the earthly body, and to spurn animal indulgences in comparison with heavenly things. Thus the first Adam became a living soul: but by the fall man having become dead in sin, through the departure of him, who is the author, and giver of spiritual life: in infinite mercy, the second Adam, the Lord from Heaven, became a quickening spirit, (1 Cor. c. xv. v. 45.) and by the communication of the Holy Ghost, the fruit of his meritorious mediation, he restores to us divine life, and renews the divine image. And it is remarkable that Jesus, (after his resurrection, with apparent reference to this expression, and intimating that it was he, "who first breathed into "man's nostrils the breath of life,)" breathed upon his disciples, and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." (John, c. x. v. 22.)

V. 8, 9.] This garden, planned doubtless with exquisite beauty, and stored with every thing which could regale all man's senses, seems to have been intended as a pledge of heavenly felicity.—The word Paradise, or the garden, in allusion to Eden, is frequently used for Heaven itself, and there are many references to it in Scripture. The tree of life also seems to have been a sacramental pledge of immortality; and by eating its fruit, life and felicity were sealed to Adam, as long as he continued obedient. The frequent allusions in Scripture to the tree of life, when Christ and heavenly things are spoken of, intimates that the first creation had in it a reference to the new creation in Christ Jesus; for "known unto God are all his works from before the "foundation of the world." The tree of knowledge seems to have been thus called, because that, by the prohibition of its fruit, a revelation was made to Adam of his Maker's will; of his own duty, interest, situation, and danger; of the consequences of his future conduct; and of the prescribed condition of life or death, happiness or misery; in which things his most interesting knowledge consisted. By this test also his Creator proved him, and made known what was in the heart of creatures, and how little dependence could be placed on them. By abstaining from this fruit, the knowledge of good would be enjoyed: but by eating of it the knowledge of evil would be fatally introduced. It might also intimate that man should set boundaries even to his thirst for knowledge; and covet rather to know and obey the commands of God, than to pry into unrevealed secrets. To these meanings Satan artfully superadded his pernicious misinterpretation, which will shortly require our attention.

V. 14.

10 And a river went out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads.

11 The name of the firſt is Piſon: that is it which compaſſeth the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold;

12 And the gold of that land is good: there is bdellium and the onyx ſtone.

13 And the name of the ſecond river is Gihon: the ſame is it that compaſſeth the whole land of Ethiopia.

14 And the name of the third river is Hiddekel: that is it which goeth towards the eaſt of Aſſyria. And the fourth river is Euphrates.

15 And the LORD God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dreſs it and to keep it.

16 And the LORD God commanded the man, ſaying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayeſt freely eat:

17 But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou ſhalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die.

18 And the LORD God ſaid, It is not good that the man ſhould be alone: I will make him an help meet for him.

19 And out of the ground the LORD God formed

V. 14. Hiddekel—Euphrates.] From theſe well-known rivers, the Hiddekel or Tygris, and the Euphrates, learned men have determined that the Garden of Eden was ſituated in, or near Meſopotamia; and ſome have even ſuppoſed that the preciſe ſpot may be aſcertained: but this is doubtful, and immaterial.

V. 15. To dreſs and keep it.] God gives every thing to man's labour, which was needful even in innocence, and in paradiſe; becauſe in activity true excellency and felicity conſiſts. Even the heavenly reſt will not be inaction, but action with delight and without wearineſs.

V. 16, 17.] Man created in the image of God, had the moral law written in his heart as the law of his holy nature; and doubtleſs was both required, and inclined to that love of God and his creatures, which is its ſubſtance and fulfilment.—But the prohibition here impoſed was an additional inſtituted teſt of obedience; and being accompanied with the liberal allowance which precedes it, formed a proper trial of his love, and of the ſubmiſſion of his inclinations to the will of his beneficent Benefactor. It likewiſe intimated to him, that the favour of God, and not animal gratification, was the proper felicity of his nature; and taught him not to conſider himſelf at the ſummit of his happineſs, in a ſtate where ſelf-denial was required.

The event demonſtrates that the annexed denunciation implied, that by tranſgreſſion he would totally forfeit his Maker's favour, and incur his diſpleaſure, with all its awful effects: that immediately he would become liable to pain and diſeaſe; which, as a tedious execution, ſhould not ceaſe, but in the diſſolution of the body: and that he would alſo loſe the holy image of God, and all the comfort of his favour; and experience the torment of ſinful paſſions, and the terror of his Maker's vengeance; which, according to this covenant, muſt endure coeval with the exiſtence of his immortal ſoul. The ſame evidence proves, that the whole human race, then in the loins of their common father, and repreſented by him as their fœderal head, were intereſted in this tranſaction.—To argue againſt theſe things, is to combat ſtubborn facts, as well as divine revelation: for man is evidently a ſinful creature, and ſhews his natural propenſities by his firſt actions, and his continual conduct: he is under undeniable tokens of divine diſpleaſure, and expoſed to ſufferings and death; whilſt a dark cloud, impenetrable, except by the light of revelation, reſts upon his ſtate beyond the grave. The Scriptures always addreſs him as in this miſerable ſituation, and of this ſinful character: and theſe things have been univerſally true in all ages and nations. If men will find fault with that, which God hath evidently done, let them anſwer it to him.—He deigns not to apologize for his own conduct: and, with our dark and imperfect views, we ſhall probably be deemed too officious, if we attempt it—"Shall not "the Judge of all the earth do right?" ſeems the proper anſwer to ſuch objectors; and to wait for a world of clearer light, is our proper behaviour.—To allow the wiſdom, juſtice and goodneſs of the divine conduct, only when we are capable of perceiving them, favours neither of humility nor of faith; the ſame approbation is due to an equal, or an enemy: but it becomes us, and is honourable to God, when we adore the depths, which we cannot fathom, and believe that "though clouds and "darkneſs are round about him, yet juſtice and judg-"ment are the baſis of his throne."

Could we diveſt ourſelves of partiality, we might diſcern in ſome degree the reaſonableneſs of the prohibition; the divine goodneſs, in ſelecting, as the condition of this covenant, ſo eaſy a teſt of obedience, and in the implied reſtipulation, that if he did not eat, he ſhould not die; and the peculiar meetneſs of Adam to be the repreſentative, as being the common father of the human race. Many things have been copiouſly and plauſibly argued upon theſe topicks: but it is freely granted, that great difficulties remain; and that they, who will give their Maker credit for his juſtice and goodneſs, no further than they can perceive them, muſt needs ſtumble at this ſtumbling ſtone, after all that can be done to remove it. Man's mortality and depravity, and the whole hiſtory of mankind, authenticate the Scripture Revelation upon this ſubject; and as collateral evidences, prove that it is God's teſtimony, and that we miſtake not its meaning: on this ground faith receives it, and humbled reaſon ſubmits to her teacher, God; and allows his righteouſneſs, though ſhe cannot fully comprehend it.

V. 18. Not good, &c.] It was not conducive to the happineſs of the man, to remain without the ſolace of ſociety, and the endearment of tender friendſhip: nor conſiſtent formed every beaſt of the field, and every fowl of the air; and brought them unto Adam to ſee what he would call them: and whatſoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof.

20 And Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beaſt of the field; but for Adam there was not found an help meet for him.

21 And the LORD God cauſed a deep ſleep to fall upon Adam, and he ſlept: and he took one of his ribs, and cloſed up the fleſh inſtead thereof;

22 And the rib which the LORD God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man.

23 And Adam ſaid, This is now bone of my bones, and fleſh of my fleſh: ſhe ſhall be called Woman, becauſe ſhe was taken out of man.

24 Therefore ſhall a man leave his father and his mother, and ſhall cleave unto his wife: and they ſhall be one fleſh.

25 And they were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not aſhamed.

ſiſtent with the end of his creation to be without marriage, by which the earth was to be repleniſhed. God withholds no good things from thoſe whom he loves.

V. 20. Adam gave names, &c.] Adam was better acquainted, by intuition as it were, with the diſtinct properties of every creature, than the moſt ſagacious obſervers, ſince the fall, have been able to become with their utmoſt ſtudy. When, therefore, the power of God brought them before him for that purpoſe, he gave them names expreſſive of their diſtinct natures. Yet, upon this review, not one was found in outward form his counterpart, (as the animals were formed male and female;) nor one ſuited to engage his affections, participate his enjoyments, or aſſociate with him in the worſhip of God.

V. 21, 22.] The Lord having ſupernaturally caſt Adam into a deep ſleep, without his conſciouſneſs, or pain, took from that part of his body, which was near the heart, the ſubſtance, of which he formed the woman, who was to be as part of himſelf, and the object of his moſt cordial affections. She was taken from him, and not out of the ground, that there might be a natural foundation of moderate ſubordination on the Woman's part, and ſympathizing tenderneſs on the Man's: as a man rules over, yet in ruling over, carefully defends and tenderly takes care of his own body. The Lord then conducted her, as his gift, to Adam: that under his ſanction, and according to his appointment, yet doubtleſs with their own moſt entire approbation, they might be united in marriage for their mutual good; and that he might thus authorize, and give an example for the regulation of all future marriages.

V. 23, 24.] Doubtleſs the Lord made known to Adam in what manner the Woman had been created from a part of himſelf, to be his companion. The original word, by which he called her, is the ſame as is often rendered man, but with the feminine termination annexed to it: and it imports that ſhe was exactly his counterpart, taken from him, united to him, and like him in every thing but ſex; and it expreſſed his grateful ſatisfaction in his Creator's gift. According to this original inſtitution of marriage, the neareſt of all relations, and the proper ſource of all the reſt; men in all future ages would leave the immediate ſociety even of their parents, to lay the foundation of new families, and thenceforth all other relative affections and duties muſt be regulated in ſubordination to the affections and duties of that new relation. Thus one man and one woman would be united ſo cloſely, as to become one fleſh: ſo that, according to the original inſtitution, nothing could ſeparate them, but that which diſſolves the union of ſoul and body; and even divides the component parts of the body from each other. It is not evident, whether this was ſpoken by Adam, or by Moſes: but certainly it was the word of God, ſpeaking by one of them, (Matt. c. xix. v. 4. 6.) Neither polygamy nor divorces can accord with this original inſtitution. In the beginning it was not ſo; nor would ſuch things have been practiſed, but for the ſinful luſts of men. Equally unſcriptural are conſtrained celibacy, and needleſs reſtraints upon marriage: the records of former times, and obſervation upon the preſent evince, that ſtill it is not generally good for man to be alone. The mutual inclination of the ſexes for each other, (which was originally implanted by the Creator, however debaſed by ſin,) when regulated by the law of God, and free from other reſtraints, becomes the foundation of all the other relations of life, the ſource of the moſt rational of our earthly comforts, and equally beneficial to individuals, families, and nations: like a river, which, gliding within its banks, beautifies and enriches the neighbouring plains. But when its regular courſe is obſtructed by unſcriptural reſtraints, or when it burſts through the bounds appointed of God, it diffuſes vice, diſcord, diſeaſe and miſery around with horrible rapidity: like the ſame river, obſtructed in its natural channel, overflowing its banks, inundating and deſolating the fields, and converting the neighbouring country into a marſh or fen, whoſe ſtagnating waters ſpread ſtench and infection all around.

V. 25, Were not aſhamed, &c.] The human body, the moſt noble production in the material creation, needed not to have been concealed, had not ſin diſgraced the Creator's work: and probably ſhame had not been excited in the manner in which it hath been even ſince man became a ſinner, had not the ſinful nature been communicated with the propagation of the human ſpecies.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As God himſelf contemplated his whole work with cordial approbation, and reſted in it with entire acquieſcence; it muſt be very preſumptuous, and dangerous for us to find fault with any part of it. We are indeed

CHAP. III.

Is an history of that melancholy event, to which the Apostle refers, when he says, "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." It contains, 1st. Satan in the serpent tempting the woman, v. 1—5. 2d. The woman eating the forbidden fruit, and tempting the man, who follows her example, v. 6. 3d. Their guilty shame, and vain attempt to remove it, v. 7. 4th. Their summons, arraignment, and conviction before their Judge, v. 8—13. 5th. The sentence denounced against the offenders, containing the gracious promise of a Redeemer, v. 14—19. 6th. Adam and Eve clothed with skins of beasts, and excluded from the garden of Eden, v. 20—24.

NOW the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field which the LORD God had made: and he said unto the woman, Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?

capable of perceiving the wisdom and goodness of God displayed in many of the constituent parts of the vast creation, and of rendering to him the tribute of adoring praise; but it indicates the most daring pride, to suppose ourselves competent to understand, or criticise the whole. As the only wise God instituted the Sabbath in Paradise, before the entrance of sin, we may thence infer, not only the advantage, but the absolute necessity, of time set apart for the immediate service of God, as the world now is; if we would pay any suitable regard to Religion, or to the salvation of our immortal souls. How much then should we sinners value, and how diligently should we keep holy the Christian Sabbath; and take care that our children and domestics have leisure and opportunity; and make use of them, for the same salutary purposes! Additional favours conferred upon us, lay us under additional obligations to grateful obedience: and as our liberal Benefactor indulges us in all things truly good for us; it is but reasonable that we give him credit for his wisdom and kindness even in his restraints and prohibitions, and chearfully deny ourselves at his requirement.

The covenant of works was holy, and just, and good; being proposed by a God of perfect holiness, justice, and goodness; and acceded to by Adam, before sin had impaired his powers, perverted his judgment, or depraved his heart: Yet it is contrary to us, who in Adam, and after his example, have violated the terms of it. We have, therefore, great reason to be thankful for another covenant, established upon better promises; and ratified by the engagements of a better Surety. To him let us flee for refuge, and from him alone seek deliverance from shame and pain, from sin and death. And whilst we receive all our worldly, and relative comforts from the hand of our reconciled God; whilst we seek his blessing upon them, use them according to his appointment, and attend to the duties which they require according to his command: Let us not forget, that an union must be formed with the Lord Jesus, of which marriage itself is but a type and shadow; we must be one Spirit with him, and cleave to him in simple dependence, cordial attachment, and devoted obedience and submission; even though it should interfere with the comfort of that most endeared relation: Then death which dissolves all other unions, will complete this to all eternity.

NOTES.

CHAP. III.] V. 1. The serpent was, &c.] Adam and Eve had, perhaps, noticed with pleasure and partiality, that the serpent possessed an instinctive sagacity, more resembling the effects of reason, than that of any other creature: Which suggested to Satan the device of using this animal, as his instrument in temptation. So that to the woman the serpent appeared to speak; but in reality Satan spake by the serpent; as in the days of Christ, the unclean spirits employed the organs of speech of the possessed persons. Common sense, and the whole Scripture, lead us to conclude, that the serpent was only the instrument, Satan the real actor in this matter: who is therefore called the serpent, the old dragon, a liar, and a murderer from the beginning. The word of God reveals to us the world of spirits, holy and unholy, of which otherwise we should have no certain knowledge: Faith avails itself of this information; but unbelief rejects it in contempt of God, and to the infidel's irreparable damage: for nothing better answers the purpose of the powers of darkness, than to work in the dark; and none serve their interests more effectually, than they who deny and endeavour to disprove their existence; for we never can guard against the attacks of unseen or unsuspected enemies. But from the Scriptures faith learns that angels have sinned and kept not their first estate: that being created of God holy and happy, they by transgression forfeited the favour and incurred the displeasure of their Creator, and became unholy and miserable; yea desperate in the certain expectation of increasing and everlasting misery. Being, however, still endued with vast capacities, profound sagacity, extensive knowledge, great power; and, at the same time, being wholly actuated by unbounded enmity, malice, envy, pride, ambition, and deceit; they maintain determined rebellion against their Maker: and, as they are very numerous, they have established a kingdom in opposition to his kingdom, under the dominion of the arch apostate, the Devil or Satan; so that, as far as they are permitted, they are unwearied and insatiable in mischief; aiming at nothing less than reducing the whole creation to a state of rebellion, anarchy and misery; and rendering all creatures as vile and wretched as themselves. Doubtless the beauty of the new created world; the glory of God, and the happiness of man, excited the envy and rage of these evil spirits; and suggested to Satan the malicious design of reducing the whole to confusion and misery.—For this purpose, he with dark craftiness concealed himself in the subtle serpent; and thus made his unsuspected attack upon the woman when alone: perhaps insinuating, that, by eating the fruit of the forbidden tree, the serpent had acquired the gift of reason and speech. And indeed we cannot satisfactorily account for the woman's entering into conversation with the serpent, and shewing no marks of surprise or suspicion: unless we admit of some supposition of this nature.

2 And the woman ſaid unto the ſerpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden:

3 But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midſt of the garden, God hath ſaid, Ye ſhall not eat of it, neither ſhall ye touch it, leſt ye die.

4 And the ſerpent ſaid unto the woman, Ye ſhall not ſurely die;

5 For God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes ſhall be opened: and ye ſhall be as gods, knowing good and evil.

6 And when the woman ſaw that the tree was good for food; and that it was pleaſant to the eyes, and a tree to be deſired to make one wiſe; ſhe took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave alſo unto her huſband with her, and he did eat.

Nothing can be conceived more artful, than Satan's firſt addreſs; "Yea, hath God ſaid, &c.?" it was as if he had ſaid, "Can it be true, which I have heard? Has the "Creator given you appetites, and placed gratifications "before you, only to mock you?—You muſt miſunder-"ſtand his meaning: or ſome envious being has counter-"feited his authority: or at leaſt it muſt be allowed a "very capricious reſtraint." Such inſinuations were artfully couched in this inſidious queſtion: and ſuch objections are continually ſtarted by him and his inſtruments, againſt every reſtriction in the word of God, which calls for our ſelf-denial. And in both caſes it is obſervable, that no notice is taken of the largeneſs of the grant, but merely of its limitation.

V. 2, 3.] The firſt miſtake of the woman conſiſted in attempting to anſwer the enſnaring queſtion propoſed to her: ſhe ought not to have liſtened for a moment to ſuch vile ſuggeſtions; nor to have entered into a parley with one, who aimed at exciting in her mind hard thoughts of God, and of his expreſs commands. When ſhe mentioned the grant of the bountiful Creator, it was not in the expreſſive language in which it had been made; "Of "every tree in the garden thou mayſt freely eat:" And ſhe added to the reſtriction, "neither ſhall ye touch it." This is, indeed, an excellent caution; we ſhould not come within the attractive force of forbidden objects: yet it ſeems here to be an intimation of the ſeverity of the prohibition. And it was ſaid in the foregoing chapter, "in the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt "ſurely die:" but the date, and the undoubted certainty of the event, are here omitted.—Upon the whole, the poiſon evidently began to work; Eve made too little of the liberal grant of the Creator, ſtated the prohibition in ſtrong terms of ſeverity, and faltered as to the certain, and immediate execution of the threatening.

V. 4, 5.] Perceiving his advantage, the tempter grew bolder, and gave a direct contradiction to the divine denunciation: thus he ſtill tempts men to ſin, promiſing them impunity by his inward ſuggeſtions, and by his agents in whom he lies concealed.—To gain the more credit to his daring aſſertions, he even proceeded to confirm them by an oath; blaſphemouſly calling on God to atteſt his horrid falſhoods; or rather inſinuating that the Lord knew that his own threatening would not be executed; but that on the contrary moſt abundant advantage would accrue to man, from the violation of his Maker's law. So that the author, and the firſt example of perjury, are ſet before us, and a ſpecimen is given of its horrible conſequences, in this firſt aſſault of Satan upon the human ſpecies: and perjurers would do well to look in this glaſs to ſee their own picture, contemplate their own character, and learn whoſe children they are, and whoſe conduct they imitate. The tempter, moreover, promiſed the woman a vaſt advance in knowledge, and an independent felicity, without ſubjection to the will, or dread of the diſpleaſure of a ſuperior: hereby inſinuating, that God forbad them this fruit, in order to keep them in ignorance, and in a mean ſtate of dependence and ſubjection. There is alſo an equivocation in the words: a latent truth, the reverſe of their apparent meaning. "Your eyes," ſays Satan, "ſhall be opened;" that is, when you have eat the fruit, you will too late ſee your own folly: "Ye ſhall be as gods:" revolted from God, and loſing his image and favour, you, in the pride of your hearts, will, as it were, uſurp his throne, affect an independency, ſet up to be your own lords and avengers, demand the homage of flattery and commendation, aſpire at the pinnacle of pre-eminence, attempt to lord it over others, and graſp at the poſſeſſion of all around you: thus you will be left to make trial of your ability to contrive, effect, and ſecure a happineſs to yourſelves, "as if ye were gods," till you find death, and miſery ſeize upon you; "knowing good and evil;" by loſing the good, and experiencing the evil.—Of ſuch a paraphraſe the words will admit; and ſuch have been the effects of eating the forbidden fruit: but nothing could be further from Eve's thoughts than this interpretation.—Thus they reſembled the ancient heathen oracles, of which, in one way or other, this father of lies was the undiſputed author: theſe were generally couched in ſuch ambiguous language, as might afterwards be interpreted to predict the event, though often in direct oppoſition to the diſappointed expectations of the deluded votaries.

V. 6. Saw, &c.] Thus began the luſt of the eye, as introductory to the luſt of the fleſh: The woman looked upon the fruit, till ſhe fancied that there would be ſome very extraordinary pleaſure in the taſte of it. As her ear, formed to receive the truth of God, was juſt before opened to admit Satan's lies; ſo now the eye, formed to behold his works, became an inlet to concupiſcence into the heart.—Now firſt the members became, and have ever ſince continued in unconverted men, "inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin." (Rom. c. vi. v. 13—19.) That "it was a tree to be deſired to make one wiſe," ſhe had no teſtimony, but that of Satan concealed in the ſerpent; yet ſhe neither heſitated, nor ſuſpected any deluſion: how powerfully did this poiſon operate! She, therefore, at the Serpent's inſtance, "took of the fruit, and did eat," without conſulting Adam, or allowing her-

7 And the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked; and they ſewed fig leaves together, and made themſelves aprons.

8 And they heard the voice of the LORD God walking in the garden in the cool of the day: and Adam and his wife hid themſelves from the preſence of the Lord God amongſt the trees of the garden.

ſelf leiſure for conſideration. We may be ſure that Satan is our concealed counſellor, when we are hurried on with ſuch precipitation, as to take no time for reflection, for prayer, or for conſulting grave and prudent friends.—Thus ſhe liſtened to, and parleyed with the tempter, till ſhe was entangled in unbelief: then ſuſpecting the divine veracity and goodneſs, ſhe conceived hopes of impunity in tranſgreſſion, and a gratification both of ambition and of the ſenſual appetite by it: and at length leaning to her own underſtanding, and truſting to her own heart, with confident preſumption ſhe took the forbidden fruit and ate. In this manner was luſt at firſt conceived, then ſin brought forth; and ſin being finiſhed, brought forth death.—And though the ſeveral ſteps may not always be ſo diſcernible; yet there is the ſame concurrence and ſucceſſion in every temptation, by which we are overcome: and it may be pronounced a picture in miniature of all Satan's devices, and of his victories over men in all ages.—Still he inſinuates hard thoughts of God, and his commandments; ſtill he flatters men with hopes of impunity, in direct contradiction to the word of God; ſtill he enhances to the imagination the pleaſure, or advantage of ſinful indulgences; ſtill he pays court to the ſenſual appetite, and to the pride of the heart; and ſtill he entangles men in error, ſeduces them into unbelief, hurries them on with precipitation, and prevails with them to truſt in themſelves, and in their own darkened underſtanding and depraved hearts, to their deſtruction.

But Satan's ſucceſs was yet incomplete: had Adam refuſed to eat, the woman's trangreſſion would have remained with herſelf. It was, indeed, a great point gained, to win her over, whom Adam ſo tenderly loved, and who would employ all her faſcinating influence to prevail on him to follow her example.—Thus he ſtill ſends his temptations by the hands of thoſe, whom we beſt love: and ever ſince men and women have been ſucceſsfully employed as tempters to each other: nor can men be content to ſin alone, but they always endeavour to draw others to the ſame things, into which themſelves have been ſeduced.

Whether Adam ſinned in preſumption, as not ſeeing death immediately inflicted on Eve; or in deſpair, as giving up all for loſt; or overcome by Eve's perſuaſions, does not clearly appear: But the Apoſtle intimates, (1 Tim. c. ii. v. 14.) that he was not deceived in the ſame manner and degree as the woman. Conſidering this offence in all its circumſtances, and with all its aggravations, we may term it the prolific parent, and grand examplar of all the tranſgreſſions committed on earth ever ſince.—Whatever there hath been in any ſin, of unbelief, ingratitude, apoſtacy, rebellion, robbery, contempt, defiance, hard thoughts of God, and enmity againſt him: whatever there hath been of idolatry, as comprehending faith in, worſhip of, and obedience to Satan, the god and prince of this world; of exorbitant pride, ſelf-love, and ſelf-will, in affecting that independency, exaltation, and homage, which belong to God; and that inordinate love of the creatures, in ſeeking our happineſs in the poſſeſſion, and enjoyment of them: whatever diſcontent, ſenſual luſt, covetouſneſs, murder and miſchief, were ever yet contained in any one ſin, or all which have been committed upon earth; the whole concentred in this one trangreſſion.—Nor have they been wide of the truth, who have laboured to prove, that all the ten commandments, extenſively and ſpiritually expounded, were at once violated: and the more reaſonable the prohibition, and the more trifling the inducement were, the more aggravated was the offence.—In this manner ſin entered, and Satan triumphed in eſtabliſhing his uſurped authority; "for of whom a man is overcome, of the ſame is he brought in bondage." Thus man apoſtatized, God was provoked, the holy Spirit forſook his polluted temple, the unclean ſpirit took poſſeſſion, the Divine Image was defaced, and Satan's image ſubſtituted in its place: hence the wickedneſs, and miſery of man. "A lamentation it is, and ſhould be:" "yet righteous art thou in all thy judgments, O Lord;" let not the enemy further prevail againſt us, we beſeech thee, by taking hence occaſion to produce in our minds one hard thought of thee, or of thy myſterious judgments!

V. 7. And their eyes, &c.] Thus Satan's promiſe began to be accompliſhed.—Their eyes were open to ſee the ſnare, when they were already caught in it: they ſaw alſo miſery before them, with horror and diſmay; and their new diſcoveries were their torment. Their bodily nakedneſs had not previouſly excited the ſenſation of ſhame.—But now being ſtripped of their robe of innocence, and deſpoiled of the ornament of the image of God, the defence of his protection, and the honour of his preſence, they perceived that they were indeed made naked to their ſhame; and their outward nakedneſs appeared an indication of the expoſed and ſhameful condition, to which they were reduced: whilſt their vain attempt to cover themſelves, by fig-leaves platted together, repreſents the fruitleſs pains and worthleſs expedients, which men employ to conceal their real character, and hide their ſins from each other, and even from themſelves; for we are naturally more aſhamed of being detected in ſin, than of committing it; and more deſirous of keeping up a good opinion of ourſelves, than of obtaining pardon from God: though we can hide nothing from him, and can neither elude his juſtice, nor recover his favour, by any of our own contrivances.

V. 8. They heard, &c.] This ſeems to intimate ſome viſible appearance of the Deity in human form, of which we ſhall hereafter find undeniable inſtances; and which are to be conſidered as anticipations of his incarnation, whoſe name is called "The Word of God." If we reverence the phraſeology of the paſſage, as the language of inſpiration, we ſhall not eaſily find any other ſatisfactory ſolution of it. The cool of the day was probably the time of their accuſtomed evening worſhip: when, doubtleſs, they had been uſed to welcome ſuch tokens of the divine preſence with the ſame kind of exulting joy, with 9 And the LORD God called unto Adam, and ſaid unto him, Where art thou?

10 And he ſaid, I heard thy voice in the garden: and I was afraid, becauſe I was naked; and I hid myſelf.

11 And he ſaid, Who told thee that thou waſt naked? haſt thou eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee, that thou ſhouldeſt not eat?

12 And the man ſaid, The woman whom thou gaveſt to be with me, ſhe gave me of the tree, and I did eat.

13 And the LORD God ſaid unto the woman, What is this that thou haſt done? and the woman ſaid, The ſerpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

14 And the LORD God ſaid unto the ſerpent, Becauſe thou haſt done this, thou art curſed above all cattle, and above every beaſt of the field: upon thy belly ſhalt thou go, and duſt ſhalt thou eat all the days of thy life.

15 And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy ſeed and her ſeed: it ſhall bruiſe thy head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel.

which a dutiful child meets the approbation of an indulgent parent.—But now conſcious guilt inſpired terror; and they deſired to flee and hide themſelves from God, as no longer their bounteous friend, but their dreaded enemy and avenger. Ah! where was now the wiſdom, which they were to derive from the forbidden fruit? They could only deviſe a fooliſh project of hiding themſelves from the all-ſeeing eye of God, under the ſhade of a few trees! Thus "the wiſdom of the world is fooliſhneſs with "God; and men profeſſing themſelves wiſe become ſuch "fools," as to "ſay in their heart that there is no God," or to act as if there were none.

V. 9. Where art thou?] Words of more terror, perhaps, never ſounded in man's ears, nor ſhall till the day of judgment.—The command had been peremptory, the threatening abſolute, the tranſgreſſion undeniable; no eſcape, or reſiſtance was practicable: no mention had been made of mercy, and probably the offenders had no expectation of forgiveneſs. Such a ſummons will one day cite the ſinner to the tribunal of his Judge: in the mean time, it is profitable to put it as a queſtion to ourſelves in various ways, and to enquire where we are? Are we in a ſtate of ſafety? in the path of duty? or in the broad way of deſtruction?

V. 10, 11.] Without any humiliation before, or ſupplication to, his offended Lord, Adam only in an evaſive manner attempted to account for his flight, without acknowledging the real cauſe. But the Lord enquired of him, from whom he had derived that information, which had excited this new ſenſe of ſhame? intimating that it aroſe from conſcious guilt, in that he had dared to trangreſs his righteous command. Thus ſhall every mouth be ſtopped, and every excuſe ſilenced, when God ariſeth to judgment.

V. 12, The woman, &c.] Adam could neither deny, nor excuſe the trangreſſion; yet inſtead of frankly confeſſing it, he caſt the blame upon the woman; as if he had been allowed to hearken to her, rather than to obey God. Nay he covertly charged the blame upon the Lord himſelf, ſaying, "The woman whom THOU gaveſt me" &c. —Here we diſcern the pride, ſtubbornneſs, and ſtoutneſs of heart, which characterize that evil ſpirit, who had juſt ſet up his kingdom within him: and Adam's poſterity have ever ſhewn a diſpoſition to imitate his example; by making ſuch excuſes for their ſins, as muſt ultimately throw the blame upon God himſelf.

V. 13. And the, &c.] The woman alſo diſcovered the ſame ſelf-juſtifying ſpirit, which conſtitutes a prominent feature in our fallen nature, equally diſcernible in tender infancy and in hoary hairs; not only amongſt the moral and exemplary, but even down to the proſtitute, the thief, and the murderer: and that without exception; unleſs as artfully concealed in a few; counteracted in ſome others by the grace of the Goſpel; and ſurpaſſed in others by that proficiency in wickedneſs, which glories in thoſe things, of which all ought to be aſhamed. Theſe indeed, like Satan in this inſtance, attempt no excuſe.

V. 14, 15.] The ſerpent ſeems to have previouſly been beautiful and innoxious: but it now aſſumed the reptile form, and became miſchievous and hateful: from that ſeaſon ſerpents have been more ſhunned, and perſecuted unto death as enemies to the human race, than almoſt any other animal: and by their venomous bite, they have often ſeverely avenged themſelves; whilſt, by reaſon of their proneneſs on the earth, they ſeem to eat all their food mingled with duſt. Thus the words may imply a viſible puniſhment to be executed on the ſerpent, as the inſtrument in this temptation: but the curſe was in reality intended for the inviſible tempter himſelf, whoſe abject degraded condition, and baſe endeavours to find ſatisfaction in rendering others wicked and miſerable, might be figuratively intimated by the ſerpent's moving on his belly, and feeding on the duſt.—Yet this curſe upon Satan contains the ſum of all bleſſings, which a merciful God beſtows on ſinful man.—It is a prophecy, and a promiſe; which have ever ſince been fulfilling, but have not yet received their full accompliſhment. —It compriſes the whole Goſpel; and is a prophetical hiſtory of the oppoſition with which it ſhould meet, and the ſucceſs with which it ſhould be crowned, in all ages and countries to the end of time.—Chriſt himſelf is the Seed of the woman, as the moſt illuſtrious of all who have been born of woman. The woman ſeems to have been mentioned alone; becauſe Satan had firſt prevailed againſt her; and perhaps with a prophetic reference to the miraculous conception of our Lord in the womb of the Virgin: but in him all his genuine diſciples are included, as members of his myſtical body.—The devil, his angels, and wicked men, are the ſerpent and his ſeed: "Ye are of your father the devil, and the works of "your father ye will do." God himſelf hath put enmity betwixt theſe two contending parties: for the effect

16 Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

17 And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life;

18 Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field;

19 In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of his grace in the heart of true christians is enmity, not against the persons of sinners, but against their character, the image of Satan which they bear, and the cause of Satan which they favour: that mind is in them which was in Christ, "who was manifested to destroy the works of "the devil." Their character and conduct also, the opposition which they make unto, and the testimony which they bear against, the wickedness of the world; as well as the success which the Lord vouchsafes them, excite the rage, envy, and malice of Satan and of wicked men; whose pride they affront, whose consciences they disturb, whose real characters they detect, and whose iniquity they oppose.—Hence Satan and his seed, by open violence and cruel persecutions, by secret machinations and base slanders, by artful temptations and pernicious heresies, fight against the seed of the woman.—In doing this they bruise his heel; they once crucified the Lord of Glory himself, they have massacred millions of his disciples, and by one means or other are always bringing inward or outward tribulations upon them: yet this is no mortal wound, for it hinders not the final glorification of the whole multitude, who thus in succession have Satan bruised under their feet;—The seed of the woman, fighting under the Redeemer's standard, by the doctrine of truth and the armour of righteousness, accompanied with prayers and patience; in abhorrence of sin and compassion for sinners, carry on their benevolent war; and they gain their most illustrious victories, when the power of Satan is broken, and his deluded servants are converted unto Christ. But their victories are the fruit of his severe conflict, and his glorious triumph over the tempter, especially upon the cross; where, in human nature, giving himself a ransom for sinners, he broke the whole force of Satan's usurped empire; and rising from the dead, and exalted at the right hand of the Father, all power in heaven and earth being vested in him, as Mediator between God and man, He is continually employed in crushing the Serpent's head; yet in measure, and order, "according to the purpose of him, who work-"eth all things after the counsel of his own will," (Eph. i. 11.) Already by his apostles and ministers he hath shaken the very foundations of his kingdom, and rescued millions of his wretched captives: but ere long he will even on earth gain a more decisive victory; and at last, as it were setting his foot on this serpent's head, he will entirely crush his interests; deprive him of all further power to do mischief; and execute condign punishment on all his seed, in the everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. From this short explication we may perceive, that the Person, sufferings, glory, and triumphs of the Redeemer; the character, tribulations, and felicity of the redeemed; the temporary successes, and final ruin of all the enemies of Christ and his people; and indeed almost the whole history of the church, and of the world, through time, and to eternity, are compendiously delineated in this surprising text; which stands, and will stand to the end of time, an internal demonstration that the Scripture was given by inspiration from God.

It is remarkable that this gracious revelation of a Saviour was given unsolicited, and previous to any humiliation on the part of man. Without a revelation of mercy, inspiring some hope of forgiveness, the convinced sinner would be hardened in desperation: this promise therefore formed that encouragement to hope, which was productive of true repentance and true religion, (as it is generally supposed,) in fallen Adam and Eve.

V. 16. Unto the woman, &c.] No degree of pain or sorrow would have been connected with pregnancy, or child-bearing, had not sin been committed: but the Lord threatened to multiply the woman's sorrows; even those of her conception: so that now, in a world of suffering, the pains and sorrows of the female sex are greatly multiplied indeed, almost beyond expression; which was an additional burden laid upon the woman, as the first transgressor and the tempter of her husband. It might, therefore, have been expected, that when such sorrows had been foretold as attendants on bearing children, the female sex would generally have preferred the single state, and thus have prevented the increase of the human species: but God, according to the probable meaning of the expression here used, hath so constituted the human heart, that marriage notwithstanding is generally chosen even by the suffering sex. Moreover, the authority of the husband, when exercised uniformly with wisdom and tenderness, would have increased mutual felicity: but, by the entrance of sin, it is too often converted into unreasonable and unfeeling despotism, and becomes an additional source of misery to many unhappy females; and they too being sinners, are equally prone to neglect the duties of their station, which occasions a still greater increase of misery and distraction. To prevent which, submission in things lawful is here commanded, notwithstanding this change in the conduct of the husband, which seems also to be predicted. 'It is well,' says Mr. Henry on this passage, "that enmity was not put between the 'man and woman, in the manner that it is betwixt her 'seed and that of the serpent.'

V. 17—19.] That, which Adam had pleaded as an extenuation of his crime, was adduced as the reason of his punishment; instead of hearkening to the voice of God, he had hearkened to her voice, whom God had appointed him to counsel and command, not to obey. Thus the mouth of sinners shall be stopped, and all their excuses turned against them. Yet the Lord did not denounce out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.

20 And Adam called his wife's name Eve; for she was the mother of all living.

21 Unto Adam also and to his wife did the LORD God make coats of skin, and clothed them.

22 And the LORD God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever;

23 Therefore the LORD God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken.

24 So he drove out the man: and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden, Cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life.

denounce a curse on him, and his seed, having before given imitations of rich blessings intended for them: but he cursed the ground for his sake; that, as he transgressed in eating the forbidden fruit, so he might be chastised, in the labour and sorrow connected with his future sustenance.

In consequence of this curse, useless and noxious weeds and plants spring up spontaneously, and grow and multiply with immense rapidity.—These must be eradicated, the soil prepared, and much labour bestowed, before the precious fruits of the earth can be obtained: hence incessant fatigue, pain, and penury, are the lot of the bulk of mankind; which had not been the case in any degree, had not sin occasioned it. The weight of this part of the sentence falls chiefly upon the man, to whom it is addressed; as that of the former on the woman. But even this curse prevents still greater evil than it occasions, as things are circumstanced; and in the event proves salutary to mankind.—Let it be noted, that men being condemned to hard labour as criminals, they, who live without any kind of useful employment, rebel against the sentence. Nor was any respite, or termination of this labour and sorrow, to be expected; till death should consign the body to the earth again, to mingle with its original dust.—As we feel that this sentence, in every part, is in full force against the whole human species; it is absurd to deny that we were all joined in the covenant with Adam, our common representative. But let us also remember, that as the sentence upon the serpent couched, under its outward meaning, the threatening of vengeance upon the invisible tempter: so the death denounced against the body, which is but the instrument of unrighteousness, comprehends also the awful punishment, prepared for the soul; which is the deviser, and real agent of every sin.—This is evinced by the sinful propensities of the human race, compared with the threatenings of wrath to come against every soul of man that doeth evil; for our nature too is fallen under the curse for Adam's sake, and produces only sinful desires, purposes, words, and actions, unless it be renewed by divine grace. So that we are concluded under sin and wrath, and none but Jesus, the Mediator of another covenant, can deliver us.—Thus He, "the second Adam, the Lord from heaven," as our Surety, was under subjection, made a curse for us; laboured hard through his sorrowful life; sweat blood in the garden, endured the travail of his soul; and at length expired on the cross, and was laid in the grave; that he might bear every part of the sentence deserved by man's sin, and so finally save the whole multitude of his believing people.

V. 20. Eve, &c.] That is life or living. This name seems to have been given in faith: Adam thankfully accepted the reprieve, which was comprehended in the sentence; and looked forward to the increase of the human species with submissive satisfaction, notwithstanding its attendant miseries; because he by faith embraced the promise of that future Seed of the woman, which should bruise the serpent's head.

V. 21. Coats of skins, &c.] Some conjecture from this circumstance, that a considerable time had elapsed between the creation and the fall, and that the animals had already begun to increase, or none could have been spared to be slain: but it is mere conjecture, as are all other opinions upon this subject, in which God hath not been pleased to gratify our curiosity. It is more obvious and useful to observe, that probably some beasts, by God's command slain in sacrifice, furnished these skins, with which they were clothed: and as Adam and Eve had never, we may be sure, slain any animals before the fall; and as we have no reason to suppose that any died of themselves; so it is hard to conceive in what other way these skins could be procured. This would very aptly typify the promised Seed, who suffered for our sins, that we might stand accepted with God in and by his righteousness: and the circumstance of the Lord God making these coats of skins, and clothing them, not only intimates the kind instruction and assistance, which he afforded them, in accommodating themselves to their present situation; but represents to us, that the Saviour and salvation are of his providing, and that faith, which receives and puts on Christ, is his gift, and must be sought and received from him.

V. 22—24.] (Note, i. 26.) The Lord was pleased to point out the sad change, that had taken place; by thus alluding to their ambitious desire, and vain expectation of being as gods; and to their woeful disappointment. As Adam had forfeited the blessing of immortality, it was very proper that he should be deprived of the sacramental pledge of it. This by no means proves, that the fruit of the tree of life had any inherent efficacy of conferring immortality: it rather reflected upon their folly, who had been deluded to believe that the fruit of the tree of knowledge possessed one of a similar nature. After their expulsion from the garden of Eden, some august angelic guards, with a visible appearance, and the similitude of a flaming sword, forbad all entrance into it, or access to the tree of life: this signified, that according to the covenant, which was sealed by that tree, God's favour and eternal life were for ever unattainable by fallen man.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In deducing practical instruction from this important part of Scripture, the only difficulty lies in selection: for much must be omitted; as almost the whole of revealed religion might be drawn from it.—The subject calls upon us to lament and mourn; not so much for these primitive transgressors, as for ourselves, our children, and the whole human race, thus involved in one common ruin: But at the same time it reminds us to rejoice in God our Saviour, from whom come everlasting righteousness and felicity. Yet it behoves us to rejoice with trembling, lest we should come short of, or be found to neglect, such great salvation, through the deceitfulness of our hearts, and the sinfulness of the world; and above all through the subtlety of our watchful, unwearied, and malicious enemies, the powers of darkness; who are still envious of our happiness, and covertly plotting our destruction.—Whenever our pride is flattered, or discontent, ambition, affectation of independence, covetousness, or sensual lusts are excited in our minds; when we are ready to promise ourselves impunity in or advantage from sin; when hard thoughts of God and his commandments, doubts about his veracity and faithfulness, or low apprehensions of the value of his favour and of spiritual blessings, are suggested; and when we are urged forward with precipitation and self-confidence, contemning counsel, and not brooking opposition: Then we may be sure the old serpent is at work; and we are especially called to watch and pray; and our only safety consists in speedy flight, or vigorous resistance stedfast in the faith. We should not only be upon our guard against avowed enemies, or wicked people: but we must reject temptations to unbelief or disobedience, though sent by the hands of the most lovely, or beloved object upon earth; recognizing the tempter as concealed in it, and with indignation answering, "Get thee behind me, Satan, for so "it is written."—Nay if our own senses, or understandings seem to testify, that forbidden objects are good and desirable, we must reject that testimony, if we would be safe and happy.—Nor let it be forgotten that the desire of knowledge is as liable to exorbitancy, as the sensual appetites; and when not subjected to, and restricted by, the word of God, degenerates into bold curiosity, scepticism, and infidelity.—The triumphs of prosperous wickedness are short-lived, and issue in redoubled vengeance; and agreement in sin often produces the most bitter recriminations, and most implacable enmities.—Upon the face of this transaction it is manifest that we are capable of ruining, but not of saving ourselves; and that the contrivance and proposal at least of salvation go before, not only our deservings and endeavours, but even our desires and expectations. Had not therefore the Judge of men been previously revealed as the Saviour of sinners, we must all have stood self-convicted and trembling before him, to hear the aweful sentence of everlasting condemnation. If notwithstanding the light of revelation, and the hope of salvation, the world, ever since the fall, hath been full of darkness, sin, and misery; what would it then have been, had the Lord finally withdrawn from his apostate creatures? And if temporal evils excite such lamentation, what will the wrath to come be? The believer is taught to consider the former as fatherly chastisements, tokens of love, light afflictions, and but for a moment; and is enabled to submit to them, and to death itself, with chearfulness, in the hope of everlasting glory: but the latter is reserved, as the portion of the enemies of God. Hoping in the merits of Christ and the blood of the everlasting covenant, of which he is the faithful Surety, let us lie low before him in humiliation for sin, and gratitude for salvation; let us labour and suffer patiently; resist temptation manfully, and obey his commands chearfully: not only expecting that he will bruise satan under our feet shortly; but that he will in due time crush the serpent's head completely, and fill the earth with truth and righteousness.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV.] V. 1. I have, &c.] Some think that Eve concluded this to be the promised Seed, and called him, The MAN JEHOVAH. If so, she was woefully disappointed.

V. 3, 4.] This early use of sacrifices confirms the supposition, that the appointment of them was a part of the gracious revelation made to Adam after his transgression.—It is indeed exceeding difficult, in any other way, to account for the very general use of altars and sacrifices, in order to appease the anger of the offended Deity; which at first sight appears so unreasonable. But if God commanded Adam after the fall, to shed the blood of innocent animals, and after their death to consume part, or the whole, of their bodies by fire; representing the merited punishment of sin, by the death of the body, and the wrath of God in a future state, (of which the fire is a well-known emblem) and prefiguring the sufferings of Christ: In this case the whole appears very natural; the original tradition was remembered, and the method of expiation practised, long after the meaning of it

5 But unto Cain, and to his offering, he had not reſpect. And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell.

6 And the LORD ſaid unto Cain, Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen?

7 If thou doeſt well, ſhalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doeſt not well, ſin lieth at the door. And unto thee ſhall be his deſire, and thou ſhalt rule over him.

8 And Cain talked with Abel his brother: and it came to paſs when they were in the field, that Cain roſe up againſt Abel his brother, and ſlew him.

9 And the LORD ſaid unto Cain, Where is Abel thy brother? And he ſaid, I know not: Am I my brother's keeper?

10 And he ſaid, What haſt thou done? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground.

11 And now art thou curſed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand.

12 When thou tilleſt the ground, it ſhall not henceforth yield unto thee her ſtrength. A fugitive and a vagabond ſhalt thou be on the earth.

it was obſcured and forgotten.—Cain ſeems to have approached God in a way of his own deviſing, and in his own name, without the acknowledgment of his ſinfulneſs, or dependence on the promiſed Saviour; not to ſupplicate mercy, but only to render his tribute for providential bleſſings. In ſo doing he manifeſted a proud, impenitent, unbelieving heart; and intimated his purpoſe of adhering to the covenant of works: therefore he and his offering were rejected. But Abel came as a ſinner, according to God's appointment; his offering expreſſed humility, ſincerity, and believing obedience: and as he thus ſought the mercy of the new covenant, through the promiſed Seed, he was graciouſly accepted; and his ſacrifice was diſtinguiſhed by ſome manifeſt token of divine approbation; probably it was conſumed by fire from heaven; (1 Kings, xviii. 23—29. 36—39. 2 Chron. vii. 1;) which intimated, that the deſerved vengeance conſuming the ſacrifice, way was made for the exerciſe of mercy to the offender. We know that by faith Abel "offered a more excellent ſacrifice than "Cain:" and in all ages two ſuch deſcriptions of worſhippers have been found, as we ſuppoſe Cain and Abel to have been; namely, proud deſpiſers of ſalvation by faith in the blood of Chriſt, who have attempted to pleaſe God by following their own devices; and humble believers, who have found acceptance in the Lord's appointed way, and patiently endured the envy, hatred, and perſecution, to which this expoſed them.

V. 5—7.] Cain, inſtead of humbly enquiring the cauſe of his rejection, indulged the moſt malignant reſentment againſt Abel; and even harboured an evil ſpirit of diſcontent, rebellion, and enmity againſt God himſelf; which tormenting paſſions were, as they are wont to be, ſtrongly marked upon his ſullen, downcaſt countenance. But the Lord condeſcended to expoſtulate with his rebellious creature; and intimated to him, that he had no cauſe of diſſatisfaction; that the hypocriſy of his heart, and the unwarranted method of his approach, had indeed deſervedly excluded him from ſharing his gracious approbation; but that, if he would now come in another temper, and in the preſcribed way, he alſo ſhould meet with acceptance. He further warned him, that "ſin lay at the door;" that the indulgence of his malignant paſſions would open the way to the commiſſion of greater crimes, which would expoſe him to deeper condemnation. Nor had he any cauſe for diſcontent or reſentment; ſeeing Abel ſtill loved him, and was ready to obey him as his elder brother, as he had done before. (Note, iii. 16.)

V. 8, 9.] It ſeems that Cain concealed his murderous hatred under the maſk of cordial affection, and entered into familiar converſe with his brother; till he had drawn him into the field, at a diſtance from Adam and Eve, and ſo obtained the opportunity of ſlaying him. But immediately the Lord, manifeſting his preſence by ſome external appearance, called him to account for his conduct, (as he had formerly done Adam and Eve;) enquiring of him, where his brother Abel was? And his anſwer accorded to the idea before ſuggeſted of his pride and unbelief: He denied that he knew where Abel was! as if he could conceal his crime from God himſelf! and he inſolently demanded, if he were his brother's keeper! I know not whether we are to conſider this as an almoſt atheiſtical denial of God's omniſcience, or a rejection of his authority, and defiance of his omnipotence; but it plainly ſhews how ſin hardens the heart, and blinds the underſtanding.

V. 10—12.] Thus God called upon Cain to reflect upon the horrid nature and aggravated circumſtances of his crime, and the vengeance due to him, to awaken remorſe, and alarm his fears.—Here was in this one action, undeſerved hatred, and unprovoked revenge producing premeditated murder, whilſt men were yet few in number, and probably none had hitherto died: the murder of a brother, in cruel diſregard to their common parents; for no other reaſon, but the excellency of his character, and God's acceptance of him; which evidenced a malignant hatred of holineſs, and a daring contempt of, and determined enmity to, God himſelf.—The juſtice and holineſs of God, and his authority as Governor of the univerſe, render it ſo ſuitable and proper for him to puniſh offenders, that they, who ſuffer flagrant wrong, are often ſpoken of in Scripture, as loudly calling upon him, and as it were demanding of him, to execute vengeance upon their injurers.—And as he witneſſes thoſe ſecret crimes, which elude the juſtice of men: ſo thoſe crimes themſelves are repreſented as having a voice, which loudly calls upon the Judge of all, to whom vengeance belongs, to puniſh the perpetrators of them: which he 13 And Cain said unto the LORD, my punishment is greater than I can bear.

14 Behold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from thy face shall I be hid, and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass, that every one that findeth me shall slay me.

15 And the LORD said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him seven-fold. And the LORD set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

16 And Cain went out from the presence of the LORD, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.

17 And Cain knew his wife, and she conceived and bare Enoch; and he builded a city, and called the name of the city after the name of his son Enoch.

18 And unto Enoch was born Irad: and Irad begat Mehujael: and Mehujael begat Methusael: and Methusael begat Lamech.

19 And Lamech took unto him two wives: the name of the one was Adah, and the name of the other Zillah.

20 And Adah bare Jabel: he was the father of such as dwell in tents, and of such as have cattle.

21 And his brother's name was Jubal: he was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ.

22 And Zillah, she also bare Tubal-cain, an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron: and the sister of Tubal-cain was Naamah.

23 And Lamech said unto his wives, Adah and Zillah, Hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech: for I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt.

24 If Cain shall be avenged seven-fold, truly Lamech seventy and seven-fold.

accounts himself in honour bound to, and therefore most assuredly he will do it.—Thus Abel's blood called, as with a loud voice, to the Lord to punish the cruel murderer: and Cain's enormous crime exposed him to so aweful and deserved a curse, that the very elements were ready to rise up in arms against him, to be the Creator's instruments of vengeance; and the earth would withhold her wonted increase, because he had forced her to drink the blood of righteous Abel. There is vast majesty and energy, in the personification of the inanimate creatures, and representing them as uniting against Cain: who would in consequence be so dreaded, and detested by others; and the sight of him must be so grievous to Adam and Eve; that he was, as it were, driven from society. It appears that Adam and Eve had many more children, than are mentioned by name; and that there were at this time a considerable number of inhabitants in the earth: probably Abel was not killed, till within a short time of the birth of Seth, which was when Adam was an hundred and thirty years of age, during which space mankind might be much increased.

V. 13—15.] Cain expressed no humiliation for the greatness of his sin, but complained of the severity of his punishment; which is the universal effect of an impenitent heart. He represented that he should be left destitute of the providential protection of God, as a kind of outlaw: yet the Lord intended not that he should be slain; but that he should live a monument and witness of his abhorrence of murder.—It is in vain for us to enquire what the mark was which God set upon him; it was doubtless well known to the parties concerned, both as a brand of infamy on Cain, and as a token from God that they should not kill him.

V. 16, 17.] Cain seems to have renounced entirely the ordinances of God, and the society of his worshippers, and those places, where there were some sensible tokens of his presence and acceptance. Thus becoming openly irreligious, he employed himself in building; probably to divert his mind from serious reflections, and remorse of conscience; to attach to himself some adherents, and get a name in one way, as he had forfeited his reputation in another. Ungodly Cain was the first that we read of, who builded a city: and his posterity invented many useful and ingenious arts. (20, 21, 22.) The servants of God, who are most attentive to the one thing needful, are not generally the most eminent in natural ingenuity and industry.

V. 19. Lamech took two wives.] This is the first instance which we have of polygamy, and is not suited to impress us much in its favour.—I use the word polygamy in the popular sense, for more wives than one at a time: though strictly speaking this is bigamy.

V. 23, 24.] Lamech appears to have been either suspicious of his wives, or desirous of obviating their apprehensions for his safety: it seems plain that he was conscious of having many enemies, whose resentment he had provoked by injuries of one kind or other: Whether, therefore, he spake affirmatively, and acknowledged that he had killed a man, though not his own brother; or interrogatively, "Have I killed a man to my hurt?" he evidently drew a comparison betwixt himself and his ancestor Cain; and flattered himself that he was much less criminal: and he therefore abused the patience of God in sparing Cain, into an encouragement to himself to expect impunity in sin; and to dare and defy the vengeance of those, who hated him.

V. 25.

25 And Adam knew his wife again, and she bare a son, and called his name Seth; For God, said she, hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew.

26 And to Seth, to him also there was born a son; and he called his name Enos: then began men to call upon the name of the LORD.

V. 25. Another seed, &c.] Eve had probably some intimation that this son was to be the progenitor of the promised Seed.

V. 26. To call upon, &c.] Or, to call themselves by the name of the Lord: that is, some persons, by an open profession of true religion, began to protest against the prevailing impiety and wickedness of the world around them

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The promises of God shall surely be accomplished; but the appointed season must be waited for: and hasty expectations often end in bitter disappointments.—Acceptance with God cannot be obtained, but in the way of his appointment; and unbelief, pride, and hypocrisy, are as ruinous as open ungodliness itself.—When we fail of success in our undertakings, or comfort in religious exercises; instead of indulging discontent and envy, we should diligently search out and remove the sinful cause; for though we have failed in one instance, we may afterwards succeed: but if we give place to the devil by harbouring resentment, we know not whither we may be hurried.—What fatal effects were these of our first parents' transgression! and how must their hearts have been tortured with variegated anguish at such events! What remained in Cain of the image and likeness of God? Was he very good? Nay have we not in him the very image of Satan; pride, envy, malice, murder, lies, enmity against God, insolence towards him, and final apostacy from him!—As divine truth embraced in faith is the appointed means of our recovering, from glory to glory, the image of God: so Satan's lies, when believed, produce his very nature in the soul. But "Abel being dead, yet speaketh:" not only proclaiming the heinousness of murder, and warning us to stifle the first emotions of wrath; for malice in the heart is the embryo of actual murder: but also teaching us, that the believer's happiness is not in this world; that persecution must be expected by the righteous, even on account of their righteousness; and that there is a future state, and an eternal recompence to be enjoyed by them, through faith in Christ, and his atoning sacrifice.—When "Cain, who was of that wicked one, slew his brother, because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous;" (1 John iii. 12.) then, in consequence of the enmity put between the Seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent, the war broke out; which, in one way or other, hath been waged ever since: and Cain may be considered as the father, the patron, and the archetype of proud Pharisees, formal worshippers, and bloody persecutors of every age and nation, from the beginning to the end of the world. In this war we are all concerned, none are neuter; for our Captain hath declared, "He that is not with me, is against me." Under his banners therefore let us enlist, and not be fearful and unbelieving, but take up our cross and follow him: and with all the forces we can muster, decidedly, yet in meekness, let us support the cause of truth and righteousness, against Satan and his servants; and should we here meet with persecution even unto death, he will certainly give us the crown of everlasting life: for "to him that overcometh, will he give to sit down with him upon his throne even as he hath overcome, and has sat down with his Father upon his throne." These are the better things, which the blood of Jesus speaketh, than did that of Abel; who was a type of him, both in the righteousness of his life, and the manner of his death: but his blood called for vengeance upon him who shed it; whilst the blood of Christ pleads before the throne for pardon and peace, grace and glory to those, whose sins were the procuring cause of his death. But, on the contrary, what will it avail the sinner, to deny or excuse his crimes? to quarrel against, or blaspheme, the justice of his Maker? or impiously to spend the space of the Lord's long-suffering in worldly projects, or in making himself eminent among, or terrible to, his fellow-creatures? For the wrath of God abideth on him; his curse will poison all his enjoyments; and heaven, earth, and hell, will speedily, as it were, combine in effecting his everlasting destruction.

NOTES.

CHAP. V.] V. 1, 2.] Adam was not only the name of the first man, but also that of the species: it is supposed to have been derived from the red colour of the earth, out of which his body was formed; and to have been given him, to remind him, and us, of the original of our bodies in comparison with that of our immortal souls.

V. 3. In his own likeness, &c.] The contrast between Adam created in the likeness of God; (1.) and Seth begotten in the likeness of Adam after the fall, is very remarkable.—Seth was not only the father of the holy seed before the flood, but of the whole human race ever since; and consequently the ancestor of Christ. Adam and Eve were personally pardoned, and recovered to holiness, as it is generally allowed: but Adam was no longer our Representative, as he had been when he transgressed the covenant: therefore he communicated to his poſterity that nature which he had as a ſinner, not the new nature which he had as a believer.—Seth alſo ſeems to have been a godly perſon; yet not as born of Adam; but as born again of the Spirit. And this was noted eſpecially in him; leſt Cain's wickedneſs ſhould be aſcribed to other cauſes, and Abel's righteouſneſs to the goodneſs of his natural diſpoſition, and not to the grace of God, as it is common in ſimilar caſes.—But the character and conduct of all Seth's poſterity, (Chriſt alone excepted), unleſs, or until, born of God, plainly teſtify what that image was, in which he was begotten.

V. 22—24.] Walking with God is a figurative deſcription of that intimate communion which ſubſiſts between a merciful God and true believers, which it may be uſeful to explain: "Can two walk together except they "be agreed?" (Amos, iii. 3.) Without coincidence in ſentiment, judgment, and diſpoſition, there can be no cordial union or harmony. But man is naturally propenſe to thoſe things which God abhors and forbids; and averſe to thoſe that God loves and commands. His underſtanding is ſo darkened, his judgment ſo perverted, his affections ſo depraved, and his taſte ſo vitiated, by ſin; that in almoſt every thing his views, his choice, his deſires, and purſuits, are the reverſe of thoſe, which the word of God propoſes to him. Being thus diſpoſed, he departs from and walks contrary to God, contracts guilt, and merits condemnation. A ſinner's walk with God, therefore, commences with the change of his judgment and diſpoſition by divine grace: then he begins to abhor and repent of his ſins; to deſpiſe the world in compariſon of the favour of God; to hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs; to ſeek forgiveneſs and acceptance with God, in the way of his appointment; and to devote himſelf to his love and ſervice, and the purſuit of holineſs. Having been thus reconciled to God, he walks with him in the continual exerciſe of repentance, and faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; in an habitual realizing ſenſe of, and regard to, the preſence of God in his whole conduct; in a daily dependence on his promiſe, providence, and grace for all things needful for ſoul and body; in a continual attention to his word, that from thence he may learn his truth and will, and derive the peace and comfort of his ſalvation; in pouring out the heart before the Lord in fervent prayer and grateful praiſe; in a believing, reverential, and delightful attendance on all the ordinances of his worſhip, and an open profeſſion of his faith and love; in a conſcientious obedience to all his commandments, without regarding the praiſe or cenſure of men; in ſubmiſſion to his providential appointments; and finally, in an habitual endeavour by attention to every relative obligation, by a careful improvement of every talent, and by a circumſpect converſation, to "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in "all things," and to recommend religion to all around him. The Lord, on his part, anſwers the expectations of thoſe, who thus walk with him: in his providence he ſupplies their wants, interpoſes in their emergencies, and evidences his care of them; he meets them in his ordinances ordinances, teaches them from his word, anſwers their prayers, accepts their ſervices, communicates by his Spirit wiſdom, ſtrength, and conſolation to their ſouls, and is indeed their Guide, Companion, and Counſellor through life: and at length he meets them at death, and takes them into his preſence, where is fulneſs of joy. Thus ends the walk of faith; for thenceforth they walk by ſight, and ſee him as He is; being for ever with God, and like him, in holineſs and felicity. But Enoch was an exception to the general rule; for "He was tranſlated "that he ſhould not ſee death." (Heb. xi. 5, 6.) In the prime of life, according to thoſe times, he was taken from earth to Heaven, in the body, without feeling the pangs of death, having received this teſtimony, that he had pleaſed God.—Therefore he was not found on earth, either by his friends, who ſought him from love; (2 Kings, ii. 16—18;) or by his enemies, who ſought him in the murderous rage of perſecution: for he was a preacher of righteouſneſs; and if we may judge by the ſpecimen (Jude, 14, 15,) his plain, bold, and alarming addreſs could not fail greatly to enrage the daring ſinners to whom he was ſent. But by taking him alive into Heaven, God effectually reſcued him from their malice, teſtified his approbation of his conduct, and gave a convincing proof of the inviſible world, and of the future ſtate of recompence.

V. 29. Noah, &c.] Noah ſignifies reſt, or refreſhing: Perhaps Lamech thought that he had obtained the promiſed Seed.—But it is more likely that he ſpake by the Spirit of prophecy, which revealed to him that Noah would be an extraordinary perſon, and a great bleſſing to mankind; not without reference to the preſervation of the human ſpecies with him in the ark; which typified the ſalvation of ſinners by Jeſus Chriſt; our true and only effectual comfort amidſt the toils and miſeries of life.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

This is nearly all the hiſtory, which God hath been pleaſed to tranſmit to us, of the antediluvian world, that ſubſiſted for the ſpace of 1656 years. Conſidering how long men lived and had children before the flood, we may well ſuppoſe that the earth was filled with inhabitants: and we may with apparent probability conjecture, that there were many flouriſhing kingdoms amongſt them; many revolutions in ſtates, many mighty atchievements, and renowned characters, which are all buried in oblivion: whilſt nothing is recorded but what relates to the holy ſeed, amongſt whom true religion was maintained; and who doubtleſs were deſpiſed and hated in their generation. In the judgment of God, the ſaints are the only excellent and eminent perſons, and true religion the only important concern, on earth: compared with theſe, all things elſe are ſcarcely worth mentioning. We have no reaſon to wonder on account of the longevity of the Antedeluvians; nor is it needful to perplex ourſelves about the ſecond cauſes, which conduced to prolong their days: for nothing but the power of God, "in whom we "live, and move, and have our being," could preſerve the curious fabric of the human body in repair, for the few years which we live; and the ſame power ſuffices to preſerve it to the age of Methuſelah, or for ever. Man lives as long as his Creator pleaſes, and no longer; which ſhould warn us not to provoke him, and teach us to make haſte to be at peace with him, and to live prepared for and expecting our ſummons.—Nor have we any cauſe to regret the ſhortneſs of our preſent lives: Abel and Enoch, the two moſt favoured characters, before the flood, were removed from the earth at an earlier period than any others, whoſe hiſtory is tranſmitted to us. Were the world leſs miſerable, it could be no loſs to die, and go to Heaven; nor can it ever be gain to live, and treaſure up wrath by ſin: and as their length of life encouraged procraſtination, and increaſed preſumption; ſo the ſhortneſs of our days may warn us, without delay, to hearken to the voice of God in the Goſpel.—But man, in his beſt eſtate, is altogether vanity: he is born, raiſes up a family, and dies! Theſe are his memoirs: all elſe is a cypher, or a blot, except he WALK WITH GOD.—The page of hiſtory records the ſplendid actions of the great, and illuſtrious: the report of the day proclaims the wealth which others have accumulated, left behind, and are gone to render an account of: the monuments of the dead are often inſcribed with pompous titles and flattering commendations.—But may it be with truth engraved on my tombſtone, or whiſpered in the obſcureſt corner, "He walked "with God, and was not, for God took him;" and ſo far from envying their diſtinctions, nor even Enoch's privilege ſhall be anxiouſly deſired: but, as one expreſſes it, (Doddridge's Hymns)—

"I'll hail the ſharpeſt pangs of death,
"Which break my way to God."

We may alſo obſerve that they, who begin young to walk with God, may expect to walk with him long, comfortably, and uſefully: and the true chriſtian's perſeverance in holineſs, through many a year, till God takes him, will best evince and illustrate the holy tendency of that doctrine, which many oppose, and many abuse.—But walking with God requires no monkish celibacy and solitude: it well consists with the cares and comforts, and much consists in the conscientious performance of the duties, of social and relative life.—However, we need better comforters under our toil and sorrow, than the dearest relations, and most promising offspring: may we then seek and find the comforts of faith in Christ, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI.] V. 2. The sons of God, &c.] All the true worshippers of God are his sons and daughters: and sometimes the appellation is extended to all those, who profess the true religion.—So that they who were called by the name of the Lord, from unworthy motives intermarried with those that were openly irreligious; who are here called the daughters of men; which produced, as it always hath done, an increase of wickedness and an almost universal apostacy.

V. 3. My Spirit, &c.] This seems to mean, that the holy Spirit (from whose influences all that is good, tends to good, or checks the torrent of ungodliness, is derived) would at length finally leave these sinners; being provoked by their obstinate iniquity, not only against their own consciences, but in despite of his convictions: and that they would then become totally hardened in sin, and ripe for destruction; and God would no longer exercise patience towards them. For man was not only frail and feeble, but carnal and corrupt; and had prostituted the powers of his rational soul, and sacrificed every noble consideration, to "make provison for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof:" so that he was become altogether incapable of answering the great end of his creation. Yet the Lord was pleased to give notice that he would wait 120 years before he executed his purposed vengeance; that men might have space for repentance, and to use proper methods of averting his terrible indignation. (Rom. viii. 1—13. Gal. v. 17—21.)

V. 4. Giants.] Men of great stature and strength, but of more enormous wickedness; who were mighty men, and men of renown, as chieftains and conquerors.

V. 5. God saw, &c.] The words of this verse are very expressive—"God saw the wickedness of man to be great "on the earth."—He, who could not mistake, or form a false estimate, saw that it was very great; that is open, daring, almost universal; of all men, all over the earth. Yet he saw the heart still worse:—"Every imagination "of the thoughts of the heart were only evil continually:" that is, the workings of the fancy, the contrivances of the understanding, the purposes, desires, and affections of the whole soul, were every one of them evil, only evil, without any intermixture of good;—only evil, continually, without interruption or cessation! Alas! how few persons are aware that this is the case with themselves, and with all men, as long as they remain destitute of the sanctifying grace of God! Inattention, ignorance of the law of God, and self-flattery, hide this mortifying truth from men's minds, and prejudice them against it; but the perception of it is essentially necessary to a proper valuation of the salvation of the Gospel.

V. 6. It repented—it grieved, &c.] Such expressions as these are made use of by the Holy Ghost in Scripture, in a gracious condescension to our low apprehensions; and to accommodate heavenly things, as far as their nature will admit of it, to the similitude of earthly things: just as we speak to the children in an imitation of their language, and in accommodation to their capacities, that we may better convey our meaning into their minds.—"I speak after the manner of men, because of "the weakness of your flesh." Metaphysical truth is too refined and subtile for the instruction of mankind, and only fitted for the amusement of a few ingenious, speculative men: but the Scriptures were written to make even the poor and illiterate wise unto salvation. To speak to them of the cause from its sensible and visible effects, more readily informs, and more deeply interests them: whilst abundance of other passages guard the sober enquirer from misapprehension.—Should an artist, after bestowing much pains, and manifesting great skill, about some curious piece of mechanism, dash it to pieces; we should conclude from this effect, that he repented of having made it:—Should a parent, after conferring great favours upon his child, be provoked by his misconduct finally to disinherit him; we should thence infer, that he was grieved at his heart that he had bestowed so much upon him. Thus the Creator, having formed the earth and men upon it; having displayed so much his wisdom, power, and goodness in the works, which he had made for, and the riches he had conferred upon, man, in whom especially his glory had shone; after all, when the earth was filled with inhabitants, was provoked, by their wickedness to destroy them all with a flood: This was an effect, which seemed to flow from his repenting that he had made man, and to indicate that he was grieved at his heart.—It is indeed impossible that God should really be sorry for, or repent of, any thing that he hath done: but his change of conduct was such, as in men springs from such causes: and the expression most emphatically denotes his extreme abhorrence of their crimes.

V. 8. But, &c.] Noah was an exception to the general rule, a true believer, a partaker of the grace of God, and an object of his special favour. He was inwardly, sincerely, and unreservedly religious; one that dared to be singular in that corrupt generation.

V. 11, 12.] The earth was not only full of daring impiety before God, and as it were in defiance of him; but also of oppression, cruelty, and murder: so that men in general had corrupted their way, all over the world. Noah's godliness was mentioned as the effect of the grace of God: but the wickedness of the rest is ascribed to themselves. This is the Scripture distribution of this matter; and christian simplicity will be satisfied with it, and enquire no farther.

V. 13. With the earth, &c.] With all the animal tribes, and all the vegetable riches, with which it was replenished; and with all the works of men, which had been planned, and finished on it, as cities, palaces, &c; so as to render the whole one universal desolation.

V. 14—16.] The ark seems to have been built, like the hulk of a ship, but roofed as an house: it was divided into many little cabins for its intended inhabitants; pitched within and without to keep it tight and sweet; and lighted at the upper part. As a cubit was something more than half a yard; so this enormous vessel was about 160 yards long, 27 in width, and 16 in height. Without entering into any further enquiries concerning it, it must at first sight appear that so large a vessel, thus constructed, and with so few persons on board, was utterly unsuitable to weather out such a storm; except as it was immediately under the guidance and protection of the Almighty. But it was to be built in faith; and for this very reason, was more suitable for the intended purpose.

V. 17. And behold I, even I, &c.] It might appear very difficult, and to all created power impossible, thus to deluge the whole earth; but God himself engaged his almighty arm to effect it, and that obviated all objections. These were things not seen at yet, concerning which Noah was warned, and of which there was no human probability: and some have since ventured to deny, and perhaps some at that time would argue against, the possibility of such a deluge. But Noah simply credited the word of God, and neither hesitated to expect the improbable and unprecedented catastrophe of the event predicted; nor objected to the justice, or goodness of God in the awful sentence; nor declined the immense labour and expence of such a building, or the reproach and ridicule to which it might expose him; nor excepted to this mode of preservation. But being moved with fear, and reverencing the divine revelation, he prepared the ark, became a preacher of righteousness; and taking the warning, which had been given him, for his subject, and shewing his faith by his works, he called upon the inhabitants of the earth on every side, to repent of their sins. Had they duly regarded the warning, all the inhabitants of the earth might have heard it, long before the expiration of the 120 years of God's long suffering: and if a general repentance had taken place, perhaps a respite would have been granted, as there was afterwards,

V. 22. Thus did Noah, &c.] He believed the warning, and feared; he believed the promiſe, and hoped; and therefore he obeyed the commandment.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

There is ſcarcely a more lamentable proof of a decay of vital godlineſs, or a more effectual means of haſtening it, than intermarriages betwixt profeſſors of true religion and its avowed enemies. There ſeems in all ages to have been a peculiar curſe of God upon them; the evil example of the ungodly party hath generally corrupted, or greatly hurt, the other; family-religion hath been put an end to; and the children almoſt univerſally have been trained up according to the maxims of that parent, which hath been deſtitute of the fear of God. If we profeſs ourſelves to be "the ſons and daughters of the Lord Almighty," (2 Cor. vi. 14—18;) we muſt not marry without his conſent: and he will not allow us to prefer beauty, wit, wealth, or honourable alliances, to faith and holineſs.—Though the Lord is ſlow to anger, and of great kindneſs, yet his Spirit will not always ſtrive with men; and if they perſiſt in ſin in defiance of his word, and the convictions of their own conſciences, he will at length be provoked totally to withdraw from them, and permit them to be hardened to their ruin. If he be ſo grieved by our ſins, as to deſtroy the work of his own hands, how reaſonable is it that we ſhould mourn for it! and that we ſhould ſhew our repentance of it, by purpoſing and ſeeking its deſtruction!—They, whom the world admires and applauds as men of renown, are often, in the judgment of God, and even of common ſenſe, no better than the cruel tyrants, oppreſſors, and firebrands of the earth: let us then deſire that honour which cometh from God, upon thoſe who do good in their generation; not that which comes from man upon thoſe, who do miſchief. But what is become of the image and likeneſs of God? How doth man now merit the divine appellation of VERY GOOD? Alas! the old ſerpent, that proud ambitious liar and murderer, hath filled the earth with his deteſtable progeny! Yet, in the worſt of times, God "hath a remnant according to "the election of grace:" and they, who would pleaſe him, muſt dare to be ſingular. Theſe will believe his truth, and obey his commandments: they will believe his warnings, and fear, but not deſpair; they will believe his promiſes, and hope but not preſume: they will ſtand in awe, and not find fault: they will expect ſafety in his appointed way, upon the warrant of his word; and in this expectation, will not refuſe any obedience, however burdenſome, expenſive, ſelf-denying, or expoſing them to the croſs. But in the warning given to Noah there is one more ſolemn given to us, "to flee from the wrath to come," which, with tremendous efficacy, will ſweep all unbelievers into the pit of deſtruction. Chriſt, (the true Noah, which ſame ſhall comfort us,) hath, at infinite expence, already prepared the ark, and kindly invites us by faith to enter in. Whilſt the day of his patience continues, let us obediently hear his voice, and thankfully ſue for admiſſion, which will then be readily vouchſafed us.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1. Come thou, &c.] This command was given in the form of an invitation, becauſe of the unmerited advantage to which Noah was thus admitted: and many of the commands of God, as given to ſinners, are put in the ſame form. They are enforced by divine authority, and cannot be neglected, without the moſt atrocious rebellion: but they are alſo invitations to partake of unmerited favours unſpeakably precious, are propoſed by infinite mercy, and cannot be refuſed without the greateſt folly, as well as ingratitude. Noah had not a perſonal righteouſneſs commenſurate with the extenſive demands of the law of God; but he was "an heir of the righteouſneſs which "is by faith." (Heb. xi. 7.) That ſame principle which induced him to believe on God's teſtimony, contrary to all human probability, that the deluge would come at the appointed ſeaſon, led him alſo, on the ſame teſtimony, to expect the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, (Jude. 14, 15.) This would move him to flee from the wrath to come, as well as prepare the ark: and as he believed, that in the ark alone, he could be ſafe in the approach-

2 Of every clean beaſt thou ſhalt take to thee by ſevens, the male and his female: and of beaſts that are not clean by two, the male and his female.

3 Of fowls alſo of the air by ſevens, the male and the female; to keep ſeed alive upon the face of all the earth.

4 For yet ſeven days, and I will cauſe it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights: and every living ſubſtance that I have made, will I deſtroy from off the face of the earth.

5 And Noah did according unto all that the LORD commanded him.

6 And Noah was ſix hundred years old, when the flood of waters was upon the earth.

7 And Noah went in, and his ſons, and his wife, and his ſons' wives with him, into the ark, becauſe of the waters of the flood.

8 Of clean beaſts, and of beaſts that are not clean, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth.

9 There went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female, as God had commanded Noah.

10 And it came to paſs after ſeven days, that the waters of the flood were upon the earth.

11 In the ſix hundredth year of Noah's life, in the ſecond month, the ſeventeenth day of the month, the ſame day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened.

12 And the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights.

13 In the ſelf-ſame day entered Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the ſons of Noah, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his ſons with them, into the ark;

14 They, and every beaſt after his kind, and all the cattle after their kind, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every ſort.

15 And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all fleſh, wherein is the breath of life.

approaching deluge; ſo he would believe the revelation of a Saviour, and ſeek and expect ſalvation through him alone. Thus he was juſtified by faith: and he would alſo receive that Spirit, "whoſe fruit is in all goodneſs, "and righteouſneſs, and truth;" for "if any man have "not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his:" and by his ſanctifying influences, he would become righteous in his character and conduct; that is, devoted to God, and walking before him in all holy obedience, with ſincerity though not perfection.

V. 2, 3.] It is ſuppoſed that the clean beaſts were ſuch as were offered in ſacrifice, and that the ſeventh was added for that uſe; they were alſo ſuch, as were moſt ſerviceable to man. The grant of animal food ſeems not to have been explicitly made before the flood; much leſs had the diſtinction of meats been appointed. There muſt have been a very extraordinary miracle in bringing two of every ſpecies of animals to Noah, and rendering them ſubmiſſive to him, and peaceful with each other: yet it ſeems not to have made any impreſſion on the hardened ſpectators. The ſuſpenſion of the ferocity of the ſavage beaſts, during their continuance in the ark, is generally conſidered as a type of the change, that takes place in the diſpoſition of ſinners, when they enter the true church of Chriſt: but it may alſo remind us of the hypocrite's external good behaviour, though his nature be not changed.

V. 5. And Noah, &c.] Implicit faith produced implicit obedience: but unbelief hardened the hearts of the reſt of the world in obſtinate rebellion, and contemptuous defiance.

V. 7. Sons' wives.] Though each of Noah's three ſons was then about an hundred years old, and none of them had any children, and the whole earth was about to be deſolated: yet no exception was made to the original conſtitution of marriage, "they twain ſhall be one fleſh," (Gen. ii. 24. Matt. xix. 4—6;) even on this emergency. A deciſive proof that polygamy is diſpleaſing to God; and was only connived at for a ſeaſon, to prevent worſe conſequences from the wickedneſs of man.

V. 10—12.] The long ſuffering of God had waited the appointed time; and, as many think, theſe ſeven days above the 120 years. This was the time of his patience; for "he is ſlow to anger:" but the perſevering impenitence of mankind made way for the days of vengeance; "for he will by no means acquit the wicked."—As a peculiar exertion of Omnipotence effected the deluge, ("behold I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the "earth";) it is as vain and preſumptuous, to attempt explaining the method of it, on principles of philoſophy, or the agency of ſecond cauſes, as it would be in the ſame manner to ſhew how the dead ſhall ariſe, or with what bodies they ſhall come. By the almighty power of God, both the waters from the ocean, and the waters above the firmament, were brought together to cover the earth: and why ſhould it be thought a thing incredible with us, that God ſhould drown the world, any more 16 And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh, as God had commanded him: and the LORD shut him in.

17 And the flood was forty days upon the earth: and the waters increased, and bare up the ark, and it was lifted up above the earth.

18 And the waters prevailed, and were increased greatly upon the earth; and the ark went upon the face of the waters.

19 And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth; and all the high hills, that were under the whole heaven, were covered.

20 Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail; and the mountains were covered.

21 And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man.

22 All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died.

23 And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth; and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark.

24 And the waters prevailed upon the earth an hundred and fifty days.

than that he should raise the dead? It continued, therefore, to rain impetuously, incessantly, and without the least intermission, during the space of forty days and forty nights.

V. 16. Shut him in.] In what manner this was done, God hath not been pleased to reveal, and it becomes not us to enquire. The Lord thereby gave Noah a pledge of his acceptance, and of his care of him: and by the same token he shut out all the rest, and sealed their condemnation.—But had Noah's preaching no effect? Were there no more believers upon the whole earth? We may probably suppose that many had been previously taken away from the evil to come; for Methuselah died the year before, or in the year of, the flood. But it seems evident that there were no truly godly persons, amongst all the survivors, however some might have been alarmed, affected, or almost persuaded: for there was room enough in the ark; and we do not find that any were refused admittance.—Indeed our Lord hath informed us of the real state of the case, (Luke xvii. 27.) "They did eat, "they drank, they married wives, and were given in "marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the "ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all." Being thus employed, they treated the whole affair with contempt, and encouraged one another in disobedience: and if any were at all disposed to pay regard to it, they either procrastinated, or were afraid of being singular. But what must have been their feelings, when, at the appointed time, it began to rain in so extraordinary a manner, and continued to do so from week to week incessantly; the waters still rising, and following them to the eminences, whither they ascended! How much soever they had before despised Noah's madness, and pitied his weakness; they would now remember his warnings, curse their own folly, admire his wisdom, and envy his happiness.

V. 20—23.] The waters were about eight yards deep, on the top of the highest mountains: so that every project, which any, or all of them, could form for their security, was frustrated: every advantage of situation was unavailing: some might escape longer than others; but, first or last, all, except those in the ark, perished. And with the human species, most of the animals perished also: for the whole creation groans under the effects of man's sins. Indeed the faithful and powerful protection of God was Noah's only security in this wild tumult of the elements: the presence of God his only comfort in this dreary confinement, and in witnessing this dire devastation of the earth and its inhabitants, and especially of the human species, of his companions, his neighbours, his relatives; of those, to whom he had preached, for whom he had prayed, and over whom he had wept, and even of many which had helped to build the ark.—But these were abundantly sufficient to keep him in safety, and to fill him with consolation. "Thou, "Lord, shalt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is "stayed upon thee, because he trusteth in thee."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

How "men despise the riches of the goodness, and "forbearance, and long suffering of God, not knowing "that his goodness leads to repentance: but after their "hardness and impenitent heart treasure up wrath against "the day of wrath!" (Rom. ii. 4, 5.) until judgment come upon them to the uttermost! But in all this God's purposes are effected, his predictions accomplished, and his justice displayed. Soon will our short span of life come to a close, even though we should linger out our threescore years and ten: the last week, the last day, the last hour, will soon surprise us, if we are not ever watching, and ever ready; and with no less tremendous consternation and terrible destruction, than the deluge did those in the days of Noah. If when the master of the house hath risen up, and shut to the door, we be found without, it will be too late to knock for admittance.—God's threatenings will as certainly be fulfilled as his promises, however now despised and derided: and there is a time coming, when they, who have most affected to pity or deride the godly, will admire and envy them.—What a triumph was here of death, even "over "those, who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's "transgression!" And how the whole creation groaned under man's sin! But though we may indulge the hope that the multitude of infants, who died without their own actual sin through the first Adam's transgression, obtained life without their own actual faith through the

5 And the waters decreaſed continually until the tenth month: in the tenth month, on the firſt day of the month, were the tops of the mountains ſeen.

6 And it came to paſs at the end of forty days, that Noah opened the window of the ark which he had made.

7 And he ſent forth a raven, which went forth to and fro, until the waters were dried up from off the earth.

8 Alſo he ſent forth a dove from him, to ſee if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground.

9 But the dove found no reſt for the ſole of her foot, and ſhe returned unto him into the ark: for the waters were on the face of the whole earth. Then he put forth his hand, and took her, and pulled her in unto him into the ark.

10 And he ſtayed yet other ſeven days, and again he ſent forth the dove out of the ark.

ſecond Adam's obedience: yet how aweful is it to be conſtrained to admit, that the ſame deluge, which ſwept the reſt of that generation from the earth, ſwept their ſouls into the priſon of hell! (1 Pet. iii. 19, 20.) How tremendous then will be the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men! and what will be their feelings, who treat the things not ſeen as yet, as if they were unreal, (though revealed by the infallible teſtimony of God,) when they ſhall at length be ſeen, but ſeen too late! Happy they, who are part of Chriſt's family, and ſafe with him in the ark; they may look forward without diſmay, and rejoice in the aſſurance, that they ſhall triumph, when a deluge of fire ſhall encircle the viſible creation. But unleſs we dare to be ſingular, and renounce the favour, and venture the ſcorn and hatred, of the world; unleſs we be willing to ſubmit to ſelf-denial and diligence; we can find no admiſſion into this ark. And even in the ark, whilſt in this world, we ſhall need faith and patience, and have much to exerciſe them.—Though we ſhould lament, we need not wonder at the prevalence of impiety; nor need faithful miniſters deſpond, if their ſucceſs be not ſo large as their expectations.—Ungodly children often receive temporal mercies for their parents' ſake: but unleſs they themſelves are made partakers of faith and holineſs, they will not eſcape eternal deſtruction.—Finally, there is much difference of character among men, and we are apt to imagine ſome favourable diſtinctions in our own caſe: but if we neglect, refuſe, or abuſe the ſalvation of Chriſt; we ſhall, notwithſtanding ſuch imaginary advantages, be overwhelmed in the common deſtruction of an unbelieving world.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII.[V. 1—3.] The Lord ſeemed to have forgotten to be gracious; and perhaps Noah was tempted to think he ſhould be impriſoned in the ark for life, as the flood continued ſo long after it had done its work: but at length God remembered him; that is, he manifeſted his regard to him, and care of him, by providing not only for his ſafety, but for his enlargement: he noticed the animals alſo; for nothing is beneath his condeſcending care and kindneſs. By means of a dry wind, the clouds were diſperſed; and things returned to their old courſe, according to the operation of ſecond cauſes: the miraculous interpoſition being removed.

V. 4, 5.] On the ſeventeenth day of the ſeventh month of the year, (as it is moſt probable,) juſt five months, or 150 days, from the beginning of the flood, the waters were ſo far abated, that the ark reſted on Mount Ararat, ſuppoſed to be in Armenia: but it was nearly three months longer, before the tops of the mountains were ſeen.

V. 6—14.] Forty days after the tops of the mountains became viſible, Noah ſent out a raven, in order to know the ſtate of the earth: but as it was uſed to feed on fleſh, it returned no more into the ark. After ſeven days, therefore, he ſent forth a dove, which, being uſed to another kind of living, returned to him; and on a ſecond trial, brought an olive-branch in her mouth.

This

12 And he ſtayed yet other ſeven days, and ſent forth the dove; which returned not again unto him any more.

13 And it came to paſs in the ſix hundredth and firſt year, in the firſt month, the firſt day of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth: and Noah removed the covering of the ark, and looked, and behold, the face of the ground was dry.

14 And in the ſecond month, on the ſeven and twentieth day of the month, was the earth dried.

15 And God ſpake unto Noah, ſaying,

16 Go forth of the ark, thou, and thy wife, and thy ſons, and thy ſons' wives with thee.

17 Bring forth with thee every living thing that is with thee, of all fleſh, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth; that they may breed abundantly in the earth, and be fruitful, and multiply upon the earth.

18 And Noah went forth, and his ſons, and his wife, and his ſons' wives with him:

19 Every beaſt, every creeping thing, and every fowl, and whatſoever creepeth upon the earth after their kinds, went forth out of the ark.

20 And Noah builded an altar unto the LORD, and took of every clean beaſt, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt offerings on the altar.

21 And the LORD ſmelled a ſweet ſavour; and the LORD ſaid in his heart, I will not again curſe the ground any more for man's ſake; for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth: neither will I again ſmite any more every living thing, as I have done.

22 While the earth remaineth, ſeed-time and harveſt, and cold and heat, and ſummer and winter, and day and night, ſhall not ceaſe.

CHAP.

This was a token that the fruitful plains were dried, and the vegetables preſerved: and on the third trial, the dove returned no more. Theſe ſixty-one days, or two months, reach exactly to the firſt day of the next year, which was the ſix hundredth and firſt of Noah's life: and in leſs than two months the earth was again fit to be inhabited. The repeated mention of ſeven days ſeems an intimation of the obſervance of the ſabbath in the ark; after the ordinances of which, the dove was ſent out. Theſe two birds may be conſidered as an inſtructive emblem. The raven repreſents the hypocrite; who, though profeſſedly one of God's people, yet retaining his reliſh for worldly things, in time of temptation returns to them, and is ſatisfied with them. The dove, (the external ſymbol of that Spirit, who deſcended on Chriſt, and dwells in his people,) is emblematical of the true chriſtian; who, being ſpiritually-minded, though through temptation he may, as it were, quit the ark, and get into the world; yet he finds no reſt, until he return to Chriſt, and be received by him.—The olive-branch, probably from ſome obſcure tradition of this event, has generally been the emblem of peace. Thus alſo the heavenly Dove, by his holy conſolations, brings to the broken-hearted believer the olive-branch of peace and reconciliation with God.

V. 16. Go forth, &c.] Though Noah had been making obſervations on the ſtate of the earth, and preparations for leaving the ark; yet he waited God's command, before he actually quitted it.

V. 19. Every beaſt, &c.] It ſeems that, by a peculiar providential interpoſition, no animal of any ſort had died, though they had been ſhut up above a year.

V. 20—22.] Noah, in faith, aſcribed his deliverance to the mercy of God, through the promiſed Saviour; and not to his own righteouſneſs: thus he rendered his tribute of gratitude, and devoted himſelf and family to God; and ſought his further protection and bleſſing amidſt the deſolations, with which he was ſurrounded.—The ſmell of burning fleſh could no more pleaſe God, than the blood of bulls and goats; except as typical of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, and expreſſive of Noah's humble obedient faith and love. (Eph. v. 2.) Some would have thought it a very great waſte to deſtroy ſo many uſeful animals, when there was ſuch a ſcarcity; but that is never waſted, which is expended in God's ſervice, and according to his appointment. The Lord therefore graciouſly accepted his oblation, and promiſed that he would no more curſe the earth; that is, after the manner of the flood: for the original curſe was not removed, nor is it clear that it was mitigated. He added, "for the "imagination of man's heart," &c, or though it be ſo. Other methods of repreſſing wickedneſs would be employed, but this ſhould not be repeated: The flood waſhed away that generation of wicked men, but it removed not depravity from man's nature; who being conceived and born in ſin, thinks, contrives, deviſes, and loves wickedneſs, even from his youth; and that as much ſince the flood as before.

V. 22. While the earth, &c.] Partial failures of ſeed-time and harveſt are not inconſiſtent with his gracious aſſurance: according to which the heavenly bodies have ever ſince preſerved their courſe, the ſeaſons their ſucceſſions, and the earth hath produced its increaſe for the uſe of man, notwithſtanding his ingratitude: and on this word we depend, that thus it ſhall be till the myſtery of God be finiſhed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord not only knoweth how to reserve the wicked unto the day of judgment to be punished, however numerous, powerful, and haughty; but also to deliver the godly out of temptations in the best time and manner, however few, despised, and helpless they may be. Though for a time he seemeth to forget his afflicted children, and in unbelief they are prone to judge according to that appearance; yet in due time he will make his kind and careful remembrance of them manifestly to appear.—The devoted servant of God will not only make haste to keep his commandments; but he will patiently wait his time for deliverance, and for promised blessings. God's faithfulness is the best security; and that security is given to all them that trust in him: seeing his glory is engaged for their salvation, as much as for Noah's preservation.—They who are saved from destruction, must yet on earth witness the desolations, which sin makes, with aching hearts, and weeping eyes; and in many things share in them. But the consolations of God will counterbalance these sorrows; and in heaven all tears shall be wiped away: so that even the destruction of the wicked will cause no interruption, or abatement of their perfect felicity: but the mercy of God, the sacrifice of Christ, and the grace of the Holy Spirit, are the real causes of the difference betwixt those who are saved, and those who perish. The first use, which we should make of deliverances from trouble, should be to return thanks to God for his mercy, solemnly to devote ourselves to him and his service, and to seek anew his providential protection, and gracious blessing. Finally, the divine authority of the Scripture (as well as the faithfulness of God) is demonstrated in the regular course of the seasons of the year. May we therefore admire his goodness, trust his providence, receive all from his love, and use all to his glory.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX.] V. 2. Fear of you, &c.] It is probable that the subjection of the animals, before the fall, was voluntary, and sprang from love of man, who was then by instinct regarded as a friend: but since that event, it hath been more the result of fear; most of them regarding him as a very potent enemy, whom they are naturally disposed to dread, submit to, or flee from. We witness the fulfilment of this promise on every side, and amongst creatures of all sorts. The ease, with which horses are managed, notwithstanding their strength and spirit, and the severity with which they are treated; the safety with which large droves of oxen are goaded forward, frequently by a single youth, who conscious of his superiority fears not them, whilst they stand in awe of him, would be deemed very wonderful, were they not so common: but they are seldom considered as the effects of God's power, and proofs of his truth and goodness. Even the most savage of the wild beasts have been, and are tamed of man, and have an instinctive dread of him, shunning populous places, and retreating into forests and deserts; lying still all the day whilst man is abroad, and roaming forth when he is retired to rest; and seldom injuring him, unless pinched by hunger, or provoked by opposition. Were this instinctive fear removed, and should the animals conscious of their force rise in general rebellion, what confusion and devastation must ensue!

V. 3, 4.] We cannot know, whether men had, before the flood, taken the liberty of eating the flesh of animals, or no: but it seems not to have been given them in an explicit manner. This grant fully warrants our use of them for food, but not the abuse of them by intemperance, still less by cruelty: we ought not to give them needless pain, either whilst they live, or in putting them to death. The allowance is not limited to any kind of animals: so that the distinction of clean and unclean must relate to their use in sacrifice: and the principal reason of the prohibition of blood seems to have been of the same nature; because blood typified the great Atonement: yet it might here also be intended as a check to cruelty; lest men inured to shed and feed upon the blood of animals, should grow unfeeling, and be less shocked at the idea of shedding human blood. The eating of raw flesh, and the use of blood, have also been generally deemed unwholesome.

V. 5, 6.] From this energetic declaration it certainly 6 Whoſo ſheddeth man's blood, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed: for in the image of God made he man.

7 And you, be ye fruitful, and multiply, bring forth abundantly in the earth, and multiply therein.

8 And God ſpake unto Noah, and to his ſons with him, ſaying,

9 And I, behold I eſtabliſh my covenant with you, and with your ſeed after you;

10 And with every living creature that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beaſt of the earth with you, from all that go out of the ark, to every beaſt of the earth.

11 And I will eſtabliſh my covenant with you; neither ſhall all fleſh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood: neither ſhall there any more be a flood to deſtroy the earth.

12 And God ſaid, This is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you, and every living creature that is with you, for perpetual generations:

13 I do ſet my bow in the cloud, and it ſhall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth.

14 And it ſhall come to paſs, when I bring a cloud over the earth, that the bow ſhall be ſeen in the cloud:

15 And I will remember my covenant, which is between me and you, and every living creature of all fleſh; and the waters ſhall no more become a flood to deſtroy all fleſh.

16 And the bow ſhall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember the everlaſting covenant between God and every living creature of all fleſh that is upon the earth.

17 And God ſaid unto Noah, This is the token of the covenant, which I have eſtabliſhed between me and all fleſh that is upon the earth.

18 And the ſons of Noah that went forth of the ark, were Shem, and Ham, and Japheth: and Ham is the father of Canaan.

19 Theſe are the three ſons of Noah: and of them was the whole earth overſpread.

20 And Noah began to be an huſbandman, and he planted a vineyard.

21 And he drank of the wine, and was drunken, and he was uncovered within his tent.

22 And Ham the father of Canaan ſaw the nakedneſs of his father, and told his two brethren without.

23 And Shem and Japheth took a garment, and laid it upon both their ſhoulders, and went backward, and covered the nakedneſs of follows, that wilful murder ought invariably in all communities to be puniſhed with death; whatever form it aſſumes, or however it may, by ſpecious but deluſive pretences, be extenuated: and that God will himſelf require it of thoſe, who ſuffer the murderer to eſcape: ſo that the puniſhment due to murder will in ſome way be inflicted on them, as acceſſaries to the crime. And to impreſs the greater horror of it, even the beaſt that ſlew a man, was to be put to death.—It is a ſubject for ſerious enquiry to all, who are cordially affected to the welfare of theſe nations, how far it can be juſtified before God; how far national guilt may, or may not be contracted; when ſo many are ſuffered to elude juſtice, who commit wilful deliberate murder in duels: whilſt ſuch numbers of thieves are put to death, which God never commanded, perhaps does not approve?—Though the moral image of God in which man was at firſt created be defaced; yet the natural image remains: and it is the moſt daring act of rebellion againſt God to aſſault his viſible image on earth, and deſtroy the life which he communicated. It is obſervable that the reaſon, given for the puniſhment of the murderer with death, is taken from the affront which he offers to God; not from the injury which he does to man.

V. 9—17.] This word rendered covenant ſometimes means a reciprocal agreement betwixt two or more parties; at other times a poſitive engagement on one ſide, without any reſtipulation on the other. That eſtabliſhed with Noah was of the latter ſort: to obviate man's fears, the Lord engaged that he would drown the earth no more, notwithſtanding man's wickedneſs; and we have a continued proof of his faithfulneſs to this engagement. Probably the rainbow had appeared before the flood, being the effect of natural cauſes: but it was now appointed to a new uſe, and made a ſeal and pledge of that particular engagement, that God would not any more deluge the whole earth. This was confirmed by an everlaſting covenant, or one which ſhall never be aboliſhed. (Iſaiah, liv. 9, 10.)

V. 19. Of them, &c.] This preludes the conjecture, that Noah himſelf had other children after the flood.

V. 20—23.] After the flood Noah began again to cultivate the earth. It has been thought that wine was now firſt of their father; and their faces were backward, and they saw not their father's nakedness.

24 And Noah awoke from his wine, and knew what his younger son had done unto him.

25 And he said, Cursed be Canaan; a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren.

26 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant.

27 God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant.

first made of grapes; and that Noah, not aware of its effects, was surprised into drunkenness: but this is improbable. Rather it is recorded by the inspired historian, with that perfect impartiality which is peculiar to the Scripture, as an instance and evidence of human frailty and imperfection; and to shew that the best of men cannot stand upright, without they are kept dependent upon, and upheld by, divine grace; nor stand in judgment before him, without an interest in his pardoning mercy, by faith in the great Redeemer.—Ham seems to have been a man of bad character; and probably he rejoiced to find his father in so unbecoming a situation; that, by exposing him, he might retaliate upon him for the reproofs which he had received from him, in the exercise of his parental authority: and perhaps Canaan first discovered Noah's situation, and told it to Ham. This must have happened several years after the flood; for there were but eight persons in the ark, and consequently Ham had no children at that time.—The conduct of Ham, in exposing his father to his brethren; and their behaviour, in turning away from the sight of his disgrace, formed a perfect contrast to each other.

V. 25. Cursed, &c.] Some would render these words, "Cursed be Ham the father of Canaan;" and however that may be determined, two things are evident: 1st, That Ham's posterity by Canaan were peculiarly intended in this curse: and not only have they been almost entirely excluded from the church of God in all ages; but they were almost totally extirpated by the descendents of Abraham, when they took possession of the land of Canaan, and in their subsequent wars. And perhaps Moses, under the direction of God, thus recorded this prophecy for the encouragement of the Israelites, when they were about to enter upon those wars: 2d. That the other descendents of Ham were also included in some measure. It would take me too far to enter upon a particular discussion of this comprehensive prophecy: the reader may see a concise, but satisfactory, explication of it in Bishop Newton's Dissertations, 1st. Vol. Dissertation the First,—from which I will insert a short extract—'The whole continent of 'Africa was peopled principally by the descendents of 'Ham: and for how many ages have the better parts of 'that country lain under the dominion of the Romans, and 'then of the Saracens, and now of the Turks! In what 'wickedness, ignorance, barbarity, slavery, misery, live 'most of the inhabitants: And of the poor negroes, how 'many hundreds every year are sold and bought, like 'beasts in the market, and conveyed from one quarter of 'the world to do the work of beasts in another!"—However, this in no measure vindicates the covetous and barbarous oppression of those, who thus enrich themselve with the products of their sweat and blood.—God has not commanded us to enslave negroes, as he did Israel to extirpate the Canaanites: and therefore, without doubt, he will severely punish such cruel injustice.

V. 26. Blessed be, &c.] This may be rendered, "Blessed "be Shem of the Lord God." Accordingly the descendents of Shem, in the line of Abraham, extirpated or enslaved the seven nations of Canaan; and almost entirely, and alone enjoyed the blessings of true religion, until the coming of Christ, who was descended from him. And from the other branches of his family, in the eastern parts of Asia, many flourishing kingdoms have descended; to their lot most fruitful countries have fallen; and they have enjoyed a far greater degree of civilization and its blessings, than the descendents of Ham.

V. 27. God shall enlarge, &c.] As the endeavours of learned men, to shew from the following chapter which of the nations descended from each of Noah's sons, are chiefly useful, in evincing the exact accomplishment of this extraordinary prophecy; so I shall here subjoin a few intimations from the most obvious result of their researches. Japhet seems to have been the progenitor of the greater half of the human race. The descendents of Gomer, his eldest son, probably settled in the northern parts of Asia Minor, and thence spread into the Cimmerian Bosphorus, and the adjacent regions; and from them the numerous tribes of the Gauls, Germans, Celts, and Cimbrians, are supposed to have sprung. The Scythians, Tartars, and other northern barbarous nations, seem to have been the posterity of Magog: the Medes, of Madai; the Ionians, and other Greeks, of Javan; and the Thracians, of Tirus. So that nearly all the nations of Europe are thought to have descended from Japhet; and probably America was peopled by his posterity, as well as a considerable part of Asia.—Moreover the principal success of the Gospel, and the calling of the Gentiles, have hitherto been amongst his descendents. Thus hath God enlarged Japhet; and he hath not only been persuaded, (as some render the word,) to dwell in the tents of Shem, by obtaining admission into the Church; but also, by succeeding to that authority and prosperity, under the Grecian and Roman Empires, and in subsequent ages, which were for a time vested chiefly in the posterity of Shem (x. 2.) From Chush the son of Ham, the Ethiopians in Africa, and several tribes in Asia, (inhabiting part of the country now called Arabia,) were descended. Mizraim was the ancestor of the Egyptians, Cyrenians, ans, Libyans, &c: Phut, of the Mauritanians, &c: in ſhort, all Africa was peopled by his poſterity. The devoted nations, whom God deſtroyed by Iſrael, were deſcended from Canaan; as were the Phenicians and Carthaginians, who were ſubjugated with terrible deſtruction by the Greeks and Romans.—True religion has hitherto flouriſhed very little among Ham's deſcendents; they are in general at this day almoſt entire ſtrangers to Chriſtianity; their ſituation in almoſt every age hath remarkably correſponded to this prediction; and at this preſent time perhaps more ſo than at any preceding period: though there be ground to hope that a favourable change will ſhortly commence (x. 6. 20.)—The poſterity of Shem, in the line of Arphaxad, Eber, and Peleg, compriſed all the deſcendents of Abraham, and the viſible church under the old diſpenſation. The Perſians ſprang from Elam; the Aſſyrians and Chaldeans, from Aſhur; and the Syrians, Meſopotamians, and Armenians, from Aram: and the inhabitants of China, the Eaſt Indies, and all the eaſtern part of Aſia, ſeem to be the poſterity of Joktan the ſon of Heber (x. 21. 29.)—A very general knowledge of hiſtory will ſuffice to ſatisfy the ſerious enquirer, that the deſcendents of Canaan have been enſlaved by and ſubjected to thoſe of Shem and Japhet, through many generations: but eſpecially we ſhould obſerve that the Lord Jeſus was deſcended from Shem; to whom all nations muſt do willing ſervice, or elſe be deſtroyed as his enemies.—The extraordinary accompliſhment of this prediction, which contains almoſt a prophetic hiſtory of the world, vindicates Noah from the ſuſpicion of having uttered it, from any perſonal reſentment: and though the matter of fact demonſtrates that children actually do ſuffer for their parent's crimes, and this ſentence would be a ſenſible mortification to Ham and Canaan; yet we ſhould principally obſerve that the Spirit of God took occaſion from thence to reveal his ſecret purpoſes, for a very important benefit to poſterity even to this day.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The bleſſing of God is the real cauſe of proſperity, perſonal, relative, and national; on him our dependence ſhould be placed, and to him our gratitude for it is due. With what thankfulneſs ſhould we receive that immenſe advantage, eaſe, and pleaſure, which reſult from the labour of the domeſtic animals, and which the fleſh of ſo many creatures affords us; and the ſecurity we enjoy from the aſſaults of the noxious and ferocious, through the fear and dread of man, which God hath impreſſed upon them!—But though we are maſters, God will call us to an aweful account, if we act as tyrants; and avenge the cauſe of his oppreſſed creatures upon their oppreſſors. How much more ſhould we dread murder, and all thoſe paſſions, which produce that enormous crime! Though the murderer may eſcape, bribe, or outbrave human juſtice; yet, except he repent, he ſhall never eſcape the vengeance of God.—The Lord takes care to obviate the fears and anxieties of his people; and we ſhould copy the example of his kindneſs. But what is man in his beſt eſtate?—Let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall: and let not him, who has triumphed over great temptations, be ſecure even in ſuch as are leſs; for they, who have behaved well in the worſt of company, and amidſt the worſt examples, are not ſafe even in ſolitude. Let us then watch and pray, and not be high-minded, but fear—And remember that drunkenneſs is a ſin eſpecially to be ſhunned, as it both ſo expoſes to ſhame, and is an occaſion of further wickedneſs in ourſelves and others.—But though the righteous fall, he ſhall not be utterly caſt down: nor is a ſingle act of ſin inadvertently committed, to be looked upon in the ſame light as allowed and habitual tranſgreſſion: the former may be the blemiſh of a ſaint, the latter is the brand of the hypocrite. And in honouring parents, magiſtrates, ſeniors, and other honourable characters, we ought to imitate the example of Shem and Japhet; not only reſpecting their wiſdom and goodneſs, but covering their incidental blemiſhes and failures: for a peculiar bleſſing belongs to thoſe, who act in this manner; but an aweful curſe awaits thoſe, who copy the pattern of Ham, in their conduct towards thoſe whom God hath commanded them to honour.—But let us not neglect to obſerve, how theſe prophecies, ſo evidently fulfilling in all nations and ages, evidence the divine original of the Bible. We ſhould continually keep this concluſion in mind, as we proceed in our examination of the ſacred Oracles: that, perceiving how authenticated facts, and even ſuch as fall under our own obſervation, or paſs in our experience, combine in proving unanſwerably the divine original of the ſcriptures; we may the more readily ſubmit our underſtanding, in implicit faith, to the teaching of the Holy Spirit, and our will in implicit obedience to the authority of God. Thus we ſhall learn our guilt and danger; and fleeing from the wrath which is coming on the impenitent and unbelieving, we ſhall embrace the invitations of the Goſpel, accept of its precious ſalvation, rely on the ſecurity of the new Covenant, and patiently wait for the bleſſings which will aſſuredly be conferred on all believers. Being thus admitted into the true ark, we ſhall be ſafe in thoſe waſting calamities, which ſweep others into deſtruction: and though what we witneſs or experience may give us great pain, and we may even give lamentable proof of our weakneſs and depravity, yet we ſhall be carried through all trials and temptations; we ſhall overcome all our enemies; we ſhall be made inſtruments of good to others; and we ſhall at length find that all the promiſes of the ſcripture have been fulfilled to us, and all our prayers that were grounded on them have been completely anſwered: "O Lord God of hoſts, bleſſed "is the man, that putteth his truſt in thee!"—

NOW these are the generations of the sons of Noah, Shem, Ham, and Japheth: and unto them were sons born after the flood.

2 The sons of Japheth; Gomer, and Magog, and Madai, and Javan, and Tubal, and Meshech, and Tiras.

3 And the sons of Gomer; Ashkenaz, and Riphath, and Togarmah.

4 And the sons of Javan; Elishah, and Tarshish, Kittim, and Dodanim.

7 And the sons of Cush; Seba, and Havilah, and Sabtah, and Raamah, and Sabtecha; and the sons of Raamah; Sheba, and Dedan.

8 And Cush begat Nimrod: he began to be a mighty one in the earth.

9 He was a mighty hunter before the LORD: wherefore it is said, Even as Nimrod the mighty hunter before the LORD.

10 And the beginning of his kingdom was Babel, and Erech, and Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar.

11 Out of that land went forth Ashur, and builded Nineveh, and the city Rehoboth, and Calah, 12 And Resen between Nineveh and Calah: the same is a great city.

13 And Mizraim begat Ludim, and Anamim, and Lehabim, and Naphtuhim, 14 And Pathrusim, and Casluhim, (out of whom came Philistim,) and Caphtorim.

15 And Canaan begat Sidon his firstborn, and Heth,

16 And the Jebusite, and the Emorite, and the Girgashite,

17 And the Hivite, and the Arkite, and the Sinite,

18 And the Arvadite, and the Zemarite, and the Hamathite: and afterwards were the families of the Canaanites spread abroad.

20 These are the sons of Ham, after their families, after their tongues, in their countries, and in their nations.

21 Unto Shem also the father of all the children of Eber, the brother of Japheth the elder, even to him were children born.

22 The children of Shem; Elam, and Ashur, and Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram.

23 And the children of Aram; Uz, and Hul, and Gether, and Mash.

24 And Arphaxad begat Salah; and Salah begat Eber.

25 And unto Eber were born two sons: the name of one was Peleg, for in his days was

CHAP. X.] V. 8—12.] Probably Nimrod was at first eminent as an hunter, much was needful so much as a virtue, as a useful method of preventing the hurtful increase of wild beasts: that employment would require great courage and address, and expose a man to much danger and hardship; and thus afford a field for ambition to aspire after pre-eminence, and gradually attract a number of valiant men to one leader. Probably from such beginning Nimrod began to claim authority, and assume subjection; and thence he took occasion to wage wars to extend his conquests, and enlarge his acquisitions, by bulls by violence and blood. Thus in a daring manner casting off the fear of God, and acting in defiance of his late prohibition of shedding human blood, he rendered himself notorious, and his name became a proverb. When he had erected a kingdom at Babel, "he went forth out of that land to Ashur, and builded Nineveh." So it might be rendered: and perhaps this is the true meaning; though some learned men contend for that contained in our version.

V. 21. Of Eber.] Of all the Hebrews, and many other nations, who were the descendants of Shem by this branch.

V. 25. In his days, &c.] Peleg signifies division; and God saw the division taken place at the time of his birth, was the earth divided; and his brother's name was Joktan.

26 And Joktan begat Almodad, and Sheleph, and Hazarmaveth, and Jerah, 27 And Hadoram, and Uzal, and Diklah,

28 And Obal, and Abimael, and Sheba,

29 And Ophir, and Havilah, and Jobab: all these were the sons of Joktan.

30 And their dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar, a mount of the east.

31 These are the sons of Shem, after their families, after their tongues, in their lands, after their nations.

32 These are the families of the sons of Noah, after their generations, in their nations: and by these were the nations divided in the earth after the flood.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Under the blessing of God small beginnings may, in process of time, proceed to a vast increase.—As all mankind are of one family, and nearly related in Adam and Noah, how reasonable is it that we should love and do good to each other! Whenever I behold a human being, whatever be his language and garb, or wherever he was born, I should recognize a near relation, and behave to him accordingly. In this view how unnatural and absurd is that prejudice against foreigners, and that contempt of them, which generally prevail! And how can it consist with love to our neighbours, our brethren, bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, to treat them with rigour, or hold them in unwilling slavery? But whence then come wars and fightings amongst us? From that first murderer, who so early stirred up in fallen man the vile lusts of pride, ambition, covetousness, revenge, and cruelty, and thus armed brethren against each other in horrid war; and who hath in all ages filled the earth with slaughter and devastation,—which one might previously have supposed could gratify none but himself. But the very existence of war, and the necessity of always being ready for it, and of sometimes waging it, too plainly prove man's depravity, as well as Satan's influence. Blessed be God, the days are coming, when all the nations shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, and learn war no more: and then conquerors will no longer be adjudged, as in man's partial histories, illustrious characters; but branded with infamy, as in the impartial records of the Bible.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI.] V. 3. Go to, let us, &c.] These builders consulted and combined together; and they excited and animated each other in this daring attempt, and in encountering the difficulties which they met with. The plain they had chosen contained no quarries of stone, but yielded quantities of bitumen, which formed a natural cement; and having thus obtained mortar, their ingenuity and resolution suggested a method of removing the other hindrance, by burning clay into bricks.

V. 4. A city, &c.] "The beginning of Nimrod's "kingdom was Babel;" (x. 10.) we have therefore reason to conclude that he was at the head of this rebellious enterprise, though his name be not mentioned. The parties concerned intended to erect both a city to dwell in, and an exceedingly high tower, beyond any thing which had yet been seen. If they had planned this enormous building to secure themselves against a future deluge, in forgetfulness or disbelief of the promise of God; or in defiance of his vengeance, they would probably have chosen some high mountain for the purpose: but they proposed to themselves the acquisition of renown; they wanted to do somewhat in order to be admired and talked of; they sought their own glory, and not the glory of God.—It is, however, remarkable that though this enterprise was undertaken purposely to make themselves a name, yet no history records so much as the name of one of these Babel-builders, except that obscure intimation respecting Nimrod before alluded

5 And the LORD came down to see the city and the tower, which the children of men had builded.

6 And the LORD said, Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do.

7 Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech.

8 So the LORD scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth: and they left off to build the city.

9 Therefore is the name of it called Babel, because the LORD did there confound the language of all the earth: and from thence did the LORD scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth.

10 These are the generations of Shem: Shem was an hundred years old, and begat Arphaxad two years after the flood.

11 And Shem lived after he begat Arphaxad five hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.

12 And Arphaxad lived five and thirty years, and begat Salah.

13 And Arphaxad lived after he begat Salah four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters.

14 And Salah lived thirty years, and begat Eber.

15 And Salah lived after he begat Eber four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters.

16 And Eber lived four and thirty years, and begat Peleg.

17 And Eber lived after he begat Peleg four hundred and thirty years, and begat sons and daughters.

18 And Peleg lived thirty years, and begat Reu.

19 And Peleg lived after he begat Reu two hundred and nine years, and begat sons and daughters.

20 And Reu lived two and thirty years, and begat Serug.

21 And Reu lived after he begat Serug two hundred and seven years, and begat sons and daughters.

22 And Serug lived thirty years, and begat Nahor.

23 And Serug lived after he begat Nahor two hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.

24 And Nahor lived nine and twenty years, and begat Terah.

25 And Nahor lived after he begat Terah an hundred and nineteen years, and begat sons and daughters.

alluded to. It was God's purpose that they should be dispersed, form many nations under separate governments, people all lands, and replenish the earth, as his blessing upon Noah intimated (ix. 1). Accordingly some regular division of the earth, among the descendents of Noah's three sons, seems to have taken place about the time of the birth of Peleg, that is about an hundred years after the deluge; probably under the direction of Noah and his sons, and perhaps by divine appointment (x. 25). But in contempt of the blessing of God, and in opposition to his counsels, the bulk of mankind, some years afterwards, united together to build a city and tower as a bond of union to prevent their divisions, and probably their chieftains, at first, intended it to be the metropolis of that universal dominion of which they seem to have been ambitious. Whether they immediately intended the tower for an idolatrous temple also, is not certain; but idolatry was early introduced, and also speedily became one of its chief residences.

V. 5. The Lord, &c.] The Lord took particular notice of the enterprise; and men who do this, come to the soot to examine for themselves.—The distinction between the children of men, or the openly profane, and the children of God, or professors of true religion, still subsisted. From this expression we may infer that Noah, Shem, Eber, and other pious persons, had no concern in this ambitious rebellious project.

V. 6—9.] Ever since Adam broke through the fence of the divine prohibition, by eating the forbidden fruit, men will not be restrained from any thing they set their hearts upon, unless by a strong hand. The Lord employed the language of counsel and determination, in contempt of, and opposition to, that of these builders. The difference of languages subsisting all over the earth from the most remote ages corroborates this fact, and establishes our translation of the passage against those who put another construction on it. Almighty power was employed to effect it; nothing could be devised more fatal to break the wicked combination, and confound the counsels of the rebellious company; and though it was a severe rebuke, and of a woful consequences, 26 And Terah lived seventy years, and begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran.

27 Now these are the generations of Terah: Terah begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran; and Haran begat Lot.

28 And Haran died before his father Terah, in the land of his nativity, in Ur of the Chaldees.

29 And Abram and Nahor took them wives: the name of Abram's wife was Sarai; and the name of Nahor's wife, Milcah, the daughter of Haran, the father of Milcah, and the father of Iscah.

30 But Sarai was barren; she had no child.

31 And Terah took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran his son's son, and Sarai his daughter in law, his son Abram's wife; and they went forth with them from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan; and they came unto Haran, and dwelt there.

32 And the days of Terah were two hundred and five years: and Terah died in Haran.

in still more entirely excluding them from communion with the visible church, and separating them from it: yet considering their daring crimes, it was not only justice, but mercy. Babel signifies confusion.—This city was afterwards called Babylon, the head quarters for ages of idolatry, and the type of the New Testament mystical Babylon, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, which likewise is and will be confusion.

V. 27. Terah begat Abram, &c.] Though Abram be first mentioned, he seems to have been Terah's youngest son, and not born till his father was an hundred and thirty years of age.—For Terah lived two hundred and five years, and Abram, who did not leave Haran till after his death, was only seventy-five when he departed thence. There are other ways indeed of solving this difficulty, but this seems the most probable.—We find, by computation, that the original revelation made to Adam might be conveyed down to Abram at two thousand years distance, through only three intermediate hands.—Enos, the son of Adam, lived till Noah was seventy-four years old;—Shem the son of Noah, lived almost as long as Abram.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

How soon do men forget the most tremendous judgments, and return to their former crimes! The increase of wickedness kept pace with that of the human species, though the desolations of the deluge were before their eyes, though they sprang from the stock of righteous Noah, and though that patriarch was still living. So ineffectual is every thing, except the sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit, to remove the obliquity of the human will, and the depravity of the human heart!—Arduous undertakings must only be accomplished by counsel, harmony, and mutual encouragement; which we often find in the enterprises of darkening sinners against the counsel and counsel of God, and which are too often wanting in the endeavours of God's servants to promote his glory. Doubtless an enemy hath done this. There is, however, no counsel, nor wisdom against the Lord.—Whilst men on earth are plotting to defeat his purposes, "he sitteth in heaven, and laugheth them to scorn; "yea, the Lord will have them in derision."—The efforts of sinners to honour themselves will all at last issue in shame and confusion.—In the difficulty with which our intercourse with foreign nations is carried on, and in the labour with which learning is acquired, we experience the effects of this transaction. Nay, before the coming of Christ, and in these latter ages, one great impediment to the spreading of true religion hath originated from it. Yet "righteous "art thou in all thy judgments, O Lord!" when it was thy sovereign purpose to spread the Gospel among the nations which thou hast dispersed, how easily didst thou by the gift of tongues remove this impediment.—Oh! remove all other impediments, and fill the earth with truth and righteousness.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII.] V. 1—3. It is intimated in the foregoing chapter, that some time before this the Lord had made himself known to Abram; in consequence of which he had set out with Terah his father, and travelled from Ur of the Chaldees to Haran, where he was stopped, probably by the infirmities of his aged parent, and where he continued till after Terah's death. It is plainly intimated by Joshua, that the whole family had served other gods before the call of Abram; (Note, Josh. xxiv. 2.) from which we may form a judgment how very much and generally idolatry prevailed in the world. To prevent its universal prevalence, and to secure a people to himself, among whom his true worship

2 And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bleſs thee, and make thy name great; and thou ſhalt be a bleſſing,

3 And I will bleſs them that bleſs thee, and curſe him that curſeth thee: and in thee ſhall all families of the earth be bleſſed.

4 So Abram departed as the LORD had ſpoken unto him; and Lot went with him: and Abram was ſeventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran.

5 And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's ſon, and all their ſubſtance that they had gathered, and the ſouls that they had gotten in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan they came.

6 And Abram paſſed through the land unto the place of Sichem, unto the plain of Moreh. And the Canaanite was then in the land.

7 And the LORD appeared unto Abram, and ſaid, Unto thy ſeed will I give this land: and there builded he an altar unto the LORD, who appeared unto him.

worſhip might be maintained, to whom his oracles might be delivered, and with whom his ordinances might be eſtabliſhed, till the coming of Chriſt; the Lord, in his wiſe ſovereignty, made choice of Abram, and ſingled him out from among his aſſociates in idolatry, whilſt he ſuffered other nations to walk in their own ways: and this was evidently grace, and not the reward of his merit. In conſequence of this choice, "the God of glory appeared to him," (Acts vii. 2.) probably by ſome viſible manifeſtation, as frequently afterwards; and having made himſelf known unto him, and ſatisfied him that he was the true God, and that this was a divine revelation, he commanded him to leave his native country. Idolatry might be more prevalent there than in Canaan; or it might be eaſier for him to keep clear of it among ſtrangers, than among his former aſſociates. Abram, who was choſen to be "the "father of the faithful," and the exemplar of believers in all future ages, as well as the repoſitory of the promiſes, repreſented in his call and conduct that ſeparation from the world and ſin, with which the walk with God and the life of faith commence. He was therefore likewiſe required to leave all his kindred that would not accompany him in his pilgrimage. To engage his prompt obedience, the Lord promiſed to bleſs him perſonally, in things temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal,—and relatively in his poſterity; and to make his name great and honourable, which hath been ſurpriſingly accompliſhed. Throughout the viſible church Abram's name has ever been held in the higheſt veneration: and many nations in the eaſt exceedingly revere his memory, and glory in their real or pretended relation to him. Perhaps no mere man, who ever lived, has been ſo widely and ſo durably held in honour. It was alſo promiſed that he ſhould be a bleſſing: to the lateſt ages important bleſſings would, for his ſake, be vouchſafed to his poſterity, and his example would be eminently uſeful till the end of time. The Lord would have the ſame friends and enemies with his beloved ſervant: in him, or in One deſcended from him, all bleſſings centre, and through and from him they have been communicated to millions, and ſhall continue to be ſo till all nations ſhall be made happy in him, and by faith in Jeſus become Abram's ſeed and heirs according to the promiſe. (Notes, &c. Gal. iii., Rom. iv.)

V. 4, 5.] "By faith Abram obeyed, and he went out "not knowing whither he went" (Heb. xi. 8). He was fully ſatisfied that the call, promiſe, and command were from the true God. He believed that his teſtimony was true, and his promiſe faithful, and that he was able to fulfil it. He was aſſured that the bleſſing of the Almighty was ſufficient to compenſate for all that he could loſe or leave behind, to countervail all trials, to ſupply all his wants, and to anſwer and exceed all his deſires and expectations; and he was alſo convinced that nothing but miſery would enſue upon diſobedience. This was the faith which produced obedience; though natural reluctance might be ſtrong, and numbers would ſcorn and deride him as a viſionary and a madman, to leave all behind him, without ſo much as being able to inform his curious neighbours, or expoſtulating relatives, whither he was going. By this faith he was juſtified, as it intereſted him in the merits and atonement of the promiſed Seed; and the conſequent obedience proved his faith genuine, and his profeſſion ſincere. Lot alſo went with him, being, through his inſtrumentality, made partaker of the ſame faith. Their ſervants, who were their property, alſo accompanied them. And they neither loitered, turned back, nor ſtopped ſhort, as many do who ſeem to ſet out well; nor met with any inſurmountable obſtacle which none do who indeed ſet out well.

V. 6, 7.] The expreſſion "The Canaanite was then "in the land," ſeems to have been added by Ezra, or ſome perſon in after times.—The Lord appeared to Abram on his arrival in Canaan, to teſtify his acceptance of his faith and obedience, and to encourage him; at the ſame time that he welcomed him to the promiſed land, which he aſſured him ſhould be the poſſeſſion of his poſterity; though he then had no child, though the Canaanites dwelt in it, and though he could only ſojourn there as a ſtranger upon ſufferance. Accordingly Abram "builded an altar," unto JEHOVAH who appeared to him. He not only communed with God in ſecret, but made an open profeſſion of his religion; maintained the public worſhip of Jehovah; avowed his faith in, and expectations from, the promiſed Seed, in prefiguration of whoſe atonement theſe ſacrifices were inſtituted; and probably, both with his family, and ſuch of his neighbours as were induced to join him, he obſerved the ſabbaths with ſacred ſolemnity.

8 And he removed from thence unto a mountain on the east of Beth-el, and pitched his tent, having Beth-el on the west, and Hai on the east: and there he builded an altar unto the LORD, and called upon the name of the LORD.

9 And Abram journeyed, going on still toward the south.

10 And there was a famine in the land: and Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there; for the famine was grievous in the land.

11 And it came to pass, when he was come near to enter into Egypt, that he said unto Sarai his wife, Behold now I know that thou art a fair woman to look upon:

12 Therefore it shall come to pass, when the Egyptians shall see thee, that they shall say, This is his wife: and they will kill me, but they will save thee alive.

13 Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister: that it may be well with me for thy sake; and my soul shall live because of thee.

14 And it came to pass that when Abram was come into Egypt, the Egyptians beheld the woman, that she was very fair.

15 The princes also of Pharaoh saw her, and commended her before Pharaoh: and the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house.

16 And he entreated Abram well for her sake: and he had sheep, and oxen, and he-asses, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and she-asses, and camels.

17 And the LORD plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues, because of Sarai Abram's wife.

18 And Pharaoh called Abram, and said, What is this that thou hast done unto me? why didst thou not tell me that she was thy wife?

19 Why saidst thou, She is my sister? so I might have taken her to me to wife: now therefore behold thy wife, take her, and go thy way.

20 And Pharaoh commanded his men concerning him: and they sent him away, and his wife, and all that he had.

CHAP.

V. 8. Beth-el.] Many of these names were given long afterwards; but Moses spake of the several places as they were known in his time. "Calling on the name of the Lord," may signify the public worship which accompanied Abram's sacrifices. Some render it, "he preached concerning the "name of the Lord;" as intimating that he joined public instructions to his devotions.

V. 10. Went down, &c.] Abram did not in this emergency return back, as weary of his pilgrimage, or as despising the promised land; but he retired for a season into Egypt.

V. 11.—13.] Here we see much to blame in Abram, and much to admire in the impartiality of the inspired historian. Abram's counsel to Sarai was the result of unbelief. God had promised him a numerous offspring: and would he suffer him to be destroyed whilst childless? He had passed his word that he would bless him; and would he immediately desert him?—From this distrust sprang a base prevarication, and persuasion of Sarai to unite in the sin, which exposed her chastity to imminent peril; and temptations were thrown in the ways of others; so that the whole was suited to prejudice men against true religion. How inconsistent were these things with the character of the friend of God!

V. 17. Plagued, &c.] God was pleased to inflict on Pharaoh and his family some disorder, which both prevented Sarai's defilement, and made him sensible for what cause they were plagued.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The walk of faith begins when God graciously makes himself known unto a sinner by his word and Spirit. Thus he calls him to forsake his sinful and worldly pursuits and connections, to deny himself, and to become his spiritual worshipper and devoted servant: while allured by exceedingly great and precious promises, drawn by strong desires and expectations, and convinced of the ruin which attends disobedience, the sinner through grace obeys the call.—He who truly believes the word of God, and values duly the promised blessings, will yield a prompt and unreserved obedience to the command, however nature may start and recoil at it: and nothing but true faith will produce this self-denying, world-renouncing obedience. Such believers being justified by faith have peace with God; they will be blessed themselves, and blessings unto others, to relatives, to friends, and to neighbours, by their example, influence, and prayers, living and dying. As their friends will be rewarded, so their enemies will be punished by the Lord; though their name may not be great on earth, it shall be great in heaven: and some, who have lived long in sin, become afterwards very eminent in faith and holiness. We must not neglect the call of God to oblige our nearest relations; but we should endeavour to prevail on them to associate with us in his service; and we shall not in general be altogether unsuccessful. Wherever we go, or are, the Lord is there; and professing his truth, attending on his worship, and enjoying communion with him, we cannot but be safe, respectable, and happy. Whatever difficulties and dangers we meet with, we must never think of turning back, but must still be pressing forward; for there is no state on earth free from trials, nor any

AND Abram went up out of Egypt, he, and his wife, and all that he had, and Lot with him, into the ſouth.

2 And Abram was very rich in cattle, in ſilver, and in gold.

3 And he went on his journeys from the ſouth, even to Beth-el, unto the place where his tent had been at the beginning, between Beth-el and Hai.

4 Unto the place of the altar, which he had made there at the firſt: and there Abram called on the name of the LORD.

5 And Lot alſo which went with Abram, had flocks, and herds, and tents.

6 And the land was not able to bear them, that they might dwell together: for their ſubſtance was great, ſo that they could not dwell together.

7 And there was a ſtrife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle and the herdmen of Lot's cattle: and the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled there in the land.

8 And Abram ſaid unto Lot, Let there be no ſtrife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen: for we be brethren.

9 Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thyſelf, I pray thee, from me: if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left.

10 And Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld all the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered every where, before the LORD deſtroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the garden of the LORD, like the land of Egypt, as thou comeſt unto Zoar.

11 Then Lot choſe him all the plain of Jordan; and Lot journeyed eaſt: and they ſeparated themſelves the one from the other.

12 Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom.

any character from blemiſhes: famine was known in Canaan, the glory of all lands; and unbelief, with its conſequent evils, was diſcernible in Abram the father of the faithful! In heaven alone can perfect felicity and purity be found.

Magiſtrates are exalted in God's providence to be "a "terror to evil doers, and a praiſe to them that do well:" but too often they are ſlaves to their own luſts, and ſacrifice every nobler conſideration to make proviſion for the fleſh, of which they muſt one day give an account to God. And when courtiers degrade themſelves by becoming caterers to the luſts of their ſuperiors, they forfeit the honourable appellation of princes, and merit the moſt opprobious epithets. Yet even in the worſt of times and places we meet with more honour and conſcience, than we perhaps expected, and find our unbelieving fears were groundleſs. God protects his people notwithſtanding their infirmities; takes better care of them than they do of themſelves, and over-rules all things for their good: yet they ſhall not eſcape rebuke, even from thoſe who are in other reſpects their inferiors, when they act inconſiſtently with their character and profeſſion.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII.] V. 1. South, &c.] That is, the ſouthern part of Canaan, for it lay north-eaſt of Egypt.

V. 2. Very rich.] Abram's riches had been much increaſed by his journey into Egypt, even by means of his miſconduct.; God ſo over-ruling it, entirely beſides Abram's expectation or intention.

V. 6. The land, &c.] The former inhabitants would occupy much of the beſt land; and the remainder could not in one diſtrict ſupport ſuch large flocks and herds.

V. 7. The, &c.] The Canaanite and Perrizzite, being eſtranged from true religion, would ſtrictly ſcrutinize, and ſeverely animadvert upon, the conduct of thoſe, who ſo openly profeſſed themſelves the ſervants and worſhippers of the Lord.

V. 8, 9.] Abram was the elder man, the ſuperior relation, and the more eminent ſervant of God; yet for the ſake of peace, and for the credit of his religion, he gave up every perſonal conſideration, and with great temper and prudence ſupplicated his nephew, allowed him his choice, and reſted ſatisfied with the remainder. This was worthy of the friend of God, and the father of the faithful!

V. 10. Lot lifted up, &c.] It is ſurpriſing that Lot expreſſed no reluctance at leaving Abram's family, and the benefit of his converſation, counſel, example, worſhip, and inſtructions; and that he did not ſo much as remit to Abram the privilege of the firſt choice! But if this was faulty, it was ſtill worſe to chooſe merely from the luſt of the eye, a well-watered fruitful land, without any higher conſideration than an expectation that his ſubſtance, 13 But the men of Sodom were wicked, and ſinners before the LORD exceedingly.

14 And the LORD ſaid unto Abram, after that Lot was ſeparated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, north-ward, and ſouth-ward, and eaſt-ward, and weſt-ward.

15 For all the land which thou ſeeſt, to thee will I give it, and to thy ſeed for ever.

16 And I will make thy ſeed as the duſt of the earth: ſo that if a man can number the duſt of the earth, then ſhall thy ſeed alſo be numbered.

17 Ariſe, walk through the land, in the length of it, and in the breadth of it: for I will give it unto thee.

18 Then Abram removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the plain of Mamre which is in Hebron, and built there an altar unto the LORD.

V. 13. Sinners, &c.] The men of Sodom were notorious and daring tranſgreſſors; deſpiſing God, and openly defying him; and eſpecially marked by him for vengeance.

V. 15. For ever.] This expreſſion, when uſed concerning outward things, frequently means for ages to come. But the heavenly Canaan was typified, which is indeed given to the ſpiritual ſeed of Abram for ever.

V. 16. As the duſt, &c.] This promiſe muſt have put Abram's faith to a ſharp trial; for as yet he had no child; though he was far advanced in life, and had been long married.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Though neceſſity may ſometimes drive us into places of temptation, we muſt not continue in them when the neceſſity ceaſes.—The poſſeſſion of riches, though dangerous, is not abſolutely incompatible with the life of faith and walk with God. When they are neither anxiouſly coveted, eagerly purſued, improperly confided in, nor inordinately loved; and when they come by God's bleſſing, are thankfully received, moderately enjoyed, and carefully improved, they may become an ornament of godlineſs and a means of uſefulneſs. Yet they are generally incumbrances to the poſſeſſor, and ſources of contention or ſeparation between brethren; and frequently they exclude men from comfortable ſociety, and from many ſpiritual advantages. When they are increaſed, thoſe are increaſed that eat them; which commonly creates uneaſineſs, and renders the poſſeſſion of the bleſſings of peace more precarious. Let the poor then learn contentment, and the wealthy caution and moderation, from this example. As we, who profeſs to be brethern in Chriſt, are ſurrounded with enemies and ſpies, we ſhould be careful to preſerve union, and to avoid all appearance of evil, leſt we ſhould prejudice their minds, or open their mouths againſt us; and we ought to renounce every perſonal intereſt, and to make every conceſſion for the ſake of peace. If the real ſervants of God ſo loſe themſelves, as to renounce, for temporal advantages, the ſociety of the faithful, and to eſtrange themſelves from God's ordinances, by removing to dark and wicked places, we ſhall ſhortly hear of their ſmarting ſeverely for it: whilſt the Lord will compenſate, perhaps in outward bleſſings, certainly in ſpiritual conſolations, pledges of his love, and earneſts of glory, thoſe who give up ſecular advantages for his ſake and for the cauſe and honour of the Goſpel. And in outward difficulties it is very profitable for the true believer to meditate, frequently and intenſely, on the glorious inheritance which the Lord hath in reſerve for him at the laſt.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV.] V. 1—3.] This is the moſt ancient war recorded in authentic hiſtory; and probably, like many others, it would have been paſſed over in ſilence and buried in oblivion, had not Abram and Lot been concerned in it: edification, not the gratifying of curioſity, being the object of the inſpired hiſtorians. The fruitful valley of Siddim, by the deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, became a large lake, called the Salt Sea, or the Dead Sea.

V. 4. Twelve years, &c.] After having ſubmitted for twelve years, theſe kings formed an alliance to ſhake off the yoke of this foreign prince.

V. 5—7.

5 And in the fourteenth year came Chedorlaomer, and the kings that were with him, and ſmote the Rephaims in Aſhteroth Karnaim, and the Zuzims in Ham, and the Emims in Shaveh Kiriathaim,

6 And the Horites in their mount Seir, unto El-paran, which is by the wilderneſs.

7 And they returned and came to Enmiſhpat, which is Kadeſh, and ſmote all the country of the Amalekites, and alſo the Amorites, that dwelt in Hazezon-tamar.

8 And there went out the king of Sodom, and the king of Gomorrah, and the king of Admah, and the king of Zeboiim, and the king of Bela, (the ſame is Zoar;) and they joined battle with them in the vale of Siddim;

9 With Chedorlaomer the king of Elam, and with Tidal king of nations, and Amraphel king of Shinar, and Arioch king of Ellaſar: four kings with five.

10 And the vale of Siddim was full of ſlime-pits; and the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah fled, and fell there: and they that remained fled to the mountain.

11 And they took all the goods of Sodom and Gomorrah, and all their victuals, and went their way.

12 And they took Lot, Abram's brother's ſon, (who dwelt in Sodom,) and his goods, and departed.

13 And there came one that had eſcaped, and told Abram the Hebrew; for he dwelt in the plain of Mamre the Amorite, brother of Eſhcol, and brother of Aner: and theſe were confederate with Abram.

14 And when Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained ſervants, born in his own houſe, three hundred and eighteen, and purſued them unto Dan.

15 And he divided himſelf againſt them, he and his ſervants by night, and ſmote them, and purſued them unto Hobah, which is on the left hand of Damaſcus.

16 And he brought back all the goods, and alſo brought again his brother Lot, and his goods, and the women alſo, and the people.

17 And the king of Sodom went out to meet him (after his return from the ſlaughter of Chedorlaomer, and of the kings that were with him), at the valley of Shaveh, which is the king's dale.

18 And Melchizedek, king of Salem, brought forth bread and wine: and he was the prieſt of the moſt high God.

V. 5—7.] This ancient conqueror, having ſubdued all the neighbouring petty princes, and ravaged their territories, came with his victorious army to ſubjugate the king of Sodom and his allies.

V. 12. They took Lot, &c.] From avaricious motives Lot ſettled in fruitful but wicked Sodom, whoſe inhabitants were deſcendents of accurſed Canaan, and already ripe for vengeance: but ſpeedily their wealth tempted plunderers, and he was ſtript of all and carried captive. Had not Lot been taken, the conquerors might have gone off with their booty: but he was God's ſervant, though he had offended: he needed a rebuke, but he muſt not be ruined; eſpecially as he was brother's ſon to Abram the bleſſed, who was a bleſſing to all that were related to him.

V. 13. Confederate, &c.] Abram had prudently formed an alliance with theſe chiefs for mutual defence, amidſt all this violence and depredation.

V. 14—16.] Abram might have found many pretences to excuſe himſelf from this dangerous enterpriſe; and eſpecially he might have pleaded the impropriety of Lot's conduct. But he forgat all, diſregarded the difficulty and danger, feared not the numerous and victorious forces of the combined kings: and having ſo good a cauſe, as the relief of a brother in diſtreſs, in dependence on God, he boldly and without heſitation purſued them with his ſmall company.—Though averſe to war, in which he never engaged before or after that we find; he had yet trained his domeſtics for it, and put himſelf in a poſture of defence: ſome indeed underſtand it that he had trained them up in the faith and fear of God, and conſcientious obedience to him, which would render them the beſt ſoldiers for ſuch an expedition. In company however with his confederates, Abram followed the victors as far as the place, on the north borders of Canaan, where the city of Dan was afterwards built, (Judges, xviii. 29.)—Probably in this, and ſome other places, Ezra, or others, who took care to have correct copies of the Bible, inſerted the new names by which the places were then called, inſtead of the old ones, to render them more intelligible.—Abram, when engaged in this expedition, employed both courage and policy, attacked the enemy in the night by ſurpriſe; and, God ſo ordering it, he totally intimidated, ſubdued, and diſperſed them, recovered all, and took a great booty.

V. 18—20.] Various have been the opinions of expoſitors.

19 And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth:

20 And blessed be the most high God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him tithes of all.

21 And the king of Sodom said unto Abram, Give me the persons, and take the goods to thyself.

22 And Abram said to the king of Sodom, I have lifted up mine hand unto the LORD, the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth, positors respecting this extraordinary person. Some have conjectured that it was Shem, who, as Abram's venerable progenitor, was entitled to this respect: while others have supposed that it was the Son of God himself supposing it impossible that any mere man should be superior to Abram. But it is inconceivable that the Apostle should say Melchizedek was "made like unto the Son of God," if he actually was the Son of God! or that Christ should be "a Priest after the order of Melchizedek," that is, after the order of himself! or that he should be a type of himself! (Notes, Heb. vii). Moreover he is spoken of as king of Salem, (the same place which is afterwards called Jerusalem,) and not as an appearance to Abram, such as are recorded in other instances. But the Holy Spirit seems purposely to have involved the matter in obscurity. Melchizedek was no doubt a mere man; but from which of Noah's sons he sprang, who were his immediate parents, predecessors, or successors, the Lord hath not thought good to inform us: nay, he hath intentionally concealed them; and it does not become us to enquire any further about them. He was, without doubt, an aged person, venerable for sanctity, who ruled over his subjects in righteousness, whilst they lived under him in peace; which, when oppression and violence prevailed amongst their neighbours, perhaps gave the name both to him and to his city: he also kept up the worship of the true God, and, though a king, officiated as his priest.—In all these things, and many others, he was a remarkable type of Christ; as will be more fully shewn in another place. In reverence to his age, rank, piety, and priestly character, Abram shewed him great honour, received his benediction, and gave him tithes of all his spoils, being influenced to this by some secret divine monition; perhaps being led to see in this typical character his future Lord and Saviour. At least the Spirit of God intended to instruct Abram's descendents by this action, "that a better priest should "arise than those of the family of Aaron."—No certain conclusion can be drawn from the circumstance, that Melchizedek is not mentioned elsewhere in the history, or from its not being recorded that Abram visited him either before or after. We are not sure that Abram never conversed with Shem, who lived almost as long as he, though we are no where informed that he did: and it might purposely be omitted in this case, for the above-mentioned reason.—Bread and wine constituted refreshment for Abram's weary followers: and it is remarkable that Christ hath appointed the same as the memorials of his body and blood, which are meat and drink indeed.

V. 21. Give me, &c.] That is, 'Release the prisoners; 'and take the spoil not only of the kings, but of Sodom 'too, as the reward of thy victory.'

V. 22—24.] Probably Abram solemnly vowed, before he set out on this expedition, that he would not take any thing which had belonged to the vanquished kings. The credit of his religious profession required that if he engaged in war, it should evidently be on the most liberal and disinterested principles. Lifting up the hand to the Lord was a customary token of taking an oath, or making a vow.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Sinners may for a season prosper, though the wrath of God abides upon them: but respites are not pardons, and prosperity often hardens and ripens men for destruction. After four hundred years the curse denounced on Canaan began to take effect: let us hear and fear and flee from the wrath to come.—Avarice, ambition, and the thirst of dominion are insatiable, render men savage and brutal, and have in all ages filled the earth with misery and destruction; yet God executes his righteous purposes, even by means of the unrighteousness of men.—We might have expected to hear of some calamity befalling Lot, after what we before read: and we may expect the same consequences if we imitate his example. But the Lord, though he rebuke and chasten, yet will not forsake his offending children; and therefore we must be ready to forgive and hasten to the relief of our offending brethren.—Though war can never be desirable, yet in the present state of things it may be lawful, and even advisable; and never more so, than in order to relieve the oppressed.—They who serve God, whatever means they employ, will not depend on an arm of flesh: and when they trust in him, and have a righteous cause and a good conscience, it becomes them to be bold as a lion, and not to shrink from difficulties in the path of duty: nor is any courage worthy admiration or imitation, or in the least rational, but that which springs from a believing dependence upon God, and a firm persuasion that we are prepared for life and death, and are in that place, and doing that work, which

AFTER these things the word of the LORD came unto Abram in a vision, saying, Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward.

2 And Abram said, LORD God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus?

3 And Abram said, Behold, to me thou hast given no seed: and lo, one born in my house is mine heir.

4 And behold the word of the LORD came unto him, saying, This shall not be thine heir, but he that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir.

5 And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, So shall thy seed be.

6 And he believed in the LORD; and he counted it to him for righteousness.

which he has assigned us.—It is a great advantage to stand related to those who are the friends of God and the followers of him: By their means, and in answer to their prayers, such persons will often be preserved.—The Lord is the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth; all our substance belongs to him; we ought then to acknowledge his right to it, and seek his blessing on it, by consecrating a portion to his immediate service: and the tenth was early deemed, and has long continued to be considered, as a very moderate proportion.—Oaths are lawful, but should be taken with great solemnity as an act of sacred worship, and observed with great punctuality.—Nothing better becomes a profession of godliness, than a noble spirit of disinterestedness; and in our whole conduct we should study to avoid, not only evil, but the very appearance of it; especially in those things, which at first glance seem unsuitable to our profession. As the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, they who belong to him have no occasion to grasp at temporal advantages; for as far as riches are good for them, he will surely give them; and further they ought not to desire them. However, we should without censure allow many things to others, which our profession and character may render it expedient for us to deny ourselves.—But what is become of Lot? Alas! he is gone back to Sodom; for indulged corruptions are not mortified but by severe discipline.—Finally, let us remember our King of righteousness and King of peace, our Priest upon his throne: let us rejoice in his equitable and peaceful administration; and declare war against his and our enemies, Sin, the World, and Satan. Invisibly he will assist us in each conflict, and manifest himself to us after every victory, refresh us with his gracious provisions, and bless us with the earnests of his love.—And shortly, when the final victory is won, and he hath made us more than conquerors, he will applaud our achievements, accept and reward our poor services, and place us with himself upon his throne; whilst we rejoice in his love, and give him all the glory.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1—3.] Some expositors suppose that the expression "The word of the Lord," was intended to denote him, whose name is elsewhere called the Word of God: it seems at least to have been a visible appearance; but this subject will hereafter be spoken of to better advantage.—Abram might be tempted to fear, lest the remains of the potent enemies, whom he had exasperated, should return with larger forces, and take vengeance on him. The Lord, therefore assured him that he was his Shield, to defend him from all his enemies; as well as his exceeding great reward, to compensate his generous behaviour to Lot, and his disinterested contempt of wealth in his conduct towards the king of Sodom. But Abram's answer seemed to say, 'As to temporal blessings, I have all and 'abound, for at present I have none to inherit my wealth 'but this stranger.—The posterity thou didst intimate to 'me, and the blessings, which are to come to all the families of the earth through the promised Seed, lie nearest my 'heart, and nothing else can satisfy me.'

V. 6. He believed &c.] Notwithstanding difficulties and delays, Abram, depending on the divine veracity and power, believed that it would really come to pass according to the promise. (Note, vi. 7.) His faith had also a special reference to Christ, as the Seed particularly intended in all the promises to him; accordingly it interested him in the Saviour's righteousness; and thus it was accounted to him, as if he had been perfectly righteous. (Notes, Rom. iii. iv. v. Gal. iii.)

V. 8. Whereby shall I, &c.] Abram desired a sign and a covenant security, for the confirmation of his faith.

V. 9—11.

9 And he ſaid unto him, Take me an heifer of three years old, and a ſhe-goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtle-dove, and a young pigeon.

10 And he took unto him all theſe, and divided them in the midſt, and laid each piece one againſt another: but the birds divided he not.

11 And when the fowls came down upon the carcaſes, Abram drove them away.

12 And when the ſun was going down, a deep ſleep fell upon Abram: and lo, an horror of great darkneſs fell upon him, 13 And he ſaid unto Abram, Know of a ſurety that thy ſeed ſhall be a ſtranger in a land that is not their's, and ſhall ſerve them; and they ſhall afflict them four hundred years.

14 And alſo that nation whom they ſhall ſerve, will I judge: and afterward ſhall they come out with great ſubſtance.

15 And thou ſhalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou ſhalt be buried in a good old age.

16 But in the fourth generation they ſhall come hither again: for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full.

17 And it came to paſs, that when the ſun went down, and it was dark, behold a ſmoking furnace, and a burning lamp that paſſed between thoſe pieces.

18 In that ſame day the LORD made a covenant with Abram, ſaying, Unto thy ſeed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt, unto the great river, the river Euphrates:

19 The Kenites, and the Kenizzites, and the Kadmonites, 20 And the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Rephaims.

21 And the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Girgaſhites, and the Jebuſites.

V. 9—11.] The heathen nations had ſimilar forms of entering into ſolemn covenants, by cutting animals aſunder, and by the covenanting parties paſſing through the midſt of them (Jer. xxxiv. 18, 19). Perhaps, they were derived by tradition from this tranſaction; they denoted, however, that he who brake the covenant might expect to be in like manner cut aſunder by divine juſtice.—Abram carefully watched the ſacrifice, driving away the birds of prey that would have devoured it, and patiently waited the event.

V. 12—16.] Abram ſeems to have employed the whole day, from very early in the morning before the ſtars diſappeared, until very late at night, about this ſolemnity, and in watching and prayer. The horror of darkneſs was emblematical of the diſtreſs of his poſterity in Egypt; and perhaps of the comparative darkneſs of the diſpenſation, under which they were afterwards to continue. About four hundred years intervened betwixt this time and the deliverance of Iſrael out of Egypt; exactly 430 from Abram's call, as it is generally computed, (Exod. xii. 40 41.)

V. 17. A ſmoking, &c.] Theſe appearances repreſented the Iſraelites' ſevere trials, but gracious ſupports, and joyful deliverance. They were tokens of God's acceptance of the ſacrifice, ſymbols of his preſence, and confirmations of the covenant. Probably the ſacrifices were thus conſumed.

V. 18. In that, &c.] By this tranſaction the promiſes were rendered more explicit, and ratified into a covenant, which God pledged himſelf to fulfil.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who truſt in God and ſerve him, ſhould fear no enemies, for they have an omnipreſent and omnipotent Protector.—Nor need they heſitate to renounce the moſt valuable perſonal advantages for his ſake; for he will abundantly recompenſe them: yea, he himſelf will be their Shield and Portion, their exceedingly great and everlaſting reward.—Yet hope deferred maketh the heart ſick; the ſtrongeſt faith has its miſgivings, the moſt courageous ſpirit has its fears, and the moſt reſigned believer his complaints: theſe the Lord graciouſly notes, pardons, pities, and relieves.—He who in one inſtance, upon the ſingle teſtimony of God, ſtedfaſtly expects things exceedingly difficult and improbable, in the Lord's time and manner; will believe all that God hath revealed when he becomes acquainted with it, and will embrace and expect whatever he propoſes: and this man's faith ſhall be accounted to him for righteouſneſs; (Rom. iv. 18—25.) Yet will he ſeek, and God will grant, further tokens of his love, to confirm and ſtrengthen his faith: and he will be encouraged to conſider former mercies as earneſts of future bleſſings.—The covenant of God with ſinners has always been ratified by ſacrifice and the ſhedding of blood: and in attendence on his ordinances, we muſt wait for the confirmation of our faith, and guard againſt all intruſion upon our devotions; eſpecially thoſe vain thoughts, which are apt on ſuch occaſions to ariſe, and interrupt the exerciſe of faith, hope, and love.—The knowledge of future events would ſeldom add to our comfort: in the moſt favoured families, and moſt happy lives, there are ſuch chequered ſcenes and ſo many afflictions, that it is merciful in God to conceal from us what will befall us and ours; and we are very fooliſh if we eagerly covet ſuch information, which would not only anticipate the troubles of life, but even diſtreſs us about ſuch things as will not take place till we are in the ſilent grave, or rather in the eternal world. multitudes far more deſire to partake with Abraham in this kind of information, than in his moſt holy faith!—God waits till iniquity be ripe, ere he puniſhes, and in the mean time gives ſpace for repentance: let the ſinner then count his long-ſuffering to be ſalvation, and improve it; and let believers alſo wait for their mercies till they are prepared for them. Finally, the growing Chriſtian will daily obtain fuller aſſurances, and more explicit knowledge, of the bleſſings of the covenant which God hath ratified with him.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI.] V. 1—3.] Ten years had elapſed ſince the call of Abram; a numerous poſterity had repeatedly been promiſed, among whom that Seed was to ariſe, in whom all the families of the earth would be bleſſed: but there were no appearance of the fulfilment of theſe promiſes. Sarai, though amiable and faithful, ſtill continued childleſs, and was now ſeventy-five years of age. The promiſe had not been expreſsly reſtricted to her: and though we never before read of a godly perſon having two wives at once; yet ſuch marriages appear to have been common, and perhaps in no bad repute in the world. Not only the natural deſire of children, but the fulfilment of thoſe promiſes in which all bleſſings centre, was concerned. It ſeemed vain to expect children by Sarai any longer; almighty power was forgotten; through unbelief carnal policy crept in; and it occurred to Sarai firſt that other means might be tried: ſhe was willing to forego all further expectation of being the mother of the promiſed Seed, and to be ſatisfied with the adoptive relation, or with ſeeing the promiſe accompliſhed to Abram; for ſhe acknowledged the hand of God in her trial, and acquieſced in his will. In this view the propoſal was made, and haſtily adopted and executed, without aſking counſel at the mouth of the Lord: but it was a bad example, a fatal precedent, and a ſource of manifold uneaſineſs.—Probably Hagar was one of the maid-ſervants whom Pharaoh had given Abram, and ſhe waited on Sarai.

V. 4—6.] Hagar was lifted up with pride and ſelf-preference; forgetting that the Lord had made the difference between her and Sarai; flattering herſelf that ſhe now ſhould ſecure Abram's affections to herſelf; and perhaps expecting the honour of being the mother of the promiſed Seed: and Sarai, inſtead of blaming herſelf for what ſhe had done, ſeemed to claim merit from it, unreaſonably blamed Abram as if he had encouraged Hagar's inſolence, and needleſsly appealed from him to the Lord. In all this much paſſion and peeviſhneſs, and a very uneaſy frame of mind, may clearly be diſcerned.—Abram acted wiſely in readily relinguiſhing Hagar, and ſhewed that he had not acted from carnal affection: but he conceded too far in leaving her, whom he was bound to protect, ſo entirely in the power of Sarai, whoſe mind was too embittered by paſſion to act with entire equity and impartiality; ſo that ſhe exacted her former ſervice more rigorouſly and harſhly, which in Hagar's ſituation was unjuſtifiable; and her haughty ſpirit could not endure the treatment of a ſlave, when ſhe expected the privilege of a wife.

V. 7—9.] Probably Hagar ſet out to return to Egypt, her native country; but being unable to proceed, ſhe ſat down, fatigued and overwhelmed with diſtreſs, by a fountain of water. The Angel ſpake to her, as Sarai's ſervant, not as Abram's wife. Thus her marriage was tacitly cenſured as unhallowed; and this would tend to humble her, and to convince her of ſin in deſpiſing and fleeing from her miſtreſs. By enquiring of her whence ſhe came? and whither ſhe would go? the Angel implicitly charged her with 8 And he ſaid, Hagar, Sarai's maid, whence cameſt thou? and whither wilt thou go? And ſhe ſaid, I flee from the face of my miſtreſs.

9 And the Angel of the LORD ſaid unto her, Return to thy miſtreſs, and ſubmit thyſelf under her hands.

10 And the Angel of the LORD ſaid unto her, I will multiply thy ſeed exceedingly, that it ſhall not be numbered for multitude.

11 And the Angel of the LORD ſaid unto her, Behold, thou art with child, and ſhalt bear a ſon, and ſhalt call his name Iſhmael; becauſe the LORD hath heard thy affliction.

12 And he will be a wild man; his hand will be againſt every man, and every man's hand againſt him: and he ſhall dwell in the preſence of all his brethren.

13 And ſhe called the name of the LORD that ſpake unto her, Thou God ſeeſt me: for ſhe ſaid, Have I alſo here looked after him that ſeeth me?

14 Wherefore the well was called Beer-lahai-roi; behold, it is between Kadeſh and Bered.

15 And Hagar bare Abram a ſon: and Abram called his ſon's name, which Hagar bare, Iſhmael.

16 And Abram was fourſcore and ſix years old, when Hagar bare Iſhmael to Abram.

with leaving her proper ſtation, acting inconſiſtently with her duty and intereſt, forſaking her own mercies, and ruſhing on deſtruction. And by commanding her to return to her miſtreſs, he reminded her that her trouble was the conſequence of ſin, and ſhe muſt therefore patiently ſubmit to it.

V. 10, 11.] Here we learn who this Angel was who could ſay, "I will multiply thy ſeed:" He was the Angel Jehovah, as it may be rendered: Jehovah himſelf, yet the Meſſenger, or Angel, of the covenant—the eternal Word and Son of God. We ſhall meet with many inſtances of this hereafter. Iſhmael ſignifies the Lord will hear; "he hath heard, and therefore he will hear," thy affliction, not thy prayer; intimating that the relief was not only unmerited, but unſolicited.

V. 12. And he, &c.] This perhaps was Iſhmael's character; but his poſterity were principally intended. The numerous tribes of the Arabians, Saracens, and other deſcendents of Iſhmael, have in all ages to the preſent day been a hardy untamed race of free-booters; and have chiefly ſubſiſted by plundering their neighbours and paſſengers; as it appears by the united teſtimony of all the hiſtorians and travellers who have written of thoſe countries. They have accordingly provoked the enmity of all the neighbouring nations, and have lived in a ſtate of hoſtility with all men ever ſince. Yet have they ſet at defiance the mightieſt conquerors of all ages, and have ſtood their ground againſt them all. Eſpecially they lived in the neighbourhood of the Iſraelites and Edomites, and other deſcendents of Abram, and were never ſubjugated by any of them. They who would ſee this prophecy more particularly explained, may conſult Biſhop Newton on the Prophecies, (Diſſ. 1.) Thus in every age the fulfilling of prophecies forms a ſtanding miracle in proof of the divine authority of the Scriptures, which demands our attentive conſideration.

V. 13. The name of the Lord, &c.] Hence we may learn what Moſes thought of this Angel, whom he calls JEHOVAH; and what Hagar thought, who called his name, "Thou God ſeeſt me." She added, Have I, who am ſo unworthy, here in this deſert, out of the path of duty, and at a diſtance from the ordinances of God, been favoured with ſuch a gracious and condeſcending viſit?

V. 14. Beer-lahai-roi.] The well of him that liveth and ſeeth me. It ſeems that Hagar was now reduced to better temper, returned home, and by proper behaviour molified Sarai into more gentle treatment.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In every relation and ſituation in life there is ſome croſs for us to bear; and the exerciſe of faith greatly conſiſts in patiently ſubmitting to it, waiting the Lord's time, and uſing thoſe means, and thoſe only, which he appoints and authorizes for its removal.—Much of the influence of unbelief conſiſts in impatience, and haſtily uſing unhallowed means of obtaining thoſe things, which we inordinately deſire.—Very bad things may be ſanctioned by the example of very good men, may appear in very plauſible colours, may be ſupported with ſome ſhew of reaſon, and be ſuggeſted by thoſe who are juſtly dear to us. But never have we more cauſe to be upon our guard, than when Satan thus transforms himſelf into an angel of light: then "to the law and "to the teſtimony" muſt be our appeal: "What hath God ſaid?" Then ſhould we act with deliberation, be afraid of leaning to our own underſtanding, and ſeek counſel of the Lord by inſtant prayer.—In Hagar's inſolence, in Sarai's impatience, and in Abram's uneaſineſs; again, in Sarai's ſeverity, and in Hagar's flight and diſtreſs, we ſee the effects of ſuch carnal projects, and of deviating from the original inſtitution of marriage.—They who conſent together in ſin ſhall be chaſtened together, and often correct each other. Though it is not good to indulge wrath:" yet even peace may be bought too dear; and we ought not to allow the injurious treatment of thoſe who are entitled to our protection. But it is never ſafe or prudent to quit our ſituation, under the influence of pride, impatience, and reſentment.—Though a haughty ſpirit will diſdain contradiction; contradiction; yet it is best to endure it, and to consider that "yielding pacifieth great offences."—Much wisdom is contained in a proper answer to such questions, as are here proposed and implied. Recollecting who we are would teach us our duty, and suggest motives for quietly attending to it. Seriously enquiring in many cases, whence we came? may shew us our sin and folly: and considering, whither we will go? may often discover our danger and misery, before it be too late; and prepare us to listen to his counsel, who calls upon us to return and repent of that which we have done in pride and passion.—How free from fear and care, how conscientious in duty, watchful against sin, and resolute in resisting temptation should we be, if we always were suitably impressed with this thought, "Thou God seest me!" The good Lord, who always sees us, and despises not the meanest, but hears the affliction even before it vent itself into prayer, help us to realize his presence, to trust in his goodness, to submit to his will, and with admiring humble gratitude to acknowledge his mercies to us.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII.] V. 1—3] This appearance of the Lord to Abram was near fourteen years after his marriage with Hagar. So long was this gracious intercourse interrupted, and his faith sharply tried with this tedious delay; which perhaps implied a rebuke for his misconduct in that transaction!—The Lord, by revealing himself as "the Almighty, or the all sufficient God," who was able to surmount all obstacles, and supply all wants, most powerfully enforced the subsequent exhortation to Abram, "to walk before him," without being discouraged or wearied; and to "be perfect," or not to waver and decline, but to be constantly, consistently, and entirely dependent on him, and devoted to him. Abram, hearing this, fell on his face before God, humbly adoring the divine glory, now manifested to him; and whilst he was in that posture, the Lord talked with him in a way of personal conversation.

V. 4. As for me, &c.] The Lord declared, that for his part he would be firm to his word, and never shrink from it, and that his covenant, which had been already established, should now be further ratified and sealed, and in due season certainly accomplished, notwithstanding delays and difficulties.—It is necessary hear to enquire what this covenant was. It is plain it was not the covenant of works; nor yet the Sinai covenant made with Israel as a nation. (Notes, &c. Gal. iii.) It was not merely a personal covenant with Abram, concerning the multiplication of his seed, and the possession of Canaan; for this is totally contrary to Paul's reasoning in the scripture above referred to: neither was it merely a covenant which respected his own salvation; though both these last be implied. The covenant and oath made with Abram, and confirmed by an oath, is fulfilled to all believers, as his children: (Luke i. 72, 73. Heb. vi. 12.—18.) and this fully shews, that it was the very covenant of grace made of God in Christ, with him as the representative of the whole family of true believers. The promised Seed was Christ, and Christians in him: Canaan typified Heaven: every blessing was conferred on Abram, through the righteousness of faith, which was sealed in circumcision: and all, who are of faith, are blessed with faithful Abram, being partakers of the same covenant blessings, secured by the same oath and promise.

V. 5. Neither shall thy name, &c.] Abram signifies a high father; Abraham, the high father of a multitude, or the father of mighty nations.

V. 7. A God unto thee, &c.] As if Jehovah had said, 'By my grace I will enable thee to choose me as thy portion, and devote thyself to my worship and service; and 'I will answer thy expectations in becoming thine everlasting felicity.' The same is the blessedness of all the true children of Abraham: and his posterity according to the flesh had his oracles committed to them, his prophets sent to them, and his ordinances administered among them; which were vast advantages every way. 8 And I will give unto thee, and to thy ſeed after thee, the land wherein thou art a ſtranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlaſting poſſeſſion; and I will be their God.

9 And God ſaid unto Abraham, Thou ſhalt keep my covenant therefore, thou, and thy ſeed after thee, in their generations.

13 He that is born in thy houſe, and he that is bought with thy money, muſt needs be circumciſed: and my covenant ſhall be in your fleſh for an everlaſting covenant.

14 And the uncircumciſed man-child, whoſe fleſh of his foreſkin is not circumciſed, that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people: he hath broken my covenant.

15 And God ſaid unto Abraham, As for Sarai thy wife, thou ſhalt not call her name Sarai, but Sarah ſhall her name be.

16 And I will bleſs her, and give thee a ſon alſo of her: yea, I will bleſs her, and ſhe ſhall be a mother of nations; kings of people ſhall be of her.

17 Then Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed, and ſaid in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is an hundred years old? and ſhall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?

V. 9. Shalt keep, &c.] 'Thou ſhalt obſerve this rite of 'circumciſion, as a token of thy ſubmiſſion to my will, 'and acceptance of my covenant; a profeſſion of thy faith, 'and a valued pledge of thy relation to me.'

V. 11. Circumciſe.] The foreſkin was ordered in circumciſion to be cut off; as intimating that depravity was communicated with the human nature, and propagated with the ſpecies; and that this depravity, called the old man, which is corrupt, muſt be put off, or mortified and deſtroyed by true believers. (Eph. iv. 22—24). In them the "heart is circumciſed to love the Lord," and perverſeneſs, rebellion, and enmity, are gradually deſtroyed out of it by ſanctifying grace. Circumciſion ſealed the righteouſneſs of faith; (Rom. iv. 11.) for wherever the circumciſion of the heart is wrought, it is an inward ſeal, that the ſinner is juſtified by the righteouſneſs of faith, as Abraham was. Circumciſion was a bloody and painful ordinance: for the ſanctification of the Spirit is vouchſafed to ſinners through the blood of Chriſt; the mortification of ſin is painful to the fleſh; and until the blood of Chriſt had been ſhed once for all, the ordinances of God were generally attended with the ſhedding of blood, but none ſince that time are ſo. Not only Abraham, and Iſaac, and his poſterity by Iſaac, were ordered to be circumciſed; but his ſon Iſhmael, and his very bond-ſervants likewiſe: for circumciſion ſealed not only the covenant of the land of Canaan to Iſaac's poſterity, but Heaven through Chriſt to the whole Church of God: and the outward ſign may belong to the whole viſible church; but the inward ſeal of the Spirit is peculiar to thoſe whom God knows, (and he alone can know them,) to be believers. Infants were circumciſed, becauſe a part of the viſible church; and becauſe it was a proper profeſſion of their parents' faith, and a pledge for the religious education of their children thus early devoted to God. Males only were capable of circumciſion: but in Chriſt there is no more diſtinction betwixt male or female, than betwixt Jew and Gentile. The Gentile, who embraced the Jewiſh religion, was circumciſed adult; but his future offſpring at eight days old. The uncircumciſed were ordered to be cut off: becauſe neglecting circumciſion was a rejection of the covenant; and the uncircumciſed in heart will be excluded Heaven, and ſeparated from God's people for ever.

V. 13. My covenant, &c.] That is, the ſeal and badge of the covenant would remain in their fleſh; in the uſe of which they would be diſtinguiſhed from other people.

V. 15. As for, &c.] Sarai ſignifies my Princeſs; Sarah, a Princeſs, to others, as well as to Abraham—implying how honourable her name would be in the whole Church of God, as well as in Abraham's family.

V. 17 Fell on his face, &c.] When Abraham heard the words of God, he proſtrated himſelf in reverential worſhip, and laughed in admiring faith and joyful gratitude. He himſelf was born when Terah was 130 years old; as it is generally calculated, (Note, xi. 26): but in the courſe of the laſt 100 years it ſeems to have become very uncommon for men to have children at ſo advanced an age. He had been ſo long married to Sarah, and ſhe was now ſo far advanced in years, continuing barren, that it ſeems he had given up all expectation of having ſeed by her; and previouſly to this explicit promiſe, thought that the promiſes were to be fulfilled in Iſhmael.

V. 18.

18 And Abraham said unto God, O that Ishmael might live before thee!

19 And God said, Sarah thy wife shall bear thee a son indeed; and thou shalt call his name Isaac: and I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant, and with his seed after him.

20 And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation.

21 But my covenant will I establish with Isaac, whom Sarah shall bear unto thee at this set time in the next year.

22 And He left off talking with him, and God went up from Abraham.

23 And Abraham took Ishmael his son, and all that were born in his house, and all that were bought with his money, every male among the men of Abraham's house; and circumcised the flesh of their fore-skin, in the self-same day, as God had said unto him.

24 And Abraham was ninety years old and nine, when he was circumcised in the flesh of his fore-skin.

25 And Ishmael his son was thirteen years old when he was circumcised in the flesh of his fore-skin.

26 In the self-same day was Abraham circumcised, and Ishmael his son.

27 And all the men of his house, born in the house, and bought with money of the stranger, were circumcised with him.

CHAP.

V. 18. O that Ishmael, &c.] Though Abraham "staggered not at the promise through unbelief, but was strong "in faith giving glory to God," (Rom. iv. 20, 21:) yet he seems to have had a struggle with unbelief, in which he came off victorious, through the following repeated assurances which the Lord gave him. The words may, however, be interpreted as a natural desire that Ishmael might have a blessing also, though the promised Seed was not to descend from him; to which desire also the Lord returned a gracious answer.

V. 19. I will establish, &c.] It was the purpose of God, that Christ should descend from Isaac and his son Jacob; in that family true religion was chiefly to be supported; to them Canaan the type of heaven was granted; and they were to represent the spiritual seed of Abraham. Yet Ishmael and others, after this limitation, being at that time a part of the visible church, were commanded to be circumcised.

V. 22. Left off talking, &c.] The whole narration gives us the idea of a personal conference, and leaves little room, in the attentive unprejudiced mind, to doubt, but that he, who here calls himself the Almighty God, was the same who afterwards in human nature said, "I and "the Father are One;" and, "he that hath seen me, "hath seen the Father."

V. 23. And, &c.] Here was immediate obedience in a painful appointment, against which many objections might have been urged, and which seemed even to counteract the accomplishment of the promise sealed by it: and this obedience was not peculiar to Abraham; but imitated by his household, who seem to have made no opposition; and we hope that many of them were partakers of his faith.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Although the Lord may from time to time vouchsafe to his servants peculiar manifestations of his presence and favour; yet their daily walk with him must be maintained by that faith, which sees Him who is invisible: and they, who thus walk with him in his ordinances and commandments, shall neither be destitute of daily support, nor of seasons of refreshment from his presence. With whatever long delays and great discouragements their faith may be tried; he who tries it, will strengthen it: and they who walk before him, trust in him, and wait for him, shall never be ashamed.—We are only required to look to our own temper and conduct; and to leave all in his hands, who is all-sufficient, and almighty; and who, for the purposes of his own glory, often delays to interpose till expectation from every other quarter falls.—God's gracious condescensions should excite our reverence, and not lead us to forget who He is, and what we are.—Not only the doctrines of revelation, but the very seals of the covenant, remind us that we are guilty and polluted, evince our need of atoning blood, point to the promised Saviour, and teach us to exercise faith in him; and prove that without regeneration, sanctification by his Spirit, and the mortification of our corrupt and carnal inclinations, we cannot bear a covenant-relation to him.—Let us then remember that the true circumcision is that of the heart by the Spirit: (Rom. ii. 28, 29.) that they are "the true circumcision, "who worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ "Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh:" (Phil. iii. 3.) and that, both under the old and the new dispensation, many have had the external profession, and the external seal, who were never "sealed by the holy Spirit "of promise." But true faith evidences itself by prompt unreserved obedience in the most difficult instances: and if our faith be of this stamp, we may be confident that God is our God, and our everlasting portion; that the everlasting covenant is confirmed to us, by the oath sworn and the security vouchsafed to Abraham; and that he, who has given us this new heart, hath also "given us a new "name, which no man knoweth, save he who receiveth it:" (Rev. ii. 17.) Whilst, therefore, we thankfully receive

AND the LORD appeared unto him in the plains of Mamre: and he sat in the tent-door in the heat of the day.

2 And he lifted up his eyes and looked, and lo, three men stood by him: and when he saw them, he ran to meet them from the tent-door, and bowed himself toward the ground,

3 And said, My Lord, if now I have found favour in thy sight, pass not away, I pray thee, from thy servant.

4 Let a little water, I pray you, be fetched, and wash your feet, and rest yourselves under the tree.

5 And I will fetch a morsel of bread, and comfort ye your hearts; after that you shall pass on; for therefore are ye come to your servant. And they said, So do as thou hast said.

6 And Abraham hastened into the tent unto Sarah, and said, Make ready quickly three measures of fine meal, knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth.

7 And Abraham ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf tender and good, and gave it unto a young man; and he hasted to dress it.

8 And he took butter and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them; and he stood by them under the tree, and they did eat.

9 And they said unto him, Where is Sarah thy wife? And he said, Behold, in the tent.

10 And He said, I will certainly return unto thee according to the time of life: and lo, Sarah thy wife shall have a son. And Sarah heard it in the tent-door, which was behind him.

11 Now Abraham and Sarah were old, and well stricken in age; and it ceased to be with Sarah after the manner of women.

12 Therefore Sarah laughed within herself, saying, After I am waxed old, shall I have pleasure, my lord being old also?

13 And the LORD said unto Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh, saying, Shall I of a surety bear a child, which am old?

14 Is any thing too hard for the LORD? At the time appointed will I return unto thee, according to the time of life, and Sarah shall have a son.

the pledges of his love, and make open profession of our faith, let us not forget to seek the same blessings for our children and servants, and all connected with us.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII.] V. 1. 2.] It is expressly said, that this was an appearance of Jehovah to Abraham: and the manner of it is afterwards related; by which it is probable, that there was more of familiarity, and less of visible glory and majesty, in it than in former appearances; especially in that with which he had been favoured just before. (xvii.) Abraham seems to have been waiting for an opportunity of exercising hospitality, by entertaining any weary traveller who might need refreshment and a cooling shade, (for inns were not then to be met with, as among us;) when three persons, appearing as men, presented themselves before him.

V. 3. My Lord, &c.] Abraham's speech was addressed to one of the three who appeared to have the pre-eminence, and whom we conclude to have been the Son of God. He seems to have been attended by two created angels in the form of men.

V. 4. Wash your feet.] This was customary and necessary in those hot climates, where they wore only sandals.

V. 8. And he stood, &c.] It does not appear whether Abraham as yet knew his guests; or whether his bowing (3.) was from civil respect, or an act of adoration.

V. 9. Where is Sarah, &c?] Thus the Lord gradually manifested who he was, and his attention to Abraham's concerns. Sarah was in the tent; just at hand, in her proper place, occupied about her domestic concerns.

V. 10—12.] By thus assuming divine authority; and by repeating that promise as his own, and engaging himself for its accomplishment, which in the foregoing chapter was spoken by the Almighty God, the speaker fully discovered who he was. The accomplishment of the promise had been delayed, until it had become, according to general observation, unprecedented; and would be deemed impossible: Sarah therefore laughed. And we perhaps might not have discerned a difference between her laughter and Abraham's: but he who searches the heart, saw the one to spring from unbelief, and the other from the joy of faith.

V. 13. The Lord said, &c.] Here the speaker is expressly called Jehovah.

15 Then Sarah denied, saying, I laughed not: for she was afraid. And he said, Nay, but thou didst laugh.

16 And the men rose up from thence, and looked toward Sodom: and Abraham went with them to bring them on the way.

17 And the LORD said, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do;

18 Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him?

19 For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the LORD, to do justice and judgment; that the LORD may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him.

20 And the LORD said, Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous;

21 I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, I will know.

22 And the men turned their faces from thence, and went toward Sodom: but Abraham stood yet before the LORD, 23 And Abraham drew near, and said, Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked?

24 Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city: wilt thou also destroy and not spare the place for the fifty righteous that are therein?

25 That be far from thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked: and that the righteous should be as the wicked, that be far from thee: Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?

26 And the LORD said, If I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the city, then I will spare all the place for their sakes.

27 And Abraham answered and said, Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the LORD, which am but dust and ashes.

28 Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous: wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? and He said, If I find there forty and five, I will not destroy it.

29 And he spake unto him yet again, and said, Peradventure there shall be forty found there. And He said, I will not do it for forty's sake.

30 And he said unto him, O let not the LORD be angry, and I will speak: Peradventure there shall thirty be found there. And He said, I will not do it, if I find thirty there.

31 And he said, Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the LORD: Peradventure there shall be twenty found there. And He said, I will not destroy it for twenty's sake.

V. 17. Shall I hide, &c.] The Lord would not conceal his intention of destroying these cities from Abraham, his servant and friend: for he was concerned in that event, both on account of Lot, and as having the inheritance of the adjacent countries covenanted to his posterity. He would also give him an opportunity to intercede for them; and shew him the reasons of his conduct, that he might afterwards approve of it, and glorify him on that account.

V. 19. He will command, &c.] The Lord knew that Abraham would continue to instruct, pray for, and set a good example to, his family, and use his authority to promote godliness among them; of which he had just given a remarkable instance in their circumcision: and that he would train up Isaac in the same pious manner: and the Lord would make use of these things, as the means of fulfilling his purposes of love to his posterity.

V. 21. Will go down now, &c.] This is spoken after the manner of men. The just Judge will not pronounce sentence upon mere rumour; but will bestow pains to ascertain the criminal's guilt, before he executes vengeance.

V. 22. The men, &c.] The two, whom we suppose to have been created angels, departed from Abraham at this time; and accordingly two entered Sodom at evening: whilst the one, who is called Jehovah, still continued with Abraham, who stood yet before the Lord; before the same person, with whom he had hitherto been communing: for no change is at all intimated.

V. 23—25.] Abraham here assumed it as an unquestionable truth, that the Judge of all the earth would do right, and upon that grounded his plea: but knowing how much the righteous Lord is inclined to mercy, he not only pleaded for preserving the righteous from the common destruction, but for sparing the rest for their sakes.

V. 26. Fifty righteous.] That is, really good people. (Note, vii. 1.)

V. 27. But dust and ashes.] A poor, mean, and dying, because sinful, man.

V. 32.

32 And he said, Oh, let not the LORD be angry, and I will speak yet but this once: Peradventure ten shall be found there. And He said, I will not destroy it for ten's sake.

33 And the LORD went his way, as soon as he had left communing with Abraham: and Abraham returned unto his place.

AND there came two angels to Sodom at even; and Lot sat in the gate of Sodom: and Lot seeing them, rose up to meet them; and he bowed himself with his face toward the ground;

2 And he said, Behold now, my lords, turn in, I pray you, into your servant's house, and tarry all night, and wash your feet, and ye shall arise up early, and go on your ways. And they said, Nay, but we will abide in the street all night.

3 And he pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in unto him, and entered into his house; and he made them a feast, and did bake unleavened bread, and they did eat.

4 But before they lay down, the men of the city, even the men of Sodom, compassed the house round, both old and young, all the people from every quarter.

5 And they called unto Lot, and said unto him, Where are the men which came in to thee this night? bring them out unto us, that we may know them.

6 And Lot went out at the door unto them, and shut the door after him.

7 And

V. 32. Peradventure ten, &c.] Probably Abraham now thought he had got within the limits of Lot's family; and that among his children and servants there were ten true believers: however, if there were not that small number in Sodom and its dependencies, he must allow the justice of the sentence.

V. 33. The Lord went, &c.] Surely this is calculated to convey to us the idea of a personal conference, and visible appearance! But "no man hath seen God at any time; the "only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, "he hath declared him." Thence we infer that this was an anticipation of the future incarnation of the Son of God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should "not be forgetful to entertain strangers; for "thereby some have entertained angels unawares;" nay, the Lord of angels himself; as indeed we always do, when for his sake we entertain one of the least of his brethren.—Chearful and ready liberality, and an obliging manner in shewing kindness, are great ornaments to true piety: and wealth, thus used, becomes indeed a blessing to the possessor, and to numbers.—Though our condescending Lord vouchsafes not to us his personal visits, yet still, by his word and Spirit, he stands at the door and knocks: when we are inclined to open, he deigns to enter; and by his gracious consolations provides a rich entertainment, "on which he sups with us, and we with him." (Note, Rev. iii. 20.)—Even the strongest believers need repeated confirmations of their faith, and in trying circumstances at some times stagger through unbelief (Heb. xi. 11.) One sin is a common introduction to another; and it is hardly to be expected that we should strictly adhere to truth ourselves, when we allow ourselves to question the divine veracity: but whom the Lord loves, he will rebuke, convict, silence and bring to repentance, if they sin against him.—The same action may be either good or bad, as it springs from opposite internal principles: and our discouragements would be much removed, and temptations prevented, did we more realize the Almighty power of God, as engaged to fulfill his largest promises.—"The secret of the Lord is "with them that fear him;" and whether he be pleased to discover to them what he does, and intends to do, or not; he will cause them to understand, and adore the justice and reasonableness of his dispensations, and shew them the glory of his works.—To use our authority in supporting religion in our families, is highly acceptable to God, and tends to bring down his blessing on our posterity; whilst the neglect of it cuts off the entail, as in the cases of Lot, and of Eli.—Although the effectual fervent prayer of righteous men availeth much, and God often grants all they ask; so that they cease to request more, before he begins to deny them: yet their prayers will not prevent the destruction of those who are hardened in impenitence, but will return into their own bosom. However, we need not fear that the Lord should be angry with those prayers, which are offered in genuine humility, faith, and love: he is well pleased with them, and will answer them, as far as it is for his glory, and our real good.

7 And ſaid, I pray you, brethren, do not ſo wickedly.

8 Behold now, I have two daughters which have not known man; let me, I pray you, bring them out unto you, and do ye to them as is good in your eyes: only unto theſe men do nothing: for therefore came they under the ſhadow of my roof.

9 And they ſaid, Stand back. And they ſaid again, This one fellow came in to ſojourn, and he will needs be a judge: now will we deal worſe with thee than with them. And they preſſed ſore upon the man, even Lot, and came near to break the door.

10 But the men put forth their hand, and pulled Lot into the houſe to them, and ſhut to the door.

11 And they ſmote the men that were at the door of the houſe with blindneſs, both ſmall and great: ſo that they wearied themſelves to find the door.

12 And the men ſaid unto Lot, Haſt thou here any beſides? ſon in law, and thy ſons, and thy daughters, and whatſoever thou haſt in the city, bring them out of this place.

13 For we will deſtroy this place, becauſe the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the LORD, and the LORD hath ſent us to deſtroy it.

14 And Lot went out, and ſpake unto his ſons in law, which married his daughters, and ſaid, Up, get ye out of this place; for the LORD will deſtroy this city: but he ſeemed as one that mocked unto his ſons in law.

15 And when the morning aroſe, then the angels haſtened Lot, ſaying, Ariſe, take thy wife, and thy two daughters which are here; leſt thou be conſumed in the iniquity of the city.

16 And while he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters; the LORD being merciful unto him: and they brought him forth, and ſet him without the city.

17 And it came to paſs, when they had brought them forth abroad, that he ſaid, Eſcape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither ſtay thou in all the plain; eſcape to the mountain, leſt thou be conſumed.

18 And Lot ſaid unto them, Oh not ſo, my Lord.

19 Behold now, thy ſervant hath found grace in thy ſight, and thou haſt magnified thy mercy, which thou haſt ſhewed unto me in ſaving my life: and I cannot eſcape to the mountain, leſt ſome evil take me, and I die.

no very pleaſing tidings concerning him. The Holy Spirit informs us that he was "a righteous man," and "was "vexed with the filthy converſation of the wicked" amongſt whom he lived, and that "day by day," and in his very ſoul: (2 Pet. ii. 7, 8;) and we may ſuppoſe that upon the whole his example was good, and his warnings ſalutary. But he wanted firmneſs, as we may eaſily perceive from this chapter; he was not fit for ſuch a ſituation, nor able to ſet his face like a flint againſt the wicked inhabitants of Sodom: he went thither from unworthy motives, and ſtaid there with unwarrantable pertinacity: and accordingly he ſeems to have done them no good, and to have got much harm himſelf, and his family ſtill more. Yet he waited for an opportunity of entertaining ſtrangers; ſetting a good example in the midſt of triumphant abominations; and in this he imitated Abraham.

V. 2, 3.] In order to evince the cordiality of Lot's invitations, the angels at firſt declined them; but he preſſed upon them greatly, being aware that inſults awaited them in the ſtreets.

V. 4, 5.] This ſimple narration conveys more forcibly into our minds an idea of the extreme and unparalleled wickedneſs of this city, than the moſt laboured deſcriptions and rhetorical declamations could have done; and is a moſt beautiful example of ſpeaking of practices, too ſhameful to be mentioned, in language which excites no other ſenſation but horror and indignation.

V. 8. Behold, &c.] Lot ſhewed a becoming ſenſe of the rights of hoſpitality, in his conduct on this trying occaſion; but his propoſal was very criminal. We muſt by no means do evil that good may come; or commit a leſs ſin to prevent others from committing a greater: but relying on the divine care we ſhould determine to endure the extremeſt hardſhips rather than ſin againſt God in any particular.

V. 11. Wearied, &c.] Probably the perſons, thus ſmitten with blindneſs, were not ſenſible of the real cauſe by which they were baffled. (2 Kings, iv. 18—20.)

V. 13. We will—the Lord hath ſent us, &c.] This is the language of ſervants obeying orders; and very different from that before employed. (xviii. 10. 24.)

V. 14. 15.] Probably the ſons in law, here mentioned, had married other daughters of Lot, who were dead, or who periſhed in the ruin of the city.

V. 17. Look, &c.] Lot was forbidden to look behind

20 Behold, now, this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one; Oh let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live.

21 And he said unto him, See, I have accepted thee concerning this thing also, that I will not overthrow this city, for the which thou hast spoken.

22 Haste thee, escape thither: for I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither. Therefore the name of the city was called Zoar.

23 The sun was risen upon the earth when Lot entered into Zoar.

24 Then the LORD rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the LORD out of heaven.

25 And he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground.

26 But his wife looked back from behind him, and she became a pillar of salt.

27 And Abraham gat up early in the morning, to the place where he stood before the LORD.

28 And he looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain, and beheld, and lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace.

29 And it came to pass, when God destroyed the cities of the plain, that God remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow, when he overthrew the cities in the which Lot dwelt.

30 And Lot went up out of Zoar, and dwelt in the mountain, and his two daughters with him; for he feared to dwell in Zoar, and he dwelt in a cave, he and his two daughters.

31 And the first-born said unto the younger, Our father is old, and there is not a man in the earth to come in unto us after the manner of all the earth.

32 Come, let us make our father drink wine, and we will lie with him, that we may preserve seed of our father.

him, or to appear reluctant to leave his whole substance, and that fertile plain which had before so greatly ensnared him.

V. 22. I cannot, &c.]—It is not clear whether the third person, who tarried with Abraham, had, or had not, now rejoined the other two; this indeed seems to be intimated by the singular number here used. The speaker, however, could not proceed to execute his commission, till Lot arrived at a place of safety.—The name Zoar signifies little. This city had been called Bela, and it was the only one of the five before mentioned, which was not consumed; (xiv. 2;) and being spared because it was little, it was afterwards called by that name.

V. 24, 25.] The language is here remarkable: "The "Lord rained from the Lord out of heaven;" and is supposed by many expositors to confirm the opinion, that He, who appeared and spake to Abraham as Jehovah, was at this time visibly present at Sodom, immediately commanding the fire and brimstone from heaven to destroy that city and the adjacent places. The judgment came, however, as a destruction from the Almighty God, and we need not enquire how he effected it. But the cities and all the inhabitants were totally destroyed; and the place where the cities stood, was converted into a great lake, called the Dead Sea; which exhibits an appearance, in many respects extraordinary, and dissimilar from other seas and lakes.

V. 26. Looked back, &c.] This unhappy woman, contrary to express command, probably in unbelief, and love to Sodom and its riches, regretting what was left behind, and purposing to return, looked back; and as some think, actually attempted to return: and our Lord's words—"Let "him not return back; remember Lot's wife," favour this supposition. (Luke xvii. 31, 32.) She was therefore instantaneously struck dead, and petrified, and thus remained to after-ages a visible monument of the divine displeasure; being punished as a warning to others through successive generations.

V. 27—29.] Abraham rose early to enquire after the success of his prayers, and probably to renew them: but the scene he witnessed rendered that unnecessary. Yet God remembered Abraham, and rescued Lot; more in answer to his prayers, than approving of Lot's behaviour.

V. 30. Out of, &c.] Lot retired from the place he had chosen for himself: perhaps he found it as wicked as Sodom; and that consideration, joined to the inundating of the neighbouring plain by the obstructed waters of Jordan, might excite apprehensions for his safety. He went, therefore, to reside in the mountain, whither he was at first commanded to flee. But what hindered his return to Abraham? Doubtless he would have received him, though stript of all, and a wretched outcast. We can scarcely help attributing his conduct to a certain stoutness of spirit, pride of heart, and fear of contempt, if he should appear so degraded among those, who had known him in more prosperous days. Whatever were his reasons, he seems to "have forsaken his own mercies."—Doubtless his herdmen, as well as his herds, perished in Sodom's overthrow. What a different opinion must this give us of the character of Lot's domestics, from that which we are led to form concerning those of Abraham!

V. 31—38.] Many conjectures have been formed of the 33 And they made their father drink wine that night: and the firſt-born went in, and lay with her father; and he perceived not when ſhe lay down, nor when ſhe aroſe.

34 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that the firſt-born ſaid unto the younger, Behold, I lay yeſternight with my father: let us make him drink wine this night alſo; and go thou in, and lie with him, that we may preſerve ſeed of our father.

35 And they made their father drink wine that night alſo: and the younger aroſe, and lay with him; and he perceived not when ſhe lay down, nor when ſhe aroſe.

36 Thus were both the daughters of Lot with child by their father.

37 And the firſt-born bare a ſon, and called his name Moab: the ſame is the father of the Moabites unto this day.

the motives, which induced Lot's daughters to this ſtrange conduct. But the truth ſeems to be, that they had learned no good in Sodom; and had been accuſtomed to hear and witneſs wickedneſs, till their judgments were perverted, their conſciences become unfeeling, and the ſenſe of ſhame blunted. No excuſe can be made either for them, or for Lot; or ſcarcely any account given of the affair, but this, that "the heart is deceitful above all things, "and deſperately wicked, who can know it?" After this we read no more either of Lot, or of his daughters. Peter's teſtimony ſatisfies us, that he lived to repent of his ſin, whilſt there is no proof that his daughters did. But he died under a dark cloud: all his ſubſtance, and part of his family, periſhed in Sodom: his wife in looking back loſt her life: and one would almoſt have wiſhed that his daughters had been taken away too, to have prevented his and their ſin and ſhame; for though he was not written childleſs, his poſterity were the monuments of his reproach. (xviii. 18, 19.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When angels entered Sodom they ſoon found out, and conſorted with, the only righteous man reſiding there. Thus they ſtill inviſibly encamp round them that fear the Lord: and thus we ought to ſeek out, and aſſociate with, the righteous in every place to which we go. Nor is it hard to diſtinguiſh them; for by their fruits we may know them, and by the hatred which the wicked bear them. Hoſpitality, prudently ſhewn for the Lord's ſake, will engage his protection and a gracious recompence.—But to what a pitch of wickedneſs do ſome ſinners arrive! and who does not allow the juſtice of God in the deſtruction of abandoned Sodom? Could our eyes at once behold all thoſe abominations, which the Lord every moment witneſſes in other cities and countries, we ſhould probably expect that they would ſhare Sodom's doom. And "except the Lord of Hoſts had left unto us a very ſmall "remnant, even we ſhould ere this have been like unto "Sodom and Gomorrah." The good Lord increaſe that remnant.—But when at the day of judgment God ſhall bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and manifeſt the counſels of all hearts; and when the wicked ſhall "ſuffer the vengeance of eternal fire:" (Jude 7:) then we ſhall ſee that the Lord hath not without cauſe denounced the dreadful ſentence; but ſhall wonder at his patience and long-ſuffering towards them.—Nothing marks ſinners more ripe for deſtruction, than when, being mad upon their luſts, they reſent the leaſt check, and will bear no controul; for "he, that being often reproved hardeneth "his neck, ſhall ſuddenly be deſtroyed, and that with-"out remedy."—They, who treat the friendly warnings of God's ſervants and miniſters as idle tales and groundleſs fears, will be awefully convinced of their miſtake by the event.—"But the ſalvation of the righteous is of the "Lord:" being merciful to them, he warns them, and ſuffers them not to neglect the warning, neither leaves them to the effect of their procraſtinating folly; but by the mixed influence of hopes and fears, he diſpoſes them to leave all for the ſalvation of their ſouls, and even condeſcends to pity, and accommodate himſelf to, their infirmities.—Let us, however, at the ſame time remark his aweful ſeverity on apoſtates: let us remember Lot's wife, and not allow one hankering wiſh after forbidden or forſaken objects; and let us be much afraid, leſt, "after "having eſcaped the corruption which is in the world, "through the knowledge of Chriſt, we ſhould be again "entangled and overcome thereby." For though the Lord will not forſake his people, the ſeverity of his multiplied chaſtiſements may well fill our ſouls with holy awe: and if he purſue his children with the rod even unto the grave, what will be the dreadful doom of his enemies?—It is grievous to obſerve, that chaſtiſement ſeems in ſome caſes to loſe its effect; that for a time they who are corrected ſin more and more; and that thoſe who have eſcaped contamination amongſt bad examples, are overcome in ſolitude, and remain unimpreſſed by the aweful judgments which they have witneſſed. Theſe may expect to ſuffer more and more, and to die in uncertainty and diſhonour: and it is an evident fact, that the children do ſuffer for their parents' ſin. Let us then watch and pray that we enter not into temptation; and eſpecially guard againſt covetouſneſs and drunkenneſs, which are inlets to all other crimes.

AND Abraham journeyed from thence toward the ſouth-country, and dwelled between Kadeſh and Shur, and ſojourned in Gerar.

2 And Abraham ſaid of Sarah his wife, She is my ſiſter. And Abimelech king of Gerar ſent, and took Sarah.

3 But God came to Abimelech in a dream by night, and ſaid to him, Behold, thou art but a dead man, for the woman which thou haſt taken: for ſhe is a man's wife.

4 But Abimelech had not come near her: and he ſaid, LORD, wilt thou ſlay alſo a righteous nation?

5 Said he not unto me, She is my ſiſter? and ſhe, even ſhe herſelf, ſaid, He is my brother: in the integrity of my heart, and innocency of my hands, have I done this.

6 And God ſaid unto him in a dream, Yea, I know that thou didſt this in the integrity of thy heart; for I alſo withheld thee from ſinning againſt me: therefore ſuffered I thee not to touch her.

7 Now therefore reſtore the man his wife; for he is a prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt live: and if thou reſtore her not, know thou that thou ſhalt ſurely die, thou, and all that are thine.

8 Therefore Abimelech roſe early in the morning, and called all his ſervants, and told all theſe things in their ears: and the men were ſore afraid.

9 Then Abimelech called Abraham, and ſaid unto him, What haſt thou done unto us? and what have I offended thee that thou haſt brought on me, and on my kingdom a great ſin? thou haſt done deeds unto me that ought not to be done.

10 And Abimelech ſaid unto Abraham, What ſaweſt thou, that thou haſt done this thing?

11 And Abraham ſaid, Becauſe I thought, Surely the fear of God is not in this place; and they will ſlay me for my wife's ſake.

12 And yet indeed ſhe is my ſiſter; ſhe is the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother: and ſhe became my wife.

13 And it came to paſs, when God cauſed me to wander from my father's houſe, that I ſaid unto her, This is thy kindneſs which thou ſhalt ſhew unto me; at every place whither we ſhall come, ſay of me, He is my brother.

14 And Abimelech took ſheep and oxen, and men-ſervants, and women-ſervants, and gave them unto Abraham, and reſtored him Sarah his wife.

15 And

CHAP. XX.] V. 1—3.] Gerar was afterwards inhabited by the Philiſtines. Abimelech took Sarah probably with intent to eſpouſe her, though he had already one wife, or more. (17.) It ſeems ſhe ſtill retained her beauty; which appears ſtrange to us, now the life of man has been for ſo many ages confined within ſuch narrow limits: but it might not be ſo remarkable at that time. Probably Sarah was now pregnant, though not diſcernibly; which would increaſe both her anxiety, and that of Abraham; as it was alſo an aggravation of their ſin.—The method of becoming acquainted with the will of God by dreams was common, before revelation by the written word was afforded and completed: (Job iv. 12—21. xxxiii. 15:) but every impreſſion of that kind, and indeed all other ſuppoſed information of the divine will, muſt now be tried by the infallible and perfect ſtandard of the holy Scriptures; and no further regarded than they are agreeable to them and warranted by them.—Abimelech was threatened with certain and ſudden death, unleſs he reſtored Sarah.

V. 4. Wilt thou, &c.] In this queſtion Abimelech referred to the late deſtruction of Sodom, which doubtleſs produced much conſternation and ſome reformation in the neighbouring places. Probably he and his people were not only free from Sodom's abominations, but had ſome remains of true religion amongſt them.

V. 7. Prophet, &c.] That is, 'One peculiarly favoured with communion with God, and communications from him, for his own benefit and that of others.'

V. 16

15 And Abimelech said, Behold, my land is before thee: dwell where it pleaseth thee.

16 And unto Sarah he said, Behold, I have given thy brother a thousand pieces of silver: behold, he is to thee a covering of the eyes, unto all that are with thee, and with all other: thus she was reproved.

17 So Abraham prayed unto God: and God healed Abimelech and his wife, and his maid-servants; and they bare children.

18 For the LORD had fast closed up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech, because of Sarah, Abraham's wife.

AND the LORD visited Sarah as he had said; and the LORD did unto Sarah as he had spoken.

2 For Sarah conceived, and bare Abraham a son in his old age, at the set time of which God had spoken to him.

3 And Abraham called the name of his son that was born unto him, whom Sarah bare to him, Isaac.

4 And Abraham circumcised his son Isaac, being

V. 16. Thy brother, &c.] 'He, whom thou hast sinfully called thy brother, is thy husband: and thou shouldest have avowed the relation, and appeared with a vail, or other distinguishing tokens of the married state; that others might have been kept from looking upon thee, and from being tempted to covet another man's wife.'

V. 17, 18.] God had inflicted these disorders on Abimelech and his family, to restrain him from defiling Sarah, to warn him to restore her, to put an honour upon Abraham and upon prayer, and thus to promote the knowledge of himself and the glory of his name.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

With much concern we here notice even the father of the faithful manifesting distrust of God and undue solicitude about life, equivocating with intent to deceive, relapsing into his former sin, drawing in Sarah to share his guilt, exposing her honour and chastity, and even endangering a question about the legitimacy of his promised Isaac; throwing temptation into Abimelech's way; occasioning affliction to him and his family; exposing himself and Sarah to just rebukes, and yet vainly attempting an excuse, which at least did not at all mend the matter. Shall we commend, or imitate Abraham in these things? by no means. They are written for our warning, that, "whilst "we think we stand, we may take heed lest we fall." Even Abraham hath not whereof to glory; for he cannot be justified by his works, but must be indebted for justification to "that righteousness of God which is upon all, and unto "all them that believe."—We must not then condemn all as hypocrites who relapse into sin, even with aggravation, if they do not continue in it; nor need we ourselves despair, if we are humbly conscious of having done so. But let the unhumbled and impenitent take heed to themselves; for their case is unspeakably perilous; and let all men dread the thoughts of "sinning on that grace may abound." On the other hand though we cannot but blame some things in Abimelech, and observe that indulgence gives force to all our passions, and where men transcend the rule of God's word they will never know where to stop: yet we must commend and should imitate him, in the calmness and mildness of his reproof, his ready return of good for evil, and the salutary counsel which he gave to Sarah: and we are pleased to find that he mentions adultery as an horrible crime, and being led into a sin as a great injury; and so seriously expostulates with Abraham about his misconduct in that respect.—Though we are all sinners, and cannot be justified before God according to his holy law; yet, in particular instances, we may be so conscious of integrity, as with propriety to appeal to God himself respecting it, and he will allow our plea: it is however, difficult, under divine rebukes, to vindicate ourselves without seeming to reflect upon his righteousness. —We often disquiet ourselves, and even are led into temptation and sin, by groundless suspicions, and find the fear of God where we least expected it.—Combinations to deceive generally issue in shame and sorrow: and restraints from sin, though by suffering, should thankfully be acknowledged. But though the Lord rebuke, yet he will pardon and deliver, his people, and for his own glory put honour upon them and their prayers. He will give them favour in the sight of those with whom they sojourn; and over-rule even their very infirmities, when they are humbled for them, for good to themselves and others.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI.] V. 1. Visited, &c.] This word is used to denote the visible effects of God's presence and power, either in mercy or in judgment: here it signifies his gracious attention to Sarah, and his faithful accomplishment of his promise; when in the natural course of things her conception could never have been expected.

V. 3. Isaac, &c.] Isaac signifies laughter: this name was given him in obedience to God's command, in being eight days old, as God had commanded him.

5 And Abraham was an hundred years old, when his ſon Iſaac was born unto him.

6 And Sarah ſaid, God hath made me to laugh, ſo that all that hear will laugh with me.

7 And ſhe ſaid, Who would have ſaid unto Abraham, that Sarah ſhould have given children ſuck? for I have borne him a ſon in his old age.

8 And the child grew, and was weaned: and Abraham made a great feaſt the ſame day that Iſaac was weaned.

9 And Sarah ſaw the ſon of Hagar, the Egyptian, which ſhe had borne unto Abraham, mocking.

10 Wherefore ſhe ſaid unto Abraham, Caſt out this bond-woman, and her ſon: for the ſon of this bond-woman ſhall not be heir with my ſon, even with Iſaac.

11 And the thing was very grievous in Abraham's ſight, becauſe of his ſon.

12 And God ſaid unto Abraham, Let it not be grievous in thy ſight, becauſe of the lad, and becauſe of thy bond-woman; in all that Sarah hath ſaid unto thee, hearken unto her voice: for in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called.

13 And alſo of the ſon of the bond-woman will I make a nation, becauſe he is thy ſeed.

14 And Abraham roſe up early in the morning, and took bread, and a bottle of water, and gave it unto Hagar, (putting it on her ſhoulder,) and the child, and ſent her away: and ſhe departed and wandered in the wilderneſs of Beer-ſheba.

15 And the water was ſpent in the bottle, and ſhe caſt the child under one of the ſhrubs.

16 And ſhe went, and ſat her down over againſt him, a good way off, as it were a bow-ſhot: for ſhe ſaid, Let me not ſee the death of the child. And ſhe ſat over againſt him, and lifted up her voice and wept.

17 And God heard the voice of the lad: and the Angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and ſaid unto her, What aileth thee, Hagar? Fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is.

18 Ariſe, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand: for I will make him a great nation.

remembrance of Abraham's believing and Sarah's unbelieving, laughter, and as an expreſſion of joy and gratitude.

V. 9. Sarah ſaw, &c.] Iſhmael was at this time fifteen or ſixteen years of age. It appears that his mocking was in deriſion of Iſaac, as the child of promiſe; and a ſpecies of perſecution; being done in profane contempt of the covenant and promiſe, in oppoſition to the purpoſe of God, and with ſome indications of malice againſt Isaac.

V. 10. Caſt out, &c.] Sarah ſeems to have been actuated in ſome meaſure by diſdain and reſentment in requiring Abraham to ſend away Hagar and Iſhmael: yet ſhe was ſecretly led to utter words, which imply a great myſtery, and which were afterwards to be made uſe of to illuſtrate an important part of divine truth. (Gal. iv. 22—31.)

V. 11. Becauſe, &c.] Abraham was grieved that Iſhmael ſhould ſo miſbehave, and that Sarah ſhould require ſo ſevere a puniſhment; and he might alſo be perplexed in his thoughts, about the manner in which he could reconcile the duty he owed to his ſon with his affection to his wife.

V. 12. For in Iſaac, &c.] From Iſaac the Meſſiah would deſcend, in his line true religion would be maintained, and his poſterity typified the ſpiritual ſeed the believing children of Abraham.

V. 14—19.] Bread and water denote neceſſaries for the journey, probably into Egypt to Hagar's relations. Iſhmael was about ſixteen years of age: yet the proviſions were put upon Hagar's ſhoulder, as more inured to labour, and the lad was committed to her care. She wandered, or loſt her way, which accounts for their diſtreſs; yet it does not appear that the proviſions were conſumed, or that Abraham ſent them away without money; but the water was ſpent, which it would ſoon be. Thus by wandering about in that hot climate, Iſhmael was overcome with fatigue and thirſt, and ready to die; and Hagar aſſiſted him in reaching the ſhade of ſome ſhrubs, and lying down in the beſt manner of which his circumſtances would admit. This is all that the language implies, though our tranſlation leads many perſons to form a different idea of the tranſaction. In this emergency, the Lord heard the voice of Iſhmael's groaning, perhaps of his prayer, and he addreſſed Hagar, ſaying, "What aileth thee, Hagar? Fear "not." Intimating that the promiſe, which was made to her before, (xvi. 10—13,) was a full ſecurity that Iſhmael ſhould not die at this time, and that therefore her anguiſh was needleſs, and her fear groundleſs. She ought rather to do all ſhe could for him, by ſupporting him in his fainting: at the ſame time the Lord directed her attention to a relief, which was near at hand, but not before obſerved by her.

19 And God opened her eyes and ſhe ſaw a well of water: and ſhe went, and filled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink.

20 And God was with the lad, and he grew, and dwelt in the wilderneſs, and became an archer.

21 And he dwelt in the wilderneſs of Paran: and his mother took him a wife out of the land of Egypt.

22 And it came to paſs at that time, that Abimelech and Phichol the chief captain of his hoſt ſpake unto Abraham, ſaying, God is with thee in all that thou doeſt.

23 Now therefore ſwear unto me here by God, that thou wilt not deal falſely with me, nor with my ſon, nor with my ſon's ſon; but according to the kindneſs that I have done unto thee, thou ſhalt do unto me, and to the land wherein thou haſt ſojourned.

24 And Abraham ſaid, I will ſwear.

25 And Abraham reproved Abimelech becauſe of a well of water which Abimelech's ſervants had violently taken away.

26 And Abimelech ſaid, I wot not who hath done this thing: neither didſt thou tell me, neither yet heard I of it but today.

27 And Abraham took ſheep, and oxen, and gave them unto Abimelech: and both of them made a covenant.

28 And Abraham ſet ſeven ewe-lambs of the flock by themſelves.

29 And Abimelech ſaid unto Abraham, What mean theſe ſeven ewe-lambs which thou haſt ſet by themſelves?

30 And he ſaid, For theſe ſeven ewe-lambs ſhalt thou take of my hand, that they may be a witneſs unto me, that I have digged this well.

31 Wherefore he called that place Beerſheba: becauſe there they ſwear both them.

32 Thus they made a covenant at Beerſheba: then Abimelech roſe up and Phichol the chief captain of his hoſt, and they returned into the land of the Philiſtines.

33 And Abraham planted a grove in Beer-ſheba, and called there on the name of the LORD, the everlaſting God.

34 And Abraham ſojourned in the Philiſtines' land many days.

CHAP.

V. 20. God was, &c.] God proſpered Iſhmael in his providence: nor can we poſitively conclude, either from his miſbehaviour, general character, or the typical meaning of his expulſion from Abraham's family, that he lived and died deſtitute of the ſpecial grace and favour of God. He became, however, an archer, and thus in his perſon the prophecy concerning him began to be accompliſhed, as it hath been ever ſince in his poſterity. (xvi. 12.)

V. 22, 23.] Abimelech was convinced that the promiſes of God would be fulfilled to Abraham; he was therefore deſirous of ſecuring his friendſhip, and the benefit of it, to himſelf and to his poſterity: we may alſo hope, that this was the effect of faith in Abimelech. (1 Sam. xx. 12—17.)

V. 25. A well, &c.] Wells of water, being ſcarce, were conſequently very valuable in thoſe countries.

V. 31. Beer-ſheba.] The well of the oath.

V. 33. Planted, &c.] Perhaps Abraham planted this grove to ſhelter his tent; and to form a ſhade for the performance of ſacred worſhip, which was at that time uſually performed in the open air.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Bleſſed are they whoſe hope is in the Lord, and who patiently wait for him. Their expectations ſhall certainly be anſwered, and even exceeded. Though the delay may ſeem long, and the exerciſe of their faith and patience ſharp; yet they ſhall know and acknowledge, that their bleſſings were only delayed, that they might have them with additional comfort, by perceiving more plainly the Lord's power, love, and faithfulneſs in them, and that he might have all the glory. Though the Lord does not relieve and comfort when we ſhould chooſe it; yet he will always obſerve his own ſet time, which is the beſt that infinite wiſdom can ſelect: and they, who uprightly ſerve him, ſhall never be aſhamed of any thing, but of their mixtures of unbelief, and of the ſcantineſs of their expectation, which ſhame ſhall be ſwallowed up in their thankful joy for the largeneſs of his performances.—If he keep his ſet time in giving bleſſings; we muſt obſerve the appointed ſeaſon for performing his commandments, and not ſuffer any conſideration to influence us to omit, or defer our obedience.—But grievous things ſpeedily follow joyous events in this world, and the effect of former miſcarriages often interrupts the ſatisfaction of preſent proſperity. Even children are more certain cares than comforts: their ill behaviour and contentions, and the fear or pain of parting with them, much alloy the pleaſure which we might otherwiſe take in them. But in all our anxieties we ſhould obſerve the directions, obey the commandments, and depend on the promiſes and providence of God: and thus caſting our care upon upon him, our minds will be kept in peace; and he will take care of thoſe whom we love, when we are no longer able to do it.—Let us not, however, neglect to notice the ſecret working of the Lord in this domeſtic tranſaction; nor overlook the inſtruction given us, not to reſt in external privileges, or in our own performances, leſt we be outcaſts with Iſhmael; but to ſeek the bleſſings of the new covenant by faith in its divine Surety, and that grace and ſpirit of adoption, which mark the children and heirs of God, and enable them to walk at liberty in his commandments, and chearfully to expect the fulfilment of his promiſes. Let us further recollect, that all our deſpondencies and complaints ariſe from forgetfulneſs of God's word; that relief is often nearer than we perceive; and that the Lord always hears the prayer of faith, and frequently the very cry of diſtreſs.—It is our wiſdom to connect ourſelves with thoſe who are bleſſed of God; and becoming to make requitals of kindneſs, and aſſurances of our good intentions, to thoſe who have been kind to us.—Punctuality in agreements guards againſt contention: mild reproof of the perſon himſelf, where we ſuppoſe that we have been injured, is more becoming, than to ſpeak of his miſconduct to others: and wherever we ſojourn, we muſt neither neglect, nor be aſhamed of the worſhip of Jehovah, the everlaſting God.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII.] V. 1 God did tempt, &c.] The Lord put Abraham's faith and obedience to the trial, and this neceſſarily involved a temptation to unbelief and diſobedience. As he ſtood the trial, it proved an occaſion of manifeſting the ſtrength of his faith, and the greatneſs of his grace; but had he refuſed obedience, it would have diſcovered the force and prevalence of in-dwelling ſin. In the Engliſh language the word trial is generally uſed in a good, and the word temptation in a bad ſenſe: but the ſame diſtinction is not found in the original languages. How then, it will be ſaid is this paſſage reconcilable with the aſſertion of the apoſtle, "that God cannot be tempted "of evil, neither tempteth he any man?" (James i. 12—14.) In anſwer to this, it may be proper to ſtate a few things reſpecting trials and temptations:—All theſe have reference to the prevailing diſpoſition of the heart; —to the concurring influence of foreign agency;—and to the external circumſtances in which a man is placed. If the prevailing diſpoſition of the heart be ſinful, God is not the author of it, nor of the temptation which ariſes from it. "Let no man ſay I am tempted of God: for "every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his "own luſt, and enticed." Satan exerts his influence on the ſinful inclinations of the heart, probably through the imagination; and by the ſcenes which he there preſents, he ſtirs up and gives force to ſinful paſſions. This muſt in no wiſe be aſcribed to God: as he did not originally implant evil propenſities, ſo he never operates upon the mind directly, to excite or increaſe them.—But the peculiar circumſtances in which his providence places us, as well as the ſervices to which he calls us, frequently give occaſion both to our ſinful diſpoſitions to diſcover themſelves, and to Satan to work upon them; though they have no tendency in themſelves to produce ſin, and are all appointed in perfect wiſdom and holineſs. Had the young man who applied to Chriſt, (Matt. xix. 16—22,) been as much under the influence of holy diſpoſitions, as Abraham was, the command given him would have excited him to perform a moſt exalted act of obedience, and to ſhow the greatneſs of his faith and love: had Abraham, when tried, been as much under the power of unbelief and worldly attachments, as that young man was, he would have been overcome by the temptation, and have diſobeyed. If ſenſual luſt had been as habitually ſubjugated in David, as it was in Joſeph; and eſpecially had the fear and love of God, and the ſenſe of his preſence been, in the hour of trial, as ſtrong in the one as it was in the other; the ſight of Bathſheba would not have occaſioned adultery, but have induced him to exerciſe ſelf-denial: and had Joſeph been in as careleſs and ſenſual a frame of mind, as David at that time was, he would certainly have yielded to the temptation. This holds good in all caſes: the prevalence of ſin makes even the holy law of God an occaſion of exciting all manner of concupiſcence; and the very Goſpel of evidencing ſtill deeper malignity. But the prevalence of holineſs in the heart turns the moſt horrid temptations into occaſions of ſhewing the ſtrength of our faith and love to God. Now we ought not

5 And Abraham ſaid unto his young men, Abide ye here with the aſs; and I and the lad will go yonder and worſhip, and come again to you.

6 And Abraham took the wood of the burnt-offering, and laid it upon Iſaac his ſon; and he took the fire in his hand, and a knife: and they went both of them together.

7 And Iſaac ſpake unto Abraham his father, and ſaid, My father: and he ſaid, Here am I, my ſon. And he ſaid, Behold the fire and the wood: but where is the lamb for a burnt offering?

8 And Abraham ſaid, My ſon, God will provide himſelf a lamb for a burnt-offering: ſo they went both of them together.

9 And they came to the place which God had told him of; and Abraham built an altar not to be of an unholy diſpoſition; and God originally made no creature unholy, but all very good: the trials, therefore, which his providence or precepts make of us, are in themſelves occaſions of ſhewing our obedience; and only become temptations to ſin, through our evil diſpoſitions, and through ſatanical influence. But as in fallen man the diſpoſition to holineſs is firſt implanted, and afterwards maintained and increaſed, by the Holy Spirit; the bleſſed effects of it are to be wholly aſcribed to his grace, from whom every good gift comes, and from whom nothing elſe can proceed. (James i. 13—18.) When, therefore, we are told that "God tempteth no man;" it means that he is not the author of ſin, either in the principle, exerciſes, or effect. When we pray, "not to be led into "temptation," we deſire that we may not be placed in ſuch circumſtances as would give Satan an advantage over us, through the depravity of our nature, or the weakneſs of our grace; and that the Lord would reſtrain Satan, mortify corruption, and increaſe his grace in our hearts: and when God is ſaid to tempt us, it means, that he puts our faith and love to the trial, for our comfort and benefit, and for his glory, if we ſtand the trial; but if we fail, the blame and ſhame are our own.

V. 2. Take now, &c.] Every word in this ſurpriſing command ſeems marked with emphaſis of terror, when we conſider it as directed to a tender parent: Thy ſon—thine only ſon—even Iſaac—whom thou loveſt.—Go into the land of Moriah—then, after that long journey, offer him there for a burnt-offering, ſhed his blood, and burn his body to aſhes. How many objections might Abraham have ſtarted to this command? He might have urged the divine prohibition of murder; and the evil report ſuch an action would bring upon his character, the religion which he profeſſed, and the God whom he worſhipped: he might have pleaded the fatal conſequences of ſuch an example; and even the very promiſes and covenant of God ratified again and again with him. But, aſſured that it was a divine command, he reſolved the whole into the infinite wiſdom, juſtice, holineſs, faithfulneſs, goodneſs, and power of God: and neither heſitated nor objected. Nay, the very energy of the command, compared with paſt mercies received, and the promiſes made to him ſuggeſted a reſolution; and it ſeems Abraham expected that God would from the aſhes immediately reſtore his ſon to life, though there had never been an inſtance of a dead perſon raiſed again from the beginning of the world. (Heb. xi. 19.)—The temple was built on mount Moriah, which was doubtleſs in the land of Moriah, (2 Chron. iii. 1.) This therefore muſt have been ſome adjacent mountain: and there is no improbability in the general opinion, that it was mount Calvary, where Chriſt the great Anti-type was afterwards crucified, and that it was ſelected with reference to that event; though Calvary was at ſome diſtance from the temple.

V. 3, 4.] Abraham ſeems not to have felt that anguiſh or anxiety, which might have been expected from the nature of the command that had been given him: ſo that neither Sarah, nor his attendents, nor even Iſaac, appear to have perceived any thing unuſual in the manner with which he ſet about it. He did not inform Sarah, leſt her feebler faith and more tender frame might not ſupport ſo ſevere a ſhock: or leſt ſhe ſhould ſtart ſome objection, or make oppoſition to the heavenly mandate. Until the third day Abraham's faith was in the fiery trial, that his obedience might not appear the reſult of raſh precipitation, but of calm deliberation; and then he ſaw the place, marked out by ſome ſuch appearance of glory, as he had been accuſtomed to behold in token of the divine preſence.

V. 5. Abide, &c.] The ſervants were left behind, that there might be no diſturbance given by their affectionate, but ill-timed, interpoſition: and when it was ſaid, we will come again to you, (in the plural number,) it indicated an expectation that, notwithſtanding the intended ſacrifice, Iſaac, being raiſed from the dead, would return with his father.

V. 6. Laid it, &c.] By this it appears that Iſaac was grown up. In this he typified Chriſt bearing his croſs.

V. 7, 8.] Iſaac's queſtion, ſo full of conſideration and filial reſpect, muſt have tended to put Abraham's reſolution to the ſharper trial: but he deemed it not proper as yet to diſcloſe the ſolemn buſineſs; and the Holy Spirit by his mouth ſeems to have predicted the Lamb of God, which he hath provided, and "which taketh away the "ſin of the world."

V. 9. Bound his ſon, &c.] Probably Abraham previouſly explained to Iſaac the nature and obligations of the divine command, the principle of his obedience, and the expectation of his faith in reſpect of the event: to this Iſaac yielded ſubmiſſion and concurrence, for certainly he attempted no eſcape or reſiſtence; but like Him whom he typified, he yielded up himſelf voluntarily to be a ſacrifice. When he lay bound upon the altar, he typified Chriſt, as bound by the officers of the high prieſt, and as nailed to the croſs.

altar there, and laid the wood in order; and bound Isaac his son, and laid him on the altar upon the wood.

10 And Abraham stretched forth his hand, and took the knife to slay his son.

11 And the Angel of the LORD called unto him out of heaven, and said, Abraham, Abraham: and he said, Here am I.

12 And he said, Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou any thing unto him: for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me.

13 And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold, behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his horns: and Abraham went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt-offering in the stead of his son.

14 And Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah-jireh: as it is said to this day, In the mount of the LORD it shall be seen.

15 And the Angel of the LORD called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time.

16 And said, By myself have I sworn, saith the LORD, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son:

17 That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies;

18 And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice.

V. 10. Took the knife, &c.] With firmness and calm determination, as if it had been an ordinary sacrifice.

V. 11. Called, &c.] Abraham was allowed to proceed thus far, that his obedience might be complete: at this crisis he was stopped, for it was not God's intention that Isaac should actually be sacrificed. In this transaction it was intimated that nobler blood than that of animals, even the blood of the only begotten Son of God, was in due time to be shed for sin: but in the mean while, that the Lord would in no case have human sacrifices used, as typical of it; although it is evident that he has a right to remand the life which he gave, in what manner he pleases.

V. 12. I know, &c.] The Lord knew the reality and vigour of Abraham's piety previously to this trial; but he saw good to require experimental evidence of it, for the glory of his own grace, for Abraham's comfort, and for the benefit of his whole church.—The fear of God is frequently put for the whole of true religion, being an essential part of it, and necessarily connected with all the rest. It seems to comprise a reverential regard to the divine majesty, authority, presence, and purity; an influential dread of God's displeasure, accompanied with a desire and hope of his favour; (otherwise it would drive us from him, inspire hard thoughts, excite enmity, and discourage all endeavours to please him;) (Matt. xxv. 24, 25;) a submissive acquiescence in his appointments, a conscientious obedience to his commandments, and a serious devoted attendence on his worship, in his holy ordinances: nor can it be ever separated from a real belief of his truth, and a cordial acceptance of his salvation, as far as we are acquainted with them; or from love, gratitude, and other holy affections. In proportion as faith and hope deliver the soul from terror, humble admiring reverence of God will be increased: and when perfect love shall have cast out, entirely and finally, that fear which hath torment; the filial reverential regard to God, as our adorable Friend and Father, will be enlarged and perfected for ever, even as it is in the holy angels.

V. 13. A ram, &c.] The ram now became the type of the sacrifice of Christ's death, and indicated what sort of prefigurations of that event God would approve and accept. Isaac thus rescued, after having been three days under the sentence of death, and living to be the progenitor of the promised innumerable posterity, represented the Saviour rising on the third day, "to see his seed, and "prolong his days, that the pleasure of the Lord might "prosper in his hand." (Isai. liii. 10.)

V. 14. Name, &c.] Jehovah-jireh signifies the Lord will see or provide, alluding to the expression before used, "God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt-offering." The latter clause should certainly be translated, In the mount the Lord will appear; that is just in the crisis, as he did upon the mount to Abraham. This name became a proverbial expression, similar to that in our language, 'Man's extremity is God's opportunity.'

V. 16—18.] "Because he could swear by no greater, the "Lord sware by himself;" thus he solemnly pledged the honour of his whole name, and of all his perfections, as the security for the fulfilment of his engagements to Abraham. The promise he had before given was formed into a covenant; that covenant was signed, sealed, and ratified; and now it was solemnly confirmed with an oath: (xii, xv, xvii). This was intended, not only that Abraham, but that WE, "might have a strong consolation who have fled "for refuge, to lay hold on the hope set before us" in Christ. (Heb. vi. 13—20.) And can any doubt remain about the identity of the covenant, which was made with Abraham, with that which is made with other true believers?—Abraham's obedience evidenced the strength of his faith, and the sincerity of his love: thus "faith

"wrought with his works, and by works was his faith "made perfect." (James ii. 21—23.) As a ſinner he was juſtified before God by faith alone; as a profeſſed believer he was juſtified before the whole world, by the works which his faith produced.

V. 20—24.] This is introduced here as prefatory to the account, which we ſhall ſhortly notice of Iſaac's marriage with Rebekah.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilſt we remain in this world, we muſt never expect to be exempt from trials, and frequently the ſharpeſt come laſt: we ſhould therefore put on, and keep on, the whole armour of God, that ſtanding prepared and watching, when ſummoned to the conflict, we may anſwer, "Here I am." —Where God beſtows much grace, he will be ſure greatly to try it; and though the conflict be painful at the preſent, yet the event ſhall be glorious and joyful. Conſcious of our weakneſs, we ought not to ruſh uncalled into difficult ſervices, and ſhould pray not to be led into temptations: yet if we be upright and watchful, we may be confident that the Lord will not ſuffer us to be tempted above what we are able; nay, we may count it all joy, when we fall into divers temptations; firmly believing that "the trial "of our faith ſhall be to praiſe, and honour, and glory, "at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt."—If there be any earthly object which ſeems to rival God in our affections, we may expect that he will in that particular try the ſincerity and ſupremacy of our love; and by chearfully parting with even our beloved Iſaacs for the Lord's ſake, we moſt undeniably prove that we have given him our hearts. —They, who would perform unreſerved obedience, (when they are ſatisfied what the will of God is,) muſt neither be influenced by carnal affections, liſten to plauſible objections, conſult partial counſellors, make needleſs delays, nor leave an opening to interruption and diſturbance; but committing all into the Lord's hand, muſt ſimply follow his direction, and leave all conſequences with him: and they need not doubt, but in the trying moment he will appear for their comfort or relief.—What a wonderful ſight is this, which we now behold! the long-expected ſeed, the ſon of joy, the child of promiſe, the well-beloved, the only beloved Iſaac, now grown up to maturity, and entwining every day more cloſely round the tender affections of his parents; of which he was juſtly deſerving; nay, the church's hope, and the declared progenitor of him "in whom all the families of the earth are bleſſed;" laid upon the altar, bound and mildly expecting the fatal blow from the hand of his moſt loving father; who, with collected firmneſs and intrepid reſolution, takes the knife to ſhed his blood; prepared immediately to kindle that fire which was to conſume him to aſhes!—For this ſingular conduct, Abraham could render no reaſon, but God's expreſs command: nor was there any other principle of of his obedience to that extraordinary command, (an obedience never equalled by mere man,) but faith, an unſhaken belief of the Lord's teſtimony, and a firm expectation of the accompliſhment of his promiſes; with a full confidence in his wiſdom, power, and love to perform them. Though the command ſeemed to run counter to thoſe promiſes, he knew it only ſeemed to do ſo: obedience was his part, the Lord would take care of the honour of his own faithfulneſs. He had received Iſaac from God, who had a right to diſpoſe of him: honour and comfort were in this path, and, though untried before, with undaunted confidence he walked in it.—Hear this, ye inattentive objectors, who traduce the doctrine of ſalvation by faith as inimical to practical godlineſs; go, and upon your principles equal and exceed this obedience of faith: till then be dumb, or allow, that though you underſtand it not, this apparently weak principle produces effects beyond compariſon prodigious. But hear this likewiſe, ye abuſers of this moſt holy faith, whoſe conduct merits ſtill deeper indignation; who ſay you have faith, yet live in, ſpare, and cleave to, your ſins, renounce not the world, deny not yourſelves, refuſe the croſs, are lovers of yourſelves and of pleaſure more than lovers of God; and inſtead of parting with a deſervedly beloved Iſaac at God's command, like Judas kiſs Chriſt, and ſell him to his enemies for a few pieces of ſilver, or ſome vile ſenſual gratification. Come hither then, compare your faith with Abraham's, and acknowledge that ye are no genuine ſons of this father of the faithful; but that your faith is dead, your hope preſumptuous, and that Abraham diſowns and is aſhamed of you.—In plain language, nothing but faith will carry a man through with his obedience in every poſſible trial; and that is no true faith, which perſeveres in refuſing to obey a plain command in any caſe whatever. "You are my friends, if ye do whatſoever I command "you,"—In proportion as faith ſtands this teſt, when ſharply and repeatedly tried, we may be aſſured that we are Abraham's children, intereſted in his covenant, and in the oath by which it was confirmed, and have a right to that ſtrong conſolation, which by it God wills and intends for his people.

AND Sarah was an hundred and seven and twenty years old: these were the years of the life of Sarah.

2 And Sarah died in Kirjath-arba; the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan: and Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her.

3 And Abraham stood up from before his dead, and spake unto the sons of Heth, saying,

4 I am a stranger and a sojourner with you: give me a possession of a burying-place with you, that I may bury my dead out of my sight.

5 And the children of Heth answered Abraham, saying unto him,

6 Hear us, my lord: thou art a mighty prince amongst us; in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead: none of us shall withhold from thee his sepulchre, but that thou mayest bury thy dead.

7 And Abraham stood up, and bowed himself to the people of the land, even to the children of Heth.

8 And he communed with them, saying, If it be your mind that I should bury my dead out of my sight, hear me, and intreat for me to Ephron the son of Zohar:

That

But in this wonderful transaction, faith discerns one infinitely more stupendous! What was the love of Abraham, or of Isaac, to the Lord, compared with the love of God the Father in giving his only begotten Son? and of that only begotten Son in giving himself a sacrifice upon the cross for the sins of men? God commanded Abraham previously to his yielding up his son; but the sacrifice of Christ even prevented our solicitation: the Lord had an undoubted right to demand that life which he had given; but where shall we sinners, deserving of eternal misery, ground our claim to such a gift, as that of Christ to be the propitiation for our sins? The Lord had been a most liberal friend to Abraham, before his willingness to offer Isaac as a burnt-offering; but "God commended his love "to us, in that when we were yet sinners Christ died for "us;" and in that, "when we were enemies, we were re-"conciled to God by the death of his Son." Isaac was a sinner born to die: but the Son of God assumed human nature for the very purpose of suffering death for us; and in human nature being free from sin, he was under no obligation to suffer death, but the bond of his love to us. If Isaac was justly beloved of Abraham; Jesus was the beloved Son of the Father, in whom he was well pleased. Had Isaac died, it had been with inward peace, without extraordinary pain, and with singular reputation: but Christ tasted death in all its bitterness, died by violence, surrounded with contempt and insult, treated with indignity and cruelty, and loaded with the weight of our iniquities; whilst "it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and to "put him to grief, and make his very soul a sacrifice for "sin."—By this we know the loving-kindness of God our Saviour towards sinful man, in that he hath not withheld his Son, his only Son from us: by this we perceive the love of Christ in that he gave himself a sacrifice for our sins.—Behold he dies! yet rises! lives, ascends, and intercedes for us! and calls to sinners to come to him, and partake of his blood-bought salvation: let sinners be warned to hear his voice, and encouraged to trust in him. He calls to his redeemed people to rejoice in him, and glorify him: what then shall we render for all his benefits? Let this "love constrain us to live no longer to ourselves, "but to him who died for us and rose again;" and admiring and adoring his grace, let us devote our all to his service, who laid down his life for our salvation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII.] V. 2. Kirjath-arba, &c.] It seems that Abraham had some time before the death of Sarah quitted Beer-sheba, and came to sojourn at Hebron. When she died, he come to her tent, to express his unfeigned sorrow, and pay her the last tribute of affection.

V. 3, 4.] The sons of Heth are called elsewhere Hittites, or Hethites. Abraham was a stranger and a sojourner; one, who had no fixed settlement among them, and attempted not to acquire any.—The word give, does not always express bestowing gratuitously: but in this and some other places we are led by the context to interpret it of a grant made for a valuable consideration.—It has generally been the custom, in the church of God, to inter the dead; (though burning has been much in use among others:) and indeed it more aptly expresses an acquiescence in that sentence, "Until thou return unto the ground, from "whence thou wast taken."

V. 6. A mighty prince, &c.] According to the custom of those times, Abraham's retinue, wealth, and prosperity, would rank him amongst the other surrounding princes: so that now the promise began to be fulfilled, "I will "make thy name great."

V. 7. Bowed himself, &c.] Abraham rendered civil honour and respect to the sons of Heth, according to the custom of that age and country. It is evidently no part of the religion of the Bible to refuse these expressions of regard; but an ornament to godliness to render them, as far as it can be done, without flattering the persons, or countenancing the crimes, of others.

V. 9.

9 That he may give me the cave of Machpelah, which he hath, which is in the end of his field; for as much money as it is worth he shall give it me, for a possession of a burying-place among you.

10 And Ephron dwelt among the children of Heth. And Ephron the Hittite answered Abraham in the audience of the children of Heth, even of all that went in at the gates of his city, saying, 11 Nay, my lord, hear me: the field give I thee, and the cave that is therein, I give it thee; in the presence of the sons of my people give I it thee: bury thy dead.

12 And Abraham bowed down himself before the people of the land.

13 And he spake unto Ephron in the audience of the people of the land, saying, But if thou wilt give it, I pray thee hear me: I will give thee money for the field; take it of me, and I will bury my dead there.

14 And Ephron answered Abraham, saying unto him,

15 My lord, hearken unto me: the land is worth four hundred shekels of silver; what is that betwixt me and thee? bury therefore thy dead.

16 And Abraham hearkened unto Ephron; and Abraham weighed to Ephron the silver, which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth, four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant.

17 And the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah, which was before Mamre, the field and the cave which was therein, and all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, were made sure

18 Unto Abraham, for a possession in the presence of the children of Heth, before all that went in at the gate of his city.

19 And after this, Abraham buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah, before Mamre: the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan.

20 And the field, and the cave that is therein, were made sure unto Abraham for a possession of a burying-place, by the sons of Heth.

CHAP.

V. 9. Cave, &c.] Abraham would have a separate burying-place; perhaps intimating, that though the righteous live intermingled with the ungodly in this world, there will be a separation after death.

V. 18. Possession, &c.] Thus Abraham had an earnest of Canaan, a pledge of his reversionary inheritance.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The longest life must shortly close; and the survivors among relations only live to experience the greater number of painful separations.—The more valued any earthly enjoyment is, the greater must be our reluctance to part with it, and our anxiety about it; and the sharper the anguish when that event actually takes place: and when those, who have lived together in conjugal harmony and affection for many years, are parted by death, the separation bears some resemblance to the dissolution of soul and body.—Thus the entrance of sin, and the sentence of death, have filled all below with vanity and vexation.—Blessed be God, that there is a world, where sin, death, vanity, and vexation gain no admission; that there are relations formed which even death cannot part; and that sinners are invited to enter into this indissoluble union, and intimate relation with the everlasting God, by faith in his only begotten Son.—"He that is joined to the Lord is one "spirit;" and no separation can injure or need terrify him, who can never feel that separation from God which is the second death.—Shortly they, whom we most love, yea, our very bodies which we so inordinately care for, will become so deformed, that they must be buried out of sight.—how vain then to boast of vigour and comeliness! how mean to pamper and decorate these vile bodies! and how loose should we be to all earthly attachments! Let us rather seek to have our souls adorned with heavenly graces; then shall they flourish in immortal beauty; and the very body shall rise incorruptible and glorious, meet for the eternal enjoyment of God in the blessed society of the angelic hosts.—As we are strangers and sojourners here below, are seeking a heavenly city, and shall shortly want nothing but a burying-place; being speedily to follow those who go before us to the grave: let us mourn departed friends with submission and in hope, and not suffer indulged affections to interfere with present duty; let us avoid every appearance of selfishness, and not be outdone by the people of this world in generosity; let us manage our concerns with punctuality and precision, in order to avoid contention; and so stand prepared and waiting for the coming of our Lord.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV.] V. 1. Abraham, &c.] These events took place three years after Sarah's death, when Isaac was forty years of age, and Abraham an hundred and forty. Though a numerous posterity was so eminent a part of the promised blessing, no great haste was made about Isaac's marriage; and much less afterwards about that of Jacob. "The Lord had blessed Abraham in all things," notwithstanding his trials, and even by means of them.

V. 2—9.] Probably the servant, entrusted on this occasion, was Eliezer of Damascus, the steward of Abraham's house, a man eminent for wisdom and piety. (xv. 2.)—Lifting up the hand to the Lord was before mentioned by Abraham, as his form of taking an oath, or solemn vow. Putting the hand under the thigh, might be used to express submissive duty and fidelity. (xiv. 22. xlvii. 29.) The servant was required to swear, that he would use his influence diligently to prevent Isaac from marrying a wife of the Canaanites, who were then generally idolaters, and not proper persons with whom to form so intimate a connection; and to procure him one of Abraham's kindred, among whom the worship of God was still maintained. Before he engaged for these things, the servant put the case, that when a proper person should be found, she might not consent to leave home, and become a stranger in Canaan: and he enquired whether Isaac should then go to live in Mesopotamia? But the sojourning of the Patriarchs in Canaan was a representation of the state of believers in this world; and Isaac's returning and settling in that country, from which Abraham at God's command had come, would have counteracted the original call, and been an emblem of a professor's apostacy. Abraham, therefore, declared his assurance that God by his powerful influence upon the human heart, and by his providential interposition, would remove all hindrances, and prosper the undertaking; for "he would send his angel before him for this purpose."—We may here make some remarks about good angels, as we formerly did about evil spirits, or fallen angels. (Note, Gen. iii. 1.) It appears from Scripture that the holy angels were created by God, complete in derived and dependent excellency: that they are very numerous, and of different ranks and orders, angels, archangels, principalities, and powers: that they still retain, and are now confirmed in, the image and favour of God, in holiness and felicity; and that they excel in wisdom, knowledge, and strength; are as a flame of fire with fervent love, gratitude, and active zeal; yet proportionably influenced by deep humility, and reverential awe of the majesty of heaven. They are represented as standing in the presence of the Lord, waiting his commands; covering their faces with their wings, or prostrate in profound adoration, hearkening to his voice, doing his will, and fulfilling his pleasure. They are on this account called angels or messengers: for though he needs them not, puts no trust in them, and even, in comparison with his own infinite wisdom, charges them with folly; yet he is pleased to honour, and (if we may so speak) to indulge them with his commands, which they execute with unwearied alacrity; and when he appoints and approves, the meanest or the most important services are alike delightful to them. They are the ministers of his providence, and are often introduced as executing his awful vengeance; but more generally considered as "sent forth to minister to them "who shall be heirs of salvation." (Heb. i. 14.) There is not a bright seraph through all the heavenly train, who would not delight and glory in attending a poor despised Lazarus in an hospital or a dungeon, to ward off the machinations of evil spirits, to procure a calm to his dying moments, and to hail his departing soul to the mansions of his angel before thee, and thou shalt take a wife unto my son from thence.

8 And if the woman will not be willing to follow thee, then shalt thou be clear from this my oath: only bring not my son thither again.

9 And the servant put his hand under the thigh of Abraham his master, and sware to him concerning that matter.

10 And the servant took ten camels, of the camels of his master, and departed, (for all the goods of his master were in his hand:) and he arose, and went to Mesopotamia, unto the city of Nahor.

11 And he made his camels to kneel down without the city, by a well of water, at the time of the evening, even the time that women go out to draw water.

12 And he said, O LORD God of my master Abraham, I pray thee send me good speed this day, and shew kindness unto my master Abraham.

13 Behold, I stand here by the well of water, and the daughters of the men of the city come out to draw water:

14 And let it come to pass, that the damsel to whom I shall say, Let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink; and she shall say, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also; let the same be she that thou has appointed for thy servant Isaac; and thereby shall I know that thou hast shewed kindness unto my master.

15 And it came to pass before he had done speaking, that, behold, Rebekah came out, who was born to Bethuel, son of Milcah, the wife of Nahor, Abraham's brother, with her pitcher upon her shoulder.

16 And the damsel was very fair to look upon, a virgin, neither had any man known her: and she went down to the well, and filled her pitcher and came up.

17 And the servant ran to meet her, and said, Let me (I pray thee) drink a little water of thy pitcher.

18 And she said, Drink, my lord: and she hasted, and let down her pitcher upon her hand, and gave him drink.

19 And when she had done giving him drink, she said I will draw water for thy camels also, until they have done drinking.

20 And she hasted, and emptied her pitcher into the trough, and ran again unto the well to draw water, and drew for all his camels.

the blessed: as all are free from pride and envy, all full of love to the Redeemer and redeemed, and all "rejoice, even over one sinner brought to true repentance." Our obligations to them are great: but all the adoration and praise belong to him who works by them; they are our fellow-servants, and have no claim to our worship, but abhor it as sacrilege and idolatry. We may, however, feel a love for them, and rejoice in the thought of being with them, and like them, for ever: and we may well endeavour to copy the example of their humble zeal, their fervent love, their solemn worship and chearful services; and in our conduct to each other, take pattern from them, by condescending to the meanest and the vilest, without envying, disdaining, or overlooking one another. For the lowest and worst of human creatures is not so mean and vile, compared with the greatest and the best of men, as the greatest and best of men is mean and vile compared even with a created angel.

V. 10. Ten camels.] With all other suitable attendents for such a journey, on such an occasion. (32.)

V. 14. Let it come, &c.] Great humility and caution are requisite in imitating such examples as this; if they are at all to be imitated, now the written word is our complete and universal rule. We cannot, however, too entirely depend upon God to direct and prosper us in all our undertakings; and we must not pretend to limit the Lord, who may at some times so impress the minds of his servants in perplexity, as to lead them to expect extraordinary interpositions, and then evidently to answer these expectations. We should not, therefore, universally condemn such things, provided they induce nothing in the conduct contrary to the plain rule of duty; nor in the creed contrary to the rule of faith; do not take off men's attention from the written word, or ordinary means of instruction; and are not substituted as the foundation of hope, instead of the promises of God, and the work of his Spirit upon the heart. —It is further observable that Abraham's servant had in mind, in this address, the idea of a wife for Isaac; as one that united in her character simplicity, industry, humility, affability, and chearfulness in being serviceable and hospitable; and whatever may be the maxims and fashions of a luxurious and dissipated age; these, in the judgment of common sense, as well as piety, are the best qualifications for one, who is called to support the honourable and important characters of a wife and mother; to be the companion of a man's retired hours; and to be intrusted with the management of his domestic concerns, and with forming the tender minds of his children.

V. 21.

21 And the man wondering at her held his peace, to wit whether the Lord had made his journey prosperous, or not.

22 And it came to pass, as the camels had done drinking, that the man took a golden ear-ring, of half a shekel weight, and two bracelets for her hands, of ten shekels weight of gold;

23 And said, Whose daughter art thou? tell me, I pray thee: is there room in thy father's house for us to lodge in?

24 And she said unto him, I am the daughter of Bethuel, the son of Milcah, which she bare unto Nahor.

25 She said moreover unto him, We have both straw and provender enough, and room to lodge in.

26 And the man bowed down his head, and worshipped the LORD.

27 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of my master Abraham, who hath not left destitute my master of his mercy and his truth: I being in the way the LORD led me to the house of my master's brethren.

28 And the damsel ran, and told them of her mother's house of these things.

29 And Rebekah had a brother, and his name was Laban: and Laban ran out unto the man, unto the well.

30 And it came to pass when he saw the ear-ring and bracelets upon his sister's hands, and when he heard the words of Rebekah his sister, saying, Thus spake the man unto me; that he came unto the man, and behold, he stood by the camels at the well.

31 And he said, Come in, thou blessed of the LORD; wherefore standest thou without? for I have prepared the house, and room for the camels.

32 And the man came into the house: and he ungirded his camels, and gave straw and provender for the camels, and water to wash his feet, and the men's feet that were with him.

33 And there was set meat before him to eat: but he said, I will not eat, until I have told mine errand. And he said, Speak on.

34 And he said, I am Abraham's servant.

35 And the LORD hath blessed my master greatly; and he is become great: and he hath given him flocks, and herds, and silver, and gold, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and camels and asses.

36 And Sarah my master's wife bare a son to my master when she was old: and unto him hath he given all that he hath.

37 And my master made me swear, saying, Thou shalt not take a wife to my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, in whose land I dwell:

38 But thou shalt go unto my father's house, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son.

39 And I said unto my master, Peradventure the woman will not follow me.

40 And he said unto me, The LORD, before whom I walk, will send his angel with thee, and prosper thy way; and thou shalt take a wife for my son of my kindred, and of my father's house.

41 Then shalt thou be clear from this my oath, when thou comest to my kindred; and if they give not thee one, thou shalt be clear from my oath.

42 And I came this day unto the well, and said, O LORD God of my master Abraham, if now thou do prosper my way which I go,

43 Behold, I stand by the well of water; and it shall come to pass, that when the virgin cometh forth to draw water, and I say to her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water of thy pitcher to drink;

44 And she say unto me, Both drink thou, and

V. 21. Held his peace, &c.] Abraham's servant had attendents, who might have spared Rebekah the labour; but he interposed not, that he might observe her conduct, and wait the answer to his prayer.

V. 22. Shekel.] A shekel is about half an ounce.

V. 29. And, &c.] It is probable that Bethuel the father of Rebekah was dead, and that the Bethuel afterwards mentioned was Laban's younger brother (50—55.)

V. 36. And Sarah, &c.] We find that Abraham had received intelligence concerning the family of Nahor; and we may suppose they had also heard of him, but now the report was authenticated, and the particulars ascertained (xxii. 20—24.)

and I will alſo draw for thy camels: let the ſame be the woman whom the LORD hath appointed out for my maſter's ſon.

45 And before I had done ſpeaking in mine heart, behold, Rebekah came forth with her pitcher on her ſhoulder; and ſhe went down unto the well, and drew water: and I ſaid unto her, Let me drink, I pray thee.

46 And ſhe made haſte, and let down her pitcher from her ſhoulder, and ſaid, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink alſo: ſo I drank, and ſhe made the camels drink alſo.

47 And I aſked her, and ſaid, Whoſe daughter art thou? And ſhe ſaid, The daughter of Bethuel, Nahor's ſon, whom Milcah bare unto him: and I put the ear-ring upon her face, and the bracelets upon her hands.

48 And I bowed down my head, and worſhipped the LORD, and bleſſed the LORD God of my maſter Abraham, which had led me in the right way to take my maſter's brother's daughter unto his ſon.

49 And now if you will deal kindly and truly with my maſter, tell me: and if not, tell me: that I may turn to the right hand, or to the left.

50 Then Laban and Bethuel anſwered and ſaid, The thing proceedeth from the LORD: we cannot ſpeak unto thee bad or good.

51 Behold, Rebekah is before thee, take her, and go, and let her be thy maſter's ſon's wife, as the LORD hath ſpoken.

52 And it came to paſs, that when Abraham's ſervant heard their words, he worſhipped the LORD, bowing himſelf to the earth.

53 And the ſervant brought forth jewels of ſilver, and jewels of gold, and raiment, and gave them to Rebekah: He gave alſo to her brother and to her mother precious things.

54 And they did eat and drink, he and the men that were with him, and tarried all night: and they roſe up in the morning, and he ſaid, Send me away unto my maſter.

55 And her brother and her mother ſaid, Let the damſel abide with us a few days, at the leaſt ten; after that ſhe ſhall go.

56 And he ſaid unto them, Hinder me not, ſeeing the LORD hath proſpered my way: ſend me away, that I may go to my maſter.

57 And they ſaid, We will call the damſel, and enquire at her mouth.

58 And they called Rebekah, and ſaid unto her, Wilt thou go with this man? And ſhe ſaid, I will go.

59 And they ſent away Rebekah their ſiſter, and her nurſe, and Abraham's ſervant and his men.

60 And they bleſſed Rebekah, and ſaid unto her, Thou art our ſiſter, be thou the mother of thouſands of millions, and let thy ſeed poſſeſs the gate of thoſe which hate them.

61 And Rebekah aroſe, and her damſels, and they rode upon the camels, and followed the man: and the ſervant took Rebekah, and went his way.

62 And Iſaac came from the way of the well Lahai-roi;

V. 44. Appointed, &c.] Thoſe events which to us are the effect of choice, contrivance, or chance, are matters of appointment with God: and the perſuaſion of this does not prevent, but rather encourage, the uſe of of all proper means; at the ſame time that it confines us to ſuch means, and delivers the mind from uſeleſs anxiety and perturbation about the conſequences.

V. 45. In mine heart, &c.] Some things form more proper ſubjects for ſecret than for ſocial prayer: Abraham's ſervant conſidered this matter to be of that kind; and therefore uſed mental prayer, till the ſingularity of the anſwer made it proper that it ſhould be communicated.

V. 50. The thing, &c.] The whole tranſaction was ſo evidently according to the appointment, and under the direction, of the Lord, that there was no room for heſitation or objection.

V. 55, 56.] This good and faithful ſervant's deſire of communicating the agreeable intelligence at home no doubt induced him to haſten his departure: but there was likewiſe a typical meaning in this whole affair, in which delays, even ſhort ones, are often fatal. "To-day, if "ye will hear his voice."

V. 58. I will go, &c.] The excellency of Rebekah's whole character forbids us to think, that there could be any thing in this anſwer inconſiſtent with true delicacy; though perhaps inconſiſtent with its modern ſtandard, when it ſeems to be refined into a degree of affectation ſubverſive of ſincerity. Doubtleſs ſhe ſaw with peculiar clearneſs, that the whole was the appointment of God; and ſhe would not ſo much as ſeem to ſlight the honour and happineſs of being a progenitor of the promiſed Seed; but, like his immediate parent, ſhe anſwered, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me "according to thy word."

V. 62. Lahai-Roi.] Where the Lord looked upon Hagar. (xvi. 14.)

Lahai-roi; for he dwelt in the ſouth-country.

63 And Iſaac went out to meditate in the field at the even-tide: and he lifted up his eyes, and ſaw, and, behold, the camels were coming.

64 And Rebekah lifted up her eyes, and when ſhe ſaw Iſaac, ſhe lighted off the camel.

65 For ſhe had ſaid unto the ſervant, What man is this that walketh in the field to meet us? And the ſervant had ſaid, It is my maſter: therefore ſhe took a veil and covered herſelf.

66 And the ſervant told Iſaac all things that he had done.

67 And Iſaac brought her into his mother Sarah's tent, and took Rebekah, and ſhe became his wife; and he loved her: and Iſaac was comforted after his mother's death.

V. 63. To meditate.] To reflect on the works and truths of God, and pour out his heart in prayer and praiſe.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The effect of a good example, good inſtructions, and the reverential worſhip of God, in his ordinances and in private families, will generally appear in the piety, faithfulneſs, prudence, and affection of the domeſtics: and to live in ſuch families, or be favoured with ſuch ſervants, is a bleſſing from God, highly to be valued, and thankfully to be acknowledged.—No concern in life is of more importance to ourſelves, to others, and to the church of God, than contracting marriage; which therefore ought always to be undertaken with much circumſpection and prudence, with an eye to the will and appointment of God, and with prayer for his direction and bleſſing.—It is an important part of a parent's duty, with great tenderneſs and affection to direct, counſel, and aſſiſt his children in this buſineſs: young perſons are very happy, who have parents that will, in a proper manner and with ſuitable conſideration, perform this duty; and they are wiſe who avail themſelves of ſuch advantages. But where ſuch parents are not conſulted and regarded, the bleſſing of God cannot be expected; nor when godlineſs is not reckoned the primary, though not the only, requiſite in a companion for life.—They, who ſtay their minds on God, will be kept in peace, and enabled to diſregard the peradventures which trouble others: they wait to know God's appointment, are prepared to be ſatisfied with it, and are aſſured that in due time it will take place, and be correſpondent with his promiſes; they only aim to know and to do their duty, and uſe the means which are appointed or allowed. We ſhould, however, in binding ourſelves by an oath, take care that through inattention we do not enſnare our ſouls.—They, who acknowledge God in all their ways, will find him preſent to direct their paths, and make their way proſperous; and, when the prayer of faith meets with an immediate anſwer, the glory ought as ſpeedily to be rendered to the Lord in ſolemn praiſe and thankſgivings.—How are the times changed, ſince the chief perſons in their ſeveral places of abode, and their ſons and daughters, chearfully performed the moſt laborious ſervices with their own hands! I fear we have got but a poor exchange in our exceſſive refinements, for the ſimplicity, diligence, and uſefulneſs, which characterized the patriarchal times.—Whatever buſineſs we are intruſted with, we ſhould, like this pious ſervant, attend to it in preference to our own indulgence or refreſhment; and when our purpoſe is honourable, and we are waiting to know the Lord's appointment, a plain recital of facts, in which the hand of God appears evident, is more becoming, and frequently more effectual, than all the trappings of oratory, which too often diſguiſe the real truth. The remarkable private experience, which we have of God's mercy and faithfulneſs, ought to be declared among thoſe who fear God, for his glory and their encouragement.—Though the counſel and conſent of parents ſhould be obtained; yet, before marriage be ſolemnized, the mutual and chearful compliance of the contracting parties is alſo requiſite, being eſſential to the comfort and happineſs of that honourable ſtate: and when matters are thus orderly managed, and are begun, continued, and completed in the exerciſe of faith, with the prayer of all parties concerned, the bleſſing of God upon them and their poſterity may reaſonably be expected, and the comfort of one relation will compenſate for the loſs of another.

But will not the moſt ſober judgment allow that in this tranſaction we have a type of Chriſt and his church?—We know who is the Bridegroom, that in perfect harmony with his heavenly Father, having offered himſelf as a ſacrifice for ſin, eſpouſes his church unto himſelf. This he does by the miniſtration of his ſervants the preachers of the goſpel, who by his commiſſion go to find out thoſe who are afar off, that they may preſent them as a chaſte virgin unto Chriſt. They repreſent to ſinners his glory, his excellency, his ſuitableneſs and loving-kindneſs, their own experience of his grace, and his unſearchable riches, (for all things that the Father hath are his,) to induce their willingneſs: by theſe repreſentations, the drawings of his Spirit, and ſome foretaſtes of his goodneſs, they are prevailed upon to conſent to their own happineſs, and made willing to forſake their own country, and to renounce all for him. Then he adorns them with the robe of his righteouſneſs and the graces of his Spirit, endows them with all his riches, ennobles them by their relation to him, and makes them happy in his love, and his fellowſhip with them. They are now ſupremely attached to his perſon and intereſt, and faithful to their engagements to him; they give him their heart, and devote body and ſoul to his ſervice in ſincerity and ſimplicity. He greatly delights in the beauty which he hath put upon them;

The good Lord ſend forth many ſuch labourers and ſtewards, and make them wiſe to win ſouls!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV.] V. 1—4.] Abraham was 137 years of age when Sarah died; and, nearly 40 years before that event his age had been conſidered as a very powerful obſtruction to his having children: yet he had ſix ſons by Keturah, whom he ſent away in his life-time. On theſe grounds therefore ſome have conjectured that he had married this wife long before.—But the language of the original text, "And Abraham added, and took "a wife," as well as the unnatural diſturbance which this ſuppoſition occaſions in the ſimple narration, militates againſt ſuch an opinion. The Lord had promiſed him an innumerable poſterity, and the long delay both ſerved to try his faith, and to illuſtrate the divine power and faithfulneſs; when at length, beyond all probability, the promiſe was ſo remarkably fulfilled. And as Abraham lived 38 years after Sarah's death, all theſe children might be grown up, much older than Iſhmael was when he was ſent away; and might be ſettled in the world before Abraham's death. They were afterwards mingled with the Iſhmaelites, and many great nations at this very day claim Abraham for their progenitor by ſome of theſe branches.

V. 5. All, &c.] Abraham gave the bulk of his ſubſtance to Iſaac, as his legitimate heir. Thus he typified the Son of God, whom he hath appointed heir of all things: and he repreſented true believers, who are joint heirs with Chriſt, and to whom with him the Father freely giveth all things.

V. 6. Concubines, &c.] The word concubine is uſed, not only for one who cohabited with a man that had another wife, as Hagar; but alſo for one who was a lawful wife, though not admitted to the full privilege of that relation in reſpect of rank and poſſeſſions, as Keturah. As Iſhmael was one of theſe ſons, we may infer from this paſſage, that he was not ſent away deſtitute, or finally deſerted by Abraham; as it is ſometimes ſuppoſed from an inattentive peruſal of the hiſtory (xxi.) This tranſaction was an emblem of the bleſſings of common providence, which God beſtows upon thoſe who have no inheritance in the kingdom of Chriſt. (Gal. iv. 28.)

V. 8. Gave up, &c.] This expreſſion is uſed for the death of the wicked, as well as of the righteous; (Acts v. 5. 10. xii. 23;) and it implies no more than the departure of the rational and immortal ſoul from the body at death; when it returns to God that gave it, by him to be diſpoſed of according to the things done in the body, whether they be good or evil. The words of years are not in the original; it is merely full, that is, ſatisfied of living in this world and ripe for a better.

V. 11.

11 And it came to paſs after the death of Abraham, that God bleſſed his ſon Iſaac: and Iſaac dwelt by the well Lahai-roi.

12 Now theſe are the generations of Iſhmael Abraham's ſon, whom Hagar the Egyptian, Sarah's handmaid, bare unto Abraham.

13 And theſe are the names of the ſons of Iſhmael, by their names, according to their generations: The firſt-born of Iſhmael, Nebajoth; and Kedar, and Adbeel, and Mibſam,

14 And Miſhma, and Dumah, and Maſſah,

15 Hadar, and Tema, Jetur, Naphiſh, and Kedemah.

16 Theſe are the ſons of Iſhmael, and theſe are their names, by their towns, and by their caſtles; twelve princes according to their nations.

17 And theſe are the years of the life of Iſhmael, an hundred and thirty and ſeven years: and he gave up the ghoſt and died, and was gathered unto his people.

18 And they dwelt from Havilah unto Shur, that is before Egypt, as thou goeſt towards Aſſyria: and he died in the preſence of all his brethren.

19 And theſe are the generations of Iſaac, Abraham's ſon: Abraham begat Iſaac.

20 And Iſaac was forty years old when he took Rebekah to wife, the daughter of Bethuel the Syrian of Padan-aram, the ſiſter to Laban the Syrian.

21 And Iſaac intreated the LORD for his wife, becauſe ſhe was barren: and the LORD was intreated of him, and Rebekah his wife conceived.

22 And the children ſtruggled together within her: and ſhe ſaid, If it be ſo, why am I thus? And ſhe went to enquire of the LORD.

23 And the LORD ſaid unto her, Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people ſhall be ſeparated from thy bowels: and the one people ſhall be ſtronger than the other people; and the elder ſhall ſerve the younger.

24 And when her days to be delivered were fulfilled, behold, there were twins in her womb.

25 And the firſt came out red, all over like an hairy garment: and they called his name Eſau.

V. 16. Theſe are, &c.] The Iſhmaelites were ſettled in towns and caſtles, before the deſcendents of Iſaac were delivered out of Egypt.

V. 21. She was barren, &c.] The faith of Iſaac and Rebekah was in this reſpect tried for twenty years; as Abraham's and Sarah's had been for a longer time.

V. 22, 23.] The children ſtruggled in ſo remarkable a manner, that Rebekah was convinced there was ſomewhat ſupernatural in it; and ſhe ſaid, "If ſo, why "thus?" there is ſome reaſon for this unuſual ſtruggling, which muſt be enquired into. Some ſuppoſe ſhe went to enquire of Shem; (but according to the common chronology, he had been dead ten years;) others conjecture ſhe applied to Heber, who was ſtill living, or to Melchizedek; and others, that ſhe ſtated her caſe to Abraham, that ſhe might from him, as the prophet of the Lord, diſcover his mind in this matter. I mention this as a ſpecimen of conjectural criticiſm in things concerning which we never can acquire information, and in which it would be perfectly uſeleſs if we could. In ſome proper way, known to her and not to us, ſhe enquired, and received for anſwer, that two nations, and two manner of people, were in her womb; namely, the Iſraelites, and the Edomites, or Idumeans, being then in their common parents, Jacob and Eſau. They were men of very oppoſite diſpoſitions; and their deſcendents were as diſſimilar: they perſonally ſtruggled hard for the pre-eminence; and ſo did their poſterity for many ages. In the days of David, the deſcendents of Eſau, the elder brother, were generally ſubject to thoſe of Jacob, the younger, and more entirely in the latter times of the Jewiſh ſtate.—In theſe ſtrugglings, there was an evident alluſion to the conflict between corrupt nature and grace, in the believer's experience, in which the younger acquires the aſcendency: and to the conflict between the world and the true church of God, the ſeed of the ſerpent and the Seed of the woman; in which the church, which is the younger, after many ſtrugglings, will gain a final maſtery.

cunning hunter, a man of the field; and Jacob was a plain man, dwelling in tents.

28 And Iſaac loved Eſau, becauſe he did eat of his veniſon: but Rebekah loved Jacob.

29 And Jacob ſod pottage: and Eſau came from the field, and he was faint.

30 And Eſau ſaid to Jacob, Feed me, I pray thee, with that ſame red pottage; for I am faint: therefore was his name called Edom.

31 And Jacob ſaid, Sell me this day thy birth-right.

32 And Eſau ſaid, Behold, I am at the point to die: and what profit ſhall this birth-right do to me?

33 And Jacob ſaid, Swear to me this day; and he ſware unto him: and he ſold his birth-right unto Jacob.

34 Then Jacob gave Eſau bread and pottage of lentiles; and he did eat and drink, and roſe up, and went his way: thus Eſau deſpiſed his birth-right.

Eſau hunted the beaſts of the foreſt; till probably, like Nimrod, he became a warrior, living by his ſword; and eſtabliſhing his authority over his neighbours: accordingly he came to meet his brother with 400 men: (xxvii. 40. xxxii. 6.) But Jacob was a plain man dwelling in tents: a downright, honeſt, pious man; a ſtranger and pilgrim in his ſpirit, and a ſhepherd all his days.

V. 30. Edom.] That is red; nearly the ſame as Adam.

V. 31. Thy birth-right.] The temporal inheritance did not deſcend to Jacob, and therefore probably was not meant in this propoſal: but it included the reverſion of the land of Canaan, and the covenant made with Abraham relative to Chriſt, the promiſed Seed. Believing Jacob ſupremely valued theſe bleſſings, but unbelieving Eſau deſpiſed them.

V. 32. At the point to die.] It cannot be conceived that Eſau was dying of hunger in Iſaac's houſe, nor would the tranſaction have been ſo ſeverely condemned, had it been ſo: but he ſeems to mean, "I ſhall never live to inherit Canaan, or any of theſe future ſuppoſed bleſſings; and what ſignifies it who has them when I am dead and gone?" This was the language of profaneneſs, for which the Apoſtle condemns him; (Heb. xii. 16;) and a contempt indeed of the birth-right, which the hiſtorian notes with cenſure. (34.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

By repeated examples the Lord teaches us, that though he try faith by long delays, yet he honours it with abundant performances.—"The viſion is for an appointed time, but "at the end it ſhall ſpeak and not lie: though it tarry, "wait for it; becauſe it ſhall ſurely come, it will not "tarry:" (Habak. ii. 3.) It may be delayed longer than we expected, but not beyond the Lord's appointed time.

A great part of the hiſtory ſtill relates to thoſe who go off, and thoſe who appear on, the ſtage of life. Whether our part on this grand theatre be ſhort or long, it matters but little; provided we perform it in ſuch a manner, as to quit the world with comfort to ourſelves, with benefit to others, and with the approbation of our gracious God: provided we leave behind us a teſtimony from our lips to the faithfulneſs and goodneſs of the Lord; and in the conſciences of others, to the uprightneſs and conſiſtency of our walk before him: with a good example and the bleſſing of God to our families. Having then lived to every good purpoſe, and being ripe for the world above, we may chearfully reſign our ſpirits into the hands of our Redeemer; and leave our bodies to be gathered to our people in the ſilent tomb, in joyful hope of a happy reſurrection. God forbid, that the writer, or any of the readers, of theſe obſervations, ſhould reſt content with earthly bleſſings, which he beſtows on the men of this world; or come ſhort of thoſe ſpecial and eternal bleſſings, which belong to the children of the promiſe! Though the former ſeem to have the pre-eminence here, yet the latter will have their portion, when their's is ſpent and gone for ever. Happy they, who are ſtirred up by the delays of promiſed and expected bleſſings to pray always, and not faint; for every one that aſketh receiveth, though perhaps not immediately.—In all our doubts and perplexities we ſhould enquire of the Lord by prayer, attendance on his ordinances, and attention to his word: and in many of our conflicts and ſtrugglings with ſin and temptations, we may adopt Rebekah's words: "If it be ſo, why am I "thus?" If a child of God, why ſo careleſs or carnal? If not a child of God, why ſo afraid of, or burdened with, ſin?—In the beſt of characters we perceive infirmities, and in the beſt of parents ſinful partialities: but ſurely thoſe are entitled to our ſuperior regard, who are evidently beloved of the Lord!—Men, who are ſlaves to their appetites, and inordinately crave earthly things, to the profane contempt of ſpiritual bleſſings, will, however ſagacious in other reſpects, find themſelves infinitely excelled by thoſe, who chooſe that good part which ſhall never be taken from them. But though we muſt be of Jacob's judgment in preferring the birth-right; yet we ought carefully to avoid all appearance of impoſition in ſeeking to obtain the moſt important advantages.

AND there was a famine in the land, beſides the firſt famine that was in the days of Abraham. And Iſaac went unto Abimelech king of the Philiſtines, unto Gerar.

2 And the LORD appeared unto him, and ſaid, Go not down into Egypt: dwell in the land which I ſhall tell thee of.

3 Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee, and will bleſs thee: for unto thee and unto thy ſeed I will give all theſe countries, and I will perform the oath which I ſware unto Abraham thy father.

4 And I will make thy ſeed to multiply as the ſtars of heaven, and will give unto thy ſeed all theſe countries: and in thy ſeed ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed:

5 Becauſe that Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my ſtatutes, and my laws.

6 And Iſaac dwelt in Gerar.

7 And the men of the place aſked him of his wife; and he ſaid, She is my ſiſter: for he feared to ſay, She is my wife; leſt, ſaid he, the men of the place ſhould kill me for Rebekah, becauſe ſhe was fair to look upon.

8 And it came to paſs when he had been there a long time, that Abimelech king of the Philiſtines looked out at a window, and ſaw, and behold, Iſaac was ſporting with Rebekah his wife.

9 And Abimelech called Iſaac, and ſaid, Behold, of a ſurety, ſhe is thy wife: and how ſaidſt thou, She is my ſiſter? And Iſaac ſaid unto him, Becauſe I ſaid, Leſt I die for her.

10 And Abimelech ſaid, What is this thou haſt done unto us? one of the people might lightly have lien with thy wife, and thou ſhouldſt have brought guiltineſs upon us.

11 And Abimelech charged all his people, ſaying, He that toucheth this man or his wife, ſhall ſurely be put to death.

12 Then Iſaac ſowed in that land, and received

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI.] V. 1. Abimelech] Abraham's treaty with Abimelech had been before the birth of Iſaac, (xx,) who was ſixty years of age when his ſons were born, and an hundred when Eſau married, (34.) And as Eſau and Jacob are ſpoken of in the cloſe of the former chapter as grown up; this event, which appears to have been ſubſequent, muſt be more than ninety years after the former treaty. It is probable therefore that Abimelech, (which ſignifies my father the king,) was the common name of the kings of the Philiſtines; and that this Abimelech was a ſucceſſor to him before mentioned.

V. 2—5.] (xvii.) Abraham had gone down into Egypt, and we may ſuppoſe that Iſaac was deliberating about it; but he was commanded to dwell in one part or other of the land of Canaan, according to ſuch intimations as ſhould from time to time be given him. For the preſent he was directed to ſojourn in the country of the Philiſtines; and the Lord promiſed to manifeſt his preſence with him by his ſpecial care of him in providence, and by comforting him in the exerciſes of religious worſhip. Becauſe it was fit and meet that God ſhould thus teſtify his ſignal approbation of Abraham's remarkable obedience, for the honour of his own name, and the encouragement of others, eſpecially of Iſaac. This obedience alſo had a tendency to promote the fulfilment of theſe promiſes: (xviii. 18, 19;) it was the proper evidence of that faith, by which, as a ſinner, he was juſtified before God, and the effect of that love by which true faith works: (Gal. v. 6.) And it was in conſequence of his prompt obedience, that the covenant was ſealed and ratified to him with an oath.

V. 7. Aſked him, &c.] The queſtion began to excite in Iſaac apprehenſions for his ſafety: his anſwer contained a more direct falſhood, than thoſe uſed by Abraham; and his unbelief was more inexcuſable, becauſe he lived in Gerar by God's expreſs command, and under his immediate protection, which had been engaged to him by the preceding viſion.

V. 8. A long time, &c.] Without interruption, which ſhewed that Iſaac's ſuſpicions were alſo injurious to the Philiſtines.

ceived in the ſame year an hundred-fold, and the LORD bleſſed him.

13 And the man waxed great, and went forward, and grew until he became very great.

14 For he had poſſeſſion of flocks, and poſſeſſion of herds, and great ſtore of ſervants. And the Philiſtines envied him.

15 For all the wells which his father's ſervants had digged in the days of Abraham his father, the Philiſtines had ſtopped them, and filled them with earth.

16 And Abimelech ſaid unto Iſaac, Go from us: for thou art much mightier than we.

17 And Iſaac departed thence, and pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar, and dwelt there.

18 And Iſaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father; for the Philiſtines had ſtopped them, after the death of Abraham: and he called their names after the names by which his father had called them.

19 And Iſaac's ſervants digged in the valley, and found there a well of ſpringing water.

20 And the herdmen of Gerar did ſtrive with Iſaac's herdmen, ſaying, The water is ours: and he called the name of the well Eſek, becauſe they ſtrove with him.

21 And they digged another well, and ſtrove for that alſo: And he called the name of it Sitnah.

22 And he removed from thence, and digged another well; and for that they ſtrove not: and he called the name of it Rehoboth; and he ſaid, For now the LORD hath made room for us, and we ſhall be fruitful in the land.

23 And he went up from thence to Beer-ſheba.

24 And the LORD appeared unto him the ſame night, and ſaid, I am the God of Abraham thy father: fear not, for I am with thee, and will bleſs thee, and multiply thy ſeed for my ſervant Abraham's ſake.

25 And he builded an altar there, and called upon the name of the LORD, and pitched his tent there: and there Iſaac's ſervants digged a well.

26 Then Abimelech went to him from Gerar, and Ahuzzath one of his friends, and Phichol the chief captain of his army.

27 And Iſaac ſaid unto them, Wherefore come ye to me, ſeeing ye hate me, and have ſent me away from you?

28 And they ſaid, We ſaw certainly that the LORD was with thee: and we ſaid, Let there be now an oath betwixt us, even betwixt us and thee, and let us make a covenant with thee;

29 That thou wilt do us no hurt, as we have not touched thee, and as we have done unto thee nothing but good, and have ſent thee away in peace: thou art now the bleſſed of the LORD.

30 And he made them a feaſt, and they did eat and drink.

31 And they roſe up betimes in the morning, and ſware one to another: and Iſaac ſent them away, and they departed from him in peace.

32 And it came to paſs the ſame day, that Iſaac's ſervants came, and told him concerning the well which they had digged, and ſaid unto him, We have found water.

33 And he called it Shebah: therefore the name of the city is Beer-ſheba unto this day.

V. 12. An hundred fold.] This was very extraordinary increaſe, and an evident effect of the divine bleſſing. I believe that in many parts of this land, with all our improvements in agriculture, an ordinary crop of grain is very ſeldom known to exceed twenty fold; and much more frequently, without any remarkable miſmanagement or diſaſter, to come ſhort of ten fold, clear increaſe upon the ſeed ſown.

V. 17. Valley of Gerar.] Upon the borders of Abimelech's kingdom.

V. 20. Eſek.] That is, contention.

V. 21. Sitnah.] That is, hatred.

V. 22. Rehoboth.] That is places, or room: the piety of the language here uſed in one of the ordinary concerns of life is worth noting and imitating.

V. 24. Fear not.] Be not afraid of their envy, or enmity.

V. 33. Shebah.] That is, an oath. Beer-ſheba ſignifies, the well of an oath.

34 And Esau was forty years old when he took to wife Judith the daughter of Beeri the Hittite, and Bashemath the daughter of Elon the Hittite:

AND it came to pass that when Isaac was old, and his eyes were dim, so that he could not see, he called Esau his eldest son, and said unto him, My son: And he said unto him, Behold, here am I.

2 And he said, Behold now, I am old, I know not the day of my death.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Repeated famines in the Land of Promise taught the patriarchs, and uneasiness in the most eligible situations should teach us, to look to the Canaan above, the heavenly inheritance, for unalloyed felicity. Yet they are happy, even on earth, who are guided by Jehovah's counsel, upheld and protected by his power, encouraged by his presence, and assured of an interest in his everlasting love. If he engages to be with us, and we abide where he would have us to be; nothing but our own unbelief and distrust can prevent our comfort. The blessing which descends upon posterity in answer to prayer, as the effect of wholesome instructions, and good example, and as a gracious recompence of the obedience of faith, is unspeakably preferable to any other riches which can be left them.—Though God do not justify a sinner by his works, yet he will most abundantly reward the good works of a true believer; "for our righteous Lord loveth righ-"teousness," and will shew his love of it. But alas! it is much more natural and easy for us to imitate the faults, than the faith and holiness of eminent characters. And too many conclude that they may venture on this or the other conduct, because persons of eminent piety have been betrayed into it: how careful therefore should we be not to sanction transgression, or give force to temptation by our example! There is nothing in this part of Isaac's conduct to be imitated, or even excused: the impartiality of the sacred historian records it for our warning, and to shew that righteousness cometh not by the law, but by the faith of Christ.—Rather let us in this transaction imitate the conduct of Abimelech, his serious rebuke, and his return of good for evil: but how will his abhorrence of adultery rise up in judgment against such a nation as this!—Though the Lord detect, reprove, and even shame his offending servants, yet he still pardons and blesses them. His blessing maketh rich, and the increase of the earth is his gift: but alas! riches generally excite envy, suspicion, and jealousy; and we may very often call our worldly acquisitions, (as Isaac did his wells,) contention and enmity. The spirit that is in us lusteth to envy, and whilst we watch against its workings in ourselves, and pray to him who giveth more grace, we should avoid whatever may needlessly excite it in others: for when once it is kindled, the malice, rancour, and wanton mischief, which it may occasion, can scarcely be described.—That wisdom which is from above, will teach us rather to recede from our right, and retire from the contentious, than to engage in angry disputes: and if we are injuriously driven from one place, the Lord will make room for us in another, and recompense us with the assurance and consolations of his love. When such a yielding spirit is united with a profession of his truth, and a regard to his worship and service; he will himself plead our cause, make our enemies to be at peace with us, and to court our friendship, acknowledging that the Lord loveth us.—The forgiveness of injuries, and readiness to reconciliation and hospitality, are ornamental to godliness. We must, however, have some cross to counterbalance each comfort: yet children are highly culpable, who are the sinful occasions of grief of heart to their pious and affectionate parents: nor has any thing been more universally the bane of domestic happiness, than unhallowed marriages, and the practice of polygamy.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII.] V. 1. Isaac was old, &c.] Joseph was 30 years of age when he stood before Pharaoh, (xli. 46.) After the seven years of plenty, and about the third year of the famine, (that is, when Joseph was about 40) Jacob told Pharaoh that he was 130 years of age. Hence it appears that Jacob was 90 when Joseph was born, which was probably above 14 years after; consequently Jacob was at this time about 75, or 76, and Isaac 135, or 136 years of age.

V. 2. I know not, &c.] Isaac lived, though blind, at least 44 years after this. But he deemed it best to settle his domestic concerns, that he might not have incumbrances of that kind to discompose him when the time of death should come: in which he ought to be highly commended.

3 Now therefore take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver, and thy bow, and go out to the field, and take me ſome veniſon;

4 And make me ſavoury meat, ſuch as I love, and bring it to me, that I may eat; that my ſoul may bleſs thee before I die.

5 And Rebekah heard when Iſaac ſpake to Eſau his ſon: and Eſau went to the field to hunt for veniſon, and to bring it.

6 And Rebekah ſpake unto Jacob her ſon, ſaying, Behold, I heard thy father ſpeak unto Eſau thy brother, ſaying, 7 Bring me veniſon, and make me ſavoury meat, that I may eat, and bleſs thee before the LORD before my death.

8 Now therefore, my ſon, obey my voice, according to that which I command thee.

9 Go now to the flock, and fetch me from thence two good kids of the goats; and I will make them ſavoury meat for thy father, ſuch as he loveth.

10 And thou ſhalt bring it to thy father, that he may eat, and that he may bleſs thee before his death.

11 And Jacob ſaid to Rebekah his mother, Behold, Eſau my brother is a hairy man, and I am a ſmooth man.

12 My father peradventure will feel me, and I ſhall ſeem to him as a deceiver; and I ſhall bring a curſe upon me, and not a bleſſing.

13 And his mother ſaid unto him, Upon me be thy curſe, my ſon: only obey my voice, and go fetch me them.

14 And he went, and fetched, and brought them to his mother: and his mother made ſavoury meat, ſuch as his father loved.

15 And Rebekah took goodly raiment of her eldeſt ſon Eſau, which were with her in the houſe, and put them upon Jacob her younger ſon.

16 And ſhe put the ſkins of the kids of the goats upon his hands, and upon the ſmooth of his neck.

17 And ſhe gave the ſavoury meat, and the bread which ſhe had prepared, into the hand of her ſon Jacob.

18 And he came unto his father, and ſaid, My father: And he ſaid, Here am I; who art thou, my ſon?

19 And Jacob ſaid unto his father, I am Eſau thy firſt-born: I have done according as thou badeſt me: ariſe, I pray thee, ſit and eat of my veniſon, that thy ſoul may bleſs me.

20 And Iſaac ſaid unto his ſon, How is it that thou haſt found it ſo quickly, my ſon? And he ſaid, Becauſe the LORD thy God brought it to me.

V. 4. That I may eat, &c.] As this was not intended for a public feaſt, but merely for a private ſelf-indulgent meal, one cannot but deem it a carnal introduction to the ſpiritual bleſſing which Iſaac purpoſed to pronounce: a ſolemn ſacrifice would have appeared more conſiſtent with his character and the occaſion. His partiality for Eſau, and the cuſtom of the elder being heir, led him to forget, miſunderſtand, or diſregard the anſwer, which the Lord had formerly given Rebekah on this ſubject, (xxv. 23.)

V. 10. That he may, &c.] Rebekah was ſenſible that Iſaac was about to act wrong; for ſhe knew that the bleſſing was intended for Jacob, and expected that he would have it. But it behoved her, either calmly to have argued the matter, and expoſtulated with Iſaac; or, if that appeared inexpedient and unavailing, to have committed the matter to the Lord by prayer, and remained quiet; and by no means ought ſhe to have uſed ſuch artifice as this. She did not indeed wrong Eſau, in regard to the birthright; as both the Lord's purpoſe, and his own agreement ratified with an oath, deprived him of all claim to it: but ſhe injured Iſaac, by practiſing ſuch an impoſition upon him; and Jacob, by uſing her authority and perſuaſions to tempt him to wickedneſs; ſhe was guilty of much ſin againſt the Lord, and diſhonoured his power and faithfulneſs, by ſuppoſing he needed ſuch means of effecting his purpoſe, and fulfilling his promiſe. Nay, ſhe even threw a ſtumbling block in Eſau's way, and furniſhed him with a plauſible pretext for his enmity, not only to Jacob but to religion, by putting Jacob on acting ſo treacherous a part.

V. 13. Upon me be thy curſe, &c.] Though Rebekah had a well-grounded confidence that Jacob would obtain the bleſſing; yet employing that confidence to induce Jacob to commit evident ſin, too much reſembled the conduct of ſuch perſons as are the more bold in wickedneſs, becauſe God is rich in mercy.

V. 14. And he went, &c.] Jacob could not indeed defeat the purpoſe of God, by his miſconduct; but he contracted much guilt, for which he afterwards ſeverely ſmarted.

V. 20. Becauſe the Lord, &c.] This was a dreadful profanation of the Lord's name, by which he made religion the cloke of his diſſimulation.

21 And Iſaac ſaid unto Jacob, Come near, I pray thee, that I may feel thee, my ſon, whether thou be my very ſon Eſau, or not.

22 And Jacob went near unto Iſaac his father, and he felt him; and ſaid, the voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Eſau.

23 And he diſcerned him not, becauſe his hands were hairy, as his brother Eſau's hands: So he bleſſed him.

24 And he ſaid, Art thou my very ſon Eſau? And he ſaid, I am.

25 And he ſaid, Bring it near to me, and I will eat of my ſon's veniſon, that my ſoul may bleſs thee. And he brought it near to him, and he did eat: and he brought him wine, and he drank.

26 And his father Iſaac ſaid unto him, Come near now, and kiſs me, my ſon.

27 And he came near, and kiſſed him: and he ſmelled the ſmell of his raiment, and bleſſed him, and ſaid, See, the ſmell of my ſon is as the ſmell of a field, which the LORD hath bleſſed.

28 Therefore God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatneſs of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine.

29 Let people ſerve thee, and nations bow down to thee; be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's ſons bow down to thee: Curſed be every one that curſeth thee, and bleſſed be he that bleſſeth thee.

30 And it came to paſs, as ſoon as Iſaac had made an end of bleſſing Jacob, and Jacob was yet ſcarce gone out from the preſence of Iſaac his father, that Eſau his brother came in from his hunting.

31 And he alſo had made ſavoury meat, and brought it unto his father; and ſaid unto his father, Let my father ariſe, and eat of his ſon's veniſon, that thy ſoul may bleſs me.

32 And Iſaac his father ſaid unto him, Who art thou? And he ſaid, I am thy ſon, thy firſt-born Eſau.

33 And Iſaac trembled very exceedingly, and ſaid, Who, where is he that hath taken veniſon, and brought it me, and I have eaten of all before thou cameſt, and have bleſſed him? yea, and he ſhall be bleſſed.

34 And when Eſau heard the words of his

V. 21. And Iſaac, &c.] Though Iſaac probably would have been glad to have heard Eſau uſe ſuch language, yet it ſeems to have excited ſome ſuſpicions in his mind.

V. 22. The voice is Jacob's, &c.] As Iſaac's eyes failed him, he ſeems to have diſtruſted his ears alſo.—How wonderful is that difference, which there is betwixt the faces and the voices of the ſeveral individuals of the human ſpecies! ſcarcely any two of the innumerable millions are exactly alike in either! and yet the difference cannot be defined or deſcribed. The power, wiſdom, and kindneſs of our Creator, ſhould be admired and adored in this remarkable circumſtance; for they are very viſible!—This deſcription of Jacob is not unaptly accommodated to the character of a hypocrite; his voice, his language, is that of a chriſtian; his hands, or conduct, that of an ungodly man: but the judgment will proceed, as in the preſent caſe, not by the voice but by the hands.

V. 27—29.] Though we muſt acknowledge the hand of God in this tranſaction, and conſider this bleſſing as a prophecy, which was accordingly fulfilled in the hiſtory of the two nations deſcended from Jacob and Eſau; yet, in making the prophet the Lord does not deprive a man of his faculties, or abſolve him from his accountableneſs; and we may enquire why there is no explicit mention made here, as elſewhere, of the promiſed Seed, and of the promiſed land? Perhaps Iſaac was conſcious that theſe belonged to Jacob, and confined his interpretation of Rebekah's information to thoſe particulars:—or he deemed that matter determined by the ſale of the birth-right: or perhaps he knew that Eſau did not ſet much value on the ſpiritual meaning of the bleſſing, and therefore he couched it in general terms. However, though Iſaac ſeems to ſpeak with heſitation, yet the bleſſings were doubtleſs implied in the words here uſed; (xxviii. 3, 4.) But by the appointment of God he was led to ſpeak in ſuch language, as, contrary to his own inclination, expreſsly conferred the dominion, and the whole bleſſing of Abraham upon Jacob.

V. 33. Trembled, &c.] Iſaac was ſeized with conſternation by the various circumſtances, which now ruſhed into his mind, evincing that he had been raſhly attempting to counteract the appointment of God: the language of the whole verſe very emphatically expreſſes the confuſion of his mind, at perceiving in what manner God had fruſtrated his intention: but at the cloſe, he acquieſced in what was done, as manifeſtly the will of God.

V. 34. Exceeding bitter cry, &c.] Eſau was exceedingly grieved to be thus circumvented and diſappointed; and to find that the providence of God had ratified his former fooliſh bargain. Perhaps he dreaded ſome immediate temporal calamity in conſequence: yet it is plain that he had no proper value for the ſpiritual bleſſings of the covenant, made with Abraham and Iſaac, which were thus transferred to Jacob.

father, he cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry, and ſaid unto his father, Bleſs me, even me alſo, O my father.

35 And he ſaid, Thy brother came with ſubtilty, and hath taken away thy bleſſing.

36 And he ſaid, Is not he rightly named Jacob? for he hath ſupplanted me theſe two times: he took away my birth-right; and behold now he hath taken away my bleſſing. And he ſaid, Haſt thou not reſerved a bleſſing for me?

37 And Iſaac anſwered and ſaid unto Eſau, Behold, I have made him thy lord, and all his brethren have I given to him for ſervants; and with corn and wine have I ſuſtained him: and what ſhall I do now unto thee, my ſon?

38 And Eſau ſaid unto his father, Haſt thou but one bleſſing, my father? bleſs me, even me alſo, O my father. And Eſau lifted up his voice, and wept.

39 And Iſaac his father anſwered, and ſaid unto him, Behold, thy dwelling ſhall be the fatneſs of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above.

40 And by thy ſword ſhalt thou live, and ſhalt ſerve thy brother: and it ſhall come to paſs when thou ſhalt have the dominion, that thou ſhalt break his yoke from off thy neck.

41 And Eſau hated Jacob, becauſe of the bleſſing wherewith his father bleſſed him: and Eſau ſaid in his heart, The days of mourning for my father are at hand, then will I ſlay my brother Jacob.

42 And theſe words of Eſau her elder ſon were told to Rebekah: And ſhe ſent and called Jacob her younger ſon, and ſaid unto him, Behold, thy brother Eſau, as touching thee, doth comfort himſelf, purpoſing to kill thee.

43 Now therefore, my ſon, obey my voice: and ariſe, flee thou to Laban my brother to Haran.

44 And tarry with him a few days, until thy brother's fury turn away;

45 Until thy brother's anger turn away from thee, and he forget that which thou haſt done to him: then I will ſend and fetch thee from thence. Why ſhould I be deprived alſo of you both in one day?

46 And Rebekah ſaid to Iſaac, I am weary of my life, becauſe of the daughters of Heth: if Jacob take a wife of the daughters of Heth, ſuch as theſe which are of the daughters of the land, what good ſhall my life do me?

V. 36. He took away, &c.] Eſau ſpake as if Jacob had taken away the birth-right by force or fraud; being more diſpoſed to blame his brother than himſelf.

V. 38. But one, &c.] If Eſau might not have that very bleſſing, which was the bleſſing of Abraham, before limited to Iſaac, and now given to Jacob, which implied and typified the everlaſting bleſſings which believers have in and by Chriſt; he was willing to compound for another bleſſing of a more carnal nature.

V. 39, 40.] This bleſſing was very ſuitable to Eſau's character, and probably would not have been diſagreeable to his inclinations, had it not been for the clauſe, "thou "ſhalt ſerve thy brother." Yet it was intimated that Eſau's poſterity would break his yoke; not ſerve ſubmiſſively, but indignantly; and that at ſome times they would be ſo powerful as to revolt ſucceſsfully. (2 Kings viii. 20—22.)

V. 41. Hated Jacob, &c.] Though Jacob had given Eſau ſome plauſible pretence for his enmity; yet it originated from the ſame ſource, and was of the ſame nature, as the hatred of Cain to Abel: namely, the piety of Jacob's character, and the evident preference which the Lord had manifeſted for him.—Eſau ſeems to have had no regard for Rebekah, whom probably he diſliked for her love to Jacob; and therefore, when Iſaac ſhould be removed, he purpoſed to ſlay his brother, whatever anguiſh his mother might endure.

V. 45. Both in one day?] Either by the death of the murderer, by ſome judgment from God, if human juſtice reached him not; or by his becoming ſo vile, as to be only a trouble and a grief of heart unto her.

V. 46. And Rebekah, &c.] Not deſiring to render Iſaac's mind more uneaſy, Rebekah mentioned not the principal reaſon of her propoſal; but adduced one, which was perfectly conſiſtent with truth, and which gives us a melancholy idea of Eſau's two wives, and the effect of this part of his conduct upon Iſaac's domeſtic felicity.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

What is long life, of which we are ſo deſirous, but the ſurviving of our deareſt friends and choiceſt comforts, our capacities of enjoyment, and our very faculties and ſenſes? And what can life then be but labour and ſorrow?—We ſhould indeed be willing to live as long as, either by active ſervice or patient ſuffering, we can glorify God, and ſerve our generation; but we ſhould never poſtpone the neceſſary preparation for death; and if ready, we need not be unwilling to quit this vale of tears, whenever the Lord ſhall call: nor will the conſtant expectation of the uncertain hour of death, or habitual preparation for it, in the leaſt haſten its approach.—The ſame impartiality, which influenced the inſpired writer, requires us to note, that we muſt not follow the beſt of men, further than they act in conformity with the law of God; and that we meet with many things in this chapter to cenſure and ſhun: ſuch as, Iſaac's partiality for the profane Eſau, and the unworthy grounds of that preference; his inattention to the divine revelation, and his unintentional attempt to diſannul the Lord's purpoſe: Rebekah's raſh project to deceive Iſaac, and her putting into her ſon Jacob's mouth ſo many falſehoods, and powerfully urging him to venture upon them: and Jacob's undertaking and going through with this fraudulent deſign. Nor can their faith, or deſire of the bleſſing juſtify or excuſe, much leſs ſanctify, ſuch unlawful means; we muſt not do evil that good may come. And though God indeed over-ruled theſe unjuſtifiable actions to the accompliſhment of his purpoſes: yet we may read his judgment of them in the conſequences to all the parties concerned; in Iſaac's trembling and conſternation, and diſcord in his family; the piercing of Rebekah's very ſoul by the report of Eſau's murderous intentions; and her parting with her beloved Jacob, probably never more to meet on earth; Jacob's long exile, and many hardſhips; and long after in his fear, leſt enraged Eſau ſhould deſtroy the mother with the children.—But nothing can diſannul the Lord's purpoſe; his counſel muſt and ſhall be eſtabliſhed, notwithſtanding all miſmanagement and oppoſition. We may likewiſe obſerve, that the arts of falſehood are ſoon learned, and one ſin makes way for many; and that a lying lip is but for a moment. Nor can they expect to be treated with candour and truth by others, who do not ſtrictly adhere to veracity themſelves. They, who profanely deſpiſe ſpiritual bleſſings, may one day bewail their folly, with unavailing lamentations: nay, even in this world, there are ſeaſons when the moſt ungodly perceive and envy, though they will not ſeek for, the ſuperior felicity of true believers. Impenitent ſinners blame any body rather than themſelves; and in plenty of worldly good things they ſoon forget the folly and miſery of forfeiting ſpiritual bleſſings. A godly man, when reminded and convinced of the will of God, will ſubmit his inclination to it: though before he were otherwiſe minded. The wicked indeed, being the ſeed of the old ſerpent, implacably and without cauſe hate the righteous: but ſometimes the miſconduct of the righteous furniſhes them with a pretext, and draws forth their enmity into more immediate malice and murder. There is much wickedneſs in the world, but far more in the heart of man, which is reſtrained by fear, natural affection, ſhame, conſcience, or human laws; without which the earth would be a mere Aceldama: for that heart muſt be truly diabolical that can ſeek comfort in a brother's murder. We would commend Rebekah for her prudent care to prevent the fatal effects of her ſon's anger, for her tenderneſs to Iſaac, and for her diſlike to the ill behaviour of Eſau's wives: yet we muſt obſerve, that it is hard to expreſs abhorrence of evil, without ſome mixture of impatience: life may be valuable and uſeful, though the world be wicked and ungrateful.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII.] V. 2. To the houſe.] That is, to the family of Bethuel; for he had been long dead.

V. 9. Unto Iſhmael.] Iſhmael alſo had been dead ſome time, but Eſau went to his family. It does not appear whether he would have done right, had he married Iſhmael's daughter firſt and ſingly. We hope ſome regard to Abraham's God remained in Iſhmael's family; yet it did not look well in Eſau to unite himſelf with thoſe who were caſt out from the inheritance by God himſelf: but to marry her, when he had two other wives, was certainly making bad worſe.

daughter of Iſhmael Abraham's ſon, the ſiſter of Nebajoth, to be his wife.

10 And Jacob went out from Beer-ſheba, and went toward Haran.

11 And he lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night, becauſe the ſun was ſet: and he took of the ſtones of that place, and put them for his pillows, and laid down in that place to ſleep.

12 And he dreamed, and behold, a ladder ſet upon the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold, the angels of God aſcending and deſcending on it.

13 And behold, the LORD ſtood above it, and ſaid, I am the LORD God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Iſaac: the land whereon thou lieſt, to thee will I give it, and to thy ſeed.

14 And thy ſeed ſhall be as the duſt of the earth: and thou ſhalt ſpread abroad to the weſt, and to the eaſt, and to the north, and to the ſouth: and in thee and in thy ſeed ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed.

15 And behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goeſt, and will bring thee again into this land: for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have ſpoken to thee of.

16 And Jacob awaked out of his ſleep, and he ſaid, Surely the LORD is in this place; and I knew it not.

17 And he was afraid, and ſaid, How dreadful is this place! this is none other but the houſe of God, and this is the gate of heaven.

18 And Jacob roſe up early in the morning, and took the ſtone that he had put for his pillows, and ſet it up for a pillar, and poured oil upon the top of it.

19 And he called the name of that place

V. 11. And, &c.] We muſt not reſolve the ſolitary journey of Jacob on this occaſion merely into the ſimplicity of the times; for the ſervant of Abraham, when he took the ſame journey on a ſimilar occaſion, had a ſuitable retinue: and probably Iſaac was more wealthy than his father. We may ſuppoſe that it was concerted by Rebekah, in order that Jacob might ſet out on his journey unobſerved by Eſau, and leſt he ſhould embrace that opportunity of murdering him; and to prevent Eſau's envy and jealouſy being any further excited, as they would have been had Jacob been ſent off with a proportionable attendance; but rather that they might be abated by the conſideration of the hardſhips to which Jacob was expoſed: and that it might appear that he did not, in conſequence of the birth-right and bleſſing, intend to proſecute a claim to the temporal riches of his father. (Note Gen. iv. 7.) Jacob, as a plain man, would have no objection to go unattended and obſcure. Yet we cannot conclude from the meanneſs of this night's lodging, that he had not wherewithal to purchaſe a better: but night coming on, there being no public inns, and no hoſpitable perſon at hand; and the climate being mild, having taken ſuch refreſhment as he had with him, and being weary and of a hardy diſpoſition, he ſoon compoſed himſelf to ſleep: though in a ſituation which we ſhould think neither comfortable nor ſecure.

V. 12. Dreamed, &c.] This ladder ſeems to have been an emblem of the gracious care, that the God of heaven takes of the inhabitants of the earth, eſpecially of ſuch as fear and truſt in him; which is in great meaſure rendered effectual by the miniſtry of holy angels, executing his mandates and reporting their ſervices: but all this is vouchſafed us only through Jeſus Chriſt. In his perſon, as God manifeſt in the fleſh, the communication betwixt heaven and earth is prepared; through his incarnation, ſacrifice, reſurrection, aſcenſion, and advocacy, a new and living way is opened into the holieſt; by this way ſinners draw near with acceptance for their perſons and ſervices to the throne of grace; and all bleſſings are communicated through him from our reconciled Father to his redeemed people. By faith we perceive this way, and in prayer we approach by it: in anſwer to which we receive all needful bleſſings of providence and grace, by the miniſtrations of angels, and by the ſupply of the Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt.—He then is the true ladder; and Jacob, as well as Abraham, ſaw his day, and was glad. (John i. 51.)

V. 14. And thy ſeed, &c.] We ſhould bear in mind that when this promiſe was made, Jacob was above ſeventy years old, and unmarried.

V. 16, 17.] Jacob was not ignorant of God's omnipreſence, nor of his gracious nearneſs to them who fear him. But having left his father's houſe under the rebukes of Providence, probably uneaſy in his conſcience, fleeing from the face of enraged Eſau; and being deprived not only of the ſolace of the company of endeared friends, of whom he had taken a ſorrowful farewel, but of the ordinances of divine worſhip from which he was exiled; and having nothing before him but a long journey to a ſtrange country, his heart probably was diſquieted within him, and he was ready to ſay, "I am baniſhed from the ſight of thine eyes." Little expecting the ordinary comforts of religion, he was ſurpriſed with this extraordinary viſit, and theſe gracious aſſurances: and in a deep ſenſe of his own unworthineſs and of his unbelieving deſpondency, and in a thankful reverential acknowledgment of the divine condeſcenſion, he thus expreſſed his mingled affections.

V. 18. Poured oil upon it.] Expreſſing, as well as he was able in his preſent ſituation, his willing mind to offer

Beth-el: but the name of that city was called Luz at the firſt.

20 And Jacob vowed a vow, ſaying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on;

21 So that I come again to my father's houſe in peace: then ſhall the LORD be my God;

22 And this ſtone, which I have ſet for a pillar, ſhall be God's houſe: and of all that thou ſhalt give me, I will ſurely give the tenth unto thee.

the ſacrifice of praiſe, and his deſire to keep in remembrance the goodneſs of the Lord, who had anſwered him in the day of his diſtreſs. (xxxv. 1—5.)

V. 19. Bethel.] That is, The houſe of God.

V. 20. Vowed a vow, &c.] Jacob ſolemnly bound himſelf unto God, by a voluntary engagement to do as follows.—This does not imply in him any unbelieving diſtruſt of the divine promiſe, or diſpoſition to dictate to the Lord; or as if otherwiſe he would not have him for his God. But he merely takes the Lord's words, puts the moſt moderate ſenſe upon them, and intimates, that having food and raiment, he deſires no more; and that, when he returned in peace as was promiſed, he would publicly ſet up the worſhip of the Lord his God, as his father and grandfather had done; build an altar in that very ſpot, and offer the tenth of all the ſubſtance he brought back with him, to the immediate ſervice of God and the ſupport of his worſhip. All he engaged for was lawful and practicable; and the circumſtances, the place of this ſolemn worſhip, and the proportion of his goods to be thus dedicated, were in themſelves things diſcretionary, and thus the proper matter for a religious vow.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is incumbent upon parents to unite their influence and authority, with their wiſdom and experience, in warning, adviſing, and charging things of importance upon the conſciences of their children: and when ſuch inſtructions are joined with fervent affectionate prayers, they are likely to make a deep impreſſion. It is alſo well, when former miſcarriages render us more watchful and attentive, and when we have humility enough openly and explicitly to retract what we have erroneouſly attempted. Good examples of obedience to God and godly parents cannot but make ſome impreſſions even upon the profane and malicious: but a few external acts of partial or imaginary amendment, which only ſpring from a deſire of pleaſing men, too often ſerve as a fatal quietus to the conſcience.—We know not to what hardſhips we may in God's providence be called: it is good therefore to inure ourſelves to labour and ſelf-denial: the very things which are intolerable to the delicate and luxurious, are ſcarcely inconvenient to thoſe who have been accuſtomed to labour and fare hardly.—When the Lord hath made his offending children ſenſible of, and penitent for, their miſconduct, he will again encourage them, leſt they ſhould be ſwallowed up of over-much ſorrow: and generally the ſweeteſt comforts are afforded in the ſharpeſt trials, and ſurpriſe us when ready to faint under deſerved rebukes. When the ſoul by faith can ſee Chriſt, the true ladder, opening the way of communication betwixt heaven and earth, and ſecuring to us acceptance with God, the protection of his providence, the miniſtrations of his angels, and the conſolations of his Spirit, every place will become pleaſant, and every proſpect joyful. With ſuch a guide, companion, and Comforter, we may defy all enemies, out-brave all dangers, and deſpiſe all difficulties: every thing muſt ſpeed well, and end well; and he will never leave us, until his laſt promiſe is accompliſhed in our everlaſting felicity. It is well when the places and ordinances, in which God is more eſpecially preſent, are regarded with ſolemn reverence; and when peculiar conſolations leave us filled with holy awe, prepared for ſelf-denying ſervices, and diſpoſed to adopt every means of keeping the Lord's goodneſs in remembrance. Many an Iſraelite indeed, who had been for a time burdened with guilt, oppreſſed with deſponding fears, and conflicting with difficulties and temptations; having at length unexpectedly been ſurpriſed with ſweet peace, and a ſenſe of pardoning mercy, through the love of God ſhed abroad in his heart by the Holy Spirit, has, in adoring gratitude, ſurnamed the ſcene of ſuch a deliverance, Bethel; has deemed it the very houſe of God, and the gate of heaven; and perhaps been afraid to quit it, leſt he ſhould loſe the ſweet conſolations which he had taſted, or forget the loving kindeſs of the Lord. At ſuch a time how ready are we to enquire, what we ſhall render unto the Lord for his goodneſs! How willing are we to forego all worldly conſiderations, and to be content with food and raiment, however mean and hard-earned! How do we ſtand prepared for any ſervice or ſuffering; and by ſolemn vows to yield ourſelves unto the Lord, to take him for our God, and to devote all we have and are to his glory! All this is well, and as it ſhould be: but oh! that there were at all times ſuch a heart in us! Let us remember our Bethels, be aſhamed of our forgetfulneſs, and pay the vows which we vowed in the day, when the Lord anſwered us in our diſtreſs.

GENESIS. CH. XXIX. VE. X.

Corbould del. Taylor sculp.

Publish'd as the Act directs by Bellamy & Roberts Nov. 7. 1790.

2 And he looked, and behold, a well in the field, and lo, there were three flocks of ſheep lying by it; for out of that well they watered the flocks: and a great ſtone was upon the well's mouth.

3 And thither were all the flocks gathered: and they rolled the ſtone from the well's mouth, and watered the ſheep, and put the ſtone again upon the well's mouth in his place.

4 And Jacob ſaid unto them, My brethren, whence be ye? and they ſaid, Of Haran are we.

5 And he ſaid unto them, Know ye Laban the ſon of Nahor? And they ſaid, We know him.

6 And he ſaid unto them, Is he well? And they ſaid, He is well: and behold, Rachel his daughter cometh with the ſheep.

7 And he ſaid, Lo, it is yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle ſhould be gathered together: water ye the ſheep, and go and feed them.

8 And they ſaid, We cannot until all the flocks be gathered together, and till they roll the ſtone from the well's mouth; then we water the ſheep.

9 And while he yet ſpake with them, Rachel came with her father's ſheep: for ſhe kept them.

10 And it came to paſs, when Jacob ſaw Rachel the daughter of Laban his mother's brother, and the ſheep of Laban his mother's brother; that Jacob went near, and rolled the ſtone from the well's mouth, and watered the flock of Laban his mother's brother.

11 And Jacob kiſſed Rachel, and lifted up his voice, and wept.

12 And Jacob told Rachel that he was her father's brother, and that he was Rebekah's ſon: and ſhe ran and told her father.

13 And it came to paſs, when Laban heard the tidings of Jacob his ſiſter's ſon, that he ran to meet him, and embraced him, and kiſſed him, and brought him to his houſe. And he told Laban all theſe things.

14 And Laban ſaid to him, Surely thou art my bone and my fleſh: and he abode with him the ſpace of a month.

15 And Laban ſaid unto Jacob, Becauſe thou art my brother, ſhouldſt thou therefore ſerve me for nought? tell me what ſhall thy wages be?

16 And Laban had two daughters: the name of the elder was Leah, and the name of the younger was Rachel.

17 Leah was tender-eyed, but Rachel was beautiful and well-favoured.

18 And Jacob loved Rachel; and ſaid, I will ſerve thee ſeven years for Rachel thy younger daughter.

19 And Laban ſaid, It is better that I give her to thee, than that I ſhould give her to another man: abide with me.

20 And Jacob ſerved ſeven years for Rachel; and they ſeemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her.

21 And Jacob ſaid unto Laban, Give me

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIX.] V. 5. Laban the ſon of Nahor.] That is the deſcendant of Nahor; Laban ſeems to have been Nahor's grandſon This is very common in the language of Scripture.

V. 8. We cannot, &c.] This would have been contrary to ſome regulation, formed by mutual conſent, to prevent the waſte, or the unequal uſe, of the water, where it was ſo ſcarce and valuable.

V. 14. My bone and my fleſh] That is, a very near relation, being Laban's ſiſter's ſon.

V. 21. Give me, &c.] It hath been a queſtion of more difficulty than importance, whether Jacob married his wives previous to his firſt ſeven years ſervice, or not until its expiration: but the language of the narration ſeems to determine, that he waited, old as he was, till ſeven years were expired before his marriage. To this indeed ſome objections have been made, eſpecially from the circumſtances of Judah's family, previous to, and at their going down into Egypt. This event took place when Joſéph was not above 40, and Judah, according to this calculation, not above 44 years of age: now Judah had had two ſons, both married to Tamar in ſucceſſion (xxxviii.); after their death he himſelf had Pharez by inceſtuous commerce with her, and Pharez was married and had two children when Jacob went down into Egypt. This ſuppoſes, that all theſe parties, Judah, Onan, and Pharez, married and had children as young as at thirteen or fourteen years of age. (xlvi. 12—26.) But add ſeven years my wife, (for my days are fulfilled,) that I may go in unto her.

22 And Laban gathered together all the men of the place, and made a feaſt.

23 And it came to paſs in the evening, that he took Leah his daughter, and brought her to him: and he went in unto her.

24 And Laban gave unto his daughter Leah, Zilpah his maid for an handmaid.

25 And it came to paſs that in the morning, behold it was Leah: and he ſaid to Laban, What is this thou haſt done unto me? did not I ſerve with thee for Rachel? Wherefore then haſt thou beguiled me?

26 And Laban ſaid, It muſt not be ſo done in our country, to give the younger before the firſt-born.

27 Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this alſo, for the ſervice which thou ſhalt ſerve with me yet ſeven other years.

28 And Jacob did ſo, and fulfilled her week: and he gave him Rachel his daughter to wife alſo.

29 And Laban gave to Rachel his daughter Bilhah his handmaid, to be her maid.

30 And he went in alſo unto Rachel, and he loved alſo Rachel more than Leah, and ſerved with him yet ſeven other years.

31 And when the LORD ſaw that Leah was hated, he opened her womb: but Rache was barren.

32 And Leah conceived and bare a ſon, and ſhe called his name Reuben: for ſhe ſaid, Surely the LORD hath looked upon my affliction; now therefore my huſband will love me.

33 And ſhe conceived again, and bare a ſon; and ſaid, Becauſe the LORD hath heard that I was hated, he hath therefore given me this ſon alſo: and ſhe called his name Simeon.

34 And ſhe conceived again, and bare a ſon; and ſaid, Now this time will my huſband be joined unto me, becauſe I have born him three ſons: therefore was his name called Levi.

35 And ſhe conceived again, and bare a ſon; and ſhe ſaid, Now will I praiſe the LORD: therefore ſhe called his name Judah, and left bearing.

more, by ſuppoſing Jacob married when he firſt went to Laban, and this would allow ſixteen or ſeventeen years to each ſucceſſion. There is however another method of getting over this difficulty, which will be mentioned in its proper place. Without anticipating the reader's deciſion, it may be proper to obſerve, that it is very obvious Judah, and the other deſcendants of Jacob, married very young: and though it was proper that the perſons, to whom the promiſe was immediately made, ſhould, in evidence or exerciſe of their faith, live long unmarried or childleſs; yet it might naturally be expected that afterwards the progenitors of ſuch a numerous poſterity ſhould marry, and have children as ſoon as poſſible.

V. 23. Took Leah.] Thus he, who by perſonating Eſau had impoſed upon his father, was impoſed upon by Laban and Leah, in a very important concern, by a like deception.

V. 26. It muſt not, &c.] We have reaſon to think that this was a mere pretence; or if it were any thing more, Jacob ought to have been previouſly informed.

V. 31. Hated.] Jacob loved Rachel moſt; (30,) and through that preference was led, in many reſpects, to treat Leah with ſuch indifference and neglect, as reſembled hatred.

V. 32—35.] Reuben ſignifies, ſee a ſon; Simeon, hearing; Levi, union; and Judah, praiſe.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Gracious conſolations are intended as cordials to animate and ſtrengthen us, that we may run without wearineſs and walk without fainting, in the arduous and ſelf-denying paths of obedience: and in ſo doing, we ſhall ſpeedily experience the Lord's faithfulneſs to his promiſes. Thus far he accompanied, and kept Jacob, in all the places through which he went. We cannot but feel a diſpoſition to approve the ſimplicity, courteouſneſs, and benevolence, which mark this firſt interview betwixt Jacob and the ſhepherds: the frank manner in which he makes his obſervations, offers his advice, and affords his aſſiſtance; and the mild and candid reception he meets with from them: though proud ſpirits are often offended with ſuch intimations of miſtake or blame. He who has all hearts in his hands, diſpoſes all things for the good of thoſe who truſt in and follow him, and works upon the natural affection even of ſelfiſh hearts to procure them kind entertainment. But they who are ſkillful and active in buſineſs, being capable of rendering themſelves uſeful, will generally, when known, be made welcome:—nor ſhould our relations be leſs rewarded for their ſervices than others, but ſhould meet with greater encouragement.—Whatever be the object of love, it is a moſt active and powerful principle; and not only engages a man in hard and difficult

6 And Rachel ſaid, God hath judged me, and hath alſo heard my voice, and hath given me a ſon: therefore called ſhe his name Dan.

7 And Bilhah Rachel's maid conceived again, and bare Jacob a ſecond ſon.

8 And Rachel, ſaid, With great wreſtlings have I wreſtled with my ſiſter, and I have prevailed: and ſhe called his name Naphtali.

9 When Leah ſaw that ſhe had left bearing, ſhe took Zilpah her maid, and gave her Jacob to wife.

10 And Zilpah Leah's maid bare Jacob a ſon.

11 And Leah ſaid, A troop cometh: and ſhe called his name Gad.

12 And Zilpah Leah's maid bare Jacob a ſecond ſon.

13 And Leah ſaid, Happy am I, for the daughters will call me bleſſed: and ſhe called his name Aſher.

14 And Reuben went in the days of wheat-harveſt, and found mandrakes in the field, and brought them unto his mother Leah. Then Rachel ſaid to Leah, Give me, I pray thee, of thy ſon's mandrakes.

15 And ſhe ſaid unto her, Is it a ſmall matter that thou haſt taken my huſband? and wouldſt thou take away my ſon's mandrakes alſo? And Rachel ſaid, Therefore he ſhall lie with thee to night for thy ſon's mandrakes.

16 And Jacob came out of the field in the ſervices, but even renders them delightful. If the Lord have our ſupreme love, we ſhall greatly delight in his commandments, and all our other affections will be regulated and ſubordinated by it, and rendered lawful and uſeful: yet times may come, when we muſt, in the ſuperiority of our love to him, be called to diſregard our deareſt friends, as if we hated them. But, on the other hand, if they have our ſupreme regard, we ſhall for their ſakes deſpiſe and neglect the Lord.—How often in God's providence are men paid in their own coin, reminded of their ſin in their puniſhment, and corrected by others much worſe than themſelves? Yet in all this the Lord is righteous. One cannot but lament to ſee Jacob cheated into polygamy, after living ſo many years unmarried; and ſurely we may obſerve that the malice and artifice of Satan are diſcernible in this buſineſs.—However, the Lord ſo ſets one thing againſt another, that there is leſs difference in the comparative happineſs of mankind, than ſuperficial obſervers imagine: and in the moſt ordinary circumſtances of private life, the hand of the Lord is to be acknowledged: "Lo! children and the fruit of the womb are an heritage "and gift that cometh of the Lord," and are to be received as ſent by him, and trained up for him.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXX.] V. 1. Give me, &c.] That is, 'I 'ſhall fret myſelf to death; my heart will be broken with 'inward anguiſh.' It may be uſeful to compare this impatience of Rachel with Rebekah's conduct when barren 20 years, and with Hannah's weeping, praying, humble requiſition and ſolemn vow. (1 Sam. i.)

V. 3. Upon my knees.] Rachel meant, that ſhe would adopt and nurſe Bilhah's children as her own, and thus ſolace herſelf under the trial and reproach of barrenneſs. Had not her ſiſter been her rival, and had not her heart been diſtorted with malignant paſſions, ſhe would have thought Leah's children nearer to her, and more entitled to her care, than Bilhah's.

V. 6. Dan.] That is, judgment.

V. 8. Naphthali.] That is, wreſtlings.

V. 11. Gad.] That is, a troop.

V. 13. Aſher.] That is, bleſſed.

V. 14. Mandrakes.] Theſe were probably either fruit, or flowers, pleaſing to the eye, the taſte, or the ſmell; but we know not what.

V. 15, 16.] The ambition good in itſelf, but often evening, and Leah went out to meet him, and ſaid, Thou muſt come in unto me, for ſurely I have hired thee with my ſon's mandrakes. And he lay with her that night.

17 And God hearkened unto Leah, and ſhe conceived and bare Jacob the fifth ſon.

18 And Leah ſaid, God hath given me mine hire, becauſe I have given my maiden to my huſband: and ſhe called his name Iſſachar.

19 And Leah conceived again, and bare Jacob the ſixth ſon.

20 And Leah ſaid, God hath endued me with a good dowry; now will my huſband dwell with me, becauſe I have borne him ſix ſons: and ſhe called his name Zebulun.

21 And afterwards ſhe bare a daughter, and called her name Dinah.

22 And God remembered Rachel, and God hearkened to her, and opened her womb.

23 And ſhe conceived and bare a ſon: and ſaid, God hath taken away my reproach.

24 And ſhe called his name Joſeph; and ſaid, The LORD ſhall add to me another ſon.

25 And it came to paſs, when Rachel had borne Joſeph, that Jacob ſaid unto Laban, Send me away, that I may go unto mine own place, and to my country.

26 Give me my wives and my children, for whom I have ſerved thee, and let me go: for thou knoweſt my ſervice which I have done thee.

27 And Laban ſaid unto him, I pray thee, if I have found favour in thine eyes, tarry: for I have learned by experience, that the LORD hath bleſſed me for thy ſake.

28 And he ſaid, Appoint me thy wages, and I will give it.

29 And he ſaid unto him, Thou knoweſt how I have ſerved thee, and how thy cattle was with me.

30 For it was little which thou hadſt before I came, and it is now increaſed unto a multitude: and the LORD hath bleſſed thee ſince my coming: and now when ſhall I provide for mine own houſe alſo?

31 And he ſaid, What ſhall I give thee? And Jacob ſaid, Thou ſhalt not give me any thing: if thou wilt do this thing for me, I will again feed and keep thy flock:

32 I will paſs through all thy flock to day, removing from thence all the ſpeckled, and ſpotted cattle, and all the brown cattle among the ſheep, and the ſpotted and ſpeckled among the goats: and of ſuch ſhall be my hire.

33 So ſhall my righteouſneſs anſwer for me in time to come, when it ſhall come for my hire before thy face: every one that is not ſpeckled and ſpotted amongſt the goats, and brown amongſt the ſheep, that ſhall be accounted ſtolen with me.

34 And Laban ſaid, Behold, I would it might be according to thy word.

35 And he removed that day the he-goats, that were ring-ſtraked and ſpotted, and all inordinate and irregular, of being the mother of the promiſed Seed; together with the honour of being prolific, and the reproach of being barren, were probably the chief ſources of this unbecoming conteſt.

V. 18. God, &c.] Leah was ſo far from conſidering herſelf culpable in giving her handmaiden to her huſband, that ſhe ignorantly deemed it meritorious, and erroneouſly interpreted the Lord's kindneſs as the reward of it. (8.) Iſſachar ſignifies hire.

V. 20. Zebulun.] Signifies dowry.

V. 24. Joſeph.] That is, he hath added.

V. 26. For whom, &c.] The fourteen years being now expired, Jacob was willing to depart without any other recompence for his hard ſervice, except his large family; or any other proviſion, except God's promiſe. But he had, in many ways, an equitable claim on Laban's ſubſtance, and it was the will of God that he ſhould be provided for out of it.

V. 30. Since my coming, &c.] Laban had acknowledged that the Lord had bleſſed him for Jacob's ſake; but Jacob, with obſervable modeſty, only ſaid, that it was ſince his coming.

V. 31. Any thing, &c.] As ſtated wages; but that which the providence of God ſhould allot in the following manner.

V. 33. So ſhall my, &c.] It would appear that Jacob had acted honeſtly; when none but thoſe of the ſtipulated colours ſhould be found among his cattle.

V. 34. Behold, I would, &c.] Laban, who was a ſelfiſh man, argued from common obſervation, and concluded that the white cattle would engender few or none of other colours: But Jacob thus made his appeal to God to recompenſe him as he pleaſed for his labours.

the ſhe-goats that were ſpeckled and ſpotted, and every one that had ſome white in it, and all the brown among the ſheep, and gave them into the hand of his ſons.

36 And he ſet three days journey betwixt himſelf and Jacob: and Jacob fed the reſt of Laban's flocks.

37 And Jacob took him rods of green poplar, and of the haſel and cheſnut-tree; and pilled white ſtrakes in them, and made the white appear which was in the rods.

38 And he ſet the rods which he had pilled before the flocks in the gutters in the watering-troughs, when the flocks came to drink; that they ſhould conceive when they came to drink.

39 And the flocks conceived before the rods, and brought forth cattle ring-ſtraked, ſpeckled, and ſpotted.

40 And Jacob did ſeparate the lambs, and ſet the faces of the flocks toward the ring-ſtraked, and all the brown in the flock of Laban: and he put his own flocks by themſelves; and put them not unto Laban's cattle.

41 And it came to paſs whenſoever the ſtronger cattle did conceive, that Jacob laid the rods before the eyes of the cattle in the gutters, that they might conceive among the rods.

42 But when the cattle were feeble, he put them not in: ſo the feebler were Laban's, and the ſtronger Jacob's.

43 And the man increaſed exceedingly, and had much cattle, and maid-ſervants, and men-ſervants, and camels, and aſſes.

V. 37. And Jacob took, &c.] This has generally been conſidered as an inſtance of Jacob's policy and management; and has by ſome been objected to, and by others commended: but I do not ſuppoſe that ſuch a contrivance would be found in general to produce a ſimilar effect. It ſhould rather be conſidered as done by intimation from God; and as a mere ſignal, or token of his power, performing a ſupernatural operation; or at leaſt giving a new and uncommon bias to the tendency of natural cauſes. (xxxi. 12.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is dangerous for eminent ſaints to ſanction any thing evil by their example: becauſe it is ſo eaſy and natural to imitate their miſtakes; and even to go beyond thoſe in tranſgreſſion, whoſe example of faith and obedience we by no means equal; nay, we are apt to think ourſelves authoriſed, or at leaſt excuſed in ſo doing. What an unhappy precedent was Sarah to Rachel and Leah, and Abraham to Jacob! We are grieved to ſee this plain man, in his old age, yielding to one ſuggeſtion after another to multiply wives; though by that means he only multiplied bitter envying, and contention in his family. This his way was his folly; though many of his poſterity approved and imitated his example. To carry matters even betwixt two wives, who have an equal claim to affection, is almoſt, if not entirely impoſſible: and to fail of it enſures emulation, and ſtrife, and every evil work; even perpetuating diſcord to poſterity. How much more comfortably did Iſaac live with his one wife, according to God's primary inſtitution!—Envy and jealouſy are moſt tormenting paſſions to the breaſt which harbours them, very vexatious to all around us, and introductory to much impatience and ungodlineſs. We ſhould do well to obſerve how abſurd and odious they appear in Rachel, that we may watch and pray againſt them in ourſelves; and turn aſide from all ſuch objects and purſuits, as tend to excite them. Too frequently they, who poſſeſs the moſt beautiful countenances, are lamentably deficient in the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which is in the ſight of God, and of all wiſe men, of much greater value: and partial affections are oft corrected by the perſons, on whom they are miſplaced—They who are only angry at ſin, and expreſs that anger only by reaſonable though ſharp rebuke, and with zeal for the honour of God, are not ſinfully angry; nor muſt thoſe we love beſt be connived at in wickedneſs.—Our natural conſcience is a partial and erroneous judge, and, if left to itſelf, will often excuſe, nay commend our very faults: we have need therefore to ſeek to the word, and pray for the Spirit of God, to illuminate our underſtanding, and deliver our conſcience from miſtake and ſelf-flattery.—Still, however, the Lord hears the prayer of faith, and paſſes by the tranſgreſſion of his people; and graciouſly recompenſes and honours their integrity and faithful induſtry. He convinces all, with whom they are connected, that he hath loved them, and that he bleſſes others on their account: ſo that it is not uncommon for thoſe, who love neither their perſons nor their godlineſs, to value them for the ſake of their own intereſt; and to deſire to deal with, and employ them in preference to others: and all that name the name of Chriſt ſhould, for the honour of his Goſpel, be ambitious of this diſtinction.—The Lord will alſo, one way or other, plead the cauſe of the injured and oppreſſed; and honour thoſe, who ſimply truſt his providence, are careful to do no evil, avoid the appearance of it, and walk ſo wiſely, as to give no occaſion of reproach to thoſe, who manifeſtly are ſeeking it. As the earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof, he has a right to diſpoſe of every one's property as he pleaſes; and who ſhall dare to find fault with his appointments?

AND he heard the words of Laban's ſons, ſaying, Jacob hath taken away all that was our father's; and of that which was our father's hath he gotten all this glory.

2 And Jacob beheld the countenance of Laban, and behold, it was not toward him as before.

3 And the LORD ſaid unto Jacob, Return unto the land of thy fathers, and to thy kindred; and I will be with thee.

4 And Jacob ſent and called Rachel and Leah to the field unto his flock,

5 And ſaid unto them, I ſee your father's countenance, that it is not towards me as before: but the God of my father hath been with me.

6 And ye know that with all my power I have ſerved your father.

7 And your father hath deceived me, and changed my wages ten times: but God ſuffered him not to hurt me.

8 If he ſaid thus, The ſpeckled ſhall be thy wages; then all the cattle bare ſpeckled: and if he ſaid thus, The ring-ſtraked ſhall be thy hire; then bare all the cattle ring-ſtraked.

9 Thus God hath taken away the cattle of your father, and given them to me.

10 And it came to paſs at the time that the cattle conceived, that I lifted up mine eyes, and ſaw in a dream, and behold the rams which leaped upon the cattle were ring-ſtraked, ſpeckled, and griſled.

11 And the angel of God ſpake unto me in a dream, ſaying, Jacob: And I ſaid, Here am I.

12 And he ſaid, Lift up now thine eyes and ſee, all the rams which leap upon the cattle are ring-ſtraked, ſpeckled, and griſled: for I have ſeen all that Laban doeth unto thee.

13 I am the God of Beth-el, where thou anointedſt the pillar, and where thou vowedſt a vow unto me: now ariſe, get thee out from this land, and return unto the land of thy kindred.

14 And Rachel and Leah anſwered, and ſaid unto him, Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's houſe?

15 Are we not counted of him ſtrangers? for he hath ſold us, and hath quite devoured alſo our money.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXI.] V. 2. It was not, &c.] Laban appeared ſo diſſatisfied, and expreſſed in his looks ſo much envy and reſentment, that Jacob deemed it dangerous to continue longer with him: yet he did not move, until the Lord expreſsly commanded him; perhaps thinking it ſtill more dangerous to come within the reach of his brother.

V. 7. Ten times.] As the hiſtory of theſe ſix years is very compendious, we cannot determine, whether Laban changed Jacob's wages exactly ten times, or whether it mean generally many times. It is plain, however, that Laban tried all methods of circumventing and defrauding Jacob, but in vain.

V. 10. Behold the rams, &c.] The Lord called on Jacob peculiarly to note this circumſtance, that he might be ſatisfied it was not the effect of chance, or human policy, but his own expreſs appointment: in order that he might poſſeſs his ſubſtance with a quiet conſcience, and a thankful heart; regardleſs of the unmerited anger and reproaches of Laban and his ſons.

V. 11—13.] The angel of God ſpake—I am the God of Beth-el: The reader ſhould carefully note this and ſimilar language, as continually augmenting the evidence that the ſpeaker was no other than the Word and Son of God, who was God, and with God, and now condeſcended to be the Angel or Meſſenger of the Father to men; as he afterwards did in human nature to take upon him the form of a ſervant. Yet in both manifeſtations of himſelf He could ſay: "He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the "Father; for I and the Father are One." This title, the God of Beth-el, &c. would be peculiarly encouraging, quickening and edifying to Jacob.

V. 15. Are we not counted, &c.?] Rachel and Leah meant that Laban, inſtead of providing for them as children, had ſold them as ſtrangers and ſlaves for the increaſe of his wealth.

16 For all the riches which God hath taken from our father, that is our's, and our children's: now then whatſoever God hath ſaid unto thee do.

17 Then Jacob roſe up, and ſet his ſons and his wives upon camels.

18 And he carried away all his cattle, and all his goods which he had gotten, the cattle of his getting, which he had gotten in Padan-aram; for to go to Iſaac his father in the land of Canaan.

19 And Laban went to ſhear his ſheep: and Rachel had ſtolen the images that were her father's.

20 And Jacob ſtole away unawares to Laban the Syrian, in that he told him not that he fled.

21 So he fled with all that he had, and he roſe up, and paſſed over the river, and ſet his face toward the mount Gilead.

22 And it was told Laban on the third day that Jacob was fled.

23 And he took his brethren with him, and purſued after him ſeven days journey; and they overtook him in the mount Gilead.

24 And God came to Laban the Syrian in a dream by night, and ſaid unto him, Take heed that thou ſpeak not to Jacob either good or bad.

25 Then Laban overtook Jacob. Now Jacob had pitched his tent in the mount: and Laban with his brethren pitched in the mount of Gilead.

26 And Laban ſaid to Jacob, What haſt thou done, that thou haſt ſtolen away unawares to me, and carried away my daughters, as captives taken with the ſword?

27 Wherefore didſt thou flee away ſecretly, and ſteal away from me? and didſt not tell me, that I might have ſent thee away with mirth, and with ſongs, with tabret, and with harp?

28 And haſt not ſuffered me to kiſs my ſons and my daughters? thou haſt now done fooliſhly in ſo doing.

29 It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt: but the God of your father ſpake unto me yeſter-night, ſaying, Take thou heed that thou ſpeak not to Jacob either good or bad.

30 And now though thou wouldſt needs be gone, becauſe thou ſore longeſt after thy father's houſe; yet wherefore haſt thou ſtolen my gods?

31 And Jacob anſwered and ſaid to Laban, Becauſe I was afraid: for I ſaid, Peradventure thou wouldſt take by force thy daughters from me.

32 With whomſoever thou findeſt thy gods, let him not live: before our brethren diſcern thou what is thine with me, and take it to thee: for Jacob knew not that Rachel had ſtolen them.

33 And Laban went into Jacob's tent, and into Leah's tent, and into the two maid-ſervants tents; but he found them not. Then went he out of Leah's tent, and entered into Rachel's tent.

34 Now Rachel had taken the images, and put them in the camel's furniture, and ſat upon them: and Laban ſearched all the tent, but found them not.

35 And ſhe ſaid to her father, Let it not diſpleaſe my lord that I cannot riſe up before thee; for the cuſtom of women is upon me;

V. 16. That is our's, &c.] God hath thus provided for us, and we acknowledge his hand in it, and expect and deſire no more.

V. 19. Images, &c.] Learned men are not agreed what theſe images or teraphim were. It is plain they had been uſed for idolatrous purpoſes: but it is not equally evident what Rachel's motive was in taking them away; whether ſhe intended to uſe them in idolatry, or to prevent her father from ſo doing. She, however, did wrong, and expoſed herſelf and the reſt of the company to danger; and they afterwards ſeem to have been a ſnare to Jacob's family. (xxxv. 2—4.)

V. 21. The river.] That is Euphrates.

V. 23. Purſued after, &c.] Without doubt Laban intended at leaſt to have plundered Jacob, or to have conſtrained his return;—but the Lord withheld him.

V. 26. As captives, &c.] This was very falſe and injurious: Jacob had a nearer intereſt in Leah and Rachel than Laban had: and they had voluntarily agreed to go with their huſband, rather than abide with their father; and indeed this was their duty.

V. 27, 28.] Laban pretended to ſo amicable a diſpoſition, now that he was overawed and durſt not hurt Jacob and his company.

V. 30. Sore longeſt, &c.] Laban would thus inſinuate that Jacob had no other cauſe of diſſatisfaction.

V. 31. Becauſe I was afraid, &c.] Jacob anſwered the former queſtion in the firſt place, without mentioning it: Becauſe I was afraid, therefore I ſtole away.

V. 32. Let him not live, &c.] This was raſh, and might have produced fatal effects: but Jacob was partial to Rachel, and ſuſpected her not.

and he ſearched, but found not the images.

36 And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban: and Jacob anſwered, and ſaid to Laban, What is my treſpaſs? what is my ſin, that thou haſt ſo hotly purſued after me?

37 Whereas thou haſt ſearched all my ſtuff, what haſt thou found of all thy houſhold-ſtuff? ſet it here before my brethren and thy brethren, that they may judge betwixt us both.

38 This twenty years have I been with thee: thy ewes and thy ſhe-goats have not caſt their young, and the rams of thy flock have I not eaten.

39 That which was torn of beaſts, I brought not unto thee, I bare the loſs of it; of my hand didſt thou require it, whether ſtolen by day, or ſtolen by night.

40 Thus I was, in the day the drought conſumed me, and the froſt by night; and my ſleep departed from mine eyes.

41 Thus have I been twenty years in thy houſe; I ſerved thee fourteen years for thy two daughters, and ſix years for thy cattle: and thou haſt changed my wages ten times.

42 Except the God of my father, the God of Abraham, and the fear of Iſaac had been with me, ſurely thou hadſt ſent me away now empty: God hath ſeen mine affliction, and the labour of my hands, and rebuked thee yeſternight.

43 And Laban anſwered, and ſaid unto Jacob, Theſe daughters are my daughters, and theſe children are my children, and theſe cattle are my cattle, and all that thou ſeeſt is mine: and what can I do this day unto theſe my daughters, or unto their children which they have borne?

44 Now therefore come thou, let us make a covenant, I and thou; and let it be for a witneſs between me and thee.

45 And Jacob took a ſtone, and ſet it up for a pillar.

46 And Jacob ſaid unto his brethren, Gather ſtones; and they took ſtones, and made an heap: and they did eat there upon the heap.

47 And Laban called it Jegar-ſahadutha: but Jacob called it Galeed.

48 And Laban ſaid, This heap is a witneſs between me and thee this day. Therefore was the name of it called Galeed:

49 And Mizpah; for he ſaid, The LORD watch between me and thee, when we are abſent one from another.

50 If thou ſhalt afflict my daughters, or if thou ſhalt take other wives beſides my daughters, no man is with us; See, God is witneſs betwixt me and thee;

51 And Laban ſaid to Jacob, Behold this heap, and behold this pillar, which I have caſt betwixt me and thee.

52 This heap be witneſs, and this pillar be witneſs, that I will not paſs over this heap to thee, and that thou ſhalt not paſs over this heap and this pillar unto me, for harm.

53 The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, the God of their father, judge betwixt us. And Jacob ſware by the fear of his father Iſaac.

54 Then Jacob offered ſacrifice upon the mount, and called his brethren to eat bread: and they did eat bread, and tarried all night in the mount.

55 And early in the morning Laban roſe up, and kiſſed his ſons and his daughters, and bleſſed them: and Laban departed, and returned unto his place.

V. 42. The fear of Iſaac, &c.] That is, the God, whom Iſaac (who was ſtill living) worſhipped with reverential fear (53.) Jacob did not uſe the ſame expreſſions reſpecting Abraham, who was entered upon a very different ſtate; in which however the God of the living, and not of the dead, continued to be his God.

V. 45, 46.] Thus a large heap was formed to be an abiding proof of this compact, and a reproach to him who ſhould paſs over it to injure the other.

V. 47. Jegar-ſahadutha:—Galeed.] The former in Syriac, the latter in Hebrew, ſignified the heap of witneſs.

V. 49. Miſpah.] The watch tower.

V. 54. Offered ſacrifice, &c.] Laban ſpake of a common ſenſual feaſt (27.); but Jacob offered a ſolemn ſacrifice, and feaſted the company in a religious manner. In this we read the different characters of the two men; and hence may form ſome eſtimate of the low ſtate of religion in Laban's family. This parting proved final, and we hear no more of Laban, or of any other of that branch of Abraham's family; who ſeem after this to have ſunk into idolatry, and to have been loſt amongſt the other Gentiles.

is intended to teach people the duties of common life, and how to serve God, enjoy comfort, and do good in their several stations and relations: and but very few are concerned in the government of empires, compared with the numbers who support the characters of parents and children, husbands and wives, masters and servants.

Those objects, which the men of the world count "all "their glory," are so scanty, that in the pursuit or possession of them they stand in each other's way; and every one seems to be taking away from the rest: hence discontent, envy, and discord. But there are possessions of such amplitude, as to suffice for all, without any interference: happy they who seek them in the first place! However, we may thankfully receive, and chearfully use the portion which God's providence allots us, as far as we obtain it with a clear conscience, and a testimony in the consciences of others to our fidelity and integrity: and even if men should causelessly hate and criminate us, yet the Lord will plead our cause and make our very enemies to be at peace with us, when our ways please him: he will vindicate our character, do us justice, and over-rule all for our good.—In all our removals we should have respect to the command and promise of God, keeping our eye upon the openings of his providence: and if he be with us, we need not flinch in dangerous circumstances. And indeed so many are the perils with which we are surrounded, that nothing else can reasonably ensure our safety, or encourage our hearts.—The remembrance of favoured seasons of communion with God is very refreshing to us, when embarrassed in difficulties: and the recollection of our vows should be frequent, that we fail not to fulfil them.—Selfish men think themselves robbed of all that goes besides them; and covetousness will even swallow up natural affection.—Let us take heed and beware of it. (Luke xii. 13—21.) God can put a bridle into the mouth of wicked men, to restrain their malice without changing their hearts: and then, though they have no love for us, they will pretend to it, and try to make a merit of necessity. But great watchfulness will be necessary to keep out evil and the appearance of evil, even from those undertakings which are in themselves according to the will of God: yet nothing short of this can stop the mouths of our enemies, and make those ashamed who would speak evil of us.—There are seasons when a sharp reproof may consist with meekness, and reminding others of our services with humility: but much wisdom and grace is necessary on such occasions, that they may be well timed, well conducted, and unanswerably convincing; and they should always be accompanied with a disposition to forgiveness, to accept of even a partial apology, and to overlook injurious insinuations.—Those who mean honestly and kindly need not scruple assurances: but they should be solemnly entered into, in the fear of God, who is both the witness and the avenger of fraud and injustice.—And finally an amicable conclusion of differences, though upon disadvantageous terms, is generally preferable, both in respect of our innocence, peace, and interest, to the most successful litigation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXII.] V. 1, 2.] A company of angels met Jacob, in some visible and glorious appearance, to encourage him with the assurance of the divine protection, especially from the power and anger of Esau: this he called, God's host, or army; by which we learn that they were numerous, and appeared very formidable and powerful, to protect or to destroy. Mahanaim, signifies two armies: as some suppose; the one to deliver him safe from Mesopatamia; the other to welcome him to Canaan, and receive him under their protection: or perhaps one encamping before, and the other behind him and his company, as his guard on every side; as well from Laban, as from Esau.

V. 3. Seir, &c.] Whilst Jacob, to whom the promise belonged, had wrought hard as a hired servant, Esau was become a prince, and had established his authority in Mount Seir, which was afterwards called by his name.

V. 5. And I, &c.] Jacob thus intimated that he was well satisfied with his present possessions, which were the fruit of his labour; and was ready to give up all pretensions to Isaac's substance, and to render his brother all suitable respect.

V. 6. He cometh, &c.] We have every reason to think that Esau's resentment revived at this message, and that he also alſo he cometh to meet thee, and four hundred men with him.

7 Then Jacob was greatly afraid, and diſtreſſed: and he divided the people that was with him, and the flocks and herds, and the camels into two bands;

8 And ſaid, If Eſau come to the one company and ſmite it, then the other company which is left ſhall eſcape.

9 And Jacob ſaid, O God of my father Abraham, and God of my father Iſaac, the LORD which ſaidſt unto me, Return unto thy country, and to thy kindred, and I will deal well with thee:

10 I am not worthy of the leaſt of all the mercies, and of all the truth, which thou haſt ſhewed unto thy ſervant; for with my ſtaff I paſſed over this Jordan, and now I am become two bands.

11 Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Eſau: for I fear him, leſt he will come and ſmite me, and the mother with the children.

12 And thou ſaidſt, I will ſurely do thee good, and make thy ſeed as the ſand of the ſea, which cannot be numbered for multitude.

13 And he lodged there that ſame night; and took of that which came to his hand, a preſent for Eſau his brother;

14 Two hundred ſhe-goats and twenty he-goats, two hundred ewes and twenty rams.

15 Thirty milch camels with their colts, forty kine and ten bulls, twenty ſhe-aſſes and ten foles.

16 And he delivered them into the hand of his ſervants, every drove by themſelves; and ſaid unto his ſervants, Paſs over before me, and put a ſpace betwixt drove and drove.

17 And he commanded the foremoſt, ſaying, When Eſau my brother meeteth thee, and aſketh thee, ſaying, Whoſe art thou? and whither goeſt thou? and whoſe are theſe before thee?

18 Then thou ſhalt ſay, They be thy ſervant Jacob's; it is a preſent ſent unto my lord Eſau: and behold alſo he is behind us.

19 And ſo commanded he the ſecond, and the third, and all that followed the droves, ſaying, On this manner ſhall you ſpeak unto Eſau, when you find him.

20 And ſay ye moreover, Behold, thy ſervant Jacob is behind us: for he ſaid, I will appeaſe him with the preſent that goeth before me, and afterward I will ſee his face; peradventure he will accept of me.

21 So went the preſent over before him: and himſelf lodged that night in the company.

22 And he roſe up that night, and took his two wives, and his two women-ſervants, and his eleven ſons, and paſſed over the ford Jabbok.

23 And he took them, and ſent them over the brook, and ſent over that he had.

24 And Jacob was left alone: and there ſet out with malicious intentions, though God ſuffered him not to execute them: and Jacob evidently drew this concluſion from the report of the meſſengers.

V. 9—12.] There cannot be a finer model of genuine prayer than this: a thankful acknowledgment of former unmerited favours; a humble confeſſion of entire unworthineſs; an unaffected deſcription of his fears and diſtreſs; an unreſerved reference of the whole matter to the Lord renouncing all other dependence, and reſting all his hopes on him; an explicit mention of the very words both of the Lord's promiſes and commands, as pleading for him, and engaging the glory of God on his behalf; and an anxiety more for the preſervation of his family than for his own, but eſpecially of his children, in whoſe lives the promiſes ſeemed chiefly concerned: theſe things are worthy of notice, and of our imitation, when we approach the Lord in prayer.—Thus Jacob made the name of the Lord his ſtrong tower, and could not but be ſafe: thus he filled his mouth with arguments, and could not but prevail.

V. 18. Thy ſervant Jacob—My lord Eſau.] Though Jacob had purchaſed the birth-right, and the dominion had been expreſsly promiſed him in the bleſſing: yet underſtanding them, in their temporal ſenſe, as belonging rather to his poſterity than to him; and ſatisfied with the ſpiritual benefits for himſelf, he thus paid homage to Eſau as an acknowledged ſuperior.

V. 24. Jacob was, &c.] Jacob ſtaid behind, to renew his earneſt ſupplications.—Nothing requires more vigour, activity, patience, attention, and unwearied unremitting exertions, than the exerciſe of wreſtling: and it ſeems to be intended as a deſcriptive emblem of the true ſpirit of faith and prayer. They, who are poſſeſſed of that ſpirit, muſt wreſtled a man with him, until the breaking of the day.

25 And when he ſaw that he prevailed not againſt him, he touched the hollow of his thigh: and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, as he wreſtled with him.

26 And he ſaid, Let me go, for the day breaketh: And he ſaid, I will not let thee go, except thou bleſs me.

27 And he ſaid unto him, What is thy name? And he ſaid, Jacob.

28 And he ſaid, Thy name ſhall be called no more Jacob, but Iſrael: for as a prince haſt thou power with God and with men, and haſt prevailed.

29 And Jacob aſked him, and ſaid, Tell me, I pray thee, thy name: And he ſaid, Wherefore is it, that thou doſt aſk after my name? and he bleſſed him there.

30 And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel: for I have ſeen God face to face, and my life is preſerved.

31 And as he paſſed over Penuel, the ſun roſe upon him, and he halted upon his thigh.

32 Therefore the children of Iſrael eat not of the ſinew which ſhrank, which is upon the hollow of the thigh, unto this day: becauſe he touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh, in the ſinew that ſhrank.

expect ſharp and long trials in the path of duty, and many conflicts with divers opponents. Even from the Lord himſelf they will be tried with various delays and diſcouragements: but they are encouraged to pray without ceaſing; to pray always and not faint; to perſiſt in prayer, and to watch thereunto with all perſeverance. They are ſtirred up, by difficulties and delays, to be more earneſt and importunate, and thus to riſe ſuperior to all diſcouragements; nay, to draw arguments from them. And they, who thus wreſtle in prayer, always at laſt prevail with God. When, therefore, Jacob had ſpent much time in fervent ſupplication to that God who ſeeth in ſecret; one in faſhion as a man appeared to him, and engaged in wreſtling with him; to illuſtrate the nature and ſucceſs of his prayers.

V. 25. Prevailed not, &c.] This circumſtance ſignificantly marked out that frame of mind, which refuſes as it were to yield, and will not be put off with a denial. (Matt. xv. 21—28.) The perſon with whom Jacob wreſtled intimated, by touching and diſlocating the hollow of his thigh, that though he ſuffered himſelf to be prevailed upon, yet this was the effect of his mercy, and gracious acceptance of thoſe prayers, which he had taught and enabled him to make.—The diſlocation ſeems to have continued for no more than the moment, though the effect afterwards remained in ſome meaſure.

V. 26. Let me go, &c.] The morning now called Jacob to his employment in the care of his family; of which the Lord gave him an intimation by thus offering to depart.—As a wreſtler, he appeared to oppoſe Jacob, yet Jacob recognized in him a friend, yea that friend from whom all bleſſings come.

V. 28. Thy name, &c.] This change of name, from Jacob to Iſrael, ſignified, that he was no longer to be regarded as one who got the bleſſing by twice ſupplanting his elder brother, with ſome appearance of diſcredit; but as a prince of God, who had wreſtled with him, and prevailed for the bleſſing, to his everlaſting honour.—Having power with God, he would ſurely alſo prevail with man. Thus he was, ſo to ſpeak, knighted in the field; and all, who by faith and prayer prevail, inherit the ſame title, and are called the Iſrael of God.

V. 29. Wherefore is it, &c.?] Jacob could not remain in doubt or uncertainty in that reſpect, after what had paſſed: the Lord, however, bleſſed him there, probably ratifying to him the bleſſings covenanted to Abraham, &c.

V. 30. Peniel, &c.] Or, The face of God. The perſon who appeared to Jacob was before called a man, yet here he is called God. The prophet Hoſea calls him God, the Angel, even the Lord of Hoſts; and ſays, that he made ſupplication to him. (Hoſea xii. 3—5.) We cannot therefore have a doubt of the ſentiments of Jacob, of Moſes, and of Hoſea, concerning him who now wreſtled with Jacob, and ſurnamed him Iſrael. Certainly our creed will beſt accord with their's, if we believe that it was the ſecond perſon in the ſacred Trinity, who was afterwards God manifeſted in the fleſh, and dwelling in human nature is called Immanuel.

Jacob beholding the Lord in human form, was not overwhelmed by the appearance; as it was the general ſentiment, they muſt be, who beheld the glory of the divine majeſty. He had alſo received an aſſurance of deliverance from the dreaded reſentment of Eſau; and in both reſpects his life was preſerved.

V. 31. He halted upon his thigh.] He carried this token with him, that it was a reality, and not a dream, or deluſive imagination.

V. 32. Therefore, &c.] Probably this was done by ſome divine appointment.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Although we cannot ſee the angels of God meeting us, and as God's hoſt encamping round us; yet if we poſſeſs that faith, which is the evidence of things not ſeen, we may have as full and comfortable aſſurance that they actually do ſo, as if we could behold them with our eyes. And we have need of the encouragement both of the guardianſhip of angels, and the protection of the God of angels, to render us ſecure and happy in ſuch a world as this; where the victory in one conflict only reminds us to arm for another; and deliverance from one trouble or 3 And he paſſed over before them, and bowed himſelf to the ground ſeven times, until he came near to his brother.

4 And Eſau ran to meet him, and embraced him, and fell on his neck, and kiſſed him: and they wept.

danger, to expect another. Yet frequently our ſevereſt trials reſult from former tranſgreſſions, and call them to our remembrance that we may be humbled for them.—Prudent precautions may and ought to be employed by thoſe who ſimply truſt in God; and to neglect them is to tempt him: nor are any means more proper to diſarm reſentment, eſpecially that of proud and worldly men, than humble reſpectful language, and yielding up the objects of contention. Yet theſe are but means, and without God arreſt and influence the heart, they will not ſubdue the power of jealouſy and revenge.—In times of urgent danger, the ſtrongeſt faith and repeated aſſurances will not entirely exclude terror and diſtreſs: but they will put life and vigour into humble fervent prayer, and enable us ſo to plead the Lord's promiſes and precepts; to remember former mercies and deliverances; and to leave ourſelves in the Lord's hands, as ſhall inſure protection, and reſtore peace to our ſouls.—Every duty has its ſeaſon; and the care of our families, providing againſt emergencies, and ſuitable attention to our relative engagements, may properly ſucceed, though they muſt not exclude, our devotions: and again, when we have uſed every prudent means for our own and others good, we muſt retire and pray for the bleſſing. If we are in a proper frame of mind, we ſhall rather abridge ourſelves of wonted refreſhments, than neglect our communion with God: nay, there may be urgent caſes, when even the night itſelf may not ſeem too long to pour out our hearts before him; and if our faith do not fail, nor our ſpirits flag, nor our ſouls grow formal, our devotions ſhould not be counted too long. When the Spirit of God helpeth our infirmities, and our intenſe, earneſt, and vaſt deſires can ſcarcely find words large and emphatic enough to utter them, and we ſtill mean more than we can expreſs: then prayer is indeed wreſtling with God; and however tried or diſcouraged, we ſhall certainly prevail: he will approve our importunity, and largely communicate his bleſſings: and prevailing with him in prayer, we ſhall prevail againſt all our enemies that perſiſt to ſtrive with us, and prevail on many to be at peace with us. But it is only in human nature that ſinners can ſee God and live: the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, God as reconciled in and through him, is the only object of a ſinner's acceptable worſhip: with him we may be as importunate as we pleaſe; and if in humble faith we determine not to let him go except he bleſs us, he will take it well: nor ſhould we ever leave wreſtling in nights of trouble or temptation, until the day break, nay, till the Sun of righteouſneſs ariſe upon our ſouls. Thus ſhall we be acknowledged as true Iſraelites, and crowned as princes with God: and whilſt we carry away the memorials of our victories, we muſt record his goodneſs, for his glory and the benefit of others. Nor let us wonder, if even our ſweeteſt conſolations carry with them evidences of our infirmity; and if we have afterwards a thorn in the fleſh, to preſerve us from being exalted above meaſure.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIII.] V. 2. Rachel, &c.] Rachel and Joſeph being deareſt to Jacob, he provided moſt carefully for their ſecurity.

V. 3. Bowed, &c.] Still proſecuting his plan of ſatisfying Eſau, that he made no claim to ſecular pre-eminence.

V. 4. Eſau ran, &c.] In anſwer to Jacob's prayer, and in accompliſhment of his own promiſes, the Lord had thus influenced and ſoftened Eſau's heart.

V. 5. The children, &c. The piety and ſimplicity of this anſwer, to one who was no friend to religion, is moſt worthy of admiration and imitation.

10 And Jacob ſaid, Nay, I pray thee, if now I have found grace in thy ſight, then receive my preſent at my hand: for therefore I have ſeen thy face, as though I had ſeen the face of God, and thou waſt pleaſed with me.

11 Take, I pray thee, my bleſſing that is brought to thee; becauſe God hath dealt graciouſly with me, and becauſe I have enough: and he urged him, and he took it.

12 And he ſaid, Let us take our journey, and let us go, and I will go before thee.

13 And he ſaid unto him, My lord knoweth that the children are tender, and the flocks and herds with young are with me; and if men ſhould over-drive them one day, all the flock will die.

14 Let my lord, I pray thee, paſs over before his ſervant: and I will lead on ſoftly, according as the cattle that goeth before me, and the children be able to endure, until I come unto my lord unto Seir.

15 And Eſau ſaid, Let me now leave with thee ſome of the folk that are with me: And he ſaid, What needeth it? Let me find grace in the ſight of my lord.

16 So Eſau returned that day on his way unto Seir.

17 And Jacob journeyed to Succoth, and built him an houſe, and made booths for his cattle: therefore the name of the place is called Succoth.

18 And Jacob came to Shalem a city of Shechem, which is in the land of Canaan, when he came from Padan-aram; and pitched his tent before the city.

19 And he bought a parcel of a field, where he had ſpread his tent, at the hand of the children of Hamor Shechem's father, for an hundred pieces of money.

20 And he erected there an altar, and called it El-elohe-Iſrael.

CHAP.

V. 10. As though, &c.] Jacob thus denoted the great ſatisfaction he took in this friendly interview; as if it reſembled even the pleaſure of intimate communion with God. We may ſuppoſe this to have been a proverbial expreſſion; yet we cannot ſo cordially approve it, as we do the foregoing anſwer: unleſs we ſuppoſe, that in Eſau's conduct he recognized the Lord's ſpecial preſence and favour, in anſwer to his prayers, when he ſaw his face and wreſtled with him. (xxxii, 30.)

V. 12. I will, &c.] Eſau thus offered to eſcort Jacob into the land of Seir.

V. 14 Until I come, &c.] It is not likely that Jacob intended to ſettle in Seir with his family; nor do we know that he ever paid Eſau a viſit, though we cannot determine that he did not. But upon conſideration, or by divine monition, or ſome change in his circumſtances, he might afterwards alter, or fail of his intention. Or perhaps this was a haſty word extorted by Eſau's importunity, and his own fear of giving offence.

V. 15. What needeth it?] Guarded thus far by the angels of God, Jacob neither required nor wiſhed for a guard of ſoldiers. The friendſhip and favour of Eſau was all he required.

V. 17. Succoth.] That is, booths, or tents. This place was on the eaſt ſide of Jordan, before Jacob paſſed that river. After a journey of ſeveral hundred miles, he ſtaid here in ſome temporary habitation a ſhort ſpace, to reſt and refreſh his family and his flocks.

V. 18. To Shalem, &c.] This was ſituated on the weſt ſide of Jordan, or after he had croſſed that river. Some tranſlate it, he came in peace to the city of Shechem.

V. 20. El-Elohe Iſrael.] The mighty God, the God of Iſrael. The altar was erected and inſcribed to Him, with whom he had before wreſtled and prevailed, and by whom he had been ſurnamed Iſrael, (in perpetuam rei memoriam;) which is an additional diſcovery, who that Man was; and an indication what value Jacob put on this new name which he had thus received. (xxxii, 24.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When we have poured out our ſouls before the Lord in fervent prayer, we are prepared to meet dangers and difficulties with comfort; and may depend upon, and ſhall ſoon experience, the faithfulneſs of God, in a gracious anſwer. He has various methods of making our enemies to be at peace with us: he can either bind their hands, awe their ſpirits, excite natural affection, or plant ſupernatural grace in their hearts. Yet in all this the Lord works by ſuitable means; and yielding often forms the wiſeſt method of pacifying great offences. This is done by waving points in conteſt, paying all due reſpect, receding from our temporal intereſt; and manifeſting to the conſciences of our opponents that we are ſatisfied with a ſcanty portion, earned by our labour; that we neither envy nor covet their abundance; that we count it more bleſſed to give than to receive; that we conſider ourſelves happy in the Lord's favour, and under his protection; and that we want nothing more than to live with them in peace, and amity, which we much deſire and greatly value. Yet we muſt be careful in ſuch circumſtances that we carry not too far our deſire of pleaſing, or our fear of offending, or profeſs more than conſiſts with piety or ſincerity: nor may we conceal, or be aſhamed of our religion, when in the company of thoſe who fear not God. It is not therefore deſirable to be too intimate with ſuperior ungodly relations, who will expect us to join in, or at leaſt to connive at, their vanities: though they diſapprove, perhaps deride our religion; and thus they will either be a ſnare to us, or be offended with us. It is more prudent to keep at a diſtance, and live amongſt ſuch as have leſs aſcendancy, and where we can be more at liberty. Nor ſhould we omit to obſerve, that we ſhall expoſe that to the leaſt hazard which we value moſt and love beſt; we ſhall therefore venture the loſs of all things, rather than endanger the loſs of our ſouls if we know their value, or renounce Chriſt if we truly love him. Nor may we overlook, in Jacob's care, and tender attention to his family and flocks, the good Shepherd of our ſouls, who gathers the lambs in his boſom, and gently leads thoſe with young: whoſe example we all, as parents, teachers, and paſtors, ſhould imitate. Bleſſed be his name, he is ſtill the mighty God, the God of Iſrael: may he who writes, and all who read theſe reflections, be numbered amongſt the true Iſrael of God; that we may record his name, and rejoice in his love, through our pilgrimage here on earth, and for ever in the Canaan above. Amen.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIV.] V. 1. And, &c.] Dinah ſeems to have been about the age of Joſeph, or rather younger. And as ſome time after Jacob's departure from Shechem, Joſeph being ſeventeen years of age went to his brethren and was ſold by them; ſo Dinah could not at this time be more than fifteen years old; an only daughter, doubtleſs much beloved, and probably too much indulged. Having got acquainted with the daughters of their heathen neighbours, ſhe went to viſit them, probably on ſome public occaſion of mirth and feſtivity, by their invitation; but whether with, or without her parents' conſent, doth not appear.

V. 2. Took her, &c.] It does not appear that Shechem uſed force, but rather the arts of ſeduction: and it ſeems that he kept Dinah with him, until ſhe was afterwards taken away by her brethren. (26.)

V. 4. Get me, &c.] That is, obtain the conſent of her father.

V. 5. Jacob, &c.] Jacob kept ſilence till his ſons returned home; as ſcarcely knowing what to anſwer, or as afraid either of exaſperating the men of Shechem, or taking ſome improper ſtep. Perhaps he had acted more wiſely, if he had taken the management of the buſineſs wholly upon himſelf; inſtead of intruſting it with his ſons, who were raſh and violent, and poſſeſſed too much influence with him.—Nor need we determine whether the covenant made with Jacob would have rendered it totally wrong for him in ſuch circumſtances to have acceded to Shechem's propoſal. However, it ought certainly to have either been flatly refuſed, or fairly accepted.

V. 7. Were grieved, &c.] Jacob's ſons were grieved and enraged, probably more on account of the diſgrace of their family, than for the ſin committed againſt God.—What follows ſeems to be the ſentiment of the hiſtorian, who ſpake according to the language of the times when he wrote, to intimate to the Children of Iſrael the inconſiſtency of ſuch practices with their name and profeſſion.

12 Aſk me never ſo much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye ſhall ſay unto me: but give me the damſel to wife.

13 And the ſons of Jacob anſwered Shechem and Hamor his father deceitfully, and ſaid, (becauſe he had defiled Dinah their ſiſter:)

14 And they ſaid unto them, We cannot do this thing, to give our ſiſter to one that is uncircumciſed: for that were a reproach unto us.

15 But in this will we conſent unto you: If ye will be as we be, that every male of you be circumciſed;

16 Then will we give our daughters unto you, and we will take your daughters to us, and we will dwell with you, and we will become one people.

17 But if you will not hearken unto us to be circumciſed, then will we take our daughter, and we will be gone.

18 And their words pleaſed Hamor, and Shechem Hamor's ſon.

19 And the young man deferred not to do the thing, becauſe he had delight in Jacob's daughter: and he was more honourable than all the houſe of his father.

20 And Hamor and Shechem his ſon came unto the gate of their city, and communed with the men of their city, ſaying, 21 Theſe men are peaceable with us, therefore let them dwell in the land, and trade therein; for the land, behold, it is large enough for them: let us take their daughters to us for wives, and let us give them our daughters.

22 Only herein will the men conſent unto us, for to dwell with us, to be one people, if every male among us be circumciſed, as they are circumciſed.

23 Shall not their cattle, and their ſubſtance, and every beaſt of their's be ours? Only let us conſent unto them, and they will dwell with us.

24 And unto Hamor and unto Shechem his ſon hearkened all that went out of the gate of his city, and every male was circumciſed, all that went out of the gate of his city.

25 And it came to paſs on the third day when they were ſore, that two of the ſons of Jacob, Simeon and Levi, Dinah's brethren, took each man his ſword, and came upon the city boldly, and ſlew all the males.

26 And they ſlew Hamor and Shechem his ſon with the edge of the ſword, and took Dinah out of Shechem's houſe, and went out.

27 The ſons of Jacob came upon the ſlain, and ſpoiled the city, becauſe they had defiled their ſiſter.

28 They took their ſheep and their oxen, and their aſſes, and that which was in the city, and that which was in the field,

29 And all their wealth, and all their little ones, and their wives took they captive,

V. 12. Aſk me, &c.] Shechem was willing to purchaſe the peace and conſent of Dinah's relations upon any terms. Nothing, as matters then ſtood, could have been ſpoken more fairly.

V. 13. And ſaid, (becauſe, &c.] Jacob's ſons made Shechem's ſin the excuſe for their own deceitful project.—Probably they at firſt only intended to take the advantage of the foreneſs of the Shechemites to reſcue their ſiſter, in caſe Shechem ſhould refuſe to reſtore her peaceably: but afterwards Simeon and Levi formed and executed a deeper ſcheme of revenge and plunder.

V. 15. That every male, &c.] It may be doubted, whether it would have been right to have admitted the Shechemites, who were of the devoted race of Canaan, into the church by the ordinance of circumciſion, upon an intelligent and ſuitable profeſſion of religion: but the very propoſing the performance of this religious ordinance, as a condition of a ſecular advantage, was as inconſiſtent with true piety, as their deceitful intention and after conduct were inconſiſtent with truth, juſtice, and humanity. Yet practices of the ſame nature are ſtill ſhamefully common in the viſible church!

V. 20—24.] The whole conduct of the Shechemites ſhews, that they acted upon the moſt ſelfiſh principles, and ſubmitted to circumciſion without the leaſt regard to its nature, meaning, or divine inſtitution, merely to obtain their own ſecular ends: yet they were much more excuſable in this profanation, than the ſons of Jacob, who put them upon it, and might have been expected to have known better.

V. 25. Two, &c.] Simeon and Levi, being ſons of Leah, as well as of Jacob, were Dinah's brethren by the whole blood.—It has, not improbably, been conjectured that they were at that time hoſpitably entertained in Shechem's houſe; which would give them a fairer opportunity of coming upon them when ſore and unawares, and enable them to perform this dreadful execution. Though no more of Jacob's ſons were concerned in the maſſacre, perhaps ſome ſervants might aſſiſt; and it ſeems that all the reſt concurred in the plunder.

V. 29. All their, &c.] We are not informed what became of theſe captives afterwards, any more than of the ſervants of Jacob's houſhold: whether they were tive, and ſpoiled even all that was in the houſe.

30 And Jacob ſaid to Simeon and Levi, Ye have troubled me to make me to ſtink among the inhabitants of the land, amongſt the Canaanites, and the Perizzites: and I being few in number, they ſhall gather themſelves together againſt me, and ſlay me, and I ſhall be deſtroyed, I and my houſe.

31 And they ſaid, Should he deal with our ſiſter as with an harlot?

V. 30. To make me to ſtink, &c.] Abraham and Iſaac had been reſpected though ſtrangers, and their religion was honoured through the good behaviour of them and their families: but, by this infamous conduct, Jacob apprehended that his ſons would cauſe him, his family, and his religion, to be execrated amongſt the heathen, whoſe crimes they had ſurpaſſed.

V. 31. And they, &c.] Thus they vindicated themſelves, and wickedly inſinuated that Jacob was willing to have permitted his daughter to be ſo treated.—After this we read nothing more of Dinah, than her name, and may conclude that ſhe lived and died unmarried, but we hope not impenitent.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Young perſons, eſpecially females, are never ſo ſafe as under the inſpection of prudent and pious parents: their own inexperience and credulity, and the intoxicating nature of flattery, together with the artifice of thoſe who are continually laying ſnares for them, expoſe them to imminent danger. They are therefore their own enemies, if they deſire to go much abroad alone; eſpecially amongſt thoſe who are ſtrangers to God and true religion: but thoſe parents are much more inexcuſable, who allow and encourage their children in ſo doing; nay, who do not interpoſe their authority to prevent them from thus expoſing themſelves heedleſsly to unſeen and unſuſpected danger.—Such indulged, becauſe beloved, children too often, like Dinah, become the ſhame and grief of their parents and families.—And indeed, large families of children, even when trained up in the fear of God, will in general occaſion many trials, anxieties, and ſorrows to their parents; and the grief of loſing them in infancy is tranſient and tolerable, compared with that of ſeeing them grow up and live in wickedneſs. Let parents then rejoice in their children as though they rejoiced not, and ſubmit reſignedly if the Lord bereave them of their beloved offſpring; and if they are ſpared, let them take care to bring them up for the Lord, and commend them to his keeping; and at laſt expect comfort from him, and not from them.—When young women liſten to the vile propoſals or flattering promiſes of ſeducers, they not unfrequently ſeclude themſelves from every proſpect of honourable connexions, and voluntarily conſign themſelves to a future ſingle life, if ſtill worſe conſequences do not enſue: this conſideration ſhould coincide with nobler motives, to induce them to reject with determined indignation and diſdain every overture of that kind.—No ſin is made lighter of by multitudes than lewdneſs: yet no crime is more injurious to the bodies and ſouls of individuals, to the peace and comfort of families, and to the welfare of ſociety; or makes way for more horrible conſequences, as introductory to all other wickedneſs. But how will theſe heathens riſe up in judgment againſt and condemn thouſands, falſely called chriſtians, who having ſeduced and defiled the objects of their pretended affection, afterwards treat them with contempt and hatred; leave them to the infamy and miſery of proſtitution, diſeaſe, and death; and without the leaſt compaſſion for them, or their broken-hearted parents, proceed to add new trophies of their infamous ſucceſs, and to multiply the victims of their unbridled luſts! Surely Shechem was in this more honourable, not only than all the houſe of his father, but than all the reſt of his brethren, the whole tribe of Seducers; who all are in honour and conſcience bound to propoſe and make this only, though inadequate, reparation, though very few of them are willing to do it. Alas! that children, who have profited ſo little by the example and inſtructions of their godly parents, ſhould gain ſuch undue aſcendancy over them! and that they, who expreſs ſo much indignation at the crimes of others, and the folly wrought in Iſrael, ſhould ſhew themſelves ſo unacquainted with the character of an Iſraelite indeed, as far to exceed in their own conduct thoſe crimes which they pretend to puniſh in others! They, who under the pretext of religion, and by profaning its ſacred inſtitutions, can conceal, that they may, without being ſuſpected, execute their purpoſes of atrocious wickedneſs, are the worſt enemies of 3 And let us ariſe, and go up to Beth-el; and I will make there an altar unto God, who anſwered me in the day of my diſtreſs, and was with me in the way which I went.

4 And they gave unto Jacob all the ſtrange gods which were in their hand, and all their ear-rings which were in their ears; and Jacob hid them under the oak which was by Shechem.

5 And they journeyed: and the terror of God was upon the cities that were round about them, and they did not purſue after the ſons of Jacob.

6 So Jacob came to Luz, which is in the land of Canaan, (that is Beth-el,) he and all the people that were with him.

7 And he built there an altar, and called the place El-beth-el: becauſe there God appeared unto him, when he fled from the face of his brother.

8 But Deborah Rebekah's nurſe died, and ſhe was buried beneath Beth-el, under an oak: and the name of it was called Allon-bachuth.

9 And God appeared unto Jacob again, when he came out of Padan-aram; and bleſſed him.

10 And God ſaid unto him, Thy name is Jacob: thy name ſhall not be called any more Jacob, but Iſrael ſhall be thy name; and he called his name Iſrael.

of religion; who cauſe it, and its profeſſors, to be hated and execrated, expoſe them to inward anguiſh and outward perſecution, and open the mouths and harden the hearts of multitudes to their deſtruction.—But they who are wicked enough to perpetrate enormous crimes, will never fail of excuſing and vindicating them; nor will any thing, but the grace of God, or the diſcoveries which the day of judgment will make, effectually ſtop men's mouths, and ſilence their excuſes. Then, however, the impenitent ſinner will find that the crimes of others form no excuſe for his own: and though God may juſtly puniſh thoſe who profane his ordinances, or tranſgreſs his laws, even by the hands of their very tempters; yet theſe ſhall in turn be puniſhed with ſtill greater ſeverity. The good Lord preſerve our families from ſuch crimes and miſeries, and his church from ſuch ſcandals, as this chapter records!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXV.] V. 1. Ariſe, &c.] Jacob had hitherto deferred to perform his vow made at Beth-el, and to dedicate the tenth of his ſubſtance to the Lord. Perhaps his afflictions, recorded in the former chapter, were intended to chaſtiſe that delay: but being now reminded by the Lord himſelf, he doubtleſs accompliſhed the whole of his vow; though we are not particularly informed about it.

V. 2. Put away, &c.] Theſe ſtrange gods were idols worſhipped by thoſe who were ſtrangers to the true God and his covenant. Probably the images which Rachel had ſtolen were of that number, and thoſe ſeized among the ſpoil of the Shechemites. Theſe, it ſeems, ſome of the houſhold worſhipped; we hope none but the ſervants and captives.—It is evident that there exiſted ſome rules for external purification before the promulgation of the Moſaic law; (Exod. xix. 10—15;) which were deſigned to repreſent the ſanctification of the Spirit, as the ſacrifices prefigured the atonement of Chriſt's death. The abominations recorded in the foregoing chapter, as well as many other evils which ſeem to have prevailed in Jacob's family, much needed ſuch reformation and purification.

V. 4. They, &c.] Jacob's family ſeems to have parted with their idols leſs reluctantly than he expected. The ear-rings were probably worn as an amulet, or charm, in token of ſome dependence on, or reſpect for, the ſtrange gods. Theſe Jacob buried in the ground ſecretly, that his family might not know what he had done with them, if they had been diſpoſed to ſeek for them; either from ſuperſtition, or value of the precious metals of which probably they were made.

V. 8. But Deborah, &c.] This took place about 125 years after Rebekah's marriage with Iſaac (xxiv. 59.) Probably after Rebekah's death, which is not recorded, this aged ſervant was taken into Jacob's houſe by the deſire of Leah and Rachel, as peculiarly dear to, and reſpected by, them and their family; and thus her death was recorded in Jacob's hiſtory, rather than in Iſaac's. Allon-Bachuth ſignifies the oak of weeping: for though Deborah was a ſervant and not a relation, now in extreme old age, and probably not only incapable of being uſeful to others, but occaſioning much trouble; yet her good behaviour had ſo engaged the affections of the whole family, that her death was greatly lamented.

V. 10. He called, &c.] The Lord thus confirmed to Jacob all the ſpecial favour and protection which the name Iſrael implied.

13 And God went up from him, in the place where he talked with him.

14 And Jacob ſet up a pillar in the place where he talked with him, even a pillar of ſtone: and he poured a drink-offering thereon, and he poured oil thereon.

15 And Jacob called the name of the place where God ſpake with him, Beth-el.

16 And they journeyed from Beth-el: and there was but a little way to come to Ephrath: and Rachel travailed, and ſhe had hard labour.

17 And it came to paſs when ſhe was in hard labour, that the midwife ſaid unto her, Fear not; thou ſhalt have this ſon alſo.

18 And it came to paſs as her ſoul was in departing, (for ſhe died,) that ſhe called his name Benoni: but his father called him Benjamin.

19 And Rachel died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Beth-lehem.

20 And Jacob ſet a pillar upon her grave: that is the pillar of Rachel's grave unto this day.

21 And Iſrael journeyed, and ſpread his tent beyond the tower of Edar.

22 And it came to paſs when Iſrael dwelt in that land, that Reuben went and lay with Bilhah his father's concubine: and Iſrael heard it. Now the ſons of Jacob were twelve.

23 The ſons of Leah; Reuben Jacob's firſt-born, and Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Iſſachar, and Zebulun.

24 The ſons of Rachel; Joſeph and Benjamin.

25 And the ſons of Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid; Dan and Naphtali.

26 And the ſons of Zilpah, Leah's handmaid; Gad and Aſher. Theſe are the ſons of Jacob, which were born to him in Padan-aram.

27 And Jacob came unto Iſaac his father unto Mamre, unto the city of Arbah, (which is Hebron,) where Abraham and Iſaac ſojourned.

28 And the days of Iſaac were an hundred and fourſcore years.

29 And Iſaac gave up the ghoſt and died, and was gathered unto his people, being old and full of days: and his ſons Eſau and Jacob buried him.

CHAP.

V. 13. Talked, &c.] This denotes a perſonal conference, ſuch as had been vouchſafed to Abraham.

V. 14, 15.] Jacob ſeems to have renewed, with more ſolemnity, the ceremony which he obſerved when God firſt met him at Bethel: and confirmed to the place more publicly that name by which he had privately called it, and which it ever after bore; till it became Beth-aven, a houſe of vanity and idolatry.

V. 17. Fear not, &c.] The midwife, in ſaying, "Thou ſhalt have this ſon alſo," ſeems to have alluded to the name of Joſeph, and the occaſion of that name (xxx. 24.)

V. 18. Her ſoul, &c.] The expreſſion, "her ſoul was in departing," aptly deſcribes the nature of death, which is the diſſolution of the union betwixt ſoul and body.—Rachel had raſhly ſaid, Give me children, or elſe I die:" God gave her children, and ſhe died in child-birth!—Benoni ſignifies the ſon of my ſorrow.—Benjamin, the ſon of my right-hand.

V. 22. Iſrael heard, &c.] Reuben and Bilhah doubtleſs flattered themſelves that their abominable crime would be concealed, and we may be ſure beſtowed all pains to conceal it: yet Jacob by ſome means was made acquainted with it.

V. 27. Came unto Iſaac.] We cannot conclude, from the ſilence of Scripture, that Jacob paid his father only this one viſit; probably he came often to ſee him.

V. 28. And the days, &c.] The age, death, and burial of Iſaac, are here inſerted by anticipation; for by computation we find that he did not die till about the time that Joſeph ſtood before Pharaoh. We have ſhewn that Iſaac was about 150 years old when Joſeph was born, Joſeph was therefore 30 when Iſaac was 180. (Note, xxvii. 1.)

V. 29. Eſau and Jacob buried him.] Eſau, inſtead of taking this opportunity of murdering Jacob, as he had purpoſed, found his heart ſo influenced, that he amicably aſſiſted at Iſaac's funeral!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Such is the imperfection of the beſt of men, that they are prone to defer thoſe things which they know ought to be done, and which they really intend to do; and to forget the mercies they have received, and the obligations they lie under: nay, without great circumſpection groſs abuſes will find their way even into religious families, eſpecially if they be large. We have need therefore to be reminded of our duty, and even rebuked for neglecting it; and ſhould deem it a very great mercy to be ſtirred up to perſonal or family reformation, and cheerfully part with every thing, however valuable, which proves an occaſion of ſin: but it is as criminal as common, to poſtpone our ſolemn tribute of praiſe to God, when he hath anſwered us in the day of our diſtreſs.—A good example and ſerious admonitions will go a great way in promoting the good behaviour of thoſe around us; and there is often leſs oppoſition to our pious endeavours, than we expected. The Lord deals not with his people and their families according to their deſervings, but is better to them than their fears; and when when he awes the spirits of their enemies, they cannot but be safe whithersoever they go, or wherever they are. When we have obediently hearkened to the Lord's reproving voice, have rectified abuses, and have paid our vows, we may expect to hear from him with comfort, and to enjoy the assurance and earnest of his covenanted blessings. Yet all our consolations in this world only prepare us for trials, and are intermingled with them: and the continual ravages of death, bereaving us of our nearest and best beloved friends and relatives, will frequently excite our fears and lamentations; and remind us to be ready also, and to set our affections on things above.—Nothing is more becoming, than when servants by their good behaviour, merit and obtain the endeared affection of the families in which they reside; and when they live beloved, and die lamented by them. Nor should those masters who have had the benefit of their faithful services, during the time of their health and strength, neglect to provide comfortably for them, when past their labour, if they have it in their power. Such scenes of domestic life are more beautiful and instructive than the events which crowd the page of history with evidences of the madness and folly of mankind.—But we should not too earnestly wish for, or impatiently complain of the want of any temporal object: the Lord may remember our unadvised expressions long after, and rebuke them even by granting our desires, without giving his blessing with them.—How one trial after another often comes upon the favoured servants of the Lord! While we live in the world we must witness so much sin around us, and mourn over so much in ourselves and our families, as well as experience so many bodily infirmities, and outward disappointments; that we may well congratulate, and almost envy, those who have finished their measure of sufferings and services, and leave the world full of days, and ripe for glory: for if we be fit for Heaven, better is the day of our death, than the day of our birth. They who live the most quietly and comfortably are least noticed in history; and it may be some consolation to reflect, that while we read scarcely of any thing else than the vices and miseries of mankind; numbers, unnoticed by man, have walked with God, and are not, for God hath taken them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVI.] V. 2. Adah, &c.] She is also called Judith, the daughter of Beeri, (xxvi, 34.) who probably was the same person as Elon; or the one might be Adah's father, and the other her grandfather.

Aholibamah, is also called Bathshemath the daughter of Elon; he probably was her father, and Anah, the daughter of Zibeon, was her mother: Elon might either be the same person as mentioned above, or another of the same name.

V. 3. Bashemath.] Called elsewhere Mahalath. Such a variation of names is very common in Scripture.

V. 6. Went into, &c.] Probably Esau came frequently to Isaac during his life-time, but after his death he took away all his possessions, and quitted finally the land of Canaan, leaving Jacob unmolested in the prospect of his reversionary inheritance.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The registers in this Chapter are recorded to evince the faithfulness of God to his promise to Abraham; "Nations "shall come of thee:" to shew the accomplishment of his prophetical information to Rebekah; "Two nations "are in thy womb:" and the blessing to Esau; "By thy "sword shalt thou live." They might also be many ways useful to the children of Israel. Yet they are but mere registers, and very different from the particular history of the heirs of promise; who have the best place, and the highest character in the book of God, though not in many other books. However men may struggle against the purpose of God, it will stand; they will finally see it necessary to give place to it; and God hath many ways of inducing them to it. He often gives ungodly people a large portion of this world; and, satisfied with it, they leave others to possess and enjoy spiritual blessings unenvied, and unmolested. This is Edom: still the same profane despiser of heavenly things, as when he sold his birth-right; though not the same malicious persecutor, as when he vowed Jacob's destruction.—Yet he and such as he look great, become dukes and princes, and are envied and courted; whilst the Israel of God are poor, obscure, and despised! But the tables will be turned presently: the wicked shall soon be cut down, and wither as the grass; while the righteous shall flourish as the cedar in Libanus: and having their good things, when those of the sinner are spent and gone, they shall have them durably, yea eternally. Let us then seek an interest in these blessings; and not covet, envy, or glory in those fading distinctions, which are so often lavished upon the enemies of God, and the vessels of wrath fitted for destruction.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVII.] V. 1. Jacob dwelt, &c.] Jacob was contented to continue a stranger in Canaan, both whilst his father lived, and after Esau had got possessions, and exercised lordship in Seir.

V. 2. These are, &c.] By the generations of Jacob, we may understand the history of him, and of his family. The inspired writer had done with Esau, except as he came in his way, when treating of the affairs of Israel: he had joined himself to the heathen, let him be numbered among them.—But of Jacob and the chosen seed he hath much to record.—Joseph, though much beloved, was not trained up delicately and in sloth, but inured to labour. They, who are brought up otherwise, are truly called spoiled children, for they are not likely to be worth much. He accompanied the sons of Bilhah and Zilpah, particularly assisting them in their pastoral employments: and he brought unto their father their evil report, in order that the crimes which he could not prevent, might be reproved and repressed by Jacob's authority.

V. 3. Son of, &c.] Joseph was the main comfort of Jacob's old age after the loss of Rachel: but as he was several years older than Benjamin, and not much younger than several of Jacob's other sons, it might perhaps be translated, the son of Eders, or of the aged, as descriptive of his gravity and piety, far above his years; a Hebrew phrase similar to "sons of Belial," and many others. Jacob clothed him in a coat of colours; the word many not being in the original: a garment more beautiful than what the others wore; which was intended as a token of peculiar

4 And when his brethren ſaw that their father loved him more than all his brethren, they hated him, and could not ſpeak peaceably unto him.

5 And Joſeph dreamed a dream, and he told it his brethren: and they hated him yet the more.

6 And he ſaid unto them, Hear, I pray you, this dream which I have dreamed.

7 For behold, we were binding ſheaves in the field, and lo, my ſheaf aroſe, and alſo ſtood upright; and behold, your ſheaves ſtood round about, and made obeiſance to my ſheaf.

8 And his brethren ſaid unto him, Shalt thou indeed reign over us? or ſhalt thou indeed have dominion over us? and they hated him yet the more for his dreams, and for his words.

9 And he dreamed yet another dream, and told it his brethren, and ſaid, Behold, I have dreamed a dream more, and behold, the ſun and the moon, and the eleven ſtars made obeiſance to me.

10 And he told it to his father and to his brethren: and his father rebuked him, and ſaid unto him, What is this dream that thou haſt dreamed? Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to bow down ourſelves to thee, to the earth?

11 And his brethren envied him: but his father obſerved the ſaying.

12 And his brethren went to feed their father's flock in Shechem.

13 And Iſrael ſaid unto Joſeph, Do not thy brethren feed the flock in Shechem? Come, and I will ſend thee unto them. And he ſaid unto him, Here am I.

14 And he ſaid to him, Go, I pray thee, ſee whether it be well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks; and bring me word again. So he ſent him out of the vale of Hebron, and he came to Shechem.

15 And a certain man found him, and behold, he was wandering in the field: and the man aſked him, ſaying, What ſeekeſt thou?

16 And he ſaid, I ſeek my brethren: tell me, I pay thee, where they feed their flocks.

peculiar regard; but ſeems to have been an invidious and injudicious diſtinction.

V. 4. When his brethren ſaw, &c.] The preference, manifeſted to Joſeph, excited the envy of his brethren; and the ground of that preference, even his wiſdom and piety, called forth their enmity. Conſcious of his ſuperior excellency, and hating him for it, they conſidered the approbation of his conduct as a reproach of their's; all which was augmented by his reporting their evil deeds.—In this Joſeph was a type of Chriſt, the beloved of the Father, who was on that account envied and hated by the Jews, and by the world; not only, notwithſtanding his excellency, but for it, as it reproached and expoſed their hypocriſy and wickedneſs; and becauſe he alſo teſtified of them, that their works were evil. This was the effect of the old enmity put between the Seed of the woman, and the ſeed of the ſerpent.

V. 5. Joſeph, &c.] God, by ſupernatural dreams, gave Joſeph a pre-intimation of his future greatneſs, to prepare him for his previous trials, and to ſupport him under them. Thus Chriſt "for the joy ſet before him endured the croſs;" and chriſtians are prepared by the hope and earneſt of heaven for their ſufferings on earth.—Mr. Henry obſerves, 'that he dreamed of his preferment but not of his 'impriſonment; as young people are apt to dream of 'proſperity, but think nothing of affliction.'

V. 6. Hear I pray you, &c.] Probably by ſome inward impulſe Joſeph was led to tell theſe prophetical dreams. It was on many accounts proper they ſhould be known; though otherwiſe it would have been impolitic for him to have declared them.

V. 7, 8.] Joſeph's brethren rightly interpreted the dream, though they abhorred the interpretation: and whilſt they ſpared no pains, and ventured upon the moſt atrocious crimes, to defeat it, they were themſelves the inſtruments of it's accompliſhment.--Thus the Jews underſtood Chriſt's parable, and the intimations he gave of his kingdom: but determining that he ſhould not reign over them, they conſulted to put him to death; and by his crucifixion actually made way for that exaltation, which they intended to prevent.

V. 10, 11.] Perhaps Jacob meant to abate the indignation of his other ſons; yet it is evident that he thought there was ſomething ſupernatural in Joſeph's dream.—Rachel, the mother of Joſeph, was dead, but Leah ſeems to have been ſtill alive: it may, however, mean only the whole family, with peculiar reference to the number of his brethren.

V. 12. In Shechem.] This was at leaſt forty miles from Hebron, where Jacob at preſent reſided.—They probably went thither for the ſake of better paſture.

V. 14. Whether it be well, &c.] After the wickedneſs which Jacob's ſons had perpetrated upon the Shechemites, it is more wonderful that they ſhould venture thither, than that he ſhould be anxious for their ſafety. He ſuſpected not ſuch deep enmity in their hearts, as they actually entertained, or he would not thus have expoſed his favourite ſon.—But the hand of the Lord was in it.

V. 15. Wandering.] Having loſt his way, or traverſing the country from place to place ſeeking his brethren.

17 And the man ſaid, They are departed hence: for I heard them ſay, Let us go to Dothan. And Joſeph went after his brethren, and found them in Dothan.

18 And when they ſaw him afar off, even before he came near unto them, they conſpired againſt him, to ſlay him.

19 And they ſaid one to another, Behold, this dreamer cometh.

20 Come now therefore, and let us ſlay him, and caſt him into ſome pit; and we will ſay, Some evil beaſt hath devoured him: and we ſhall ſee what will become of his dreams.

21 And Reuben heard it, and he delivered him out of their hands; and ſaid, Let us not kill him.

22 And Reuben ſaid unto them, Shed no blood, but caſt him into this pit that is in the wilderneſs, and lay no hand upon him, that he might rid him out of their hands, to deliver him to his father again.

23 And it came to paſs when Joſeph was come unto his brethren, that they ſtript Joſeph out of his coat, his coat of many colours that was on him.

24 And they took him, and caſt him into a pit: and the pit was empty, there was no water in it.

25 And they ſat down to eat bread: and they lifted up their eyes and looked, and behold, a company of Iſhmeelites came from Gilead, with their camels bearing ſpicery, and balm, and myrrh, going to carry it down to Egypt.

26 And Judah ſaid unto his brethren, What profit is it if we ſlay our brother, and conceal his blood?

27 Come, and let us ſell him to the Iſhmeelites, and let not our hand be upon him; for he is our brother, and our fleſh: and his brethren were content.

28 Then there paſſed by Midianites merchant-men; and they drew and lift up Joſeph out of the pit, and ſold Joſeph to the Iſhmeelites for twenty pieces of ſilver: and they brought Joſeph into Egypt.

29 And Reuben returned unto the pit; and behold, Joſeph was not in the pit: and he rent his clothes.

30 And he returned unto his brethren, and ſaid, The child is not; and I, whither ſhall I go?

31 And they took Joſeph's coat and killed a kid of the goats, and dipped the coat in the blood.

32 And they ſent the coat of many colours, and they brought it to their father; and ſaid, This have we found: know now whether it be thy ſon's coat or no.

V. 18. Saw him, &c.] (Luke xx. 14, 15.)

V. 19. Behold this dreamer, &c.] Thus Jeſus, upon the croſs, was ſcornfully reproached with his pretenſions to be the Chriſt the King of Iſrael.

V. 20. Come now, &c.] Theſe unnatural children had no more compaſſion for their father than for Joſeph: nay perhaps they ſecretly enjoyed the pleaſure of diſappointing and grieving him; for they typified thoſe who ſaw and hated both Chriſt and his Father: and all the enmity borne to the children of God, becauſe they reſemble, and are beloved of him, is only an expreſſion of enmity to God himſelf.

V. 21. Reuben, &c.] We not long ſince read that Reuben was guilty of ſuch fornication, as is not ſo much as named among the Gentiles; yet here he oppoſed another kind of wickedneſs: human depravity runs in different channels; ſome are more prone to one ſin, ſome to another.

V. 22. Caſt him into this pit, &c.] Reuben ſpake as if he meant that Joſeph ſhould there be left to ſtarve; but he purpoſed to reſtore him to his father, hoping probably by that ſervice to recover his favour. Thus Joſeph, murdered in the intention of his brethren, and as it were buried in the pit, yet preſerved in order to his exaltation, was a type of Chriſt crucified, buried, riſen, and glorified.

V. 25. Iſhmeelites.] The deſcendants of Iſhmael, Midian, (28.) and other ſons of Abraham, (who were grown into a multitude, whilſt the deſcendants of the promiſed Iſaac were few in number,) uniting together, engaged in this traffic.

V. 28. Sold Joſeph, &c.] Thus Chriſt was ſold for thirty pieces of ſilver, and by a Judas, or Judah; the ſame name with him, who propoſed the ſale of Joſeph: and, conſidering the difference of coins, it might be alſo for juſt the ſame ſum.

V. 29. Reuben, &c.] Reuben was abſent when the plan of ſelling Joſeph had been propoſed, agreed upon, and executed: yet he never diſcloſed, that we find, what he knew of this buſineſs to his father; for fear, perhaps, of drawing down the reſentment of the reſt upon himſelf.

V. 32. Thy ſon's coat, &c.] Not our brother's, or Joſeph's coat, but thy ſon's; as if, even in this cruel impoſition, they would reproach their father for his partiality to Joſeph, and almoſt inſinuate that Joſeph alone was conſidered as a ſon.

33 And he knew it, and ſaid, It is my ſon's coat; an evil beaſt hath devoured him: Joſeph is without doubt rent in pieces.

34 And Jacob rent his clothes, and put ſackcloth upon his loins, and mourned for his ſon many days.

35 And all his ſons and all his daughters roſe up to comfort him; but he refuſed to be comforted; and he ſaid, For I will go down into the grave unto my ſon, mourning: Thus his father wept for him.

36 And the Midianites ſold him into Egypt unto Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh's, and captain of the guard.

CHAP.

V. 34. Rent his clothes, and put, &c.] This was in thoſe ages and countries the cuſtomary indication of great ſorrow; and implied an humiliation before God for ſin, as the cauſe of affliction.

V. 35. His daughters.] Not only Dinah, but his ſons' wives, (for many of them were at that time married,) joined in endeavouring to comfort Jacob.

His ſons ſeem to have rather relented, when they witneſſed his exceſſive ſorrow: yet not ſo as to confeſs their evil deeds, or betray one another; though Jacob's grief might thereby have been abated, and probable meaſures taken for recovering Joſeph.

Thus his father wept for him.] Immoderately, and without proper reſignation to the will of God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who hate to be reformed, hate alſo to be reproved, and are offended with thoſe who expoſe them to reproof: and though it is often of important advantage to diſcover the ſecret crimes which men commit, to thoſe who are authoriſed to reprove and reſtrain them; yet nothing requires more prudence and candour: nor ſhould it ever be done out of reſentment, or without urgent occaſion; but always from hatred of the ſin, and love to the ſinner; and with reluctancy, as expecting nothing but unpleaſant conſequences to ourſelves.—In the preſent ſtate of things there will be contentions amongſt brethren, eſpecially thoſe of oppoſite characters; and parents ought certainly to manifeſt their preference of ſuch as behave with the greateſt piety and prudence: yet even this will excite the enmity and envy of thoſe who are proud and ungodly. Great care ought therefore to be taken not to inflame theſe malignant paſſions by ſuch diſtinctions as are uſeleſs and invidious. Much of that wiſdom, which is from above, will be neceſſary in this reſpect, to avoid ſowing thoſe ſeeds of diſcord that will not ſpeedily be eradicated: for when once malice and envy have got poſſeſſion of the heart, every circumſtance enhances them; love ſhewn to the perſon envied, is conſidered as hatred to the envious man; kindneſs to the one ſeems injuſtice to the other, and commendation, reproach; yea the very excellency of a man's character and conduct makes him the more odious to ſuch perſons. Theſe paſſions, when once full grown, break through every tie of nature, every obligation of duty, and every reſtraint of conſcience and compaſſion: and if grafted upon that enmity, which is in the ſeed of the ſerpent againſt the ſeed of the woman, upon religious enmity and the ſpirit of perſecution, they produce the moſt atrocious crimes, which are not attended with the leaſt remorſe or reluctance.—But though the Lord knows that the tokens of his favour, and that honour which comes from him, will excite theſe diabolical diſpoſitions, and inflame them more and more; yet he will not, on that account, withold them: nay he will rather confer ſuch favours, purpoſely to evidence the malignity and force of theſe vile affections, either for the ſinner's future conviction and humiliation, or to manifeſt his own juſtice in his condemnation. He knows how to make the wrath of man to praiſe him, and to reſtrain the remainder of it: he can check and moderate the force of men's paſſions, work upon their humanity or natural affection, excite horror or terror in their minds, or even let looſe ſelfiſhneſs, covetouſneſs, or fear of man to counteract the effects of malice and revenge: ſo that, in direct oppoſition to their own intention, his enemies ſhall juſt go far enough to accompliſh his purpoſes, and to defeat their own; and to promote the benefit and advancement of believers which they meant to hinder:—If the Lord ever now does, (as he frequently did in former ages,) give previous intimations of what he intends to do for and by his ſervants, it muſt be conſidered as equivalent to an aſſurance of many preparatory trials: for before honour is humility; and without ſevere diſcipline the hearts of the beſt of men are ſeldom ſufficiently humbled, for ſuitably filling up important ſtations of uſefulneſs.—Scarcely any thing can be baſer than for children to inſult, and torture the heart, of a parent, whoſe main fault conſiſts in having too much indulged them; yet in this common caſe, though the conduct of the child be vile, the appointment of God is wiſe and righteous.—The more we love earthly objects, the greater affliction we are thereby expoſed to; and impatient mourning for their loſs too plainly proves the exceſs of our affection, and the need there was of the ſalutary ſtroke: yet our ſorrow would often ceaſe, and be turned into joy, if we knew all the truth. In faith reſting ſatisfied that though we know not now what the Lord is doing, yet we ſhall both know and approve hereafter; we ſhould comfort ourſelves under ſevere trials, and not determine raſhly and falſely, to go down mourning to the grave, (xlv. 28. xlviii. 11). As we know not what we, or our's may come to before we die, it is good to habituate ourſelves to labour, ſelf-denial, and ſubmiſſion.—When men are bent upon wickedneſs, they will never want ſome ſtratagem to effect, and ſome pretext to conceal it: but however unanimous they may be in hiding their ſins, they will at laſt be brought to light to their confuſion.

But let us in all this behold Jeſus, hated, envied, perſecuted, ſold, and ſuffering for us; yea in ſome ſenſe by us: for we are like-minded in ourſelves by nature, to thoſe who crucified him; and our ſins were the real cauſes of thoſe ſufferings, which made way for his mediatorial exaltation. Thus whilſt we were enemies, proviſion was mafor our periſhing neceſſity, when we were made ſenſible of it: and he waits his opportunity of overcoming evil with good. Whilſt we receive from his fulneſs daily, let us not forget the anguiſh of his ſoul, when ſuffering for our ſins, that we may mourn for our crimes, and crucify his crucifiers; and that we may love and ſerve him, and through envy, reproach and tribulation follow him to glory.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVIII. V. 1, 2.] The inſpired hiſtorian breaks off the thread of his narration to relate ſome other domeſtic occurrences, which about the ſame time took place in Jacob's family; and were doubtleſs an additional cauſe of great grief to the aged Patriarch.—Though Judah and his brethren ſo ſtrenuouſly oppoſed the marriage of Dinah with an uncircumciſed perſon; yet he, and probably all the reſt, married wives from among them.—Judah, though very young, married, as it ſeems, without Jacob's advice or conſent, at the inſtance of his Canaanitiſh friend.

V. 7. Was wicked, &c.] Er was wicked in the ſight of the Lord; but perhaps he was not ſo in the ſight of man, from whom he contrived to conceal his crimes. The Lord, however, was ſo provoked at his ſecret ſins, that he ſlew him. Many premature deaths might probably be accounted for in the ſame manner, had we as impartial and well-informed hiſtorians to record them.

V. 8. Go in, &c.] The cuſtom of marrying a brother's widow, when he died childleſs, ſeems to have been a traditional, before it became a written law; and the firſt born from ſuch marriages was accounted the child of the deceaſed, was adopted into his family, and became his heir.

V. 9, 10.] Onan's conduct was not only unnatural and deteſtable in itſelf, but full of envy and malice; and not without ſomething of the nature of murder in it: for the ſame principle would have induced him to have murdered a child born to him, but accounted his brother's; if he had been tempted, and could have done it with impunity.

V. 11. Leſt peradventure, &c.] Perhaps Judah, being ignorant of the real cauſe of his ſon's death, attributed it to ſome ill-behaviour of Tamar, and therefore ſecretly determined not to marry Shelah to her: but he put the matter off, by intimating that he was too young, and he ſhould wait a little longer, before he allowed them to marry.

V. 14. And ſhe was not, &c.] Tamar could not think this a probable way of forwarding her marriage with Shelah:

that Shelah was grown, and she was not given unto him to wife.

15 When Judah saw her, he thought her to be an harlot; because she had covered her face.

16 And he turned unto her by the way, and said, Go to, I pray thee, let me come in unto thee (for he knew not that she was his daughter in law:) And she said, What wilt thou give me, that thou mayest come in unto me?

17 And he said, I will send thee a kid from the flock: And she said, Wilt thou give me a pledge, till thou send it?

18 And he said, What pledge shall I give thee? And she said, Thy signet, and thy bracelets, and thy staff that is in thine hand: and he gave it her, and came in unto her, and she conceived by him.

19 And she arose, and went away, and laid by her vail from her, and put on the garments of her widowhood.

20 And Judah sent the kid by the hand of his friend the Adullamite, to receive his pledge from the woman's hand: but he found her not.

21 Then he asked the man of that place, saying, Where is the harlot, that was openly by the way-side? And they said, There was no harlot in this place.

22 And he returned to Judah, and said, I cannot find her; and also the men of the place said, that there was no harlot in this place.

23 And Judah said, Let her take it to her, lest we be shamed: behold, I sent this kid, and thou hast not found her.

24 And it came to pass about three months after, that it was told Judah, saying, Tamar thy daughter in law hath played the harlot; and also behold, she is with child by whoredom: And Judah said, Bring her forth, and let her be burnt.

25 When she was brought forth, she sent to her father-in-law, saying, By the man whose these are, am I with child: and she said, Discern, I pray thee, whose are these, the signet, and bracelets, and staff.

26 And Judah acknowledged them, and said, She hath been more righteous than I; because that I gave her not to Shelah my son: and he knew her again no more.

27 And it came to pass in the time of her travail, that behold twins were in her womb.

lah; but she probably perceived that Judah never intended it: and yet it is difficult to assign a reason for her laying this snare for her father-in-law. Some conjecture that being proselyted to the true religion, she was desirous of being brought into the line of Christ's ancestors, and, from that motive, of having children by some of Jacob's family; and perhaps some intimation had been given that our Lord should spring from Judah; therefore not expecting to be married to Shelah, she saw no other way but drawing in Judah to lie with her. If these were her motives, though they by no means excuse her conduct, which must be ascribed to her ignorance, she certainly obtained her end; for Christ was descended from her by this very incestuous intercourse!

V. 18. Signet, bracelets, and staff.] These were probably of considerable value, and would afford Tamar an opportunity of exposing Judah; yet he was so infatuated as to entrust them with a supposed common prostitute!

V. 21. Where is the harlot?] By this circumstance, and by Tamar's covering her face, we learn that these practices were neither so common, nor so shameless amongst these Canaanites, as they now are amongst nominal christians. We shall not easily find a place, of which it can now truly be said, there is no harlot here.

V. 23. Lest we be shamed, &c.] For the whoredom, and the folly connected with it.

V. 24 Bring her, &c.] Some suppose that Judah only meant to brand Tamar with a mark of infamy: if he meant to burn her to death, in her present situation, it shows not only that he considered her as betrothed to Shelah, and an adulteress; but also that he was actuated by an undue severity, and dislike to Tamar. In those days the injured party seems to have often been both accuser, judge, and executioner; as in the case of murder, the nearest relation was the avenger of blood.

V. 25. Discern, I pray thee, &c.] He, who had been the adviser in the sale of Joseph, and in sending his coat to Jacob, with this taunting message, "Know now whether this be thy son's coat or no;" was at length taunted in a similar manner, "Discern, I pray thee, whose these are."

V. 26. More righteous than I, &c.] Judah had intentionally committed only fornication, while Tamar had been guilty of incest: yet conscious of his being the occasion of her crime, by withholding Shelah; and condemned in his conscience for the harsh sentence which he had uttered against her, and perhaps being truly penitent, he condemned himself more than her; and knew her again no more. Nor do we find, though he was yet young, that he married again.

V. 27—30.] By an hard labour Tamar was corrected for her crime; yet from these twins descended almost the whole 28 And it came to paſs when ſhe travailed, that the one put out his hand; and the midwife took and bound upon his hand a ſcarlet thread, ſaying, This came out firſt.

29 And it came to paſs as he drew back his hand, that behold his brother came out; and ſhe ſaid, How haſt thou broken forth? this breach be upon thee: therefore his name was called Pharez.

30 And afterward came out his brother, that had the ſcarlet thread upon his hand; and his name was called Zara.

AND Joſeph was brought down to Egypt: and Potiphar an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard, an Egyptian, bought him of the hands of the Iſhmeelites, which had brought him down thither.

2 And the LORD was with Joſeph, and he was a proſperous man: and he was in the houſe of his maſter the Egyptian.

3 And his maſter ſaw that the LORD was with him, and that the LORD made all that he did to proſper in his hand.

4 And Joſeph found grace in his ſight, and he whole tribe of Judah; from whom the whole nation are to this day called Jews, or Judeans; and who had little cauſe to boaſt, that they were not born of fornication. Some make the circumſtances of this birth emblematical of the Jews and Gentiles: the Jews, like Zarah, ſeemed marked for priority in the church of Chriſt, yet they drew back; and the Gentiles, like Pharez, have got the birth-right: yet in due time they ſhall alſo regain admiſſion, and ſhare the ſame privileges.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Alas! what a melancholy view do theſe records give us of the ſtate of Jacob's family, of the troubles which he had with his children, and of the ſtate of religion in the then viſible church of God!—Is this Judah, "whom his "brethren ſhall praiſe?" Rather let us praiſe God for his patience with him; and that where ſin had abounded, grace, as we hope, much more abounded in his ſalvation. The friendſhip of thoſe, who will encourage and flatter young perſons, and aſſiſt them in gratifying their licentious inclinations, is often much valued by them, and their company courted and preferred before that of pious friends and relations: but it corrupts good manners, and makes bad worſe.—Though, all things conſidered, it is beſt for moſt men to marry early in life; yet ſurely not when they are incapable of judging for themſelves, and will not be counſelled, or directed by their parents and friends; but are led by thoſe who fear not God, into connections with others of the ſame ſtamp.—Too often parents lead their children into the ſame miſtakes and ſins, of which they themſelves have been guilty, and are inſtrumental in their ruin temporal and eternal.—The Lord ſometimes makes ſpeedy work in executing judgment on young ſinners, in order to prevent the abuſe of his patience in his dealings with others. The Scriptures ſparingly hint at thoſe vile practices, which, though done in ſecret, are a ſhame to be ſpoken of: this is to ſhow that the Lord notices, abhors, and will bring to light every ſecret ſin, and eſpecially all the laſciviouſneſs of heart and life, which it is to be feared millions live in, who ſtand fair in the world's eſteem: then ſhall the ſecret hiſtory of every individual (who hath not truly repented, and waſhed away his ſins in the blood of Chriſt), written with an impartial pen, be publiſhed to the world of men and angels; every mouth ſhall then be ſtopped; and God's righteouſneſs in the condemnation of ſinners be manifeſted to the whole univerſe. Mirth, feaſting, and vain company, furniſh fuel to licentious inclinations, and opportunity inflames the heart: then intereſt, credit, and conſcience are ſacrificed, and the wiſeſt of men act as if bereft of common ſenſe: for wine and whoredom take away the heart, and ſtupify the conſcience.—What need have we then to watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation! Unthought-of conſequences will ſoon prove the folly of thoſe who give licence to their luſts; and they, who fear ſhame before men more than condemnation before God, often find the very thing come upon them which they feared, notwithſtanding all their care to prevent it. Injurious ſuſpicions and unjuſt treatment, frequently drive thoſe to evil practices, who were not previouſly diſpoſed to them: but miſerable and infatuated beyond expreſſion are they, who barter chaſtity, reputation, and even their ſouls, for the paltry reward of ſin. Nor are any more hardened againſt compaſſion, or more diſpoſed to treat others with unrelenting ſeverity, than they who are moſt indulgent to themſelves, and hardened in unrepented wickedneſs. Yet it is hopeful, when being put to ſhame before men produces inward conviction of guilt, humiliating confeſſions, and renunciation of ſin never more to return to it. But whilſt we compaſſionate pious Jacob, thus wounded on every ſide by the miſconduct of his family; let us admire the ſovereign purpoſe and grace of God, who by all theſe events was preparing for the manifeſtation of his Son in human nature. Our Redeemer ſprang from Judah by Tamar, and from Pharez; for his excellency was perſonal; and, though ſinleſs, it he ſerved him: and he made him overſeer over his houſe, and all that he had he put into his hand.

5 And it came to paſs from the time that he had made him overſeer in his houſe, and over all that he had, that the LORD bleſſed the Egyptian's houſe for Joſeph's ſake, and the bleſſing of the LORD was upon all that he had, in the houſe, and in the field.

6 And he left all that he had in Joſeph's hand; and he knew not ought he had, ſave the bread which he did eat: and Joſeph was a goodly perſon, and well favoured.

7 And it came to paſs after theſe things, that his maſter's wife caſt her eyes upon Joſeph; and ſhe ſaid, Lie with me.

8 But he refuſed, and ſaid unto his maſter's wife, Behold, my maſter wotteth not what is with me in the houſe, and he hath committed all that he hath to my hand.

9 There is none greater in this houſe than I; neither hath he kept back any thing from me, but thee, becauſe thou art his wife: how then can I do this great wickedneſs, and ſin againſt God?

10 And it came to paſs as ſhe ſpake to Joſeph day by day, that he hearkened not unto her, to lie by her, or to be with her.

11 And it came to paſs about this time, that Joſeph went into the houſe to do his buſineſs; and there was none of the men of the houſe there within.

ſuited the end of his appearance, to be made in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIX. V. 2—4.] Joſeph was not only favoured with the comforting preſence of the Lord, and with ſeaſons of peculiarly ſweet communion with him: but he was ſo remarkably furniſhed with wiſdom from above, and proſpered in all his undertakings, that it was evident even to Potiphar himſelf, that the Lord was with him, aſſiſting, and ſucceeding him. Thus becoming uſeful, though a ſlave, he was had in reputation; and he abode in the houſe well ſatisfied: and keeping cloſe to his work, he became a favourite with his maſter, who greatly countenanced and confided in him.

V. 5. He had made him overſeer, &c.] Conſidering Potiphar's rank, it is not probable that Joſeph was preferred to ſo important a ſtation, till his ability and fidelity had been fully proved. Near thirteen years elapſed, from the time when he was ſold into Egypt, to that of his ſtanding before Pharaoh. Some years he was confined in priſon; but probably more elapſed during his continuance in Potiphar's family, previous to his impriſonment; where he would have large opportunity of acquiring that kind of knowledge and addreſs, which his future elevated ſtation required. In this ſtation the Lord bleſſed him; ſo that there was a remarkable change for the better: every body noticed that all affairs were better conducted, and had a more proſperous event.

V. 6. And he left all, &c.] Having increaſing confidence in his fidelity, integrity, prudence, and good ſucceſs.

V. 7. Lie with me, &c.] The diſparity in rank betwixt Potiphar's wife and Joſeph, and the obſervation of his modeſty as equal to his other virtues, probably made her deſpair of inveigling him by diſtant hints: and conſidering how much it was his intereſt to oblige her, and how dangerous to offend her; as ſhe was hurried on by the violence of her criminal paſſions, ſhe was not aſhamed to addreſs him in ſo impudent a manner, not much fearing a repulſe.

V. 8—10.] Attending to the circumſtances before mentioned, and conſidering Joſeph as a ſingle man, in the vigour of youth; with the importunity with which he was aſſaulted, and the opportunity and privacy afforded him, we cannot too much admire this glorious victory of chaſtity; the power of divine grace diſplayed in it; and the excellency of him, who was hated of his brethren. And comparing his conduct with that of Judah, Reuben, and other of Jacob's ſons, we muſt allow that he had juſtly the preference in his father's eſteem.—Nor was this refuſal more worthy of admiration, than the manner of it: the calmneſs of his ſpirit, the force of his arguments, the generoſity and delicacy, as well as piety of his ſentiment, are moſt beautiful.—His maſter's kindneſs to him, the honourable ſtation which he held in his family, the peculiar relation in which his tempter ſtood to his generous benefactor, the greatneſs of the injuſtice and ingratitude to him, which would be in ſuch a conduct; but above all, the greatneſs of the wickedneſs in the ſight of God, whoſe authority and diſpleaſure he was not aſhamed to mention to this adulterous woman: theſe are the topics, which he inſiſted upon; and had not her vile paſſions ſtupified and hardened her heart, ſurely ſhe muſt have been reclaimed, or even converted to his God and to his religion, which he ſo adorned and recommended by his conduct.—Whilſt ſhe aſſailed him day by day continually, doubtleſs Satan, as far as permitted, would paint to his imagination in lively colours the advantages of compliance, and the conſequences of refuſal: but all in vain; for the grace of our Lord was ſufficient for him. So that when he found her deaf to the calls of duty, conſcience, gratitude, honour, and the fear of God, and that he could not reclaim her, he avoided her company as much as poſſible; being diſtruſtful of himſelf, and fearful of being overcome, if he parleyed with the temptation.

12 And ſhe caught him by his garment, ſaying, Lie with me: and he left his garment in her hand, and fled, and got him out.

13 And it came to paſs, when ſhe ſaw that he had left his garment in her hand, and was fled forth, 14 That ſhe called unto the men of her houſe, and ſpake unto them, ſaying, See, he hath brought in an Hebrew unto us to mock us: he came in unto me to lie with me, and I cried with a loud voice.

15 And it came to paſs, when he heard that I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled, and got him out.

16 And ſhe laid up his garment by her, until his lord came home.

17 And ſhe ſpake unto him according to theſe words, ſaying, The Hebrew ſervant which thou haſt brought unto us, came in unto me to mock me.

18 And it came to paſs, as I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled out.

19 And it came to paſs, when his maſter heard the words of his wife, which ſhe ſpake unto him, ſaying, After this manner did thy ſervant to me; that his wrath was kindled.

20 And Joſeph's maſter took him, and put him into the priſon, a place where the king's priſoners were bound: and he was there in the priſon.

21 But the LORD was with Joſeph, and ſhewed him mercy, and gave him favour in the ſight of the keeper of the priſon.

22 And the keeper of the priſon committed to Joſeph's hand all the priſoners that were in the priſon: and whatſoever they did there, he was the doer of it.

23 The keeper of the priſon looked not to any thing that was under his hand; becauſe the LORD was with him: and that which he did, the LORD made it to proſper.

CHAP.

V. 13—16.] The baſe affection of this vile woman being finally diſappointed, it was changed for the moſt rancorous enmity, and ſhe ſeems to have exulted in the opportunity, which ſhe now had of being revenged upon him. When, therefore, the men came in, ſhe addreſſed them, without mentioning Potiphar, in the affected language of rage and diſdain. She called Joſeph an Hebrew from Eber, one of the anceſtors of Abraham. This was ſpoken in contempt of his original, and religion. She added, that he left his garment with her, intimating that having called aloud for help, he haſted to eſcape; upon which ſeizing hold of his garment, ſhe had endeavoured in vain to retain him, till they came to apprehend him.

V. 17. To mock me, &c.] To inſult and treat me in a baſe unworthy manner.

V. 19—20.] We do not find that Joſeph attempted to ſay one word in his own defence: perhaps he was not permitted; and perhaps he was not inclined, as ſenſible it would be all in vain: however, he was dumb upon David's principle, "thou ſhalt anſwer for me, O Lord my God." Though we cannot but cenſure Potiphar for ſo haſtily crediting this accuſation of a perſon of ſuch approved excellency: yet conſidering the abſolute authority maſters then poſſeſſed over the lives of their ſlaves, the vehement rancour of his accuſer, and the baſeneſs of the crime laid to his charge; it was certainly by a remarkable reſtraint from God, that Joſeph was preſerved from being put to death. He was therefore put into the priſon where the king's priſoners were. In this circumſtance alſo the hand of the Lord is to be noticed: in any other priſon probably Pharaoh had never heard of him.

V. 22. He was the doer of it.] Through the wiſdom and fidelity which Joſeph manifeſted, he ſoon acquired the confidence of the keeper; and though he was at firſt ſeverely treated, (Pſalm cv. 17—19;) yet he afterwards became both comfortable and uſeful. Doubtleſs the priſoners were treated by him with ſingular humanity; and we hope benefited by his pious counſels, excellent example, and winning benevolence.

V. 23. Becauſe the Lord, &c.] This was ſo evident that the keeper of the priſon noticed it, and was influenced, perhaps converted by it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our enemies may ſtrip us of external diſtinctions and ornaments, but wiſdom and grace cannot be taken from us: they may baniſh us from friends, relatives, and country, but they cannot deprive us of the preſence of the Lord: they may exclude us from the benefits of common providence, rob us of liberty, and confine us in dungeons; but they cannot ſhut us out from communion with God, ſeclude us from the throne of Grace, or bereave us of the ſpecial bleſſings of ſalvation. The ordinances of God, and the ſociety of his people, are uſeful, and in ſome ſenſe almoſt neceſſary to the life of faith and growth of grace, eſpecially in young converts; ſo that parents and miniſters are juſtly fearful leſt their beloved children or people ſhould be ſecluded from them: but if God's providence, contrary to our inclination, deprive us of them, his gracious preſence can ſupply the deficiency, make the ſoul like a watered garden, though deſtitute of ſuch advantages; and render us both comfortable, reſpectable, proſperous, and uſeful. Had Potiphar purchaſed Joſeph with half the ſubſtance of his houſe, he had made an an advantageous bargain: and, though he was a heathen, till he was impoſed on, he learned his value by experience, and treated him accordingly. Yet how little do many chriſtians underſtand the value of ſuch ſervants as fear God, who will always be moſt faithful, induſtrious, and ſucceſsful! But we muſt allow on the other hand that mere pretenders to religion, of character and conduct exactly the reverſe of Joſeph, occaſion this prejudice amongſt thoſe who cannot, or will not, diſcriminate betwixt the humble chriſtian and the noiſy hypocrite.—When the Lord pleaſes, he can eaſily give his ſervants favour even among ſtrangers, and none ever was a loſer by being kind unto them. Uſually they, who accommodate themſelves to a low and laborious ſituation, will get forward, and acquire confidence. But alas! proſperity draws on temptation; and perſonal accompliſhments are often ſnares to others, as well as to the poſſeſſor; therefore they ſhould not be envied, coveted, or gloried in. Through the force of human depravity, thoſe amiable qualities, which ſhould command eſteem, attract the attention of the licentious eye, and kindle in the heart the flame of forbidden luſt; which having acquired the aſcendancy, ſcorns all reſtraint, and throws off all regard to modeſty and decency. Thus when luſt is conceived, it bringeth forth ſin; and the infatuated wretch ruſhing headlong forward to deſtruction, commences ſeducer, and the factor for Satan in tempting others to wickedneſs: nor is any thing more to be dreaded than ſuch a tempter, or more to be ſhunned than ſuch temptations; and, if we mean not to commit iniquity, we ought to flee as a bird from the ſnare, and as a roe from the hand of the hunter. Let us not in this glorious example of Joſeph reſt ſatisfied with admiring him, but proceed to adore the energy of divine grace: truſting to that grace, we may hope to be more than conquerors, not only if expoſed to the fiery trial of perſecution, but even if aſſaulted in the more dangerous manner that Joſeph was. But would we ſtand ſtedfaſt in the day of trial, we muſt have our minds armed with gratitude, juſtice, fear of God, faith and love, abhorrence of evil, contempt of worldly pleaſure or gain, and readineſs for the croſs: we muſt learn alſo to judge of every ſin, and of the luſts of the fleſh eſpecially, not according to that ſlight manner, which the world does; but as enormous crimes, for the ſake of which the wrath of God cometh upon the children of diſobedience. And that importunity may not prevail upon us, nor ſecrecy encourage us; we ſhould endeavour to have our minds habitually poſſeſſed with a ſenſe of our obligations unto God, his all-ſeeing eye upon us, and the approaching diſcoveries of the day of judgment. But if Satan cannot tempt us to ſin, he will diſtreſs us: and we may lay our account with the embittered reſentment of thoſe, whoſe wicked inclinations we diſappoint; and with being falſely accuſed of thoſe very crimes which we abhor, yea becauſe we abhor them. However, it is better, if the will of God be, that we ſuffer for well-doing than for evil-doing: a clear conſcience, and the preſence of a merciful God, will ſupport us, not only under other trials, but under the moſt injurious calumnies; and we need not much labour to vindicate ourſelves; in due time the Lord will vindicate us, and wipe off every aſperſion.—The more meekly and patiently we ſuffer, the leſs bitterneſs ſhall we experience in our trials, and the more conſiſtent will our conduct be with the character of chriſtians. By all theſe things the Lord is training up his people for glory; perhaps for better ſcenes, and important ſervices in this preſent world; and if we are not in a wrong ſpirit, or out of the path of duty, we can never be in a wrong place either for comfort or uſefulneſs.

But let us not forget through Joſeph to look unto Jeſus, who ſuffered being tempted, yet without ſin: who was calumniated and perſecuted, but without cauſe; "who was "led as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before her "ſhearer is dumb, ſo he opened not his mouth," to recriminate, or to vindicate himſelf; and who by the croſs aſcended to the throne. May we be enabled, and contented to follow in the ſame path of ſubmiſſive ſuffering, to the ſame place of glory.

6 And Joſeph came in unto them in the morning, and looked upon them, and behold they were ſad.

7 And he aſked Pharaoh's officers that were with him in the ward of his lord's houſe, ſaying, Wherefore look ye ſo ſadly to day?

8 And they ſaid unto him, We have dreamed a dream, and there is no interpreter of it. And Joſeph ſaid unto them, Do not interpretations belong to God? tell me them, I pray you.

9 And the chief butler told his dream to Joſeph, and ſaid unto him, In my dream, behold, a vine was before me.

10 And in the vine were three branches: and it was as though it budded, and her bloſſoms ſhot forth; and the cluſters thereof brought forth ripe grapes.

11 And Pharaoh's cup was in my hand: and I took the grapes, and preſſed them into Pharaoh's cup, and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand.

12 And Joſeph ſaid unto him, This is the interpretation of it: The three branches are three days.

13 Yet within three days ſhall Pharaoh lift up thine head, and reſtore thee unto thy place: and thou ſhalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou waſt his butler.

14 But think on me when it ſhall be well with thee, and ſhew kindneſs, I pray thee, unto me; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this houſe.

15 For indeed I was ſtolen away out of the land of the Hebrews: and here alſo have I done nothing that they ſhould put me into the dungeon.

16 When the chief baker ſaw that the interpretation was good; he ſaid unto Joſeph, I alſo was in my dream, and behold, I had three white baſkets on my head.

17 And in the uppermoſt baſket there was of all manner of bake-meats for Pharaoh; and the birds did eat them out of the baſket upon my head.

18 And Joſeph anſwered, and ſaid, This is the interpretation thereof: The three baſkets are three days.

19 Yet within three days ſhall Pharaoh lift up thy head from off thee, and ſhall hang thee on a tree; and the birds ſhall eat thy fleſh from off thee.

V. 4. Charged, &c.] It is probable that at firſt Joſeph was not only cloſely confined, but ſeverely treated in this priſon. After ſome time however Potiphar's reſentment cooled: and conſidering the whole of his prudent and excellent conduct, and the improbability of the charge brought againſt him, with other circumſtances, he perhaps began to ſuſpect that it was a malicious accuſation: and though he would not give umbrage to his wife, by taking Joſeph out of priſon; yet he ſeems to have connived at the kind treatment which he there met with; and being ſenſible of his abilities, was not unwilling he ſhould be truſted and be ſerviceable in that ſituation. Being thus employed, he gave the King's butler and baker, as priſoners of rank, all the attendance required or allowed.

V. 6. They were ſad.] The priſoners, conſidering their dreams as ſupernatural, and indications of their future fate, were very melancholy: their ſituation and perhaps ſome conſciouſneſs of guilt cauſed them to forbode the worſt.

V. 7. Wherefore look ye, &c.] This is a beautiful ſpecimen of that attentive tenderneſs and ſympathy, by means of which God gave Joſeph favour with every one.

V. 8. No interpreter.] They could not in the priſon conſult their diviners, in whom they placed confidence; and this added to their anxiety. Joſeph's appoſite queſtion intimates, that he had before diſcourſed with them of the true God, and endeavoured to draw them off from thoſe lying vanities to his worſhip and ſervice: it alſo precluded them from giving him the honour of the interpretation.

V. 13. Yet, &c.] The actual delivery of the cup into Pharaoh's hand obviouſly denoted the favourable iſſue.

V. 14, 15.] Joſeph deſired, by appeal to Pharaoh, to make ſuit for his enlargement; but he had no further requeſt to preſent. He ſaid not how, or by whom he was ſtolen: for he was not diſpoſed to criminate or reproach his brethren. Neither did he ſo much as accuſe his wicked miſtreſs, or at all reflect on Potiphar, or expreſs any reſentment for his falſe impriſonment.

V. 19. The birds ſhall eat, &c.] The bake-meats eaten by the birds and not brought to Pharaoh, was the unfavourable preſage: the bad dream would not admit of a good interpretation; nor could Joſeph conſiſtently with fidelity conceal the truth, however it might pain him to ſpeak it. The baker might be the better for it, if he prepared accordingly.

V. 20. Birth-day, &c.] The anniverſary of Pharaoh's birth-day being obſerved as a ſeaſon of feſtivity, theſe officers were enquired after; and either through the merits the head of the chief butler, and of the chief baker among his ſervants.

21 And he reſtored the chief butler unto his butlerſhip again; and he gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand:

22 But he hanged the chief baker: as Joſeph had interpreted to them.

23 Yet did not the chief butler remember Joſeph, but forgat him.

of their cauſe, or the caprice of their ſovereign, they were thus differently diſpoſed of. We have but two inſtances I think in ſcripture of feſtive obſervation of birth-days: this of Pharaoh, and that of Herod, (Matt. xiv,) neither of which give much ſanction to the cuſtom.—Indeed it ſeems rather incongruous that worldly people, who are ſo fond of living here, ſhould celebrate the burial of one year after another of their ſhort ſpan, with ſuch indications of hilarity. A chriſtian may, however, very properly obſerve his birth-day; and indeed has cauſe to rejoice both that ever he was born, and that he comes nearer and nearer to the concluſion of ſin and ſorrow, and to the completion of felicity. And he may take occaſion to bleſs the Lord for the mercies, to humble himſelf for the ſins of the preceding year, and to ſeek his bleſſing upon the year enſuing.

V. 23. The chief butler, &c.] Neither the kindneſs ſhewn by Joſeph; nor the interpretation of the dream thus remarkably verified; nor the diſcourſes he had heard from him concerning his religion; nor his excellent conduct which adorned it, made any laſting impreſſion on the chief butler, when he was again poſſeſſed of the emoluments of his office, and enjoying the pleaſures of the court.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

High ſtations are ſlippery places; and from the preſence chamber to the dungeon, is in many earthly courts but a ſhort ſtep: a place in his favour who will not forſake his true ſervants, is of unſpeakable value.—In the moſt voluntary actions of men, who know not God and pay no regard to him, we may diſcern his hand; and perceive how his purpoſes unfold, and his counſels work towards an accompliſhment, ſlowly but ſurely. Whilſt we are encouraged by the gracious dealings of the Lord towards his afflicted ſervant, let us mark how he reſembled Chriſt; and may we through the grace of God reſemble and imitate him, in fidelity, humanity, compaſſion, unaffected piety, and humility; in repreſſing the pride and reſentment, which agitate our hearts, embitter our ſpirits, and are apt to diſgrace our converſation, when we meet with injurious treatment, or ſpeak of that which we have met with; and in modeſtly pleading our own cauſe without needleſsly mentioning, or expoſing the faults even of our moſt malignant enemies.—Alas! the foreſight of ſinners, however attained, reaches but a few days forward: but by faith the believer looks through the ſufferings of time, and anticipates the glories of eternity. Though we may not in general expect information from dreams, nor regret the want of an interpreter of them: yet to be favoured with a wiſe and faithful interpreter of God's providences and oracles, eſpecially in ſeaſons of affliction, is an inexpreſſible mercy. (Job xxxiii. 23.) Here alſo interpretations belong to God; from him we muſt ſeek them, and to him give the praiſe, whatever inſtruments he may employ. But the ſame faithful interpretation, which encourages one, will contain an awful warning to another of a contrary character; yet both profitable: for, bleſſed be God, if we diſcover our danger, we need not ſeek long or in vain for a refuge. Temporal deliverances muſt generally be longer waited for by the Lord's ſervants, than by others; that they may have them with a bleſſing, and be previouſly prepared for them: and the Lord will teach them to ceaſe from man, before they obtain their beſt bleſſings. We muſt not complain, nor be diſcouraged, if we are forgotten, or ungratefully requited by thoſe whom we have ſerved. Ingratitude is, alas! the fault of our nature, and we are guilty of it as well as others, eſpecially in our baſe forgetfulneſs of God.—But let us not forget the ſufferings, promiſes, and love of our Redeemer; nor neglect to mark in this narration of Joſeph, a type of Jeſus, in the depth of his humiliation, by free grace, aſſuring one of the malefactors which hung beſide him, of immediate and eternal felicity; and with equal juſtice leaving the other to hardneſs of heart and eternal pedition.

CHAP. XLI.] V. 1. Two full years, &c.] Joſeph muſt have been ſome time in priſon before it can be ſuppoſed that he would be ſo far truſted, as to have the two ſtate priſoners under his charge: they were a conſiderable time in priſon; and two years more elapſed, without any tokens of approaching deliverance. Doubtleſs Joſeph would often be ready to ſay, "Lord, how long?"—The 11 And we dreamed a dream in one night, I and he: we dreamed each man according to the interpretation of his dream.

12 And there was there with us a young man, an Hebrew, ſervant to the captain of the guard; and we told him, and he interpreted to us our dreams: to each man according to his dream he did interpret.

13 And it came to paſs, as he interpreted to us, ſo it was: me he reſtored unto mine office, and him he hanged.

14 Then Pharaoh ſent and called Joſeph, and they brought him haſtily out of the dungeon: and he ſhaved himſelf, and changed his raiment, and came in unto Pharaoh.

15 And Pharaoh ſaid unto Joſeph, I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it: and I have heard ſay of thee, that thou canſt underſtand a dream, to interpret it.

16 And Joſeph anſwered Pharaoh, ſaying, It is not in me: God ſhall give Pharaoh an anſwer of peace.

17 And Pharaoh ſaid unto Joſeph, In my dream, behold, I ſtood upon the bank of the river.

18 And behold, there came up out of the river ſeven kine, fat-fleſhed, and well-favoured; and they fed in a meadow.

19 And behold, ſeven other kine came up after them, poor and very ill-favoured, and lean-fleſhed, ſuch as I never ſaw in all the land of Egypt for badneſs.

20 And the lean and the ill-favoured kine did eat up the firſt ſeven fat kine.

21 And when they had eaten them up, it could not be known that they had eaten them; but they were ſtill ill-favoured, as at the beginning. So I awoke.

22 And I ſaw in my dream, and behold, ſeven ears came up in one ſtalk, full and good.

23 And behold, ſeven ears withered, thin, and blaſted with the eaſt-wind, ſprung up after them.

ſcene of Pharaoh's dreams is laid at the river Nile, whoſe annual overflowing occaſioned the fertility of Egypt, which failed when that failed.

V. 2—7.] There ſeems in theſe dreams to be an alluſion to the graſs for the uſe of cattle, and to the corn for the food of man.

V. 8. His ſpirit was troubled, &c.] Though many of thoſe incoherencies, which are in ordinary dreams may be perceived: yet they were ſo impreſſed by God upon the king's mind, that he regarded them as a preſage of ſome great events to himſelf, or his kingdom. Moreover God ſo ordered it in order to forward Joſeph's advancement; that the magicians could not ſo much as make a plauſible conjecture at the meaning of theſe dreams.

V. 9. My faults.] Either formerly againſt Pharaoh, or in forgetting Joſeph.

V. 16. It is not in me, God, &c.] Joſeph would ſpeak of the Lord and his ſtatutes before kings, and not be aſhamed: thus he tacitly condemned all the pretended ſkill of the magicians, and endeavoured to draw the king himſelf from ſuch lying vanities unto the living God: at the ſame time, he modeſtly renounced all pretenſions to ſuperior ſagacity, and expreſſed his good-will to Pharaoh and his kingdom.

24 And the thin ears devoured the ſeven good ears: and I told this unto the magicians; but there was none that could declare it unto me.

25 And Joſeph ſaid unto Pharaoh, The dream of Pharaoh is one: God hath ſhewed Pharaoh what he is about to do.

26 The ſeven good kine are ſeven years; and the ſeven good ears are ſeven years: the dream is one.

27 And the ſeven thin and ill-favoured kine that came up after them, are ſeven years; and the ſeven empty ears blaſted with the eaſt-wind, ſhall be ſeven years of famine.

28 This is the thing which I have ſpoken unto Pharaoh: What God is about to do, he ſheweth unto Pharaoh.

29 Behold, there come ſeven years of great plenty, throughout all the land of Egypt.

30 And there ſhall ariſe after them ſeven years of famine, and all the plenty ſhall be forgotten in the land of Egypt: and the famine ſhall conſume the land.

31 And the plenty ſhall not be known in the land, by reaſon of that famine following: for it ſhall be very grievous.

32 And for that the dream was doubled unto Pharaoh twice; it is becauſe the thing is eſtabliſhed by God, and God will ſhortly bring it to paſs.

33 Now therefore let Pharaoh look out a man diſcreet and wiſe, and ſet him over the land of Egypt.

34 Let Pharaoh do this, and let him appoint officers over the land, and take up the fifth part of the land of Egypt in the ſeven plenteous years.

35 And let them gather all the food of thoſe good years that come, and lay up corn under the hand of Pharaoh, and let them keep food in the cities.

36 And that food ſhall be for ſtore to the land, againſt the ſeven years of famine, which ſhall be in the land of Egypt; that the land periſh not through the famine.

37 And the thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of all his ſervants.

38 And Pharaoh ſaid unto his ſervants, Can we find ſuch a one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?

39 And Pharaoh ſaid unto Joſeph, Foraſmuch as God hath ſhewed thee all this, there is none ſo diſcreet and wiſe as thou art.

40 Thou ſhalt be over my houſe, and according unto thy word ſhall all my people be ruled: only in the throne will I be greater than thou.

41 And Pharaoh ſaid unto Joſeph, See, I have ſet thee over all the land of Egypt.

42 And Pharaoh took off his ring from his hand, and put it upon Joſeph's hand, and arrayed him in veſtures of fine linen, and put a gold chain about his neck.

43 And he made him to ride in the ſecond chariot which he had; and they cried before him,

V. 25. The dream—is one.] That is, both dreams have one meaning.

V. 26. Are ſeven years.] That is, a repreſentation of ſeven years: a very common mode of expreſſion; however in a ſingle inſtance multitudes have managed to infer things abſurd and impoſſible, from one ſimilar to it: viz. "This is my body."

V. 33—36.] Joſeph preſumed to offer this counſel, as the practical inference from the revelation, God had afforded them: which was intended to forewarn them that they might make preparation.

V. 37. The thing was good, &c.] Under the preſent impreſſion of Joſeph's interpretation of the dream, they approved the counſel as undeniably good; perhaps not without each expecting, for himſelf or his friend, this lucrative and honourable employment.

V. 38. Spirit of God is, &c.] This concluſion probably ſprang from the remainder of a traditional opinion, that the higheſt and nobleſt wiſdom was derived from the inſpiration of the Spirit of God: and their judgment concerning Joſeph was doubtleſs produced not only from the interpretation, excelling all the ſkill of the magicians, but from the advice equally ſuperior to all the ſagacity of his counſellors. All parties were ſilent on the occaſion, and we may well aſcribe it to God's over-awing their minds, that no oppoſition was made; when we conſider how much the ſpirit which is in us luſteth to envy.

V. 40. Shall all, &c.] Thus was Joſeph made chief miniſter, and ruler in every department of government; as well as placed over the buſineſs of collecting corn.

V. 41—43.] Joſeph ſeems to have been modeſtly diſpoſed to decline ſuch a weighty and exalted ſtation; and intimidated at the difficulty and danger of it: and therefore needed repeated aſſurances to encourage him.—By theſe ſeveral tokens, the king publicly avowed him, Bow the knee: and he made him ruler over all the land of Egypt.

44 And Pharaoh ſaid unto Joſeph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee ſhall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt.

45 And Pharaoh called Joſeph's name Zaphnath-paaneah; and he gave him to wife Aſenath the daughter of Poti-pherah prieſt of On: and Joſeph went out over all the land of Egypt.

46 And Joſeph was thirty years old when he ſtood before Pharaoh king of Egypt: And Joſeph went out from the preſence of Pharaoh, and went throughout all the land of Egypt.

47 And in the ſeven plenteous years the earth brought forth by handfuls.

48 And he gathered up all the food of the ſeven years which were in the land of Egypt, and laid up the food in the cities: the food of the field which was round about every city, laid he up in the ſame.

49 And Joſeph gathered corn as the ſand of the ſea, very much, until he left numbering: for it was without number.

50 And unto Joſeph were born two ſons before the years of famine came: which Aſenath, the daughter of Poti-pherah prieſt of On, bare unto him.

51 And Joſeph called the name of the firſt-born Manaſſeh; for God, ſaid he, hath made me forget all my toil, and all my father's houſe.

52 And the name of the ſecond called he Ephraim: for God hath cauſed me to be fruitful in the land of my affliction.

53 And the ſeven years of plenteouſneſs, that was in the land of Egypt, were ended.

54 And the ſeven years of dearth began to come, according as Joſeph had ſaid: and the dearth was in all lands; but in all the land of Egypt there was bread.

55 And when all the land of Egypt was famiſhed, the people cried to Pharaoh for bread: and Pharaoh ſaid unto all the Egyptians, Go unto Joſeph; what he ſaith to you, do.

56 And the famine was over all the face of the earth: And Joſeph opened all the ſtore-houſes, and ſold unto the Egyptians; and the famine waxed ſore in the land of Egypt.

57 And all countries came into Egypt to Joſeph for to buy corn; becauſe that the famine was ſo ſore in all lands.

avowed his appointment, and ſhewed that it would be at the peril of any one who dared to oppoſe it.

V. 44. I am Pharaoh, &c.] As ſure as I am king of Egypt I will ſtand by thee in this matter: ſo that no man ſhall do any thing contrary to thy command, and allowance.

V. 45. Zaphnath-Paaneah.] This means, a revealer of ſecrets. Some ſay, a ſaviour of the land.

The Prieſt of On was ſome prince, or great lord of the court.—Joſeph immediately went over all the land to take ſurveys, build granaries, and make preparations for the execution of his deſign.

V. 47. By handfuls.] An uncommon and vaſt increaſe.

V. 49. Corn as the ſand, &c.] We may conjecture, that the fifth before mentioned was impoſed as a public tax upon the whole land: and that Joſeph moreover bought vaſt quantities, when corn was ſo plentiful and cheap, which he ſtored up in granaries upon the ſpot; thereby conſulting both eaſe and conveniency; and giving the people a pledge that it was laid up for them, not taken from them.

V. 51. Manaſſeh.] Signifies forgetfulneſs: for God had made Joſeph to forget all his toil and his father's houſe, by the proſperous event of his captivity, ſlavery, and impriſonment.—Perhaps, when he ſought enlargement through the chief butler, he had thoughts of returning home, out of regard to his father and family: but being now ſettled and engaged otherwiſe in God's providence, he had dropt ſuch thoughts. We muſt aſcribe it to the peculiar diſpoſal of God, that he was kept from ſending to enquire about them.

V. 52. Ephraim.] Signifies fruitfulneſs.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord in his appointed time will bring his people out of trouble, purified as gold from the furnace: but ſeldom either in the way, or at the ſeaſon which they expect; or until he hath brought them off from other dependences to a ſimple truſt in, and ſubmiſſion to, him.—In the multitude of dreams there are divers vanities, and in general they are neither worth repeating, nor capable of any interpretation: yet ſo abſolutely is our imagination, ſleeping as well as waking, in the Lord's hand, that without ſuppoſing any thing prophetical in them, (as in Pharaoh's dreams) he may thereby make and leave an impreſſion upon the mind, which may have the moſt important conſequences to ourſelves and others. We are not to deem thoſe expectations fruſtrated, which are not immediately anſwered; nor that ſeed of the word thrown away, which doth not immediately ſpring up: the moſt negligent and forgetful may hereafter remember, and be humbled for their preſent inattention. Deliverances both from temporal and ſpiritual diſtreſs often ſurpriſe the praying ſoul when leaſt expected, ſo that a man becomes like them that dream. And as God frequently pours contempt upon princes, and takes pleaſure in abaſing the haughty; ſo he delights as much in advancing the humble from the dunghill, to inherit the throne of glory. Humility and a regard to the glory of God are requiſite, in order to behave ſuitably in proſperous circumſtances: and an anſwer of peace may be expected, when thoſe are conſulted in whom is the Spirit of God: and to honour thoſe who honour him, the Lord frequently confounds the wiſdom of the wiſe, and brings to nothing the underſtanding of the prudent. When he pleaſes to give wiſdom and favour, he can conciliate the affections, or overawe the ſpirits of all; and prevent oppoſition from the jarring counſels and ſelfiſh paſſions of the ambitious and aſpiring.—Important truſts, however unexceptionably obtained and managed, are an incumbrance rather than an advantage to the poſſeſſor; who might be more comfortable, though not ſo uſeful, in an obſcure ſituation. Nay indeed all worldly proſperity, like the years of plenty, is fleeting away, and will ſoon be forgotten and ſwallowed up in the afflictions which are coming upon the wicked. In Joſeph, however, we ſtill ſee a bright example of fidelity, activity, and equity: and an inſtance of the extenſive good, which in ſome circumſtances may be done by one man, when called forth, furniſhed, and proſpered by the Lord.—The knowledge of future temporal events might in ſome inſtances be uſeful, yet would ſeldom be pleaſant: but the knowledge of the future ſtate and eternal world will be both uſeful and pleaſant, if we will but labour for that meat, which endureth unto everlaſting life, which the Son of man ſhall give us; for him hath God the Father ſealed. He is the great antitype of Joſeph: riſen, aſcended, and on the throne of glory, all power is veſted in him as mediator: he is the revealer of ſecrets, and the preſerver of the land: through the whole earth is a famine of the bread of life; but he hath provided inexhauſtible ſupplies: to him the Father bears teſtimony, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him;" go 'to Jeſus, and what he bids you, do.' Attending to this voice, and applying to him, he will open his treaſuries, and ſatisfy the hungry ſoul, of every age and nation, with goodneſs, yea without money and without price. But they who ſlight this proviſion muſt ſtarve; and they who bow not the knee before him, and will not that he ſhould reign over them, will be inevitably deſtroyed as enemies to him and his cauſe.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLII.] V. 1, 2.] Jacob underſtood from common report, that in this time of general ſcarcity there was abundance of corn in Egypt, which was freely ſold to thoſe of other nations:—When he ſaid, 'Why do ye look one upon another?' it implied that already they were reduced to great diſtreſs, and ſcarcely knew what to do: and if this was the caſe in Jacob's family, after the firſt year of the famine, what muſt have been the caſe of multitudes before the ſeven years were expired?

V. 3. Joſeph's, &c.] All Jacob's ſons ſeem to have been married, and to have had families at this time: perhaps the wealth of the family being thus divided, and by the badneſs of the times diminiſhed, they had parted with ſome of thoſe ſervants, whom we before read of; and perhaps they diſpoſed of the reſt, previous to their going to reſide in Egypt; for we read no more of their ſervants, or of any that went down beſides Jacob and his deſcendants, with their wives.

V. 4. Leſt miſchief, &c.] As he ſuppoſed had befallen his beloved Joſeph.

V. 6. Bowed, &c.] Joſeph's dreams at length began to be accompliſhed: his brethren's ſheaves bowed to his ſheaf; for his was full, and their's were empty.

7 And

7 And Joſeph ſaw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himſelf ſtrange unto them, and ſpake roughly unto them; and he ſaid unto them, Whence come ye? And they ſaid, From the land of Canaan to buy food.

8 And Joſeph knew his brethren, but they knew not him.

9 And Joſeph remembered the dreams which he dreamed of them, and ſaid unto them, Ye are ſpies; to ſee the nakedneſs of the land you are come.

10 And they ſaid unto him, Nay, my lord, but to buy food are thy ſervants come.

11 We are all one man's ſons: we are true men, thy ſervants are no ſpies.

12 And he ſaid unto them, Nay, but to ſee the nakedneſs of the land you are come.

13 And they ſaid, Thy ſervants are twelve brethren, the ſons of one man in the land of Canaan; and behold, the youngeſt is this day with our father, and one is not.

14 And Joſeph ſaid unto them, That it is that I ſpeak unto you, ſaying, Ye are ſpies.

15 Hereby ye ſhall be proved: by the life of Pharaoh ye ſhall not go forth hence, except your youngeſt brother come hither.

16 Send one of you, and let him fetch your brother, and ye ſhall be kept in priſon, that your words may be proved, whether there be any truth in you: or elſe by the life of Pharaoh ſurely ye are ſpies.

17 And he put them all together into ward, three days.

11 And Joſeph ſaid unto them the third day, This do, and live: for I fear God.

19 If ye be true men, let one of your brethren be bound in the houſe of your priſon: go ye, carry corn for the famine of your houſes.

20 But bring your youngeſt brother unto me: ſo ſhall your words be verified, and ye ſhall not die. And they did ſo.

V. 7. He made, &c.] It is evident that Joſeph did not behave thus out of reſentment; for in the whole tranſaction he exceedingly denied himſelf, and put a force on his own inclinations: doubtleſs he would be unwilling to augment the load of his father's grief, and he muſt know that his conduct would have this tendency; and he would rather have rejoiced to ſet his heart at eaſe by an immediate meſſage. Indeed it is moſt probable that the whole of the buſineſs, from his firſt advancement to Jacob's deſcent into Egypt, was conducted either by expreſs direction, or more ſecret impulſe from God; in order to the accompliſhment of his purpoſes reſpecting Jacob and his poſterity.—Indeed it would not have been proper for Joſeph immediately to have received his offending brethren into full favour, until it appeared that they were ſenſible of their guilt, and ſhewed ſome ſymptoms of remorſe: by being concealed he had a fair opportunity of diſcovering the real ſtate of their mind, from time to time: and by virtue of his authority, he was able not only to make ſtrict trial of them, but to employ means exactly ſuited to produce that ſtate of mind which he wiſhed to ſee; both to awaken and keep awake that remorſe of conſcience which was profitable for them; and to abate that pride and ſtoutneſs of heart which were natural to them. By his own experience he knew the good effects of ſharp and long continued troubles, and was willing to try the ſame medicine upon them.—At the ſame time he ſeems to have been very ſolicitous about the ſtate of the family; and to have aimed to obtain information on that head, eſpecially as he ſaw not his own brother Benjamin.

V. 9. Joſeph, &c.] Joſeph now experienced in part the accompliſhment of his dreams, of which perhaps he had once deſpaired; and was ſatisfied that it was a divine monition, though once he might queſtion whether it were not a deluſion.—To effect his purpoſes, he charged them with being ſpies ſent by ſome foreign prince who intended to invade Egypt, that they might ſpy out the moſt defenceleſs quarter for his attack; and urged that they only covered their real buſineſs under the pretext of buying corn.

V. 11. All one man's ſons.] It would not appear likely that one man would venture ten ſons in the hazardous employment of ſpies. Thus Joſeph drew from them the information which he wanted.

V. 15. By the life of Pharaoh, &c.] We are ſorry to cenſure ſo favourite a character as that of Joſeph; but in this he muſt be blamed: his ſwearing by the life of Pharaoh could be no other than a ſort of court oath, and a profane flattery of the prince, which Joſeph ſhould have proteſted againſt, at leaſt not ſanctioned by his example. And even if we ſuppoſe, that he did not cuſtomarily uſe this expreſſion, but only now aſſumed it as a more effectual blind; ſtill we cannot excuſe it: it was at beſt doing evil, that good might come. "Let your communication" (that is in ordinary converſation,) "be yea, yea; nay, nay; "for whatſoever is more than theſe cometh of evil."

V. 17. Into ward three days.] Conſidering Joſeph's authority, the nature of the crime of which he pretended to ſuſpect them, and the roughneſs of his behaviour; they perhaps expected little elſe during theſe three days, than to be put to death.

V. 18. I fear God.] This expreſſion might ſurpriſe, and perhaps encourage Joſeph's brethren: but his chief deſign ſeems to have been this; by declaring that he, a ſuppoſed Egyptian, feared God, and would therefore not do them any injuſtice, he meant to awaken the remorſe of their conſciences; who, though educated as Iſraelites in the true worſhip of God, had not been reſtrained by his fear from the moſt unjuſt and cruel treatment of their brother.

21 And they ſaid one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we ſaw the anguiſh of his ſoul, when he beſought us; and we would not hear: therefore is this diſtreſs come upon us.

22 And Reuben anſwered them, ſaying, Spake I not unto you, ſaying, Do not ſin againſt the child; and ye would not hear? therefore behold alſo, his blood is required.

23 And they knew not that Joſeph underſtood them; for he ſpake unto them by an interpreter.

24 And he turned himſelf about from them, and wept; and returned to them again, and communed with them, and took from them Simeon, and bound him before their eyes.

25 Then Joſeph commanded to fill their ſacks with corn, and to reſtore every man's money into his ſack, and to give them proviſion for the way: and thus did he unto them.

26 And they laded their aſſes with the corn, and departed thence.

27 And as one of them opened his ſack to give his aſs provender in the inn, he eſpied his money: for behold it was in his ſack's mouth.

28 And he ſaid unto his brethren, My money is reſtored; and lo it is even in my ſack: and their hearts failed them, and they were afraid, ſaying one to another, What is this that God hath done unto us?

29 And they came unto Jacob their father, unto the land of Canaan, and told him all that befel unto them, ſaying, 30 The man who is the lord of the land, ſpake roughly to us, and took us for ſpies of the country.

31 And we ſaid unto him, We are true men; we are no ſpies.

32 We be twelve brethren, ſons of our father: one is not, and the youngeſt is this day with our father in the land of Canaan.

33 And the man the lord of the country ſaid unto us, Hereby ſhall I know that ye are true men; leave one of your brethren here with me, and take food for the famine of your houſholds, and be gone.

34 And bring your youngeſt brother unto me: then ſhall I know that you are no ſpies, but that you are true men: ſo will I deliver you your brother, and ye ſhall traffick in the land.

35 And it came to paſs as they emptied their ſacks, that behold, every man's bundle of money was in his ſack: and when both they and their father ſaw the bundles of money, they were afraid.

36 And Jacob their father ſaid unto them, Me have ye bereaved of my children: Joſeph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away: all theſe things are againſt me.

37 And Reuben ſpake unto his father, ſaying, Slay my two ſons, if I bring him not to

V. 21 We are verily guilty, &c.] Joſeph's brethren ſeem to have continued inſenſible whilſt in priſon, but now their conſciences were touched: and conſidering how the fear of God influenced this ſuppoſed Egyptian, Joſeph's anguiſh and intreaties, and their unrelenting malice, recurred to their remembrance, and they began to conclude that God was about to take vengeance upon them for that cruelty.

V. 23. They knew not, &c.] Thus Joſeph was favoured with an encouraging token of the ſucceſs of his plan, to ſupport his mind till he ſhould witneſs the final iſſue.

V. 24. Took, &c.] Simeon was one of the murderers of the Shechemites, and probably of a daring hardy ſpirit: it is not unlikely that he was peculiarly vehement againſt Joſeph before, or ſeemed the leaſt affected now: therefore Joſeph allotted him this additional diſcipline.

V. 27. Inn.] Probably this was nothing more than a ſhelter provided for travellers, to which every one brought his own proviſions.

V. 28. Their hearts, &c.] Expecting no favour, they deemed this a ſnare laid for them; and were afraid of being purſued, and proſecuted as thieves. This was doubtleſs the effect that Joſeph intended to produce, in order to augment their convictions, and humiliation. As they had before eſcaped when guilty; they ſeemed ready to conclude that they ſhould now ſuffer for a crime of which they were innocent; and they acknowledged the hand of God in it.

V. 35. Afraid, &c.] Probably Jacob ſuſpected a fallacy in their relation, and that they really had committed ſome crime which occaſioned Simeon's being left behind; and perhaps that they had ſome deſign upon Benjamin: at leaſt he charged the blame upon them in the next verſe, in language implying ſuch diſtruſt.—"Me "have ye bereaved, &c."

V. 37. Slay my two ſons, &c.] This was a very raſh and abſurd propoſal: what right had Reuben over the lives of his children? and what ſatisfaction could the murder of two grand-children give Jacob for the loſs of his Benjamin?

I will to thee: deliver him into my hand, and I will bring him to thee again.

38 And he said, My son shall not go down with you: for his brother is dead, and he is left alone: if mischief befal him by the way in the which ye go, then shall ye bring down my grey hairs with sorrow to the grave.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Even when the Lord rendereth a fruitful land barren for the wickedness of them that dwell therein; he commonly shews that he doth not intend to proceed to extremities. Though much misery is endured, yet there is some redress and respite: one country supplies that of which another is destitute, and one year furnishes a redundance to help out the scarcity of another: in the other world alone will happiness or misery be unmixed; no scarcity in the Canaan above, no redress in hell beneath. In distress or danger our business is not to stand looking one at another, desponding and inactive, but having discovered where help is to be had, to apply for it without delay, and without shrinking from labour, or grudging expence: especially in the dangers to which our immortal souls are exposed. There is provision in Christ; but to him we must come, and from him we must diligently seek it; even though in obtaining it we be called to deny ourselves, take up our cross, and forsake all that we have. We have need, when we or our friends go from home, to commend ourselves and them to the divine protection; for we know not what unexpected dangers may be in the way: and when returned in safety we should not forget the tribute of praise, for many meet with terrible disasters. In the mystery of Providence, it is worth observation how God's purposes slowly but certainly unfold and are accomplished, often by the most improbable means; nay that those enemies who have set themselves to defeat his designs, are made the instruments of their fulfilment.—The guilt of sin will not wear out by time; nor will the consciousness of it: and though men may commit crimes with unconcern, and remain insensible for many years, conscience being struck dumb and stupified; yet there may be a time even in this world when it shall awake, and inspire such terrors as cannot be described: and it is well when it is so; otherwise it will certainly awake and torment the soul for ever in another world. In order therefore to awaken serious reflection in the guilty breast, the most afflictive dispensations of God's providence are precious blessings: and in some cases it is the result of wise love, to treat the proud and careless with roughness and distance; and as far as equity and the fear of God will allow, to shew them in our dealings with them the picture of their conduct to others, in order to bring their sins to their remembrance and excite a salutary remorse.—They therefore who are of a very tender nature, if they would do good, must sometimes disguise their feelings under an assumed sternness; as the surgeon probes the wound, or cuts the limb, with firmness and apparent unconcern; whilst his heart bleeds for the anguish he occasions. But when conscience is once awakened, there needs no accuser: when its terrors have seized the heart, every circumstance will increase the dismay; and under common calamities the consciousness of having avoided and protested against those crimes, which are thereby called to remembrance, will afford a singular support.—Many are the troubles of the righteous: yet imagination and error often magnify them; and many things appear to be against them, which are most effectually conducive to their good. The Lord will make such persons ashamed of their distrustful complaints; nor shall their grey hairs descend with that sorrow to the grave, which they have presaged: for the latter end of the upright man shall be peace.—But in this narration let us look unto Jesus: thus does he conceal himself, and his favour: thus does he rebuke and chasten those for whom he hath purposes of love; and by sharp corrections, and humiliating conviction from the Spirit of bondage, he breaks the stoutness, and mars the pride of their hearts, and brings them to true repentance: nor will he disclose his reconciled countenance, until he hath fully humbled, and broken their hearts by perhaps long continued discouragements; till he have proved their sincerity, and led them to the simplicity of faith, and dependence on him: then by the Spirit of adoption he will manifest himself unto them as their brother and their friend. Yet before they fully know him, or taste that he is gracious, he both consults their good and sustains their souls; preserves them from despair, and strengthens them to wait upon, and wait for him.—Thus may we do continually, never yielding to discouragement, still determining to seek no other refuge, and humbling ourselves more and more under his mighty hand! and then in due time he will answer our petitions, and far exceed our expectation.

4 If thou wilt ſend our brother with us, we will go down and buy thee food.

5 But if thou wilt not ſend him, we will not go down: for the man ſaid unto us, Ye ſhall not ſee my face, except your brother be with you.

6 And Iſrael ſaid, Wherefore dealt ye ſo ill with me, as to tell the man whether ye had yet a brother?

7 And they ſaid, The man aſked us ſtraitly of our ſtate, and of our kindred, ſaying, Is your father yet alive? have ye another brother? And we told him according to the tenour of theſe words: Could we certainly know that he would ſay, Bring your brother down?

8 And Judah ſaid unto Iſrael his father, Send the lad with me, and we will ariſe and go; that we may live and not die, both we, and thou, and alſo our little ones.

9 I will be ſurety for him; of my hand ſhalt thou require him: If I bring him not unto thee, and ſet him before thee, then let me bear the blame for ever.

10 For except we had lingered, ſurely now we had returned this ſecond time.

11 And their father Iſrael ſaid unto them, If it muſt be ſo now, do this; take of the beſt fruits in the land in your veſſels, and carry down the man a preſent, a little balm, and a little honey, ſpices, and myrrh, nuts, and almonds.

12 And take double money in your hand: and the money that was brought again in the mouth of your ſacks, carry it again in your hand; peradventure it was an overſight.

13 Take alſo your brother, and ariſe, go again unto the man.

14 And God Almighty give you mercy before the man, that he may ſend away your other brother, and Benjamin: If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved.

15 And the men took that preſent, and they took double money in their hand, and Benjamin; and roſe up, and went down to Egypt, and ſtood before Joſeph.

16 And when Joſeph ſaw Benjamin with them, he ſaid to the ruler of his houſe, Bring theſe men home, and ſlay, and make ready; for theſe men ſhall dine with me at noon.

17 And the man did as Joſeph bade: and the man brought the men into Joſeph's houſe.

18 And the men were afraid, becauſe they were brought into Joſeph's houſe, and they ſaid, Becauſe of the money that was returned in our ſacks at the firſt time, are we brought in; that he may ſeek occaſion againſt us, and fall upon us, and take us for bondmen, and our aſſes.

19 And they came near to the ſteward of Joſeph's houſe, and they communed with him at the door of the houſe.

20 And ſaid, O ſir, we came indeed down at the firſt time to buy food.

21 And it came to paſs when we came to the inn, that we opened our ſacks, and behold, every man's money was in the mouth of his ſack, our money in full weight: and we have brought it again in our hand.

22 And other money have we brought down in our hands to buy food: we cannot tell who put our money in our ſacks.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLIII.] V. 9. I will be ſurety, &c.] Probably Judah, (whom we obſerved before to have ſhewn ſome tokens of repentance,) had acquired more of the confidence of Jacob than Reuben had; and he ſeems in the whole buſineſs to have been ſincerely deſirous of the welfare of Benjamin, as well as of the family; remembering perhaps with inward anguiſh his former treatment of Joſeph.

V. 10. Except, &c.] They had loſt time, through Jacob's unwillingneſs to conſent to Benjamin's accompanying them. And Judah thus intimates that the whole family was like to periſh, by means of their father's unreaſonable timidity reſpecting one individual.

V. 12. Double money, &c.] The money that was returned, and other money with which to purchaſe corn; perhaps double the ſum which they took before, in caſe the price ſhould be advanced. Thus he would ſhew that they meant fairly.

V. 14. And God Almighty, &c.] Jacob knew by experience the influence, which the Lord hath over every heart to incline it favourably to his people: and it is obſervable that in this ſpeech, in which he has recourſe to his former method of prevailing with man, by faith in, and prayer to God; he is again dignified with the name of Iſrael. (11.)

23 And

23 And he ſaid, Peace be to you, fear not: your God, and the God of your father, hath given you treaſure in your ſacks: I had your money. And he brought Simeon out unto them.

24 And the man brought the men into Joſeph's houſe, and gave them water, and they waſhed their feet, and he gave their aſſes provender.

25 And they made ready the preſent againſt Joſeph came at noon: for they heard that they ſhould eat bread there.

26 And when Joſeph came home, they brought him the preſent which was in their hand into the houſe, and bowed themſelves to him to the earth.

27 And he aſked them of their welfare, and ſaid, Is your father well, the old man of whom ye ſpake? Is he yet alive?

28 And they anſwered, Thy ſervant our father is in good health, he is yet alive: and they bowed down their heads, and made obeiſance.

29 And he lifted up his eyes, and ſaw his brother Benjamin, his mother's ſon, and ſaid, Is this your younger brother, of whom ye ſpake unto me? And he ſaid, God be gracious unto thee, my ſon.

30 And Joſeph made haſte; for his bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he ſought where to weep, and he entered into his chamber, and wept there.

31 And he waſhed his face, and went out, and refrained himſelf, and ſaid, Set on bread.

32 And they ſet on for him by himſelf, and for them by themſelves, and for the Egyptians, which did eat with him, by themſelves: becauſe the Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews; for that is an abomination unto the Egyptians.

33 And they ſat before him, the firſt-born according to his birth-right, and the youngeſt according to his youth: and the men marvelled one at another.

34 And he took and ſent meſſes unto them, from before him: but Benjamin's meſs was five times ſo much as any of their's. And they drank, and were merry with him.

CHAP.

V. 28. They bowed down, &c.] In thus bowing down, at the mention of their father, they, as it were, did obeiſance in his name and ſtead, according to Joſeph's ſecond dream. (xxxvii. 9, 10.)

V. 32. By himſelf, &c.] Joſeph, as an Hebrew, probably humoured the ſuperſtitious prejudices of the Egyptians; but he would not ſit with his brethren, leſt it ſhould excite ſuſpicion. The abomination, in which the Egyptians held eating with the Hebrews, may be aſcribed to the latter eating the fleſh of thoſe animals which the former held ſacred: therefore ſhepherds were alſo an abomination to the Egyptians, (xlvi. 24,) though they had flocks and herds: but perhaps this only related to ſuch ſhepherds as fed upon the fleſh of their flocks.

V. 33. They ſat before him, &c.] That is, by his appointment; which made them marvel. But probably they aſcribed it to ſome extraordinary ſagacity, or to the power of divination which he afterwards mentioned.

V. 35. Five times, &c.] A token of reſpect cuſtomary in thoſe days, which is not to be judged of by modern manners. Thus Joſeph tried whether his brethren would envy Benjamin this diſtinction, as they had envied him his coat of many colours.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We ſhould uſe great caution in forming reſolutions concerning our future conduct in things indifferent; for our perſeverance ſo much depends on the events of Providence, that thoſe things which we moſt fully purpoſe may become impracticable: in moſt things therefore, in which duty is not concerned, we are beſt ruled by circumſtances as they ariſe.—And if we have formed a raſh reſolution, to which we cannot with propriety adhere; we muſt virtually or explicitly acknowledge our miſtake, and forego our determination: for though firmneſs be very advantageous, obſtinacy is both fooliſh and ruinous. But when all our contrivances are over-ruled, and neceſſity compels us to ſay "it muſt be ſo now;" then ſubmiſſion to the will of the all-wiſe Diſpoſer, and a believing dependence on the Almighty Lord, who hath all hearts in his hands, will yield us a ſeaſonable ſupport: and whilſt we uſe every prudent conciliatory means, we ſhall beſt prevail with man, by firſt prevailing with the Lord in fervent prayer: this will alſo prove us to belong to the true Iſrael of God; and "thy will be done" ſhould cloſe every petition for temporal benefits, or againſt temporal afflictions.—Though men generally value very highly their gold and ſilver, and the luxuries which are accounted the beſt fruits of every land; yet in a time of famine they willingly barter them away for bread: how little then will they ſtand us in ſtead in the day of wrath! and how ready ſhould we be, if truly wiſe, to renounce them all as loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt!—There may be caſes in which obedience to an earthly ſuperior may be refuſed, as ſuperſeded by a higher obligation: but this refuſal ſhould never be made, except in caſes of evident neceſſity; and it ſhould always be backed with unanſwerable reaſons, and couched in terms of the utmoſt reſpect and meekneſs. Seldom, even when the refuſal is unexceptionable, can an impartial byſtander wholly approve the manner in which it is given. When the Lord ſeems to frown upon us, we are prone to blame and to murmur againſt others; as venting our diſſatisfaction upon the inſtruments, when we are afraid and aſhamed to reflect upon the author, of our trouble; and much rebellion is often thus committed. When men mean ſincerely, they are apt to engage for more than they can perform: and if we feel our paſſions greatly moved, our tongue ſhould be held in as with a bridle; or it may afterwards occaſion much trouble.—Though terror once excited is increaſed by every event, yet innocence gives confidence, and ſupplies the want of, or furniſhes the moſt ſimple and expreſſive, eloquence.—He that walketh with wiſe men will be wiſe; and the good and pious words of the Egyptian, Joſeph's ſteward, ſhew us that a godly man's converſation is never uſeleſs: and teaches us to abound in that ſpeech, which is good for the uſe of edifying. Even thoſe, who inadvertently and by overſight have got poſſeſſion of others property, are bound to reſtore it, when they diſcover it: and from whatever quarter we get honeſt gain, we ought to look to the Lord as the giver of it. God's purpoſes are continually advancing to their full accompliſhment; but they who would have his ſpecial bleſſings, muſt wait for them: and they who would do ſpecial good, muſt learn to bridle and conceal their tendereſt paſſions. Thus Jeſus ſhews thoſe, whom he loves, more and more of their periſhing neceſſity, makes them perceive that he is their only refuge from deſtruction, and, conſulting their future good more than their preſent comfort, by ſalutary terrors and troubles overcomes their reluctance, and brings them to himſelf. Then, in his wiſe and holy ſovereignty, according to that proportion which he ſees good, he gives them ſome taſte of his exhilarating love, and welcomes them to the proviſions of his houſe, as earneſts of what he further intends for them; yet ſo as ſtill to prove and try them, with a view to their more complete humiliation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLIV.] V. 2. Put my cup, &c.] This ſilver cup had probably been uſed at the entertainment. Joſeph ſeems to have been deſirous of aſcertaining how his brethren ſtood affected to Benjamin, Jacob's preſent favourite, and to their father on his account. Had they envied and hated Benjamin (the other ſon of Rachel, Leah's rival,) as they had him; and had they been influenced by the ſame unfeeling indignation againſt Jacob as heretofore; they would on this occaſion have diſcovered it: for when the cup was found upon Benjamin, they would have had a plauſible pretext for leaving him to be a ſlave, and returning home without him. In this caſe Joſeph would have acted very differently from what he did, when the event proved them to be ſo well diſpoſed both towards Benjamin and their father. At the ſame time this trial was exceedingly calculated to increaſe their humiliation.

V. 4, 5.] The abruptneſs of this unexpected addreſs was well ſuited to ſurpriſe and confuſe them, and to favour the deſign.—Joſeph ſeems to have meant, that by divination he had diſcovered they had ſtolen the cup; (15.) which could not have been, had he divined by means of the cup: it ſhould therefore probably be tranſlated, "that "about which he hath uſed divination."

V. 9. Let him die, &c.] Probably Joſeph expected that his brethren, conſcious of their innocency, would make no

10 And he ſaid, Now alſo let it be according unto your words: he with whom it is found ſhall be my ſervant; and ye ſhall be blameleſs.

11 Then they ſpeedily took down every man his ſack to the ground, and opened every man his ſack.

12 And he ſearched, and began at the eldeſt, and left at the youngeſt: and the cup was found in Benjamin's ſack.

13 Then they rent their clothes, and laded every man his aſs, and returned to the city.

14 And Judah and his brethren came to Joſeph's houſe, (for he was yet there,) and they fell before him on the ground.

15 And Joſeph ſaid unto them, What deed is this that ye have done? wot ye not, that ſuch a man as I can certainly divine?

16 And Judah ſaid, What ſhall we ſay unto my lord? what ſhall we ſpeak? or how ſhall we clear ourſelves? God hath found out the iniquity of thy ſervants: behold, we are my lord's ſervants, both we, and he alſo with whom the cup is found.

17 And he ſaid, God forbid that I ſhould do ſo: but the man in whoſe hand the cup is found, he ſhall be my ſervant; and as for you, get you up in peace unto your father.

18 Then Judah came near unto him, and ſaid, O my lord, let thy ſervant, I pray thee, ſpeak a word in my lord's ears, and let not thine anger burn againſt thy ſervant: for thou art even as Pharaoh.

19 My lord aſked his ſervants, ſaying, Have ye a father or a brother?

20 And we ſaid unto my lord, We have a father, an old man, and a child of his old age, a little one: and his brother is dead, and he alone is left of his mother, and his father loveth him.

21 And thou ſaidſt unto thy ſervants, Bring him down unto me, that I may ſet mine eyes upon him.

22 And we ſaid unto my lord, The lad cannot leave his father: for if he ſhould leave his father, his father would die.

23 And thou ſaidſt unto thy ſervants, Except your youngeſt brother come down with you, you ſhall ſee my face no more.

24 And it came to paſs, when we came up unto thy ſervant my father, we told him the words of my lord.

25 And our father ſaid, Go again, and buy us a little food.

26 And we ſaid, We cannot go down: if our youngeſt brother be with us, then will we go down; for we may not ſee the man's face, except our youngeſt brother be with us.

of ſome ſuch language; which favoured his deſign of proving their affection for Benjamin.

V. 14. They fell before him, &c.] Now indeed Joſeph had the dominion over them, according to their interpretation of his dreams. (xxxvii. 8.)

V. 15. Wot ye not, &c?] We may be ſure Joſeph did not uſe divination, the criminality of which may hereafter be evinced: but he merely, as a ſuppoſed Egyptian, pretended to it, in order to conceal the real reaſon of his having ſo readily detected them.

V. 16. God hath found out, &c.] Perhaps Judah inwardly meant their former guilt, which was now viſited upon them. Conſcious of his own innocence in this matter, he very prudently waved all mention of it, whatever he thought: for otherwiſe he muſt either have allowed Benjamin's guilt, or have reflected on Joſeph's equity.

V. 17. Get you up, &c.] At this time the experiment was at the criſis, and doubtleſs Joſeph anxiouſly expected the event.

V. 18. Even as Pharaoh.] That is equally to be reſpected, and feared. We ſhould keep the dreams ſtill in mind: Joſeph's brethren ſoon learned what was become of them. (xxxvii. 20.) Judah being entruſted with Benjamin, and perhaps more affectionate than the reſt both to him and his father; and having conceived the generous deſign mentioned in the cloſe, aſſumed the office of ſpeaker in the name of the reſt.—Probably they alſo expreſſed their concurrence, when he had concluded.

V. 20. His brother Is dead, &c.] Joſeph had been long dead to his father; and his brethren had ſo long been accuſtomed to ſpeak of him as dead, that they ſeem to have forgot, that it was falſe or uncertain.—Every word in this verſe is ſimplicity and pathos itſelf. No man of the leaſt taſte or ſenſibility can read it, at this diſtance of time, without great emotion.—Indeed the whole ſpeech is exquiſitely beautiful: had Joſeph been merely an humane judge, and no relation; and had Benjamin been guilty, ſuch natural eloquence muſt have been irreſiſtibly forcible: with what feelings then muſt Joſeph have heard him!—When we read this generous ſpeech, we forgive Judah all the paſt, and cannot refuſe to ſay, "Thou art he, whom thy brethren "ſhall praiſe." (xlix. 8.)

V. 26. We cannot go down, &c.] Judah had ſaid, we will not; but he here mollified the harſhneſs of that expreſſion.

27 And thy ſervant my father ſaid unto us, Ye know that my wife bare me two ſons.

28 And the one went out from me, and I ſaid, Surely he is torn in pieces; and I ſaw him not ſince.

29 And if ye take this alſo from me, and miſchief befal him, ye ſhall bring down my gray hairs with ſorrow to the grave.

30 Now therefore when I come to thy ſervant my father, and the lad be not with us; (ſeeing that his life is bound up in the lad's life:)

31 It ſhall come to paſs, when he ſeeth that the lad is not with us, that he will die: and thy ſervants ſhall bring down the gray hairs of thy ſervant our father with ſorrow to the grave.

32 For thy ſervant became ſurety for the lad unto my father; ſaying, If I bring him not unto thee, then I ſhall bear the blame to my father for ever.

33 Now therefore, I pray thee, let thy ſervant abide, inſtead of the lad, a bond-man to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren.

34 For how ſhall I go up to my father, and the lad be not with me? leſt peradventure I ſee the evil that ſhall come on my father.

CHAP.

V. 28. And I ſaid ſurely, &c.] Judah touched on this ſubject with a kind of trembling heſitation: as a part of his plea it muſt not be omitted: yet his conſcience ſeems to make him faulter in reporting Jacob's language, which he knew reſulted from a deception. It is ſurpriſing that Joſeph could refrain on hearing this!

V. 30. Seeing that his life, &c.] Nothing can exceed the tender affection expreſſed for Jacob in this ſpeech; which confirms the ſentiment, that from the diſcovery of Judah's inceſt with Tamar, he had been a true penitent, and conſequently a more dutiful ſon than before.

V. 31. Thy ſervants, &c.] It might be feared, that the ſorrowful tidings would quite overwhelm Jacob, and cauſe his immediate death. Perhaps Judah conſidered their former guilt reſpecting Joſeph, as the cauſe of this ſevere viſitation; and as the means of rendering the affliction of loſing Benjamin inſupportable to Jacob. In deep anguiſh of conſcience, he ſeems to have apprehended, that he and his brethren would actually be chargeable in the ſight of God with the guilt of murduring their father.

V. 33. Inſtead of the lad, a bondman, &c.] Judah would be as uſeful a ſervant as Benjamin; Joſeph would be no loſer; his father could perhaps ſurvive the loſs of him; and he was willing to ſubmit to any hardſhip, rather than occaſion and witneſs his aged father's death.—Perhaps the annals of the whole world do not produce an inſtance of more heroic and diſintereſted affection, in a mere man. Some would even dare to die for a beloved or honoured friend, who nevertheleſs would not willingly ſubmit to be a ſlave for life to ranſom him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who have been guilty of deceit and injuſtice, muſt blame themſelves, when they are afterwards ſuſpected, and put upon repreated trials, before they recover the confidence of thoſe whom they have injured: but if they be at length ſincere, the event will make amends for the ſevereſt ſcrutiny.—Though open and direct meaſures are generally preferable: yet in ſome caſes ſtratagems are lawful, and never more ſo, than when they are intended for the benefit of the perſons for whom they are laid; in order that being foiled at their own weapons, they may remember and repent of their own treacherous dealings.—To reward evil for good is ſo evidently baſe, that nothing can be urged in excuſe of it: how then ſhall we ſtand in judgment before that God, whom we have ſo ungratefully requited for his multiplied benefits? Men think it hard to be ſuſpected of crimes, which are contrary to a few of the overt actions of their lives: though they are inwardly conſcious of much worſe, which they conceal from their fellow-creatures. Yet conſcious innocence has no occaſion to fear a fair trial: but as all hearts are totally concealed from us, except our own, we ſhould be cautious in anſwering for others alſo: and they who are moſt confident in ſelf-juſtification, may ſoon have their mouths ſtopped, and ſcarcely know what to ſay.—If before the powerful of the earth it is ſometimes prudent to wave the queſtion of right, and to make our appeal to their compaſſion and generoſity, and never ſafe to impeach or reflect upon their equity: much more ſhould we ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of God; and renouncing all other pleas, caſt ourſelves upon his infinite compaſſion; for he is perfectly righteous, and will be acknowledged to be ſo, by all who would approach him with acceptance.—In many caſes, undiſſembled narrations form the moſt concluſive and affecting arguments: ſuch addreſſes to the tender paſſions, as are grounded upon evident reaſon, truth, and fact, and carry with them internal teſtimony of diſintereſtedneſs, generoſity, and relative affection, are almoſt irreſiſtible. And amongſt the reſt the glow of filial affection, through manly ſenſe and fortitude, has a peculiar beauty and energy.—How careful ſhould children be not to grieve their parents, leſt by embittering their infirm age, they ſhould ſhorten their days, and be indicted now at the bar of their own conſciences, or hereafter at the judgment ſeat of God, for the horrible crime of parracide; which many are guilty of, who never ſuſpect themſelves, or are ſuſpected by others! True penitents will ſhew that a total revolution has taken place in their principles and practice: were it poſſible they would undo; and therefore they will endeavour to make amends for, and to prevent the further ill effects of, their former miſconduct, though in the moſt ſelf-denying manner: and this will evidence that their ſins are pardoned, and prepare the way for their receiving the comfort of it.—Thus Jeſus, the antitype, proceeds to humble and prove his people, even after they have had ſome taſtes of his loving kindneſs; thus he brings their ſins renewedly to their remembrance, that they may exerciſe and evidence their repentance; thus thus he tries, that he may manifeſt, their graces: thus his bowels yearn over them, whilſt his face wears a frown, and his hand holds the rod; and thus by rebukes and chaſtenings, he prepares them for comfort here, and glory hereafter.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLV.] V. 3. I am, &c.] Joſeph had doubtleſs been addreſſed, and ſpoken of by his Egyptian name, or by his titles of office: ſo that though the hiſtorian all along calls him by that name, probably his brethren had had never heard it before, from any perſon in Egypt.—It is impoſſible that the tongue, the pen, or the pencil, can ever do juſtice to the mixed emotions of ſurpriſe, fear, grief, remorſe, hope, natural affection, joy, &c, which muſt alternately, yet almoſt at the ſame inſtant, have ſeized upon their minds at this unexpected diſcovery.—But it ſeems that Joſeph perceived, that confuſion and terror were likely to predominate, and to fill them with apprehenſion, that he would now avenge the injuſtice and cruelty, of which they had been guilty;—therefore he proceeded in the language and demeanour of love.

V. 4. When ye ſold, &c.] The name of Joſeph would probably have led them to a recollection of his features and voice: yet the mention of this circumſtance was neceſſary, (though painful,) both to remove all doubts of his being their brother; and alſo to introduce the kind attempt he intended to make, to obviate their fears, and to inſpire confidence and comfort.—Perhaps he called them near to him, leſt the Egyptians ſhould overhear this circumſtance, with which it was not proper they ſhould be acquainted.

V. 5. Be not, &c.] Every paſſion has its proper boundaries, which it ought not to exceed. The ſkillful phyſician, though in his intention of cure he aims to produce an effect, yet having produced it, he will often ſee occaſion to check, and even ſometimes to counteract his firſt intention; leſt it prove exceſſive, and expoſe the patient to the oppoſite danger. Joſeph's intention had been to humble and to reprove his brethren, to bring their ſin to remembrance, to fill them with remorſe for it; and to evince that they really repented, and were not diſpoſed to repeat their crime.—But having produced theſe effects, he perceived from their confuſion and diſmay, that they were in danger of being overwhelmed of over-much ſorrow, and of ſinking under deſpondency: therefore he endeavoured to comfort and encourage them. (1 Cor. v. 1—5. 2 Cor. ii. 6—11.) And indeed, not only would the authority of one whom they had ſo groſly injured, affright them; but the excellency of his character, the reputation he had acquired, and the accompliſhment of thoſe dreams, as divine predictions, which they had contemptuouſly oppoſed, would ſhew their crime more horrid than before they ſaw it; and all together might render them ready to conclude, that they had ſinned beyond the reach of forgiveneſs.—Though the merciful purpoſes of God in ſending him into Egypt by no means excuſed their ſin, and therefore ought not to have prevented their humiliation and repentance; yet it might very properly abate their anguiſh of ſpirit, and encourage their hope of pardon from ſo gracious a God: and it might aſſure them of Joſeph's forgiveneſs, who clearly ſaw the wiſdom, and richly experienced the goodneſs of God in that event; and thus might turn their deſpondency into believing prayers, and their ſelf-indignation into admiring gratitude.

V. 8. So now, &c.] This was, as if Joſeph had ſaid 'Pore no longer upon your own miſconduct in that affair: 'but ſee and admire the wonderful contrivance of God in 'it, who ſent me hither for ſuch important benefits, eſpe-'cially to you and your families.'—He was made a father

9 Haſte you and go up to my father, and ſay unto him, Thus ſaith thy ſon Joſeph, God hath made me lord of all Egypt; come down unto me, tarry not.

19 And thou ſhalt dwell in the land of Goſhen, and thou ſhalt be near unto me, thou, and thy children, and thy children's children, and thy flocks, and thy herds, and all that thou haſt.

11 And there will I nouriſh thee (for yet there are five years of famine): leſt thou, and thy houſhold, and all that thou haſt, come to poverty.

12 And behold, your eyes ſee, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin, that it is my mouth that ſpeaketh unto you.

13 And you ſhall tell my father of all my glory in Egypt, and of all that you have ſeen; and ye ſhall haſte, and bring down my father hither.

14 And he fell upon his brother Benjamin's neck, and wept; and Benjamin wept upon his neck.

15 Moreover he kiſſed all his brethren, and wept upon them: and after that his brethren talked with him.

16 And the fame thereof was heard in Pharaoh's houſe, ſaying, Joſeph's brethren are come: and it pleaſed Pharaoh well, and his ſervants.

17 And Pharaoh ſaid unto Joſeph, Say unto thy brethren, This do ye; lade your beaſts, and go, get you unto the land of Canaan.

18 And take your father, and your houſholds, and come unto me: and I will give you the good of the land of Egypt, and ye ſhall eat the fat of the land.

19 Now thou art commanded, this do ye; take you waggons out of the land of Egypt for your little ones, and for your wives, and bring your father and come.

20 Alſo regard not your ſtuff: for the good of all the land of Egypt is your's.

21 And the children of Iſrael did ſo: and Joſeph gave them waggons, according to the commandment of Pharaoh, and gave them proviſion for the way.

22 To all of them he gave each man changes of raiment: but to Benjamin he gave three hundred pieces of ſilver, and five changes of raiment.

23 And to his father he ſent after this manner; ten aſſes laden with the good things of Egypt, and ten ſhe aſſes laden with corn and bread and meat for his father by the way.

24 So he ſent his brethren away, and they departed: and he ſaid unto them, See that ye fall not out by the way.

25 And they went up out of Egypt, and came into the land of Canaan unto Jacob their father.

26 And told him, ſaying, Joſeph is yet alive, and he is governor over all the land of Egypt. And Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not.

27 And they told him all the words of Joſeph, which he had ſaid unto them: and when he ſaw the waggons which Joſeph had ſent to carry him, the ſpirit of Jacob their father revived.

28 And Iſrael ſaid, It is enough: Joſeph my ſon is yet alive: I will go and ſee him before I die.

to Pharaoh, as the inſtrument of God in preſerving him and his kingdom.

V. 13 Tell my father, &c.] This direction was given, not in oſtentation, but to rejoice Jacob's heart, and encourage him to come down into Egypt.

V. 15. Kiſſed them, &c.] As a token of entire reconciliation.

V. 16. It pleaſed Pharaoh well, and his ſervants.] This is a concluſive teſtimony how much Joſeph was eſteemed, and how little he was envied.

V. 20. Your ſtuff, &c.] Such furniture, &c, as could not conveniently be removed ſo far.

V. 22. To Benjamin, &c.] Thus Joſeph ſtill continued the trial of his brethren; to ſee whether or not they were diſpoſed to envy Benjamin.

V. 24. See that, &c.] It would be natural for them to converſe together concerning Joſeph's being ſold, and of the account that they muſt give Jacob reſpecting it: and as ſome of them had been much more criminal in that matter than others, this might eaſily produce altercations, and quarrels of fatal conſequence.

V. 28. It is enough, &c. 'I ſhall then account myſelf to have lived long enough.'

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In endeavouring to render men ſenſible of their faults, we ſhould be careful not needleſsly to expoſe them before others.—True excellency does not conſiſt in being devoid of paſſions; but in having the ſtrongeſt of them under the government of reaſon and conſcience; ſo as to know how to refrain, and how to yield to them with prudence and expediency: and true wiſdom diſcovers itſelf very much, in being able to ſuit our conduct and converſation to the perſons with whom we have to do, and to the circumſtances in which they are placed. In ſpeaking to men about the concerns of their ſouls, the two grand objects are, to awaken the careleſs conſcience to an adequate ſenſe of guilt and danger; and to inſpire the burdened and deſponding heart with the hope of pardon and peace. It is very profitable for us to obſerve the footſteps of Providence, and to note how infinite wiſdom and goodneſs deduce the moſt beneficial effects from the crimes and follies of men; eſpecially we ſhould in this view ſtudy the hiſtory of our own lives: and we ſhall not want proof, that the only wiſe God hath over-ruled many of our miſtakes and ſins to our important good; and thus we may alſo perceive the outlines of his plan, who worketh all things after the counſel of his own will. This review cannot reaſonably lead us to entertain a ſlighter ſenſe of the evil of ſin, or better thoughts of ourſelves; it cannot encourage us to go on in diſobedience, or leſſen our humiliation and ſelf-abaſement: rather it will convince us the more of our own ignorance and folly, and render us more aſhamed of offending againſt ſo kind a benefactor. But it will prevent our deſpairing of forgiveneſs; check that ſorrow, which unfits for duty and damps our gratitude; and excite that admiration, love, and confidence, which produce chearful obedience.—We ſhould ever manifeſt brotherly love, even to thoſe who have treated us injuriouſly; and ſhew ourſelves ready to forgive, and in haſte to diſperſe thoſe fears and jealouſies, which the recollection of paſt offences may excite; as uniting the moſt compaſſionate affection, with our faithful attempts to make men ſenſible that they have offended.—But what haſte ſhould children make, and what gratification ſhould they account it, to contribute to the comfort of their tender parents! They ſhould check every mean deſire, and ſpur themſelves on to every laudable purſuit, with the idea, that the one will grieve and the other gladden a kind parent's heart. They ought to value proſperity eſpecially as enabling them to ſhare it with them; and ſpare a conſiderable portion even of a moderate proviſion, to requite the cares, toils, and anxieties of an aged father and mother. How ſhamefully unlike Joſeph are they, who in comparative affluence, through pride, covetouſneſs, or ſelf-indulgence, neglect and leave to languiſh in indigence, ſuch near relations!—O! how it adorns the doctrine of God our Saviour, when believers, by a blameleſs, uſeful, and prudent conduct, conciliate the good-will of many, and ſilence the reproaches of all!—If men may without injuſtice confer unmerited favours on whom, and in what proportion they pleaſe; who ſhall dare to find fault, if our righteous God, puniſhing none above their deſervings, has mercy on whom he will have mercy? When the reaſons of the divine appointments are made known to us, we ſhall clearly perceive the Lord's wiſdom, love, and faithfulneſs; we ſhall know that all thoſe things are for us which once we thought againſt us, and that our murmurs ſprung from ignorance, and unbelief; and we ſhall ſay, 'It is enough, I am 'now ſatisfied:' in the exerciſe of faith we ſhould therefore endeavour to anticipate that diſcovery.—Here alſo we behold Jeſus, manifeſting himſelf as a brother and friend to thoſe, who once were his deſpiſers, enemies, and in ſome ſenſe his murderers, having previouſly humbled them in true repentance; preventing moſt kindly their diſmay and confuſion; aſſuring them of his love, and of the proviſions of his grace; explaining to them the myſteries of his croſs, and the deſigns of the Father in his ſufferings and glory; admitting them into ſweet fellowſhip with himſelf; bidding them go, and inform others of his love and grace, that they may come and ſhare it alſo; commanding them to lay aſide envy, anger, malice, and contention, and live in peace with each other; teaching them willingly to renounce the world for him, and his fulneſs; giving them earneſts of his love, and ſupplying all that is needful to bring them home to himſelf, that where he is, there they may be alſo. And though when he ſends for his people by death as his meſſenger, they may at firſt feel ſome diſcouraging apprehenſions; yet the thoughts of ſeeing his glory, and being with him, will enable them at length to ſay, 'it is enough;—I am willing to die, and go to ſee, and be with, the beloved of my ſoul.'

25 Theſe are the ſons of Bilhah, which Laban gave unto Rachel his daughter, and ſhe bare theſe unto Jacob: all the ſouls were ſeven.

26 All the ſouls that came with Jacob into Egypt, which came out of his loins, beſides Jacob's ſons' wives, all the ſouls were threeſcore and ſix;

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVI.] V. 1. Beer-ſheba, &c.] Perhaps Jacob choſe this place, as having been frequently the ſcene of his father's communion with God; or as the laſt place in Canaan, which he was now leaving never to ſee again. Probably, though he ſpake at firſt with ſuch rapture of going to ſee Joſeph: yet reflecting that Iſaac was forbidden to go down to Egypt, and recollecting the revelation made to Abraham, of the oppreſſion which his poſterity were there to endure; he pauſed, before he finally left Canaan, and with ſolemn ſacrifices ſought both direction and protection, if the Lord allowed him to proceed.

V. 4. Surely, &c.] God would ſurely bring Jacob back again to Canaan, in his poſterity, of which his burial in Canaan was an earneſt: and Joſeph alſo would be preſent with him in his dying moments, to cloſe his eyes.

V. 21. The ſons of Benjamin.] From other Scriptures, (Numb. xxvi. 2. 1 Chron. viii. 3—5,) we learn that ſeveral of theſe were Benjamin's grand-children. Benjamin was evidently born after Dinah had been defiled; and ſhe was about Joſeph's age: ſuppoſing her therefore but in her fourteenth year at that time, Benjamin could not at this time be more than 26 or 27 years old, ſo that it is ſcarcely conceivable he could have had ſeveral grand-children.—It is therefore moſt probable, that the hiſtorian mentions ſome born in Egypt, during Jacob's life-time, who afterwards became heads of families in Iſrael. The ſame ſeems the eaſieſt way of accounting for the mention here made of Judah's grand-children by Tamar, of whom he begat Pharez, after the death of Er and Onan, who had both been married to her: though Judah at this time ſeems to have been under 50 years of age.

27 And

27 And the ſons of Joſeph which were born him in Egypt, were two ſouls: all the ſouls of the houſe of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were three ſcore and ten.

28 And he ſent Judah before him unto Joſeph, to direct his face unto Goſhen; and they came into the land of Goſhen.

29 And Joſeph made ready his chariot, and went up to meet Iſrael his father, to Goſhen: and preſented himſelf unto him: and he fell on his neck, and wept on his neck a good while.

30 And Iſrael ſaid unto Joſeph, Now let me die, ſince I have ſeen thy face, becauſe thou art yet alive.

31 And Joſeph ſaid unto his brethren, and to his father's houſe, I will go up and ſhew Pharaoh, and ſay unto him, My brethren, and my father's houſe, which were in the land of Canaan, are come unto me.

32 And the men are ſhepherds, for their trade hath been to feed cattle; and they have brought their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have.

33 And it ſhall come to paſs when Pharaoh ſhall call you, and ſhall ſay, What is your occupation?

34 That ye ſhall ſay, Thy ſervants' trade hath been about cattle, from our youth even until now, both we and alſo our fathers: that ye may dwell in the land of Goſhen; for every ſhepherd is an abomination unto the Egyptians.

3 And

V. 27.] Threeſcore and ſix were before mentioned: ſo that Joſeph and his two ſons, together with Jacob himſelf, complete the 70 here enumerated: yet Stephen, full of the Holy Ghoſt, quoting from the Septuagint, ſays, threeſcore and fifteen ſouls; which gives us the hint not to occupy much of our attention about ſuch critical niceties, but to proceed with matters more important. (Note Acts vii. 9—16.)

V. 28. To direct, &c.] To give Joſeph notice of his arrival, that he might be reminded to meet him in Goſhen.

V. 29. Chariot, &c.] As a prince, Joſeph went forth to meet his father in a chariot, thereby ſhewing him proper reſpect: but for Jacob, always a plain man and now an old man, he ſends a convenient but leſs ſplendid conveyance.

V. 34. Abomination, &c.] (Note xliii. 32.) This would more effectually keep them diſtinct and ſeparate from the Egyptians.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In thoſe events and undertakings that appear moſt joyful, there are probable conſequences involved, which may remind us to rejoice with trembling; and warn us not to proceed without ſeeking counſel, aſſiſtance, and a bleſſing from the Lord. Attending on his ordinances, and receiving the pledges of his covenant love, we may expect his preſence, and that peace which it confers: and when we are ſatisfied that we are his people, and in the path which he marks out to us, being aſſured of his ſupports and conſolations, we may not only venture into the iron furnace of bondage and oppreſſion, but into the fiery furnace of perſecution. In all our removals, we need to be reminded of our removal out of this world: and though it be deſirable to be ſurrounded at the eve of life with our beloved friends and children; yet nothing can encourage us to fear no evil, when paſſing through the valley of the ſhadow of death, but the preſence of Jeſus Chriſt to cloſe our eyes, and receive our ſouls.—Be our families ever ſo large, God's providence can with perfect eaſe ſupport them: and be repenting ſinners ever ſo numerous, the unſearchable riches of Chriſt are ſufficient, and in Heaven there is room enough for them all. However generous our friends may be, it is prudent to be modeſt, and not to give them any ground to ſuſpect us of encroaching, or to complain that we are burdenſome. In general, the further from courts, the nearer to Canaan; and however obſcure and deſpiſed our lot be, if it be advantageous to our ſouls, and favourable to communion with God, we ought to be thankful for it. Our lives are in the Lord's hands, whatever we wiſh and deſire; and though we ſhould be willing to die, yet we ſhould be alſo willing to wait his time. In the mean while, if even the abhorrence of the world keep us ſeparate from it, we have cauſe to rejoice and be glad on that account.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVII.] V. 2. Took ſome of, &c.] Joſeph, by thus preſenting his brethren, both ſhewed reſpect to Pharaoh, and intimated that he would do nothing without his

3 And Pharaoh ſaid unto his brethren, What is your occupation? And they ſaid unto Pharaoh, Thy ſervants are ſhepherds, both we and alſo our fathers.

4 They ſaid moreover unto Pharaoh, For to ſojourn in the land are we come: for thy ſervants have no paſture for their flocks, for the famine is ſore in the land of Canaan: now therefore, we pray thee let thy ſervants dwell in the land of Goſhen.

5 And Pharaoh ſpake unto Joſeph, ſaying, Thy father and thy brethren are come unto thee.

6 The land of Egypt is before thee; in the beſt of the land make thy father and brethren to dwell, in the land of Goſhen let them dwell: and if thou knoweſt any men of activity amongſt them, then make them rulers over my cattle.

7 And Joſeph brought in Jacob his father, and ſet him before Pharaoh: and Jacob bleſſed Pharaoh.

8 And Pharaoh ſaid unto Jacob, How old art thou?

9 And Jacob ſaid unto Pharaoh, The days of the years of my pilgrimage are an hundred and thirty years: few and evil have the days of the years of my life been, and have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers in the days of their pilgrimage.

knowledge and approbation; and put honour upon them, manifeſting that he was not aſhamed of them, though now his inferiors; and that he did not harbour reſentment againſt them, though formerly injurious.—He had doubtleſs good reaſon for ſelecting five from among his brethren; though we are not acquainted with them, nor even with the names of thoſe whom he preſented.—Thus Chriſt diſpenſeth his ſpecial favours to every one, ſeverally as he will; not without reaſons, but without informing us of them: and thus, neither deſpiſing our meanneſs, nor reſenting our former contempt and perverſeneſs, nor being aſhamed to call us brethren, he preſents us redeemed ſinners before his Father's throne.

V. 3. What is, &c?] Pharaoh took it for granted that Jacob's ſons had ſome peculiar occupation.—This would be evident from their appearance; and indeed every one who would not be worthleſs and an uſeleſs incumbrance upon the public, ſhould have ſome employment.—Though a ſhepherd was had in abomination among the Egyptians, yet they attempted not to conceal their occupation. Whatever the maxims of the world, and the faſhion of the time may be, every honeſt calling is honourable; and a man ſhould be aſhamed of nothing, at any time or in any place, which is not diſgraceful in the judgment of God, and of wiſe and good men.

V. 4. To ſojourn, &c.] Probably Jacob and his ſons only meant to ſojourn in Egypt till the famine was over; but meeting with kind treatment, they tarried till another King aroſe; and at length they were detained in bondage. This was indeed beſides their purpoſe, but according to the purpoſe and prediction of God.

V. 6. In the beſt land, &c.] This was done in gratitude to Joſeph, of whoſe ſervices Pharaoh ſeems to have been fully ſenſible. But he would have none but men of activity preferred even in this line.—It does not ſeem to have been the cuſtom at courts at that time, to prefer the dependents of great ſtateſmen, out of compliment to them, whether fit for ſuch preferment or not; as has ſince unhappily been too much the caſe. Joſeph did not require, Pharaoh did not propoſe, neither did the ſons of Jacob expect any advancement: they only deſired and were contented with paſturage for their flocks. We muſt allow, that if the rich and great are often diſpoſed to overlook and neglect their poor relatives; they on the other hand are equally culpable, in expecting ſuch things from them, as it would be very improper to confer.—The cattle of the Egyptians were kept for various uſes, and ſlain in ſacrifice, though not at other times eaten, as it is generally ſuppoſed.

V. 7. Jacob bleſſed Pharaoh.] With the gravity of old age, and the piety of a true believer, and even with the authority of a patriarch and a prophet, Jacob pronounced a bleſſing upon Pharaoh; that is, he ſolemnly ſupplicated the Lord to beſtow his bleſſing upon him. Thus he acted in character, as a man who was not aſhamed of his religion; and who, in his own way, would expreſs his gratitude, and recompenſe, as far as he could, the benefactor of himſelf and family, with a prophet's reward. And though Jacob, by ſo doing, in ſome ſenſe aſſumed the ſuperiority, (Heb. vii. 7.) yet Pharaoh ſeems to have been well pleaſed with this token of his regard: having, in the character and uſefulneſs of Joſeph, abundantly experienced the value of the bleſſing of Jacob's God; and perhaps being himſelf favourably diſpoſed to his worſhip.

V. 8. How old art thou?] Probably Pharaoh obſerved ſomewhat peculiarly venerable in the aſpect of Jacob; and conceiving that he was older than indeed he was, (to which appearance his various hardſhips and trials might contribute) he was curious to know his age.

V. 9. The days of the years, &c.] We have here a very uncommon anſwer given to a very common queſtion: but it is an anſwer full of pertinent inſtruction and admonition. Jacob calls his life a pilgrimage; that is, the ſojourning of a ſtranger in a foreign country, or his journey home to his own country; intimating that he was not at home upon earth,

10 And Jacob bleſſed Pharaoh, and went out from before Pharaoh.

11 And Joſeph placed his father and his brethren, and gave them a poſſeſſion in the land of Egypt, in the beſt of the land, in the land of Rameſes, as Pharaoh had commanded.

12 And Joſeph nouriſhed his father and his brethren, and all his father's houſhold with bread according to their families.

13 And there was no bread in all the land: for the famine was very ſore, ſo that the land of Egypt and all the land of Canaan fainted by reaſon of the famine.

14 And Joſeph gathered up all the money that was found in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, for the corn which they bought: and Joſeph brought the money into Pharaoh's houſe.

15 And when money failed in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came unto Joſeph, and ſaid, Give us bread: for why ſhould we die in thy preſence? for the money faileth.

16 And Joſeph ſaid, Give your cattle; and I will give you for your cattle, if money fail.

17 And they brought their cattle unto Joſeph: and Joſeph gave them bread in exchange for horſes, and for the flocks, and for the cattle of the herds, and for the aſſes; and he fed them with bread, for all the cattle, for that year.

18 When that year was ended, they came unto him the ſecond year, and ſaid unto him, We will not hide it from my lord, how that our money is ſpent, my lord alſo hath our herds of cattle; there is not ought left in the ſight of my lord, but our bodies and our lands.

19 Wherefore ſhall we die before thine eyes, both we and our land? buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be ſervants unto Pharaoh: and give us ſeed, that we may live and not die, that the land be not deſolate.

20 And Joſeph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh; for the Egyptians ſold every man his field, becauſe the famine prevailed over them: ſo the land became Pharaoh's.

21 And as for the people he removed them to cities, from one end of the borders of Egypt, even to the other end thereof.

22 Only the land of the prieſts bought he not: for the prieſts had a portion aſſigned them of Pharaoh, and did eat their portion which Pharaoh gave them; wherefore they ſold not their lands.

23 Then Joſeph ſaid unto the people, Behold earth; and that his habitation, his inheritance, and his treaſures were in Heaven, whither he was daily journeying in the bent and deſires of his heart, and the tenor of his conduct. "For they which ſay ſuch things confeſs that they 'ſeek a better, that is a heavenly country." (Heb. xi. 13—16.) Again, he numbers his life "by the days of his years:" A few years, each year compoſed of a few days: one day goes, and another, and ſoon a year is gone: and thus one year glides away after another, till life is ended, with its many ſorrows, and its few pleaſures; juſt as a weariſome journey gradually is finiſhed, and we arrive at home. Though he had now lived 130 years; yet he accounts them but few, in compariſon of the lives of his forefathers; and much more compared with eternity: they were evil alſo, not only as the lives of others are, but in that he had had an uncommon ſhare of troubles. Such an anſwer, from ſo venerable a perſon, could not fail to impreſs the mind of Pharaoh, and almoſt to extort the reluctant ſigh, by reminding him of the inſufficiency and ſhort continuance of all human proſperity and felicity; and that after a life of vanity and vexation, man goes down into the grave, equally from the throne as from the cottage; and that nothing can make him happy, but the proſpect of an everlaſting home in Heaven, after the cloſe of his ſhort weary pilgrimage on earth.

V. 11. In the beſt of the land.] Egypt lying low might perhaps afford good paſturage, eſpecially in the plains near the Nile; though the upland countries were totally burnt up during the years of famine: but there was not any where moiſture enough to encourage ſowing corn.

V. 13. Fainted, &c.] A ſtrong metaphor, taken from the fainting of an individual for want of ſuſtenance, and applied, in a manner emphatically deſcriptive, to the diſtreſs of the whole nation.

V. 14. Into Pharaoh's houſe.] None of it being appropriated to his own uſe, or given in preſents or penſions to his family.

V. 21. He removed them, &c.] The ſtate of affairs in Egypt might require ſuch regulations; and it might conduce to public tranquillity, and to the more equitable diſtribution of property, thus to wean them from their former lands, and habitations, and after the expiration of the famine to aſſign them others, as it ſeemed beſt.—But perhaps he only removed the inhabitants of the villages to the neareſt cities, in order to ſupply them more conveniently from the ſtorehouſes, till the famine was paſt.

V. 22. Prieſts, &c.] This word is ſometimes tranſlated princes; and ſeems here uſed not only for the miniſters of their ſuperſtitious worſhip, but for the officers of ſtate, hold, I have bought you this day, and your land for Pharaoh: lo, here is ſeed for you, and ye ſhall ſow the land.

24 And it ſhall come to paſs in the increaſe, that you ſhall give the fifth part unto Pharaoh, and four parts ſhall be your own, for ſeed of the field, and for your food, and for them of your houſholds, and for food for your little ones.

25 And they ſaid, Thou haſt ſaved our lives: let us find grace in the ſight of my lord, and we will be Pharaoh's ſervants.

26 And Joſeph made it a law over the land of Egypt unto this day, that Pharaoh ſhould have the fifth part; except the land of the prieſts only, which became not Pharaoh's.

27 And Iſrael dwelt in the land of Egypt in the country of Goſhen; and they had poſſeſſions therein, and grew and multiplied exceedingly.

28 And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt ſeventeen years: for the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and ſeven years.

29 And the time drew nigh that Iſrael muſt die: and he called his ſon Joſeph, and ſaid unto him, If now I have found grace in thy ſight, put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and deal kindly and truly with me; bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt.

30 But I will lie with my fathers, and thou ſhalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying place. And he ſaid, I will do as thou haſt ſaid.

31 And he ſaid, Swear unto me: And he ſware unto him, And Iſrael bowed himſelf upon the bed's head.

and for their wiſe men and diviners, who having their maintenance from Pharaoh, would not be under the neceſſity of ſelling their lands.

V. 24. A fifth part, &c.] Our land tax at its preſent rate would be one fifth of the rent, if it were equally levied; but this is the fifth of the clear produce, which is much more: yet as taken in lieu of all other taxes it does not appear exorbitant.

V. 25. Thou haſt ſaved, &c.] We ſhould not judge of this tranſaction by the rules of modern politics: it is plain that the Egyptians regarded Joſeph as a public benefactor; and though we may not perceive the reaſon of ſome arrangements; yet the whole tranſaction is ſtrongly marked with an equity, benevolence, diſintereſtedneſs, and impartiality, which have ſeldom, if ever, been equalled. The whole appears conſiſtent with Joſeph's character, as acting betwixt Pharaoh and his ſubjects in the fear of God; and without any undue attachment to the intereſts of his brethren, or even of his own children, whom we find not in better circumſtances than the other Iſraelites.

V. 29. Muſt die, &c.] Jacob was ſenſible that death was now ſpeedily approaching, and he greatly deſired the preſence of his beloved Joſeph; who lived at court, whilſt Jacob was at a conſiderable diſtance: and not even affection to his parent could induce Joſeph to relax his unremitting attention to the important duties of his ſtation.—Jacob's dying requeſt, "not to be buried in Egypt," evidenced his belief of the Lord's promiſe concerning Canaan, of which land he would thus take and keep poſſeſſion; and alſo intimated, that he deſired to have his lot after death, not with the Egyptians, but with his fathers Abraham and Iſaac, in that heavenly reſt which Canaan typified.

V. 31. Iſrael bowed, &c.] In an act of ſolemn worſhip, yet in feebleneſs thus ſupporting himſelf, and expreſſing his full ſatisfaction, and his willingneſs to leave the world.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The kindneſs of liberal benefactors, ſo far from encouraging us to encroach upon them, ſhould remind us to ſhew them all proper attention and deference: and in attending to ſome peculiar relative duties, we ſhould look round upon the whole circle, and ſo proportion them as not to entrench upon others.—Though diligence is exceedingly commendable, and generally is connected with advancement in life; yet it is ordinarily beſt to abide with God in our own proper calling: for what the world calls mending ourſelves, is frequently little better than renouncing peace, content, and a ſituation favourable to the proſperity of our ſouls, for gilded cares, incumbrances, and manifold temptations.—Indeed our life is but a pilgrimage, few and evil are the days of it; and if they are ſpent with God, and to his glory, the reſt matters very little. If we have a proſpect that, when we go hence and are no more ſeen, we ſhall go home to our father's houſe, we ſhall not want, and ought not to deſire, the paltry intereſts of the World; why then ſhould we burden ourſelves with unavailing cares, and ſorrows? Why covet riches, ſhortly to be left behind? Why engage in projects to be left unfiniſhed, or aſpire at diſtinctions which death will terminate? We act not thus on a journey, when our heart is at home: the conveniencies or inconveniencies, which we meet with, but little affect us or retard our progreſs; we want not to erect ſtately manſions, or lay up wealth in a foreign country, which we are leaving, and to which we ſhall return no more; nor do we encumber ourſelves with luggage, which we ſhall not need before, and which muſt be left behind, when we embark for our native country: "Having therefore food "and raiment let us be therewith content; for we brought "nothing into this World, neither may we carry any thing "out."—But O how miſerable are they, who have all their good things during the few and evil days of this preſent life!

life! and whoſe laſt comfort is likely to expire with their dying breath!—Let us then give diligence to make our calling and election ſure; and as our days are ſo much more curtailed than Jacob's were, let us often aſk ourſelves ſeriouſly how old we are? That our life may not vaniſh, nor death approach unobſerved or unprepared for.—A hoary head is a crown of glory, only when it is found in the way of righteouſneſs; and they whoſe conſiſtency of character will bear them out, need neither be aſhamed nor afraid to bear teſtimony for God before the greateſt princes, who if wiſe will highly value their pious prayers. They, who have been exalted, cannot too carefully avoid the appearance of deſpiſing their former equals; or they, who have been injured, the appearance of reſenting former ill treatment: and when we receive kindneſs from men, we ſhould acknowledge the kindneſs of God, in raiſing us up ſuch friends.—An uſeful life conſiſts in a conſtant ſucceſſion of duties: exalted ſtations properly filled, call for unremitting labour and attention: and ſuch perſons have need of great wiſdom, firmneſs, diſintereſtedneſs, impartiality and equity, in order to ward off envy, ſilence reproach, and to keep a clear conſcience, rendering to God, to Cæſar, and to the people, each their due. But if God's providence call a man to ſuch a ſtation, he ought to ſeek, and expect that he will furniſh him with, grace ſufficient for it. If with-holding the rain from Heaven ſo ſoon reduce the moſt opulent nations to poverty and diſtreſs; how abſolute muſt our dependence be upon that God, whom we ſo often wantonly offend, and fooliſhly forget? And if Joſeph extorted this confeſſion from the Egyptians, "Thou haſt ſaved our lives;" What multitudes will gratefully ſay to Jeſus at laſt, Thou haſt ſaved our ſouls, from the moſt tremendous deſtruction, and in the ſeaſon of uttermoſt diſtreſs! The Egyptians were willing to part with all their property, and even their liberty, for the ſaving of their lives: can it then be too much, for us to count all but loſs, and part with all, at his command and for his ſake; who will thus both ſave our ſouls, and give us an hundred fold even in this preſent World? And ſurely, if ſaved by Chriſt, we ſhall willingly become at his appointment the devoted ſervants of him, and his Father; whoſe glory he conſults, in harmony with our ſalvation.—Yet they, who lived on Joſeph's proviſion, and even Jacob, who was ſo dear to him, muſt die: but Jeſus gives us the true bread, that we may eat and live for ever: to him let us come, and yield ourſelves, and when we draw near to death, he, who ſupported us through life, will meet us and aſſure us of an everlaſting inheritance. Then, on the very bed of death, we may bow down and worſhip with joyful hearts, and breathe out our ſpirits into his faithful hands, with the moſt entire ſatisfaction.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVIII.] V. 1. Behold, &c.] As Jacob did not appear to be immediately in the ſtate of a dying perſon, Joſeph had returned to his important employments: but hearing again of his ſickneſs, and expecting his death, he went to viſit him, and took his two ſons, Manaſſeh and Ephraim, with him, either by Jacob's expreſs deſire, or in hopes that the ſolemn ſcene, together with the dying benediction and diſcourſe of the venerable Patriarch, would make ſome uſeful impreſſions upon their youthful minds. They were at this time above twenty years of age.

V. 2. Strengthened, &c.] Jacob being animated by the preſence of Joſeph and his ſons, exerted all his ſtrength to improve this laſt opportunity: he was alſo endued with inward ſtrength, and raiſed above himſelf by the holy Spirit, that he might utter thoſe prophecies with which he was inſpired.

V. 3. At Luz, &c.] Which Jacob had called Bethel. The unexpected viſit of a gracious God, in his extreme diſtreſs, could never be eraſed from his memory: and as he had already experienced much of the fulfilment of the promiſes then made to him, which he enumerated with thankfulneſs; ſo he grounded the following bleſſings on his poſterity upon them, as the warrant of his expectations.

V. 5. Are mine, as, &c.] That is, 'I adopt them, that 'being 10 (Now the eyes of Iſrael were dim for age, ſo that he could not ſee:) And he brought them near unto him; and he kiſſed them, and embraced them.

11 And Iſrael ſaid unto Joſeph, I had not thought to ſee thy face: and lo, God hath ſhewed me alſo thy ſeed.

12 And Joſeph brought them out from between his knees, and he bowed himſelf with his face to the earth.

13 And Joſeph took them both, Ephraim in his right hand towards Iſrael's left hand, and Manaſſeh in his left hand towards Iſrael's right hand, and brought them near unto him.

14 And Iſrael ſtretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Manaſſeh's head: guiding his hands wittingly; for Manaſſeh was the firſt-born.

'being numbered with my own ſons, they may, as heads of 'diſtinct tribes, have a proportionable ſhare in the inhe-'ritance of Canaan.' This he ſpake by the Sprit of prophecy. Conſidering Joſeph's rank in Egypt, carnal minds would have regarded this remote inheritance with the reſt of Jacob's ſons, as a very inconſiderable matter. But we do not find that Joſeph either purchaſed eſtates, or amaſſed wealth in Egypt for his ſons: not only becauſe he was diſintereſted; but becauſe he was a believer, and wanted not to attach his children to Egypt; but to lead their thoughts to Canaan, and to the inheritance of the children of Iſrael, as their proper portion. Alas, that ſo many profeſſing parents ſhould act ſo contrary to this example; and, by anxiouſly, not to ſay covetouſly, heaping up wealth for their children, ſhould teach them to forget Canaan and Iſrael, and take up with a portion in the Egypt of this world!—Jacob alſo bleſſed Joſeph's ſons (Heb. xi. 21,) in faith, and conſidered, and wiſhed them to conſider, that to be numbered with the ſons of Iſrael, and to have an inheritance in Canaan, was more honourable and deſirable, than to be the richeſt of Pharaoh's courtiers. Probably this was intended to lead them to unite intereſts with the Iſraelites, and to adhere to the worſhip of God, in preference to the Egyptians and their ſuperſtition, with which, in their ſtation, they were peculiarly in danger of being infected: and it ſeems to have produced the intended effect.

V. 6. Thy iſſue, which, &c.] We do not find that Joſeph had any other children; but if he had had any, according to this limitation, they muſt have been incorporated with the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh.

V. 7. Rachel died, &c.] The manner, in which this is introduced, intimates how much Jacob laid that ſtroke to heart; he ſeemed ſtill to feel the anguiſh of it: and to mention it here as a reaſon of his peculiar attachment to the poſterity, which he had by her.

V. 9. Whom God hath, &c.] In this place, whither I was ſold as a ſlave, where I was ſo long impriſoned, and where I have received ſo many mercies. The piety of the language ſhould not paſs unnoticed.

V. 10. Could not ſee, &c.] Not diſtinctly.

V. 12. He bowed himſelf, &c.] Joſeph thus ſhewed, that his external greatneſs did not render him forgetful of the reſpect due to his father; of the veneration, to which his age and piety entitled him; or of the high value which he put upon the adoption of his children to be partakers of the promiſed bleſſings.

V. 14. For Manaſſeh was, &c.] Though Manaſſeh was the firſt-born, and Jacob knew it; yet under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, he, by this token, gave Ephraim the preference, as before he had firſt mentioned his name. (5.)

V. 15. He bleſſed Joſeph, &c.] Jacob firſt bleſſed Joſeph, and then his ſons; or he bleſſed Joſeph in bleſſing his ſons.—Abraham and Iſaac walked before God, by habitually, and through faith, maintaining communion with him in his ordinances, devoting themſelves to his ſervice, acting as under his eye, depending on his protection, and rejoicing in his loving kindneſs and mercy.—Jacob had often been in outward ſtraits, and eſpecially with his numerous poſterity had been in great diſtreſs by famine: but God had always provided for him, and had ſent Joſeph before-hand to make preparation for him in Egypt. There God had fed him ſeventeen years in his infirm old age by Joſeph; juſt as long as he had fed Joſeph by Jacob's hand in his infancy and youth: thus enabling Joſeph to requite his parents.—This divine interinterpoſition was therefore very properly introduced: and as he had been fed, he complained not; though he had not been enriched, but rather impoveriſhed.

V. 16. The Angel, &c.] Jacob here called the God, before whom Abraham and Iſaac had walked, and who had fed him all his life long, the Angel. As God giveth not his glory to the creatures, we may be ſure that ſuch things were not ſpoken of a created angel. This is one proof amongſt many, that he, who is by Malachi called the Meſſenger, or Angel of the Covenant, even Jeſus Chriſt, was known as diſtinct from, yet One with, the Father by the Patriarchs; and that as ſuch he manifeſted himſelf to them, and was worſhipped by them.—The deliverances of believing ſinners from miſery and danger, by the interpoſition of the power of God, coming through the ranſom of the blood of Chriſt, are frequently in Scripture entitled redemptions.—Jacob now cloſing his eyes in death, joyfully conſidered himſelf as redeemed from all evil; and therefore expected henceforth good, and nothing but good.—He prayed for his grandſons, that they might ſtand in the place, inherit the privileges, and walk in the ſteps of their progenitors: which would be a NAME of nobler import, than Egypt could afford.

V. 17. It diſpleaſed him, &c.] Joſeph was not ſatisfied with his father's conduct; ſuppoſing that he was influenced by a groundleſs partiality, and not by the guidance of the prophetic Spirit.

V. 18. This is, &c.] The pre-eminence belonged to Manaſſeh by general cuſtom; and thus it was afterwards commanded in the law: Yet all through the Scriptures we have inſtances of the younger being preferred to the elder. The law teaches us what is juſt and proper for us to do: but a ſovereign God, in conferring unmerited favours, claims an indiſputable right of doing what he will with his own; yet always exerciſes it in perfect equity, faithfulneſs, and wiſdom, and conſiſtently with his largeſt invitations and promiſes.

V. 19. Younger brother, &c.] We ſhall ſee an abundant accompliſhment of this prediction in the following hiſtory.

V. 22. I took out of, &c.] Jacob firſt bought this ground of Hamor: but probably after the ſlaughter of the Shechemites, the Amorites ſeized upon it; and afterwards he recovered it by force of arms, in a way, and at a time, of which we are not informed. And though it appears not that he, or his ſons, at this time, or for long after, had any advantage from it; yet in faith he bequeathed it to Joſeph as an acceſſion to the allotted portion, which would be aſſigned to his poſterity, when they ſhould be put in poſſeſſion of Canaan. Here Joſeph's bones were at length depoſited. (xxxiii. 19, Joſh. xxiv. 32.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The death-beds of eminent believers frequently afford moſt inſtructive leſſons to thoſe around them. This is the end of all men, and the living will lay it to heart; and ſuch ſcenes, together with the prayers and counſels of dying perſons, are ſo ſuited to make ſerious impreſſions on the young, the gay, and the proſperous, that we ſhall do well to take our children with us on theſe occaſions, when it can be done with propriety.—It is very deſirable, if the Lord pleaſe, to bear our dying teſtimony to the truths of God, to his faithfulneſs, and to the pleaſantneſs of his ways.—One would wiſh to be ſtrengthened at ſuch a ſolemn ſeaſon to render our laſt ſervice to our ſurvivors; and ſhould have an eye to this, in our whole conduct, that we may ſo live, as may give energy and weight to our dying exhortations: yet at laſt the Spirit diſpenſeth in this matter ſeverally, as he will. Abraham and Iſaac died in faith and in peace, yet we have no record of their dying teſtimony; but Jacob here ſpeaks with great copiouſneſs and energy. All true believers are bleſſed at their death; but all do not depart equally full of ſpiritual conſolation, nor are all alike edifying to the ſpectators.

The joint inheritance of the promiſed bleſſing with the true Iſrael of God, let who will deſpiſe it, is infinitely preferable to the ſole inheritance of all the kingdoms of the world: and the beſt expreſſion of particular affection for our children and relatives conſiſts in recommending our God and religion to them; and in ſeeking for them the grace of God in earneſt prayers, that they may be his adopted children and heirs, according to the promiſe. And though we cannot bleſs them in Jacob's Spirit of prophecy; yet we may with his ſpirit of faith, and humbly hope that our prayers for them will be anſwered, and our exhortations followed, even after we are dead. Nor is there any thing more comfortable to the dying believer himſelf, or more edifying or affecting to thoſe around him, than to reflect upon, and ſpeak of the promiſes of God, and his experience of their faithful accompliſhment, in his providence, and by his grace; to be mindful of his Bethels, and Peniels, and to acknowledge that, notwithſtanding trials and troubles, all hath been done wiſely and graciouſly. In this view, even temporal mercies and deliverances, yea, our daily bread, when conſidered as the gifts of the great Angel of the covenant, the purchaſe of his redemption, and earneſts of better things reſerved for us, become moſt precious bleſſings. And when a dying man can conſider himſelf with confidence redeemed from all evil, as pardoned and ſanctified; as ready to have done with conflict, labour, ſin, temptation, darkneſs, ſorrow, and danger of any more offending or diſhonouring God; and as having good, and nothing but good before him to all eternity: with what comfort may he walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death! and though fleſh and heart fail, though the eyes grow dim, and nature ſink in decay, how may he triumph in that God, who is the ſtrength of his heart and his portion for ever! Having experienced, that God hath been better to him, not only than his deſponding fears, but even than his moſt ſanguine hopes, he may chearfully deſcend into the grave, leaning on the tried faithfulneſs of God to his promiſes. But would we thus die the death of the righteous, we muſt walk before God in the land of the living; and in the exerciſe and obedience of faith, bear the name, and tread in the ſteps of theſe ancient believers: then though our comforts are dying all around us, God will be with us, countervail all loſſes, and fulfil his largeſt promiſes. Whatever we think whilſt we live, we ſhall at death know that to be fed all our life long, is all that the World can do for us. Little indeed can thoſe poſſeſſions profit us, about which there is ſo much contention, and ſo many cares: though it may be proper to adjuſt with exactneſs every thing reſpecting them, leſt we bequeath diſcord to our poſterity; yet a burying place is all that the ampleſt patrimony will ſhortly afford.—How poor then are they, who have no other riches! and how miſerable a death-bed to thoſe, who have no well-grounded hope of good, but dreadful apprehenſions of evil, and nothing but evil for ever! Let us then fear being put off with a portion in this world; or with an hypocritical religion, and a preſumptuous hope, which will at laſt leave us in deſpair: rather, whatever we loſe, or go without, let us chooſe that good part, which ſhall never be taken from us; and then poverty, pain, reproach, and death itſelf, will be ſo many favourable gales to waft us to the haven of eternal bliſs.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLIX.] V. 1, 2.] All Jacob's ſons were ſtill living; and now at his command they collected themſelves together round his bed, perhaps with their children, to hear his dying words. The ſubſequent repetition of this call might intimate his deſire, that they ſhould keep together, and live in harmony as one family, without intermingling with the Egyptians.—We ought not to conſider this addreſs as the expreſſion of his private affection, or reſentment, or partiality: but as the language of the Holy Ghoſt, declaring the purpoſes of God, reſpecting the character, circumſtances, and ſituation of the ſeveral tribes, deſcended from them, in the laſt times, or in after ages: for the prophecy evidently looks forward beyond the coming of Chriſt; and perhaps ſome of it may be yet unaccompliſhed. We may here obſerve that in this, and ſome other paſſages, ſuch as Noah's prophecy, (ix,) and Moſes bleſſing the tribes, (Deut. xxxiii,) there is ſo large an extent of prediction compriſed in few words, that brevity will not allow us to adduce, in a publication of this nature, all that might properly be ſaid by way of elucidating them, and we muſt be content with a compendious abſtract. We ſhould alſo note, that we have only the Scripture hiſtory, (which mentions very little of ſeveral of the tribes,) to proceed upon in many caſes, if we attempt to illuſtrate the prophecy by it's accompliſhment. Had we a more particular account of the diſtinguiſhing character, ſituation, and ſucceſs of each tribe; we ſhould probably probably perceive a more ſtriking exactneſs in all, than we now diſcern in any of them; and might ſee very clearly, that the whole was foreknown by divine preſcience, and fulfilled by omnipotence. But as matters now are, full ſatisfaction muſt not be expected by the reader; nor more than a few of the moſt intereſting of thoſe obſervations, which have been copiouſly made upon it.

V. 3, 4.] Jacob began with Reuben, who being the eldeſt ſon might have expected the precedency; and that the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of authority would have devolved upon him: but he had incurred a forfeiture; and therefore his father, as it were, arrayed him with the inſignia of royalty, that he might more ſolemnly and judicially degrade him.—His inſtability may refer either to his own character, or that of his tribe, or both: like water they were at no ſtay, apt to break through the appointed bounds, and not at all to be depended on.—Accordingly the tribe of Reuben had neither the pre-eminence in one reſpect or another: there is not mentioned in Scripture either king, judge, prophet, or renowned perſon of this tribe; except Dathan and Abiram, who were noted for their rebellion againſt Moſes, and againſt God.—Reuben's inceſt had been committed forty years before, and probably was repented of, and pardoned as to it's eternal puniſhment: yet being a crime of ſo infamous a nature, it is here remembered, and his tribe degraded on that account. This was intended to teſtify not only Jacob's, but God's abhorrence of ſuch abominable practices, for a warning to the Iſraelites, and to others in all future ages. Thus children actually do ſuffer for their parents' crimes in this world, but for wiſe, equitable, and merciful reaſons; namely, to warn them not to imitate their ſins, leſt they both ſuffer themſelves, and entail ſuffering on their beloved offspring.—Jacob addreſſed the former part to Reuben himſelf; but he ſpoke the concluding words "he went up "to my couch," to his other ſons, that they might notice and profit by the warning.

V. 5.] Simeon and Levi were next in ſeniority, but they were degraded alſo, and with ſtill deeper abhorrence of the crime, which they had committed. They were brethren, not only as deſcended from the ſame parents, but as being of the ſame fierce and untractable diſpoſition. The ſwords, thoſe inſtruments of cruelty, with which they maſſacred the Shechemites, remained in their houſes, as monuments of that odious crime.—Jacob had probably been ſuſpected of allowing their treacherous revenge; but he here entered his dying proteſt againſt it.—'No, ſays he, my ſoul would have abhorred ſuch a villainous project; and had I been admitted into their ſecret, I would have immediately divulged it.' His honour was intimately connected with the honour of his religion, and the glory of the God whom he worſhipped: therefore, ſays he, 'let 'it never be imputed to me, that I was one of this ſcandalous 'confederacy: it would not only be a diſgrace to my cha-'racter; but it would diſcredit the worſhip of Jehovah in 'future ages, and in diſtant nations, were it ſaid that Iſrael, 'who had power with God and prevailed, was guilty of 'ſuch a crime. Let then Simeon and Levi, though my 'own ſons, bear the blame, and let the degraded ſtate of 'their tribes ſtill proclaim my abhorrence, yea my God's 'abhorrence of their wickedneſs.'—For in their rage againſt Shechem, they ſlew him; but they ſcorned to lay hands on him alone, and therefore ſlew numbers with him. —Yea, they were too ſelf-willed and headſtrong in their own way, either to aſk, or take any wholeſome counſel:—So that they ſtopped not, till they had deſolated and plundered the city. Jacob therefore execrated and called on all men to deteſt, their fierce anger and cruel wrath: yet he did not curſe them; nay he is ſaid to have bleſſed all his ſons, and we may hope they were bleſſed. But he pronounced a prophetic ſentence upon them in God's name, that they ſhould be divided from each other, and one part of their deſcendants from another, in Jacob and Iſrael. Though degraded from the pre-eminence, they ſhould ſhare in the promiſed land, in the ordinances of God, and in the benefits of the covenant made with their fathers. Accordingly the tribe of Simeon had only a portion within the lot of Judah which was too large for him; (Joſhua xix. 1—9:) where being ſtraitened, part of them went in queſt of new ſettlements, (1 Chron. iv. 24—39,) and were thus divided in Jacob. Tradition alſo reports, that numbers of this tribe were diſperſed amongſt the other tribes, as inſtructors of children for their ſupport.—The ſentence in Levi's caſe was not reverſed, but converted into a bleſſing; and being ſeparated, and conſecrated to God, as the prieſtly tribe, it became honourably and profitably diſperſed in that character through Iſrael.

V. 8—12.] The bleſſing of Judah begins with an elegant alluſion to his name, which ſignifies praiſe:—He too had been guilty of ſome miſdemeanors, though not of ſo flagrant a nature: Yet had Jacob been influenced by his own ſpirit, he would probably have paſſed him by alſo, that the birthright and bleſſing might have been given to his his beloved Joſeph, the ſon of his beloved Rachel.—But indeed the Spirit of God alone could communicate ſuch knowledge of future, and diſtant events, as is evidently contained in this chapter.—Under this holy influence, he predicted, that "Judah's hand ſhould be in the neck of "his enemies," to ſubject, triumph over, and deſtroy them: and that "his father's children ſhould bow down before "him," by willingly ſubmitting to his authority.—Accordingly this tribe took the lead by God's appointment in their encampments in the wilderneſs, marched firſt againſt the Canaanites, after Joſhua's death, and obtained the firſt ſettlement in Canaan.—David and Solomon of this tribe were ſignally proſperous, both in extending their dominions, and in domeſtic affairs: and their deſcendants until, and even after, the Babyloniſh captivity were in power and authority.—Judah was alſo compared to "a lion's whelp:" the princes of this tribe were very courageous and victorious, yet not cruel and tyrannical.—Indeed they were often diſpoſed to live in peace, but they were always warlike and victorious when rouſed to arms.—The word rendered ſceptre in the ſubſequent remarkable prophecy, is ſometimes tranſlated Tribe, and ſometimes rod, or ſtaff: ſo that it may mean either the ſceptre of kingly government over all Iſrael, or their diſtinct ſubſiſtence, and internal government as a tribe, or both.—The tribe of Judah had in many things the pre-eminence before the times of David: in his days and in Solomon's, it had the whole kingly authority: after the revolt of the other tribes, Benjamin adhered to it, with the Levites, and numbers flocked to it from all the other tribes; the kingdom in the line of David was called the kingdom of Judah, and continued to the captivity:—After that event, all who remained of the other tribes, were incorporated with them, and were called Jews, or Judeans. The government continued with them, and with thoſe who united with them, till they were conquered by other nations: yet, even in Babylon, they appear to have had an internal government: afterwards, even under the Roman power, and notwithſtanding the kings, tetrarchs, and governors, which were placed over them, much authority was veſted in the ſanhedrim, who were chiefly of this tribe, until the coming of Chriſt; as it is evident from the concurrent teſtimony of Jewiſh and Chriſtian hiſtorians. The tribe of Judah alſo was preſerved more diſtinct than any of the reſt, and at our Lord's coming it's genealogies could be traced back to Judah.—It was alſo predicted, that a lawgiver, or a governor and judge, as the word is often uſed, deſcended from Judah, ſhould exerciſe authority, and execute judgment, in one form or other, amongſt them, till Shiloh came.—Shiloh is by ſome rendered, he who is ſent, by others the peaceable one, and by others the Seed: but all muſt interpret it of the Meſſiah, who was ſent into the world, as the promiſed Seed, and as the Prince of Peace. It has been ſhewn that the ſceptre did not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet; but that authority was in one way or other veſted in this tribe, until the time of Chriſt.—But ſoon after Jeruſalem was deſolated, the whole civil and eccleſiaſtical ſtate was overturned, the people were ſcattered over the earth, all their diſtinctions were confounded; and they have remained to this day, (upwards of 1700 years) more entirely deſtitute of ſceptre, lawgiver, or ſhadow of authority, than ever they were even in the Babyloniſh captivity: therefore Shiloh is come, and Jeſus Chriſt is he.—It was added, "Unto him ſhall the gathering of the people be." If we underſtand this of Judah, it had it's accompliſhment in ſeveral of the events before mentioned; and alſo in the gathering of the people to Mount Zion, which was in this tribe, to keep their ſolemn feaſts; to the court of David and his deſcendants; and alſo in Benjamin's uniting intereſts with Judah, in the Levites adhering to him; and in the people flocking to him from the other tribes, in the days of Jereboam. And to Shiloh the gathering of the people, both Jews and Gentiles, hath been, is, and will be more and more, until the earth ſhall be full of his glory; yea until all the world ſhall be gathered before his judgment ſeat; and the redeemed from all the kindreds and nations of the earth, ſhall be gathered with him into heaven.—The precedency, and the honour of giving birth to the Meſſiah muſt be appropriated to one tribe; but a lot in the land of Canaan, and many temporal, and ſpiritual bleſſings might be enjoyed in common by many.—What follows, therefore, in reſpect of Judah, ſeems to relate primarily to theſe bleſſings, and to foretel that Judah's lot in Canaan ſhould abound in vines, ſo ſtrong, that they ſhould tie their young aſſes to them, and ſo fruitful that they ſhould load them from them: and that they ſhould be ſo much employed about them, as to have their garments ſtained with their juice.—They ſhould have plenty of wine for their exhilaration, which would ſometimes be abuſed in intemperance, ſo that their eyes would be red with wine, and their teeth white with milk, with which alſo their lot ſhould abound. We have ſeen much of this prophecy applied and kind to his meanest servant. When he came, he took the sceptre from Judah's hand; and all their kings, and rulers had been but types of him, to whom the gathering of the people is. No wonder therefore the Jews are now bereft of it.—And we may also observe that he is the true vine; that wine is the appointed symbol of his blood, which is drink indeed, as shed for sinners and applied in faith; and that all the blessings of his Gospel are wine and milk without money, and without price, to which every thirsty soul is welcome.

V. 13. Zebulun shall dwell, &c.] According to this prediction, the tribe of Zebulun had a portion assigned to it, by lot, which reached nearly, if not entirely, from the Mediterranean sea to the sea of Galilee. (Josh. xix. 10—16. Deut. xxxiii. 18.)

V. 14, 15.] Issachar is here emblematically described according to his future character, as industrious and unambitious, and bearing labour or tribute peaceably, of which burdens others grievously complain. He was sensible that rest, not from labour, but from war and contention, was profitable; and being satisfied with the pleasantness of a remote part of the country, he little intermeddled with the affairs of the state, or of war. Accordingly this tribe is seldom mentioned in the subsequent history.

V. 16, 17.] Dan signifies judgment: and Jacob foretels, that though he was the son of one of his concubines, being the first of them whom he mentions, he should be the head of a separate tribe, and have a share in the management of affairs, as if he had been descended from Leah or Rachel. —What follows is a sketch of the character of the Danites, as subtle and mischievous, like serpents and adders; and of their success in these practices, which would probably appear to us with striking propriety, had we their history as a tribe: as indeed it might to their contemporaries.—Sampson was of this tribe, who unexpectedly buried the Philistines in the ruins of the temple of Dagon, as the adder causes the horse to throw his rider.

V. 18. I have waited for, &c.] Jacob, as exhausted with speaking to his sons, here pauses, and speaks unto the Lord, by way of refreshing his spirits in the recollection of the near approach of that salvation, for which he had so long waited. Mr. Henry here observes, "That the "pious ejaculations of lively devotion may sometimes "appear incoherent, but ought never to be censured as "impertinent."

V. 19. Gad, a troop, &c.] Gad signifies a troop; and the character, and situation of this tribe are both here described. The Gadites were renowned for valour: (1 Chron. xii. 8;) and having their inheritance beyond Jordan eastward, they lay open to incursions from troops of Ammonites, Moabites, Syrians, and others; by whom doubtless they were frequently annoyed: but they still maintained their ground, and under David and his posterity subjugated their enemies. This blessing aptly describes a Christian's conflict: he is overcome in many combats, but is more than conqueror in the final event of the war.

V. 20. Out of Asher, &c.] Asher signifies the blessed; and Jacob by the Spirit of prophecy allots him a plentiful country, yielding abundance for himself and others; even royal dainties, to supply the tables of princes at home and abroad.

V. 21. Naphtali is a hind, &c.] None of these concise prophecies is more obscure, or hath given learned men more trouble, and afforded them less satisfaction, than this verse.—But without entering into these difficulties, we may take it as it stands in our translation, and consider it as a sketch of the character of this tribe: as unlike the laborious ox and ass; affecting ease and liberty; insinuating and affectionate; active but volatile; more noted for quick dispatch, than steady labour and perseverance; and more disposed to exult in national blessings, than to fight in defence of them; like the hind which flees from, not like the lion who faces and overcomes his enemy; like the suppliant who with goodly words craves mercy, not like the warrior, who disdains to ask or even accept of quarter. Barak and many of his soldiers were of this tribe, and though they fought successfully at last, at first they were very timorous. I recollect no other warriors of this tribe.

V. 22—26.] A great part of what Jacob says concerning his beloved Joseph is historical, and relates to his past life; yet much also is prophetical.—He is here called a fruitful bough, or young tree planted by the water ſide: he had no more than two ſons, but from them ſprang two tribes, which ſeem to have become very numerous; eſpecially Ephraim, which was ſo eminent in Iſrael, that the whole kingdom is frequently denominated from it.—Joſeph's brethren had hated and perſecuted him; Potiphar's wife tempted, and then ſlandered him; Potiphar condemned and impriſoned him; and it is a ſingular caſe indeed, if ſome of the Egyptians did not revile and envy him, though we read not of it. Thus the Archers ſorely grieved, though they did not eventually hurt, him. It may likewiſe look forward to the terrible wars, which his deſcendants waged, eſpecially with the kingdom of Judah. His weapons, however, in this warfare failed him not, as a broken or weakened bow would have done: and his hands and arms were ſtrengthened to uſe them, by the mighty power of God. That is, the providence of God outwardly protected and proſpered him; and the Spirit of God endued him inwardly with ſuch ſtrength of faith and grace, as produced invincible courage, reſolution, and perſeverance: thus he was enabled to ſtand his ground, and to repel every attack of his enemies. His life was preſerved, his reputation was cleared, his integrity remained unimpeached; and riſing ſuperior to all oppoſition his brethren ſued to him, and became dependent on him, and all his enemies bowed before him, and ſought his favour. By means of this divine aſſiſtance and bleſſing, and through all theſe trials and troubles, he at length became the ſhepherd of Iſrael, to ſuſtain his father and family, and to take care of them: and the ſtone of Iſrael, the foundation and ſtrong ſupport of their intereſts. In theſe reſpects, as in many other things, he was a remarkable type of the good Shepherd, and tried corner Stone of the whole church of God.—And indeed, though the kingdom, and the honour of being the progenitor of Chriſt, were intended for Judah: yet Joſeph was the eſpecial type of the Saviour among Jacob's ſons; and all, here ſpoken of him, ought to be conſidered as deſcriptive of the great Antitype. He too was greatly grieved, ſhot at, and hated; but his bow abode in ſtrength, and by the power of the Holy Ghoſt he fails not, nor is diſcouraged, until his enemies are put under his footſtool; and his brethren are brought to be with him where he is, to behold and ſhare his glory. Thus Joſeph being helped by the God of his father Jacob, was perſonally, and in his poſterity, triumphant over all his enemies. Joſhua, who commanded, and was ſo ſignally victorious, in the wars of Canaan, was one of Joſeph's deſcendants.—Moreover it was predicted, that God would bleſs his poſterity with a temperate climate, a fruitful ſoil, the treaſures that are dug from the bowels of the earth,—a numerous and healthful progeny; and extenſive and durable bleſſings of every kind, even like the mountains, which ſhall endure as long as the earth itſelf; which things are typical of the vaſt and everlaſting bleſſings, that are conferred upon the ſpiritual ſeed of Chriſt. Indeed Jacob bleſſed all his ſons, more particularly, copiouſly, and clearly, than Abraham and Iſaac had done: the promiſes alſo drew near their accompliſhment, and his ſeed were multiplying very faſt: but eſpecially Joſeph, who was not only ſeparated from his brethren who ſold him into Egypt, but was, as it may be rendered, a Nazarite from among his brethren, more devoted unto God, and more excellent than they. The expreſſion, on the crown of the head, may refer to the Nazarite's vow, which ſeems to have ſubſiſted before the giving of the law, and only to have been regulated by it. (Num. vi.) In this alſo, he was a type of him, who was holy, ſeparate from ſinners, and called a Nazarene.

V. 27. Benjamin, &c.] According to the emblem here uſed, the character of this tribe was fierceneſs and cruelty; which eſpecially appears in the hiſtory of the Levite's concubine: (Judges xix. xx.) when after the wickedneſs was committed, the Benjamites ſingly withſtood all the other tribes, and had the advantage in two battles, nor ceaſed till they were almoſt entirely deſtroyed. Ehud the ſecond Judge, and Saul the firſt king were of this tribe. In the former part of the hiſtory we read frequently of the Benjamites as a warlike people. And in the latter times they joined themſelves to the tribe of Judah, and thus divided the ſpoil, and ſhared with them in their privileges.—Paul was of this tribe, who, as it were in the morning of his life, ravined as a wolf, and devoured the prey in perſecuting the Chriſtians: but in the evening of his days, as a preacher of the Goſpel, he ſhared the bleſſings with Judah's Lion, aſſiſted in his victories, and thus divided the ſpoil.

V. 28. Every one, &c.] That is according to the bleſſing, which God intended in after times to beſtow upon them. Though ſome of Jacob's ſons were reproved and diſgraced 28 All theſe are the twelve tribes of Iſrael: and this is it that their father ſpake unto them, and bleſſed them; every one according to his bleſſing he bleſſed them.

diſgraced, yet none of them were excluded (as Iſhmael and Eſau had been,) from the promiſed land, and the peculiar privileges of Abraham's ſeed; and when we compare their ſituation with the Gentile nations, we ſhall eaſily ſee that they were all indeed bleſſed with moſt invaluable bleſſings.

V. 29. And he charged them, &c.] As he had done Joſeph before. One deſign of Jacob ſeems to have been to draw off the thoughts of his ſons from Egypt, to weaken their attachment to that country, and to lead them to fix their hearts upon Canaan.

V. 31. I buried Leah.] By burying Leah, and wiſhing to be buried himſelf, not where his beloved Rachael lay, but where Abraham and Iſaac lay, Jacob expreſſed his faith in the God of Abraham and Iſaac, and his deſire of having his portion with them beyond the grave.

V. 32. He gathered, &c.] Thus Jacob, having been enabled to finiſh all, for which he wiſhed to live, laid down and died with the utmoſt ſerenity and compoſure.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit can make men forget pain, raiſe them above the feeling of an exhauſted frame, and enable them to ſpeak on a death-bed with pleaſure to themſelves and profit to others. But views into futurity, except as they reſpect the future felicity of Heaven, would afford us little ſatisfaction. Had not Jacob looked forward to the coming of Shiloh, and waited for his ſalvation, he could but little have rejoiced in his prophetical benediction of his family, when the whole is conſidered: ſo vain is the beſt eſtate of earthly bliſs!—Whatever therefore tends to draw off our affections from things below, and raiſe them to things above; whatever tends to cement our union with the people of God, and to diſunite us from the world, muſt be good for us: ſuch in general is the tendency of the admonitions, and even rebukes, of pious parents, eſpecially at the cloſe of their life, and when mixed with prayers for their childrens' welfare.

Sins long ſince committed, if not waſhed away in the blood of Chriſt, will at laſt riſe up againſt us to our condemnation: and even when repented of, and pardoned, they may oft be remembered againſt us to our confuſion. We may both in the correction of a merciful father, the rebukes of kind friends, and the upbraidings of unkind enemies, be made to bear the reproach, and to poſſeſs the iniquities of our youth, in our circumſtances, conſtitutions, and reputations. We ſhould therefore remember them for our humiliation, and that we may bear ſuch rebukes with patience and meekneſs: for if our violations of God's law do not exclude us from Heaven, we have great cauſe for thankfulneſs; and if we are truly penitent, our very ſufferings ſhall be converted into bleſſings to ourſelves and others.

Thoſe, who are of eminence in the profeſſion of religion, ſhould be peculiarly ſtedfaſt in proteſting againſt the wickedneſs of other profeſſors: and in wiping away every ſuſpicion of conniving at their ſins, though it ſhould leave infamy upon their neareſt relations. They had better bear the reproach, than that it ſhould reſt upon the Goſpel.

Revenge or ſenſual pleaſure may be ſweet at the time, but they will leave a laſting ſting behind them. Such men, as are unſtable in their ways, will never be eminent, either in the world or in the church: and they, who are ſelf-willed, will make themſelves and others miſerable. But though ſome are to be blamed, we muſt not condemn families or people indiſcriminately, nor magnify every offence into a crime of deep malignity: notwithſtanding defects, ſome merit our commendation; and though men are not all of the ſame diſpoſition, nor alike proſperous, God diſpenſing to them variouſly as he pleaſes; yet he bleſſes all with many unmerited mercies, and eſpecially thoſe who live under the ordinances of God, and enjoy the means of grace.—But chiefly praiſe is due to him, who ſprang out of Judah, in whom the moſt oppoſite excellencies harmonize.—As the Lion of the tribe of Judah, he will terribly avenge upon his enemies his ſlighted love: as the Lamb of God, by his ſacrifice he taketh away the ſin of the world. His ſceptre of grace he ſtretches forth from the mercy ſeat, and invites us periſhing ſinners to draw near, and accept of his Salvation, that we may not feel the ſtroke of his iron rod: and if his wrath be kindled, yea but a little, bleſſed are all they who truſt in him. Aſſuredly this Meſſenger of Peace is come, and unbelieving Jews without ſceptre or governor are his unwilling witneſſes.—But may they, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles be gathered unto him, and with us enjoy bleſſings incomparably better than the richeſt fruit of the vine and the corn field, and all royal dainties;

NOTES.

CHAP. L.] V. 2. The phyſicians embalmed, &c.] The Egyptians were eminent for this art of preſerving dead bodies from putrefaction, by a certain proceſs in the uſe of ſpices and drugs. Several of theſe bodies remain to this day, and are called Egyptian Mummies, being preſerved as great curioſities; and ſome of them have probably continued in this ſtate much above 2000 years. The cuſtom not being ſinful, was on this occaſion attended to, and might have ſome expediency, as Jacob was to be carried into Canaan.

V. 4. Joſeph ſpake, &c.] Perhaps it was not allowed to come into the preſence of the King in mourning; (Eſther, iv. 1, 2;) or Joſeph would thus make his requeſt with all the modeſty, and decorum poſſible; and ſending his meſſage by others, would at once ſhow his reſpect to Pharaoh, and to them.

V. 5. My father made me ſwear, &c.] Joſeph would not appear weary of his cloſe application to buſineſs, or negligent of the intereſts of Egypt, and of Pharaoh, in thus craving leave of abſence: therefore he was careful to repreſent the matter, not as any inclination of his own, but as the dying requeſt of his father, who was ſo earneſt in it, as to bring him under the ſolemn obligation of an oath.

V. 10. Beyond Jordan.] Moſes wrote, or reviſed, his hiſtory

12 And his ſons did unto him according as he commanded them.

13 For his ſons carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah; which Abraham bought with the field for a poſſeſſion of a burying-place, of Ephron the Hittite, before Mamre.

14 And Joſeph returned into Egypt, he and his brethren, and all that went up with him to bury his father, after he had buried his father.

15 And when Joſeph's brethren ſaw that their father was dead, they ſaid, Joſeph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him.

16 And they ſent meſſengers unto Joſeph, ſaying, Thy father did command before he died, ſaying, 17 So ſhall ye ſay unto Joſeph, Forgive, I pray thee now, the treſpaſs of thy brethren, and their ſin; for they did unto thee evil: and now we pray thee forgive the treſpaſs of the ſervants of the God of thy father. And Joſeph wept when they ſpake unto him.

18 And his brethen alſo wept and fell down before his face: and they ſaid, Behold, we be thy ſervants.

19 And Joſeph ſaid unto them, Fear not: for am I in the place of God?

20 But as for you, ye thought evil againſt me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to paſs, as it is this day, to ſave much people alive.

21 Now therefore fear ye not: I will nouriſh you, and your little ones. And he comforted them, and ſpake kindly unto them.

22 And Joſeph dwelt in Egypt, he, and his father's houſe: and Joſeph lived an hundred and ten years.

23 And Joſeph ſaw Ephraim's children, of the third generation: the children alſo of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, were brought up upon Joſeph's knees.

24 And Joſeph ſaid unto his brethren, I die: and God will ſurely viſit you, and bring you out of this land, unto the land which he ſware to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob.

hiſtory on the eaſt-ſide of Jordan; therefore in his five books beyond Jordan means weſt-ward: In other parts of ſcripture it generally means eaſt-ward.—During ſeven days they performed ſolemn funeral obſequies.

V. 11. Egyptians, &c.] The inhabitants of Canaan naturally called them all Egyptians, as coming out of Egypt; though ſome of them muſt know to whom this ſepulchre belonged.

V. 14. Returned, &c.] Various motives might induce the ſons of Jacob to continue in Egypt, notwithſtanding the prophetic viſion, which Abraham had of their bondage there. Some might diſregard it, if it was known and remembered by them; others might ſubmit to it, and not deem themſelves allowed to move without command from God; whilſt fear, intereſt, eaſe, and the plenty which they enjoyed, would concur in detaining them, and effecting the purpoſe of God.

V. 15. Joſeph will—hate, &c.] Joſeph's brethren ſuppoſed that tenderneſs to Jacob had hitherto reſtrained him from executing the puniſhment, which they were conſcious they merited: and judging of him from the general temper of human nature, they apprehended, that he would now avenge himſelf on them, ſeeing they had hated and injured him without cauſe. Therefore not being able to reſiſt, or to flee away, they attempted to ſoften him by humiliations.

V. 16—18.] They ſaid not, "our father," but more pathetically, "thy father." Probably Jacob had given them ſome injunction to this purpoſe, which they firſt reported as introductory to their own ſupplication; and then pleaded with Joſeph for pardon in the character of the ſervants of Jacob's God. This ſhews with what care and prudence they had concerted this buſineſs: and we need not wonder that Joſeph was much affected at witneſſing this moſt exact accompliſhment of his dreams.

V. 19. Am I in the place of God?] It belongs to God to execute vengeance, and Joſeph meant not to uſurp his prerogative. Thus he directed them not to fear him, but to fear God, to humble themſelves before him, and ſeek his forgiveneſs.

V. 20. Ye thought evil, but, &c.] Joſeph's brethren in ſelling him acted with extreme malice and wickedneſs, and meant that he ſhould live and die a deſtitute ſlave: but God in permitting it meant good to Joſeph, to Jacob, to his brethren, to their families, to Egypt, to Canaan, and to the neighbouring nations; nor can we number up all the important purpoſes anſwered by it to the Church and to the World; or calculate how many important events depended on it, through all ſucceeding generations. The ſame is obſervable in many other inſtances in Scripture; and we cannot poſſibly account for the diſpenſations of providence without admitting, that God leaves evil men and evil ſpirits to themſelves to commit wickedneſs, as far as he intends to educe good from it, but no further. They are influenced wholly by a deſire of gratifying their own vile affections, and are, therefore, juſtly condemned: He, in omniſcience and infinite wiſdom, purpoſing moſt extenſive and durable 25 And Joſeph took an oath of the children of Iſrael, ſaying, God will ſurely viſit you, and ye ſhall carry up my bones from hence.

26 So Joſeph died, being an hundred and ten years old: and they embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin in Egypt.

good, is worthy of all adoration, and praiſe on that account.

V. 22. An hundred and ten years.] Joſeph ſurvived Jacob 53 or 54 years, and probably continued in authority to the laſt.

V. 23. Upon Joſeph's knees.] Expreſſing his affection for them, and pleaſure in them.

V. 25. Carry up, &c.] Joſeph did this in faith, (Heb. xi. 22:) He fully expected that the promiſe of God would be verified; and deſired to have his lot beyond the grave with the Iſraelites, and not with the Egyptians.

V. 26. In a coffin, &c.] This circumſtance would keep alive the expectation of a ſpeedy departure from Egypt, and preſerve Canaan continually in their mind. It would alſo attach Joſeph's poſterity to their brethren, and tend to prevent them from incorporating with the Egyptians.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Though our pious friends have lived to a good old age, and we are confident they are gone to glory; yet we may well regret our own loſs, and pay reſpect to their memory by lamenting for them: nor does grace deſtroy, but purify, moderate, and regulate, natural affection. Others beſides relatives have cauſe to mourn the death of eminent believers: for as their prayers, example, and influence were a public benefit, ſo their death is a public loſs. But alas! generally ſuch mournings are a mere compliment; and men are ſcarcely in earneſt about any thing, but the purſuits of ambition, wealth, or pleaſure. The attention paid to the dead, though commonly the effect of cuſtom or ſuperſtition, ſhould reſult from faith in the doctrine of the immortality of the ſoul, and the reſurrection of the body. Our deceaſed friends ſtill live, and we ſhall meet again: though ſeparated from the body, a re-union ſhall certainly take place. Therefore we commit the body, with decent reſpect, unto the ground, in ſure and certain hope of the reſurrection to eternal life of all true believers: and whatever our hopes or fears are, God is the only infallible Judge, who are and who are not true believers. We ought ſcrupulouſly to obſerve the laſt will and dying requeſts of our deceaſed friends; but much more conſciouſly to reverence the oath of God. However, in the moſt exact attention to ſuch neceſſary affairs, we ſhould conſult in what manner to do them, that we may give as little umbrage, and interfere with other duties as little, as poſſible. —There are many devices in the heart of man, but the counſel of the Lord ſhall ſtand: and whilſt men are often influenced by the worſt of motives; God, by means of them, effects his own moſt righteous purpoſes.—How guilt diſmays the heart in times of danger! it would be well indeed, if it put us upon as diligent and humble endeavours to obtain forgiveneſs from God; as it often does to appeaſe the diſpleaſure of man, and to avert temporal calamities. True religion will teach us, not only to forgive thoſe, who are conſcious of having injured us, and whom we have in our power; but effectually, by kind actions as well as words, to obviate their ſuſpicions, aſſure them of our forgiveneſs, and exhort them to ſeek pardon from him to whom vengeance belongs. But the kindeſt friends, and the moſt durable of our earthly comforts muſt die: let us then look off even from Joſeph that we may look unto Jeſus, who ever liveth to bleſs thoſe, who truſt in him: notwithſtanding former crimes, and preſent unbelieving injurious ſuſpicions, he acknowledges every humble ſinner, who ſupplicates his mercy, as his brother; as ſuch he will comfort his heart, provide for his wants, and receive him to glory. To him let us ſeek, on him rely, and to him ſubmit; and when we come to die, give him charge of both ſoul and body: and we ſhall find him faithful and able to keep that, which is committed to him, until the judgment day.

THE

THE SECOND BOOK OF MOSES,

CALLED

EXODUS.

As the Book of Geneſis contained the Hiſtory of the Creation of the World; ſo this Book of Exodus relates to the formation of Iſrael into a Church and Nation: And as we have hitherto ſeen true Religion exemplified in domeſtic Life; ſo now we begin to trace it's effects upon the great concerns of Kingdoms and Nations.—The Greek Tranſlators call the Book EXODUS, which ſignifies, the Departure; Becauſe the grand event recorded in it is the departure of Iſrael from Egypt and Egyptian bondage, which took place about 145 years after the death of Joſeph.—A great part of the book is hiſtorical, concerning Iſrael and the Egyptians in general, and Moſes himſelf in particular: but it contains alſo the delivery of the Moral Law from Mount Sinai, and the inſtitution of part of the Ceremonial Law; the covenant made with Iſrael, and the worſhip of God inſtituted amongſt them: And it is eſpecially remarkable for being more replete with Types and Shadows of good things to come, than any other Book in the Scripture.

NOTES.

CHAP. I.] V. 7. Were fruitful, &c.] Theſe expreſſions are taken from the immenſely rapid increaſe of inſects, and of the inhabitants of the waters. It is computed that the numbers of the Iſraelites were doubled every fourteen years, from their going down into Egypt until the Exodus.—Thus their numbers became ſo great, that they were very formidable to the Egyptians.

V. 8. Which knew not, &c.] This muſt have been many years after Joſeph's death, perhaps not leſs than 60. Whether this king ſprang from another family, or were a deſcendant of Joſeph's friend; having no perſonal knowledge of him, he had no regard to his memory, eſteem for his excellency, or ſenſe of the benefits Egypt had received from him: and therefore, he preferred his ſuppoſed political the people of the children of Iſrael are more and mightier than we.

10 Come on, let us deal wiſely with them: leſt they multiply, and it come to paſs, that when there falleth out any war, they join alſo unto our enemies and fight againſt us, and ſo get them up out of the land.

11 Therefore they did ſet over them taſk-maſters to afflict them with their burdens. And they built for Pharaoh treaſure-cities, Pithom and Raamſes.

12 But the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew. And they were grieved becauſe of the children of Iſrael.

13 And the Egyptians made the children of Iſrael to ſerve with rigour.

14 And they made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of ſervice in the field: all their ſervice wherein they made them ſerve, was with rigour.

15 And the king of Egypt ſpake to the Hebrew midwives, (of which the name of one one was Shiphrah, and the name of the other Puah:)

16 And he ſaid, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and ſee them upon the ſtools; if it be a ſon, then ye ſhall kill him, but if it be a daughter, then ſhe ſhall live.

17 But the midwives feared God, and did not as the king of Egypt commanded them, but ſaved the men-children alive.

18 And the king of Egypt called for the midwives, and ſaid unto them, Why have ye done political intereſts, to the claims of honour and gratitude, after the too general maxims of kings and rulers.

V. 9. More, &c.] Pharaoh took occaſion, from the great increaſe of the Iſraelites compared with that of the Egyptians, to excite ſuſpicions of them, and thus to cover his intentions of enſlaving them.—As if he had ſaid, 'if 'we would deal with them, we muſt begin directly, or 'they will be too powerful.' For when he afterwards expreſſed his apprehenſion, leſt they ſhould "get them up "out of the land," he diſcovered that he feared nothing but the loſs of an opportunity of ſubjugating them, and of enriching himſelf by their labours.—We have ſome intimations that, about this time, the Iſraelites began to comply with the idolatry of the Egyptians, for which they were thus chaſtiſed by them. (Joſhua xxiv. 14. Ezek. xx. 7, 8. xxiii. 8.)

V. 11. Taſk-maſters, &c.] Theſe labours ſeem to have been exacted of the Iſraelites as a tax, but in that degree which reduced them to a ſtate of ſlavery. The taſk-maſters were Egyptians, by public authority placed over them, to enforce theſe iniquitous exactions.—By this policy the Egyptians intended, not only to enrich themſelves, but to break the ſpirits of the Iſraelites, that they might not affect liberty, or aſpire after dominion; and alſo to prevent their too rapid increaſe, by embittering their domeſtic life.—The cities which they builded, were either intended, (after the pattern Joſeph had ſet them,) for granaries to lay up corn in ſtore againſt a year of ſcarcity, or they were fortified places.—They were however uſeful works, and as Iſrael's toil ſaved both the labour and the purſes of the Egyptians, we may be ſure they would favour the oppreſſion.

V. 12. And they were grieved, &c.] It exceedingly chagrined the Egyptians to find their ſchemes prove abortive, and excited alarms in their minds, leſt in proceſs of time the Iſraelites ſhould reſent and revenge the inhuman treatment they had received. Thus Egypt's perſecution could not prevent Iſrael's increaſe, but Iſrael's increaſe could diſturb Egypt's comfort: Such is the warfare betwixt the ſeed of the woman, and the ſeed of the ſerpent.

V. 14. In the field.] Or in cultivating their land.—They treated them with rigour, both in the exceſs of their labours, and the ſeverity of their puniſhments. Many have ſuppoſed, that, beſides the uſeful works here mentioned, the Iſraelites were employed in building thoſe enormous piles called the pyramids; which remain to this day, and probably will continue till the end of the world; monuments, not ſo much of the greatneſs and wiſdom, as of the folly, caprice, exorbitant power, and cruel tyranny of the monarchs who projected them. It cannot indeed be denied, that the ſkill, by which they were planned, equals the vaſtneſs of the labour with which they were completed: but then, it is evident that they never could be uſeful, in any degree adequate to the toil and expence with which they were erected.—This ſuppoſition, however, is entirely groundleſs: for the Iſraelites were employed in making bricks; while it is well known that the pyramids were built of hewn ſtone.—But whatever were the works, in which the Iſraelites were compelled to ſerve; the Egyptians could give as good reaſons for thus cruelly oppreſſing the Iſraelites, as any at this day can urge in favour of the ſlave trade: the ſum of which arguments is as follows: 'Without this oppreſſion we cannot amaſs ſuch large 'eſtates, nor gratify our ſenſual appetites with ſuch re-'fined exceſs.'

V. 15. Hebrew, &c.] It ſeems moſt natural to ſuppoſe theſe midwives, who thus feared God, to have been Hebrew women, and not Egyptians appointed to this office, as ſome have conjectured. Pharaoh might think that he could awe or bribe them into compliance, though in ſo inhuman and treacherous a conduct to their own nation: for princes are not often refuſed in ſuch caſes. We may conſider theſe two as the chief of the midwives, whoſe conduct would influence that of the others; for there muſt have been many.

V. 16. If it be a daughter, &c.] Pharaoh and his ſervants did not fear female ſlaves, however numerous, but accounted them their riches.

done this thing, and have ſaved the men-children alive?

19 And the midwives ſaid unto Pharaoh, becauſe the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women: for they are lively, and are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them.

20 Therefore God dealt well with the midwives: and the people multiplied and waxed very mighty.

21 And it came to paſs, becauſe the midwives feared God, that he made them houſes.

22 And Pharaoh charged all his people, ſaying, Every ſon that is born ye ſhall caſt into the river, and every daughter ye ſhall ſave alive.

V. 19. Are lively, &c.] Through the peculiar bleſſing of God, we may ſuppoſe, that this was generally the caſe; yet not ſo but that the midwives might have had many opportunities of murdering the infants, had they been ſo diſpoſed. Provided we do not ſpeak falſehood; the ſtricteſt veracity does not at all times require us to ſpeak all we know, though our ſilence ſhould lead men into error; if ſuch error be no injury to them, or to others: and ſilence muſt ſtill more evidently be allowable; when it prevents the commiſſion of ſin.—When, however, perſons act uprightly in the fear of God, though there be infirmity mixed with it, the Lord graciouſly pardons the infirmity, and recompenſes the good intention.

V. 21. Made them houſes, &c.] God rewarded their concurrence in the increaſe and proſperity of Iſrael, by the increaſe and proſperity of their own families.

V. 22. Pharaoh charged, &c.] Probably Pharaoh propoſed conſiderable rewards for ſuch a ſervice. Thus the land would be filled with mercenary informers and murderers: numbers of infants would doubtleſs be ſlain in the arms, and before the eyes of their diſtreſſed and almoſt diſtracted mothers: and had not he, who ſays to the ſwelling ocean, "Hitherto ſhalt thou go and no further," undertaken for the increaſe of Iſrael, they muſt have been deſolated.—Pharaoh at this time, as Herod long after, proved his relation to that great dragon, who ſought to deſtroy the man-child as ſoon as it was born. (Rev. xii. 4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The very titles of theſe two firſt books remind us, that the hiſtory of man is little more than a narrative of his beginning, and of his departure. Thus one generation is ſwept away after another, and nothing remains except the names of a very few, and ſome of them covered with infamy. Happy they, whoſe names are written in the Book of Life; and enrolled there as true Iſraelites, and heirs of Heaven!—How ſoon may the ſun of proſperity be darkened by the deepeſt cloud of adverſity! and the place of our refuge become the ſcene of our miſery! our beſt friends ſucceeded by enemies, and our beſt ſervices repaid with ingratitude! We ſhould therefore truſt the Lord alone: for as nothing can haſten the accompliſhment of his purpoſe before the appointed time; ſo nothing can retard it when that ſeaſon arrives.—For the ſpace of above 200 years, whilſt Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, and their families, had lived at liberty, in peace, and in conſiderable proſperity and affluence, they were only increaſed to 70 perſons: but afterwards in about the ſame number of years, under much oppreſſion and cruel bondage, they multiplied into a large nation: nor did their moſt rapid increaſe commence till after the death of Joſeph, their chief friend; for God will ſecure to himſelf the glory of fulfilling his own promiſes. Thus was the Chriſtian church more eſpecially increaſed after the death of Jeſus; and thus hath vital religion, in all ages, moſt proſpered under the preſſure of ſevere perſecutions. By this the Lord covers his enemies with confuſion as with a cloke, and teaches his people not to fear them, who kill the body and after that have no more that they can do.—It is an old practice of the accuſer of the brethren and his inſtruments, to vindicate their cruel treatment of God's people, by aſperſing their characters, pretending to ſuſpect them of bad deſigns, or averring that their increaſe would be dangerous to the ſtate: They therefore ſhould endeavour, by well-doing and patient ſuffering, to confute ſuch calumnies, and prove themſelves quiet and uſeful members of ſociety. But though we may ſuffer unjuſtly from man, yet God is juſt in all that he inflicts upon us by their inſtrumentality: and it is a ſingular favour to be kept from ſinful compliances or conformity to the world, though by ſharp corrections.—That which politicians call acting wiſely, the word of God oft denominates deceit, injuſtice, cruelty, yea folly, for ſuch wiſdom is earthly, ſenſual, deviliſh, and ſuch wiſe perſons are eventually taken in their own craftineſs.—There is no degree of treachery and inhumanity, to which the ſpirit of perſecution will not prompt; and they who are actuated by it, will ſeldom fail of finding inſtruments, as deſtitute of honour and conſcience as themſelves.—But if they meet with thoſe, who truly fear God, neither bribes, nor terrors, will prevail upon them to ſin againſt him: and God will plead their cauſe, and recompenſe their conſcientious diſobedience to the unlawful commands of men.—But as we ſee in this hiſtory, the church of God groaning under perſecution; ſo we may, by viewing the object in another light, ſee the miſerable condition of Satan's wretched bond-ſlaves; who are ſo enſlaved to their luſts that they never can deliver themſelves, however miſerable or affrighted, until the Lord ſend them redemption by his word and powerful grace. Nor ſhould we here forget, that this enemy, who by Pharaoh aimed to deſtroy the church in its very infancy, is equally buſy to ſtifle the firſt riſings of ſerious reflections in the heart of man; and thence to take away the ſeed of the word, leſt we ſhould believe and be ſaved; leſt theſe feeble beginnings ſhould increaſe, and we grow ſtrong enough to renounce his ſervice.—Let them therefore, who would eſcape, take earneſt heed to the things which they hear, be afraid of ſinning againſt the teſtimony of their conſciences, and cry fervently to the Lord for deliverance without delay, and with perſevering conſtancy.

2 And the woman conceived, and bare a ſon: and when ſhe ſaw him that he was a goodly child, ſhe hid him three months.

3 And when ſhe could not longer hide him, ſhe took for him an ark of bulruſhes, and daubed it with ſlime and with pitch, and put the child therein; and ſhe laid it in the flags by the river's brink.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 2. Bare a ſon, &c.] Miriam, Moſes' ſiſter, muſt have been at leaſt ten years older than he, as it is evident from the hiſtory of this chapter. Aaron was three years older than Moſes. It does not appear that Amram and Jochebed, (vi. 20,) had any difficulty in preſerving the life of Aaron; whence we may infer, that the laſt bloody edict was not then enacted. Now Aaron was born 83 years before the Exodus, and Joſeph died about 145 years before that event: therefore the edict could not be paſſed leſs than 62 years after the death of Joſeph. But how long that prince, who knew not Joſeph, had reigned before that edict was made is not known.—Moſes when born appeared to be a goodly child: The notice taken of this circumſtance in ſeveral places, indicates that ſomething extraordinary was obſerved in the child, which was conſidered as an intimation of his future greatneſs. (Acts vii. 26. Heb. xi. 23.) His mother therefore hid him three months; which the Apoſtle informs was done in faith. Either ſhe had ſome peculiar aſſurance given of his preſervation, or in general believing the promiſes of deliverance to Iſrael, ſhe was encouraged to conceal her infant in dependence upon God, though perhaps at the hazard of her own life.

V. 3. She could, &c.] Having probably had ſome intimation that ſhe was diſcovered, and expecting that the executioners would come and murder him in her houſe and before her eyes.—She took for him an ark, or a ſmall baſket: this alſo ſhe did in faith; not yet deſpairing of his preſervation, but expecting ſome providential interpoſition in his behalf; under the ſecret guidance of the Lord ſhe uſed this unlikely expedient, as the beſt ſhe could do.—This ſhe put in the flags, and in this ſituation the infant muſt ſoon have periſhed by the cold, or the water, or by the crocodiles with which that river abounds, had not relief been ſpeedily afforded.

V. 4. His ſiſter, &c.] Doubtleſs by her mother's orders, to watch what would become of the child; perhaps intending to have taken him home again in the evening, if nothing had intervened; and to have carried him out again in the morning, that if ſought after he might not have been found.

V. 5. And the daughter, &c.] Had any other perſons except the king's daughter and attendants found the child, they would not have dared to have preſerved its life, had they been ſo diſpoſed; but God ſecretly influenced her to walk that way at that criſis: And his providence is to be noticed in ſuch apparently minute events, on which the moſt important conſequences depend; for even the very hairs of our heads are all numbered.

V. 8. Said to her, Go.] Here again we muſt notice the ſecret interpoſition of God; for had humanity induced her to bring up the infant, it might have been expected, that ſhe would have employed an Egyptian woman to nurſe it;

11 And it came to pass in those days, when Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their burdens: and he spied an Egyptian smiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren.

12 And he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand.

13 And when he went out the second day, behold, two men of the Hebrews strove together: and he said to him that did the wrong, Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow?

14 And he said; Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? Intendest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian? And Moses feared, and said, Surely this thing is known.

15 Now when Pharaoh heard this thing, he sought to slay Moses. But Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of Midian: and he sat down by a well.

16 Now the priest of Midian had seven daughters: and they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their father's flock.

17 And the shepherds came and drove them away: but Moses stood up and helped them, and watered their flock.

18 And when they came to Reuel their father, he said, How is it that you are come so soon to day?

19 And they said, An Egyptian delivered us out of the hand of the shepherds, and also drew water enough for us, and watered the flock.

it: but he in whose hand is every human heart, ordered it otherwise.

V. 10. He became her son, &c.] Moses was adopted, educated, and provided for as the son of Pharaoh's daughter. Tradition reports that she was his only child, and had no offspring of her own, and that Moses was looked upon as presumptive heir to the crown.—We know however from better authority, that "he was learned in all the wisdom "of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in "deeds." He was certainly much trusted and employed, and there acquired those accomplishments, which were afterwards requisite for him, in the important services of standing before Pharaoh, and governing Israel.

V. 11. Was grown.] Moses at this time was forty years of age. (Acts vii. 23.) Before this we may suppose that he lived as an Egyptian, and such a life, as men generally do in those high stations, without much regarding his oppressed brethren. But then he went out to his brethren, with deliberate purpose of renouncing the honours, wealth, and pleasures of his rank amongst the Egpytians, to cast his lot among Abraham's seed, and to participate in their privileges, especially their relation to the promised Saviour; for the sake of which he was willing to share in the reproach and affliction, which they endured as the people of God. (Heb. xi. 24—26.) We may suppose that his mother had informed him of his real descent, and he would naturally feel some feeble attachment to his people: But these effects proceeded from a more powerful cause: by the grace of God he was partaker of that faith which overcomes the world; and supremely valuing the blessings of the new covenant through the Redeemer, he was willing not only to risk, but to renounce and suffer all for his sake; assured that Israel was the people of God, and that the promises made to them would certainly be accomplished. He had also some indubitable intimations that he was appointed to deliver Israel; and he went out to seek an opportunity of so doing: perhaps he intended openly to join their interests, and expected that they would welcome him amongst them, and concur with him in suitable measures.

V. 12. He slew, &c.] Moses considered himself as acting under a divine commission, in defence of the oppressed, and executing just punishment on the oppressor; and he supposed that the Israelites would have understood the same: but their spirits were sunk, their dispositions servile, and faith and hope almost extinguished amongst them.

V. 14. Feared, &c.] Moses having irritated the Egyptians against him, by thus joining the interests and espousing the cause of Israel, and exciting them to revolt; and finding that the Hebrews were not disposed to concur with him, deemed his only security to lie in flight. Perhaps he was too hasty both in the attempt, and in leaving the country; if, however he feared on this occasion, he did not afterwards fear the wrath of the king.—Thus the deliverance of Israel was delayed forty years, because they rejected their deliverer: in the mean time Egypt filled up, and Canaan was filling up, the measure of their iniquities; the Israelites were still increasing; and Moses was learning to endure hardship, to exercise faith, patience, and meekness, and to walk with God in the lowly and retired life of a shepherd.

V. 16. Priest of Midian.] Or prince. Probably Reuel was both priest and prince of some small district upon the eastern shore of the Red Sea; and still retained amongst his people some knowledge of the true God, and regard to his worship.

V. 17. The shepherds, &c.] Perhaps these were the servants of some other neighbouring person, who was rich in flocks and herds. The scarcity of water in those hot and sandy regions gave occasion to these contentions.

20 And he ſaid unto his daughters, And where is he? Why is it that ye have left the man? Call him that he may eat bread.

21 And Moſes was content to dwell with the man: and he gave Moſes Zipporah his daughter.

22 And ſhe bare him a ſon, and he called his name Gerſhom: for he ſaid, I have been a ſtranger in a ſtrange land.

23 And it came to paſs in proceſs of time, that the king of Egypt died, and the children of Iſrael ſighed by reaſon of the bondage, and they cried; and their cry came up unto God, by reaſon of the bondage.

24 And God heard their groaning, and God remembered his covenant with Abraham, with Iſaac, and with Jacob.

25 And God looked upon the children of Iſrael, and God had reſpect unto them.

V. 21. Moſes was content, &c.] This was a rare example of one brought up, as Moſes had been, ſubmitting chearfully to ſo laborious a buſineſs, and to be a ſervant alſo in that employment! yet without doubt theſe forty years were the happieſt of his life.

V. 22. Gerſhom.] That is a ſtranger.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We ſhould take occaſion from reading of the cruel ſcenes, which theſe Hebrew parents witneſſed, and the bitter anxieties which they felt, to be thankful that we can bring up our children with ſecurity and comfort. Still however our offſpring are expoſed to ſo many perils, that the tender heart of a tender parent muſt often heave with anxious ſighs about them: except as we are enabled by the prayer of faith to commit them to the care of the Almighty; and uſe all means for their welfare, temporal and ſpiritual, in dependence upon his providence and grace. Then indeed, we ſhall be prepared for every event: if the Lord has any ſervice for them to perform for him, he will preſerve their lives, though in the midſt of dangers; and ſurely every chriſtian parent would rather reſign the deareſt infant to death, than wiſh it to live wicked, miſchievous, and miſerable. And methinks our gracious God ſays to the believer, when preſenting his infant offſpring to him in baptiſm, or pouring out his prayers in its behalf, take home this child, and bring it up for me, and I will pay thee thy wages: in obedience to his command, and in expectation of his bleſſing, let us bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and chearfully leave the event with him.—Even amongſt the blood-thirſty Egyptians we meet with a beautiful example of humanity, which will riſe up in judgment againſt, and condemn the conduct of, numbers who live under the light of revelation, and are called chriſtians; but who are ſo far from compaſſionating the children of others, that they are indolently and negligently cruel to their own offſpring.—They, who carefully watch the conduct of God's providence, will experience many ſignal interpoſitions in their favour; which will excite their admiration and gratitude, ſtrengthen their faith, and encourage their hope for the future, and thus well recompenſe their attention. They ſhall find their wants ſupplied, perhaps even from their very enemies; their ſharpeſt trials end moſt comfortably; and God taking care in his providence to qualify them and their's for whatever ſervice, or ſituations he intends them. He very often furniſhes the minds of thoſe, whom he means to employ, with ſuch acquiſitions of knowledge, whilſt they are ignorant and careleſs about religion, as they will have much uſe for afterwards, but would not have attended to, had they previouſly minded the one thing needful.—What a powerful principle is the faith, which the word of God inſiſts upon? How it overcomes the love of the World, and the fear of the croſs, even when they oppoſe it with their utmoſt force! The favour of God, an intereſt in Chriſt, and an inheritance amongſt his people, are the pre-eminent objects of every believer's deſire: this joined to the love of Chriſt, and attachment to his cauſe, prepares them for making every required ſacrifice: and that faith, which refuſes to do ſo is not genuine. But they, who boldly enter upon ſervices for God, muſt not only expect fierce oppoſition from enemies, but great diſcouragement from the lukewarmneſs, contempt, cowardice, and ingratitude of the profeſſed ſervants of God. And whilſt the contentions amongſt brethren diſgrace and weaken the common cauſe of religion; he that would ſet them at one again, however gently, muſt expect to be reproached as taking too much upon him; perhaps by both parties, but aſſuredly by the party that is moſt in the wrong, which is always moſt impatient of controul. Yet theſe diſappointments help to correct the forwardneſs and ſelf-ſufficiency of haſty zeal, and to prepare men for their work in its due ſeaſon. But our impatience is apt to interpret delays as denials, and to yield to diſcouragement when we ſhould only be humbled; and from raſh impetuoſity to ſink into unbelieving negligence. And perhaps it requires ſtronger faith to be contented in obſcurity and neglect, chearfully to labour without any proſpect of applauſe, and patiently to prepare and wait for future opportunities of ſervice without deſpondency; than to face danger, out-brave reproach, and ſuffer perſecution in ſome eminent ſphere of uſefulneſs. But the providence of God will find a refuge, and raiſe up friends, for his people; communion with him, will ſweeten every ſolitude, and trial; and it is our wiſdom to inure ourſelves to ſelf-denial, that we may be fit for whatever is before us. To aſſiſt the weak and vindicate the oppreſſed, to ſhew kindneſs and uſe hoſpitality, and requite thoſe who have been ſerviceable to us, are always becoming: nor is modeſt diligence, in any buſineſs, a diſgrace to the daughters either of a prince, or a prieſt.—When aſſiſtance appears to us moſt

NOW Moſes kept the flock of Jethro his father in law, the prieſt of Midian: and he led the flock to the back-ſide of the deſert, and came to the mountain of God, even to Horeb.

2 And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midſt of a buſh: and he looked, and behold, the buſh burned with fire, and the buſh was not conſumed.

3 And Moſes ſaid, I will now turn aſide, and ſee this great ſight, why the buſh is not burnt.

4 And when the LORD ſaw that he turned aſide to ſee, God called unto him out of the midſt of the buſh, and ſaid, Moſes, Moſes. And he ſaid, Here am I.

5 And he ſaid, Draw not nigh hither: put off thy ſhoes from off thy feet, for the place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground.

diſtant, and deliverance moſt improbable, matters are frequently faſt ripening for them: to God all things are eaſy and his whole plan lies before him. He remembers his holy covenant; and for the purpoſes of his own glory, he will appear for his people notwithſtanding their ſins. Even their groans, extorted by oppreſſion, have a ſhare of his compaſſionate attention; and in the darkeſt night of affliction, when they begin to cry to him, the day of deliverance will ſpeedily dawn. Finally, if Satan's work ceaſes not for want of a ſucceſſion of inſtruments; the Lord will certainly furniſh labourers for his harveſt, in all ages unto the end of the world.

NOTES.

CHAP. III.] V. 1. Jethro.] It is not certain whether Jethro be the ſame perſon as Reuel mentioned in the former chapter, or his ſon and Moſes' brother in law; which the word alſo ſignifies: The Septuagint makes them to be the ſame perſon, uſing the two names indiſcriminately.—Horeb was called "the mountain of God," by way of anticipation; for Moſes wrote for thoſe, who knew it by that title after the law was there given.—Sinai and Horeb are ſuppoſed to be two ſummits of a mountain, which had the ſame baſe.

V. 2. The angel, &c.] This angel is afterwards called Jehovah; "God called to him out of the midſt of the "buſh;" and the ſame perſon ſays, I AM THAT I AM. With what propriety can this kind of phraſeology be uſed, in a revelation expreſſly intended to inſtruct men in the knowledge and worſhip of the true God, and to withdraw them from idolatry of every kind; if we allow not the doctrine of the coequality and deity of the Son of God; and that he is the ſpeaker in this place?—Fire is a ſcriptural emblem of the divine holineſs and juſtice; of that vengeance, which in his righteous indignation God inflicts on ſinners; of the afflictions and trials, by which he proves and purifies his people, whether immediately from himſelf, or by inſtruments; and even of that baptiſm of the Holy Ghoſt, by which the droſs of ſinful affections is conſumed, and the ſoul transformed into his own nature and image.—This fire was ſeen in a buſh, and not in a cedar. A buſh is mean, and uſeleſs except for fuel, but eaſily and ſpeedily burnt: yet the buſh was not conſumed. The emblem was immediately intended to deſcribe the ſtate of Iſrael in Egypt, their meanneſs and unworthineſs, their extreme affliction, and their marvellous preſervation by the power and preſence of God. But Iſrael was in this a type of the Church expoſed to perſecution, and of a believer grievouſly haraſſed by temptations.

V. 4. Moſes, Moſes, &c.] We have not read of any appearance of the Lord, ſince Jacob's deſcent into Egypt above 200 years before.—Moſes, thus addreſſed by name, muſt have been as much ſurpriſed by what he heard, as by what he ſaw.

V. 5. Draw not nigh, &c.] Moſes might at a diſtance contemplate the object before him, for his inſtruction and encouragement, for which it was intended; but he muſt not gratify his curioſity by particular examination. Thus divine myſteries, reverently believed and meditated on, are profitable to our ſouls; but curiouſly and preſumptuouſly intruded into, they become the occaſion of our ſin and miſery.—He was directed to put off his ſhoes, as an external cuſtomary token of humble reverence; for that ſpot became holy ground by this viſion of the Almighty, and was thus to be regarded by him. (Gen. xxviii. 16, 17. Eccleſ. v. 1. Joſh. v. 13—15.)

V. 6. I am the God, &c.] The Lord was the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, being the object of their worſhip, confidence, love, and obedience; and their ſalvation, portion, and everlaſting recompence. We are conſtituted of body and ſoul, and if the Lord be our God, he ſtands engaged to bleſs both body and ſoul for ever; which implies that the ſoul enters at death upon immortal felicity; and that the body ſhall riſe again to 7 And the LORD said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry, by reason of their task-masters: for I know their sorrows.

8 And I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land, unto a good land, and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey; unto the place of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites.

9 Now therefore behold, the cry of the children of Israel is come unto me: and I have also seen the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them.

10 Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt.

11 And Moses said unto God, Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?

12 And he said, Certainly I will be with thee; and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee: when thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain.

13 And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is his name? What shall I say unto them?

14 And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: And he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you.

share this felicity. (Matt. xxii. 31, 32.) This declaration was intended to remind the Israelites of the promises made to their fathers, especially with reference to the land of Canaan.

V. 7. I have surely seen.] Or, Seeing I have seen: that is, I have seen with attention and compassion, "the "afflictions of my people."—Notwithstanding the ignorance, idolatry, and vice, which prevailed amongst the Israelites: yet the Lord acknowledged them as his people, because of their relation to Abraham, because they constituted the visible Church, and because there was a remnant of true Israelites amongst them.—The severity of their task-masters extorted their bitter cries, which were in most of them those of distress, not of faith; the prayer of nature, not of grace: Yet the Lord noticed and pitied their sorrows.—Nature seeks deliverance from suffering, grace wrestles for deliverance from sin.—Perhaps they almost universally despaired of deliverance; and Moses having been forty years a shepherd, expected and desired no other than to live and die in that situation, and had given up all thoughts of delivering Israel; yet now the very time was come!

V. 8. I am come down, &c.] This was spoken after the manner of men, and expressed with energy the intent of God's appearance to Moses.

V. 11. Who am I, &c?] Formerly Moses deemed himself competent to this work, and set himself to it, perhaps too hastily: now, when he was unspeakably better qualified with wisdom, experience, patience, meekness, stedfastness, humility, and piety; and was without competition the most fit person on earth for it, he was become consciously insufficient. This was in a great measure the effect of increasing knowledge of God, and of himself: But there was also a deep sense of the vast difficulty of the business, not without some culpable fear of Pharaoh and the Egyptians, and of contempt and opposition from Israel. Formerly self-confidence mingled with, and assumed the appearance of, strong faith and great zeal: now some degree of sinful distrust of God crept in under the garb of deep humility, and associated with it; and induced him timidly to shift, as well as humbly to decline, the important service: so very defective are the strongest graces, and the best duties of the most eminent saints!

V. 12. Certainly I will be, &c.] All objections, expressed or implied, were thus answered in one word. 'As I send thee, I will certainly go with thee; and then 'all thy insufficiency, and all possible difficulties can form 'no hindrance at all.'—The token annexed was made, not to sense, but to faith; and therefore the sign was consequent to the event confirmed by it: as if God had said, 'I promise to meet thee and Israel at this mountain: 'this promise is thy assurance of success; depend on my 'power and faithfulness, and go fetch them forth nothing 'doubting.' Such a token is indeed no confirmation to an unbeliever; but faith gives God credit, and takes his promises of future blessings in prompt payment. (Isaiah vii. 14.)

V. 13. What is his name? &c.] Moses had seen enough in Egypt, forty years before, to convince him of Israel's ignorance and ungodliness; and he knew that nature's progress in religious concerns is from bad to worse. He was therefore apprehensive, that they would scarcely understand, much less believe him, when he spake to them of the God of their fathers. He had before been scornfully asked, "who made him a ruler, and a judge over "them?" and he had not his answer ready: but if he go at this time, he would have fuller instructions, and better authenticated credentials.

V. 14. I AM THAT I AM.] This name signifies 'I am he that exists,' and implies, self-existence, independence, unchangeableness, incomprehensibility, eternity, and consummate perfection. "I am, and there is none "else

15 And God ſaid moreover unto Moſes, Thus ſhalt thou ſay unto the children of Iſrael, the LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, hath ſent me unto you: this is my name for ever, and this is my memorial unto all generations.

16 Go and gather the elders of Iſrael together, and ſay unto them, the LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, of Iſaac, and of Jacob, appeared unto me, ſaying, I have ſurely viſited you, and ſeen that which is done to you in Egypt.

17 And I have ſaid, I will bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt, unto the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebuſites, unto a land flowing with milk and honey.

18 And they ſhall hearken to thy voice: and thou ſhalt come, thou and the elders of Iſrael, unto the king of Egypt, and you ſhall ſay unto him, The LORD God of the Hebrews hath met with us; and now let us go, (we beſeech thee,) three days journey into the wilderneſs, that we may ſacrifice to the LORD our God.

19 And I am ſure that the king of Egypt will not let you go, no, not by a mighty hand.

20 And I will ſtretch out my hand, and ſmite Egypt with all my wonders which I will do in the midſt thereof: and after that he will let you go.

21 And I will give this people favour in the ſight of the Egyptians: and it ſhall come to paſs, that when ye go, ye ſhall not go empty.

"elſe beſide me." All elſe have their being from God, and are entirely dependent on him. There is a majeſtic ſimplicity, and an expreſſive dignity in this language, which diſgraces beneath contempt the high ſounding pompous titles, which mortals have been proud to arrogate to themſelves.—JEHOVAH, (a name of ſimilar ſignification,) thus diſtinguiſhes himſelf from the idols of the nations, which are nothing in the world; and from all creatures, which have only a derived, dependent, mutable, exiſtence, in him, and from him: thus he propoſes himſelf as the only object of his people's worſhip, the ſure foundation of their hopes, and the all-ſufficient fountain of their felicity. I AM THAT I AM. Not I was, but I am, and will be. With him paſt, preſent, and to come are all one. Let us not forget him, whom the Apoſtle declares to be, "the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever:" (Heb. xiii. 8;) whom another Apoſtle introduces ſaying, I am Alpha, and Omega, the firſt, and the laſt, (Rev. i. 8—11—17;) and who, dwelling in human fleſh ſaid, with a noble diſregard to the rules of human language, "Before "Abraham was I AM." (John vii. 58:) Which evident aſſumption of this title, I AM THAT I AM, the unbelieving Jews at that day fully underſtood, and for it attempted to ſtone him; though modern unbelievers cannot, or will not perceive it. There is no doubt, however, but the ſpeaker is the ſame in both places; "for "no man hath ſeen God, at any time, the only begotten "Son, who is in the boſom of the Father, he hath declared "him," (John i. 18.) When the Lord ſubjoined "I "AM hath ſent me unto you," it was intended to give authority to the meſſage, and to enſure the accompliſhment of its intention, by his incomprehenſible power and perfection.

V. 15. The Lord God of, &c.] This title would remind the Iſraelites of his relation to them as the ſeed of Abraham, and of his engagements to them.—The Lord had before declared his name, as ſignifying eternal ſelf-exiſtence; and he here adds his covenant relation to the Seed of Abraham, as the perpetual memorial of his former mercies, and engagements of future bleſſings to his Church. The moſt uſeful knowledge of God is derived from conſidering his works, and his promiſes.—He therefore delights more in being remembered, by the manifeſted glories of his love to his Church, than by the eſſential glories of his nature.

V. 18. They ſhall hearken, &c.] Such a willingneſs to be delivered, as ſufficed to induce them to uſe the means, encounter the difficulties, and face the dangers, requiſite for that purpoſe, was ſo contrary to Iſrael's diſpirited and deſponding frame of mind, that it could only be effected by the powerful influence of God upon their hearts.

V. 19. No not, &c.] He, who engaged for Iſrael's willingneſs, warned Moſes of Pharaoh's obſtinate and final unwillingneſs, that he might know what to expect.

V. 20. Will let you go, &c.] Pharaoh reluctantly conſented, when under the ſmart of God's judgments and the terror of imminent deſtruction: though he retracted that conſent, and periſhed in oppoſing Iſrael's departure.

V. 21, 22.] The Lord thus declared his power over the human heart, which by his providential diſpenſations, and by unperceived influence, he can diſpoſe as he pleaſe: The circumſtances, in which the Egyptians were placed, were over-ruled to induce multitudes of them to favour Iſrael; whilſt others were thereby hardened to their deſtruction.—The Iſraelites were directed to borrow, or to aſk, of the Egyptians, their richeſt furniture and ornaments: and, he, who is the great proprietor of all things, and giveth to all men as he pleaſes, ſeeing the Egyptians enriched by oppreſſing the Iſraelites; thus conſtrained them to refund, and to pay them the wages which their labour juſtly deſerved.—A great part of this gold and ſilver was uſed in building and furniſhing the tabernacle.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

pointments, they may be ſure that it is in wiſdom and faithfulneſs; and that when they are ripe for the bleſſings for which they wait, and the beſt time is come, they ſhall be richly recompenſed: but ſuch is the human heart, that the beſt of men generally need preparing, by a long courſe of humiliating diſcipline, for behaving in proſperity in a manner honourable to God and religion. It is therefore "good that a man ſhould both hope, and quietly wait for "the Salvation of the Lord:" (Lam. iii. 26.) Quietly and patiently, but not ſlothfully: for the Lord always requires his ſervants to be employed, and meets them at their employments; and the meaneſt honeſt labour is more reputable to the greateſt characters, than indolence and inactivity.—The diſcoveries of himſelf, which God vouchſafes us in his holy word and in his works, are to be regarded with reverent attention, at an equal diſtance from contemptuous indifference and bold curioſity.—Whatever ſtands in relation to God, is conſecrated, and made holy, and muſt be thus regarded by us: and though bodily exerciſe profiteth little; yet it is proper to expreſs our inward reverence and adoration by ſuch external tokens as are cuſtomary and ſignificant: ſuch a decent exterior behaviour may be hypocritical; but the neglect of it betrays a heart not properly impreſſed with awe of the majeſty and purity of God, nor ſuitably humbled under the ſenſe of meanneſs and unworthineſs. Nor does the condeſcending kindneſs of the Lord, the liberty which he allows, or the relations with which he honours us, tend to remove, but to increaſe this holy awe: in the very epiſtle in which we are bid "to come boldly to the throne "of grace," we are alſo commanded "to ſerve God with "reverence, and godly fear." (Heb. iv. 16. x. 19—22. xii. 28, 29.)—In accommodation to our infirmities our gracious God condeſcends to preach to our ſenſes, as well as to our underſtandings; and in this burning buſh he teaches us many an uſeful leſſon. We need not tremble for the Church of God in its loweſt eſtate, though it appear contemptible to the carnal eye, and ſeem ready to be conſumed by the fierce flames of perſecution; for the Lord is in the buſh, and it cannot be injured.—Though we ſhould ſympathize with, we need be apprehenſive for, the tempted and afflicted Chriſtian: he is in himſelf indeed a worthleſs buſh and on fire; but he is perfectly ſafe and highly honoured, for the Lord is with him. Never was buſh ſo honourable as this, in which Jehovah dwelt, though it was on fire: and ſince the Son of God dwelt in frail human nature, and paſſed through the hotteſt fire of Satan's temptations, of the world's hatred, and of the wrath of God for our ſins; we need not be apprehenſive about any poor burning buſh, in which Jehovah dwells, (2 Cor. vi. 8—10.) Whilſt men are ſtrengthened to maintain the conflict, and perſevere in the path of duty, they are not deſerted of God, whatever their fears or feelings may be: nor can the fire, however hot, conſume any thing but the droſs of remaining ſinful inclinations. But let the mere profeſſor tremble, who is exempt from temptation, oppoſition, or conflict, becauſe he ſwims with the ſtream and walks according to the courſe of this world: the fire is not there, becauſe the Lord is not there, and he is a worthleſs buſh and nothing better. Let the careleſs and preſumptuous ſinner tremble; for he is fit fuel for the fire of God's vengeance, which will burn for ever, but never conſume thoſe who finally ſink under it.—Oppreſſors alſo ſhould remember, that, however they may elude, or out-brave human juſtice, and however God may defer to take vengeance; yet that all their crimes are noted in his book; that their meaſure of iniquity is filling up; that they ſhall ſpeedily be made to diſgorge the prey, which they have ravenouſly devoured, and experience the vengeance of the Almighty: unleſs repentance and fruits meet for repentance prevent their doom, (Luke xix. 8, 9.) And let the oppreſſed recollect, that God is their peculiar patron, that he counts their ſighs and groans; and if he anſwer the mere cry of diſtreſs; "ſhall he not avenge his own elect, which "cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with "them? Yea he will avenge them ſpeedily:" (Luke xviii. 7.) But when he comes to avenge his people on their oppreſſors, will he find faith on the earth? Hope deferred maketh the heart ſick; and though faith will not totally fail, yet at ſuch times it will often be very feeble, and our expectations even of promiſed bleſſings very languid. Alas! that we ſhould ſo diſhonour his power, faithfulneſs, and love! But he is the great I AM; a thouſand years with him is but as one day: he remembers his holy covenant, he deals with his people according to the multitude of his mercies, he forgives the multitude of their tranſgreſſions, and ſends deliverance in it's appointed ſeaſon.—When God employs us in his work, he will certainly go with us; and "before honour is humility." Uſefulneſs is frequently delayed, or denied to inſtruments otherwiſe qualified, becauſe they poſſeſs not an humble ſpirit. Yet nothing good is unalloyed in man, and the moſt unaffected humility may prove an occaſion to irreſolution, or reluctance to the work which the Lord requires of us. They, who would be uſeful, muſt depend upon the Lord to make their endeavours acceptable to their brethren: (Rom. xv. 31.) eſpecially where ſuch benefits are intended, as require them to exert themſelves, to endure hardſhip, and to face danger, in ſecuring them: and, if we go in this dependence, God will ſecure our ſucceſs with ſome; though we muſt deliver our meſſage to all, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear. But in Pharaoh's tyranny, and Iſrael's oppreſſion, we ſee a picture of Satan's uſurpation, and the ſinner's miſerable and abject ſubmiſſion: however galled with the yoke, he ſtill drudges on, till the Lord ſends redemption: with the invitations of his goſpel, he communicates the teachings of his Spirit; thus men are made willing to ſeek and ſtrive for deliverance; conſequently Satan loſes his power to retain them; they come forth with all they have and are, and conſecrate all to the glory of God, and the ſervice of his Church.

2 And the LORD ſaid unto him, What is that in thine hand? And he ſaid, A rod.

3 And he ſaid, Caſt it on the ground; and he caſt it on the ground, and it became a ſerpent: and Moſes fled from before it.

4 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Put forth thine hand, and take it by the tail. And he put forth his hand and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV.] V. 1—5.] The Lord, in order to anſwer the unreaſonable objection which Moſes ſtarted, excited his attention, by demanding what he held in his hand, which was probably a common ſtick, or ſhepherd's crook; but it was thus conſecrated to the ſacred ſervice of God, to be the token of his preſence and operation: and therefore called the rod of God, (20.)—It was alſo the type of the preached Goſpel, which is called the rod of his power, (Pſalms, cx. 2.) Whence Moſes might learn that God can employ the meaneſt inſtruments in the moſt important ſervices.—This rod, when it was waved by the hand of Moſes, was a token to Iſrael of guidance, encouragement, and protection; but to Egypt, it became deſtructive as a ſerpent. Thus the word of God is to ſome a ſavour of life unto life, and to others of death unto death. (2 Cor. ii. 16.)—By this circumſtance, which Moſes alone witneſſed, the Lord directed the future performance of this miracle before Iſrael, and aſſured him that he ſhould thus convince them of his divine commiſſion.

V. 6, 7.] Theſe repeated miracles denoted that God could eaſily remove Iſrael's ſin, though they were unclean as the leprous hand; could employ Moſes's miniſtry, though it were feeble and unworthy in itſelf; and could by him inflict upon, and remove from, Egypt his plagues at pleaſure.

V. 10. I am not eloquent, &c.] Moſes ſuppoſed, that he ſhould want much eloquence, both to perſuade Iſrael, and plead before Pharaoh; and he objected, that in the Egyptian Court he had never been remarkable for eloquence, but rather defective in the gift of ready utterance: and that even ſince the Lord had called him, and he had underſtood that he was to be employed in this ſervice, he had experienced no alteration in this reſpect. We read, however, that he was mighty in word; and ſo was Paul, though he affected no eloquence, and was deemed by ſome "in ſpeech contemptible:" they could either of them ſpeak with energy, and to the purpoſe, though not with the enticing words and deluſive charms of human oratory.

V. 11. Who hath made, &c.] The Lord alone is the 12 Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou ſhalt ſay.

13 And he ſaid, O my Lord, ſend I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou wilt ſend.

14 And the anger of the LORD was kindled againſt Moſes, and he ſaid, Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can ſpeak well. And alſo behold, he cometh forth to meet thee: and when he ſeeth thee, he will be glad in his heart.

15 And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto him, and put words in his mouth: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye ſhall do.

16 And he ſhall be thy ſpokeſman unto the people: and he ſhall be, even he ſhall be to thee inſtead of a mouth, and thou ſhalt be to him inſtead of God.

17 And thou ſhalt take this rod in thine hand, wherewith thou ſhalt do ſigns.

18 And Moſes went and returned to Jethro his father in law, and ſaid unto him, Let me go, I pray thee, and return unto my brethren, which are in Egypt, and ſee whether they be yet alive. And Jethro ſaid to Moſes, Go in peace.

19 And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes in Midian, Go return into Egypt: for all the men are dead which ſought thy life.

20 And Moſes took his wife, and his ſons, and ſet them upon an aſs, and he returned to the land of Egypt. And Moſes took the rod of God in his hand.

21 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, When thou goeſt to return into Egypt, ſee that thou do all thoſe wonders before Pharaoh, which I have put in thine hand: but I will harden his heart, that he ſhall not let the people go.

22 And thou ſhalt ſay unto Pharaoh, Thus ſaith the LORD, Iſrael is my ſon, even my firſt-born.

23 And

giver of the inexplicable power of articulate ſpeech, and of every degree, by which one man excels another, in that, or in any other gift.

V. 12. I will be, &c.] Let us compare this promiſe with the words of Chriſt to his diſciples, "I will give "you a mouth, and wiſdom, which all your adverſaries "ſhall not be able to gainſay, or reſiſt;" (Luke xxi. 14, 15;) and then aſk ourſelves, are not both the language of God? Can any one elſe give a mouth and wiſdom?

V. 13. Send I pray thee, &c.] 'Send by any one elſe, 'who is more competent; only excuſe me.'

V. 14. The anger, &c.] Moſes's unbelief, and reluctancy to engage in this arduous and dangerous ſervice, excited the divine diſpleaſure, which probably appeared by ſome ſenſible token, perhaps by the fire in the buſh becoming more vehement: yet the Lord did not ſuperſede his commiſſion, but in condeſcenſion to his weakneſs of faith aſſigned him an aſſiſtant, who would ſhare the danger, the burden, and the honour. Thus Chriſt ſent out his diſciples by two and two; and ſeveral of them were brethren.—We are not informed, in what ſtation of life Aaron had lived all the former part of his days: but it is not improbable that he had enjoyed many advantages of education, by means of Moſes, and that he had become remarkable for eloquence. Perhaps this might occaſion his being called "Aaron the Levite," as being of ſome eminence, and known to be one of the deſcendants of Levi.—The Lord had revealed himſelf to Aaron at the ſame time that he did to Moſes, and given him commandment to meet him, (27); which concurrence would be a mutual encouragement to them.

V. 15. With his mouth, &c.] Though Aaron was eloquent, yet he could not ſpeak to any good purpoſe, without the teaching and aſſiſtance of the Lord.

V. 16. Inſtead of God, &c.] Moſes, though the younger brother, was the ſuperior in this commiſſion; the word of God came firſt to him; and he dictated to Aaron what he was to ſpeak, as God put his words into the mouth of his prophets.

V. 18. Let me go, &c.] Thus Moſes informed Jethro of his intention, and prepared to depart amicably, as from one who had behaved kindly to him.

V. 19. All the men, &c.] This was ſpoken to anſwer the ſecret objection againſt the ſervice, which wrought in the heart of Moſes: and to remove that diſcouragement, which aroſe from his fear of Pharaoh and of the Egyptians, on account of his former conduct.

V. 21. I will harden his heart.] God never communicates hardneſs, or wickedneſs, to the heart of man by any poſitive act; "for he cannot be tempted of evil; neither tempteth he any man:" (Jam. i. 13.) But, when he is provoked by atrocious crimes, he totally withdraws his reſtraining influences, and gives up a man to his own heart's luſts; he allows Satan alſo liberty to entice, deceive, and blind him; (1 Kings, xxii. 20—23;) and he takes off his providential reſtraints, by which many are kept from wickedneſs, becauſe they have not opportunity, or power to commit it, or dare not through fear or ſhame. When a man is thus given up, and let looſe, commands, warnings, judgments, and deliverances, every part of God's revelation in his word, and every diſpenſation of his 23 And I ſay unto thee, Let my ſon go, that he may ſerve me: and if thou refuſe to let him go, behold, I will ſlay thy ſon, even thy firſt-born.

24 And it came to paſs by the way in the inn, that the LORD met him, and ſought to kill him.

25 Then Zipporah took a ſharp ſtone, and cut off the foreſkin of her ſon, and caſt it at his feet, and ſaid, Surely a bloody huſband art thou to me.

26 So he let him go: then ſhe ſaid, A bloody huſband thou art, becauſe of the circumciſion.

27 And the LORD ſaid to Aaron, Go into the wilderneſs to meet Moſes. And he went and met him in the mount of God, and kiſſed him.

28 And Moſes told Aaron all the words of the LORD, who had ſent him, and all the ſigns which he had commanded him.

29 And Moſes and Aaron went, and gathered together all the elders of the children of Iſrael.

30 And Aaron ſpake all the words which the LORD had ſpoken unto Moſes, and did the ſigns in the ſight of the people.

31 And the people believed: and when they heard that the LORD had viſited the children of Iſrael, and that he had looked upon their affliction, then they bowed their heads and worſhipped.

his providence, concur to increaſe obduracy and inſenſibility, pride and preſumption.

V. 22. My ſon, &c.] Iſrael was deſpiſed by the Egyptians as a contemptible people, but was honoured of God, being near and dear to him as a child is to his father; and as having the pre-eminence among the nations, which the firſt-born hath among the brethren. By this title Pharaoh might know aſſuredly, that Jehovah would defend, avenge, deliver, and provide for them; and that if he would detain them, he muſt conteſt the matter with the Almighty himſelf. The true Iſrael are all children, and firſt-born; (Heb. xii. 23,) and therefore all heirs, and none can bereave them of their inheritance.

V. 23. Let my ſon go, &c.] It was not proper that Pharaoh ſhould ſo enſlave the Lord's ſon, as to forbid him from ſerving him. The kings of the earth have a right to civil obedience even from the children of God: but they have no right to enſlave their conſciences, or to prohibit them from ſerving God acccording to them; and they may expect ſevere rebukes if they attempt it.

V. 24. The Lord met him, &c.] Either the Lord appeared to Moſes, and threatened him with death; or he inflicted ſickneſs upon him, which he gave him to underſtand was the puniſhment of his ſin, in neglecting to circumciſe his ſon; probably out of regard to Zipporah who oppoſed it.

V. 25. A ſharp ſtone, &c.] Knives in ſome countries have been made of ſharp ſtones. This circumſtance may intimate the haſte in which the rite was performed.—Zipporah called Moſes a bloody huſband, becauſe his religion required ſuch a bloody ordinance.—Probably it was at this time, and on occaſion of this reproach of him and of this ſacred inſtitution, that ſhe was ſent back to Jethro for a time.

V. 26. So he let him go.] The Lord delivered Moſes from his danger, and allowed him to proſecute his journey. Though ſome interpret it of Moſes ſending Zipporah away, and tranſlate it, "So he let her go."

V. 27. Met him, &c.] Moſes had ſo many delays occaſioned by his family concerns; and Aaron made ſo much haſte, that they met almoſt as ſoon as Moſes had ſet out upon his journey, which would be a great encouragement to him. Probably they had not ſeen, or heard of each other for a long time before.

V. 30. Did the ſigns, &c.] Moſes gave the people this proof of his divine miſſion, to enſure their concurrence, before he applied to Pharaoh in their behalf.

V. 31. They bowed, &c.] Thus the Elders of Iſrael acknowledged Jehovah as the true God, and the God of their fathers, and Moſes as his meſſenger for their deliverance; and they teſtified their gratitude and expectation in an act of ſolemn worſhip.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

How indiſpoſed is man to believe the teſtimony of God! Whether he denounce vengeance upon obſtinate offenders; or promiſe acceptance, aſſiſtance, and ſalvation to the returning ſinner, we are ever prone to queſtion his veracity: thus ſome are hardened in preſumption, others ſink into deſpondency, and others are diſcouraged and continue heartleſs in all they attempt, through unbelief.—But the Lord is ſlow to anger, and of great mercy, and deals not with any of us according to the multitude of our ſins: elſe the ſtrongeſt believer upon earth, inſtead of being ſaved by his faith, might be righteouſly condemned for his unbelief.—Whenever we are unwilling to put ourſelves to the trouble or ſelf-denial, or expoſe ourſelves to the reproach or danger of any ſervice; ſelf-love will ſoon ſuggeſt ſome excuſe, which will appear ſufficient to us, however trivial it may be in the judgment of others; and it is no uncommon caſe for thoſe who have raſhly ſet themſelves to work and ſmarted for their folly, to grow timidly negligent of their evident duty: thus do we warp from one extreme to another, and in all are guilty of diſobedience to God. But let unbelief, ſloth, and cowardice ſtart never ſo many objections to our doing our duty in that ſtation of life, to which it hath pleaſed God to call us; the word of God furniſhes us with anſwers to them all; and the aſſurance of his aſſiſtance and protection, ſhould fully ſatisfy our minds in every caſe.—When God gives revelations of new truths, or introduces new diſpenſations, materially differing from all which preceded, he always ſets his ſeal to them, and enables his ſervants to authenticate their miſſion by ſome concluſive ſign: but they, who are employed to enforce the old authenticated revelation, need not ſuch teſtimonials; as both their character and doctrines are to be tried by that word of God, to which they appeal.—The miracles, which the Lord enabled his ſervants to work, were not doubtful and equivocal, nor merely effects of power to excite wonder; but were expreſſive of his juſtice and goodneſs, and inſtructive tokens of his favour to his people, and vengeance on his enemies.—God doth not always make it appear that he hath furniſhed men for ſervices, till they are actually called to engage in them: but we may depend on him to qualify us for whatever he commands us to do. All knowledge, wiſdom, and utterance, with every good gift, are derived from him: but many endowments are ſuppoſed needful, or uſeful in the more public ſervice of God and his church, which he pours contempt upon, as mere tinſel, worthleſs if not pernicious. Such are all the ſtudied and affected arts of human oratory: God hath ſeldom made much uſe of them; and Paul would not condeſcend to them, leſt he ſhould be admired inſtead of Chriſt; "and that the faith of the people ſhould not ſtand in the wiſdom of man, but in the power of God." (1 Cor. ii. 1—5.)—Though the Lord be diſpleaſed with the ſins of his ſervants, who are upright in heart, he yet condeſcends to their infirmities: and in arduous undertakings, it is a great favour to have helpers, who will cordially unite with us, though they ſhould ſhare in, or even eclipſe, our reputation.—Whilſt we cenſure Moſes for ſhrinking from this dangerous ſervice, let us aſk our own hearts, whether we are not neglecting ſuch duties, as are unſpeakably more eaſy, and leſs perilous.—We muſt obey God, rather than man; but in obeying God, we ſhould take care not to give needleſs offence to our relatives and friends: yet frequently we muſt be conſtrained to croſs the humours, draw upon ourſelves the reproaches, and forego the comforts of our deareſt relations, if we will act according to the command of God. Even in the path of duty, ſinful omiſſions may draw upon us ſevere rebukes; and neglect of the ſeals and pledges of God's covenant is a ſin of no ſmall aggravation; but implies a contempt and ingratitude, which God will certainly reſent. Yet when ſin is repented of, and the duty attended to, the Lord will return to us in mercy: And the reproaches, which are caſt upon religion and its conſcientious profeſſors, will redound to the laſting diſgrace of thoſe who vented them. None provoke God more, than ſuch, as by terrors or temptations deter, or entice, his children from his ſervice: nor are any more liable to be given up to judicial hardneſs of heart, than cruel tyrants and perſecuting oppreſſors. It frequently happens that leſs difficulty is found, than was expected, in ſuch undertakings as are according to the will of God, and for his glory; and that the hearts of many are inclined to concur, who were not looked for: let us but ariſe, and attempt our proper work, and the Lord will be with us, and proſper us. But if Iſrael welcomed the tidings of temporal deliverance, and worſhipped the Lord; how ſhould we welcome the glad tidings of eternal redemption, embrace it in faith, and adore the Redeemer! And how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation?

NOTES.

CHAP. V.] V. 1. Moſes, &c.] Moſes and Aaron addreſſed Pharaoh by deputation from the elders of Iſrael.—Jacob erected an altar to El-Elohe-Iſrael, to God, the God of Iſrael: (Gen. xxxiii. 20.) but that immediately related to himſelf, and the name which God had given him: and this is the firſt time, that Jehovah is called the God of Iſrael, as a nation. Thus he honoured them in their low and deſpiſed eſtate, by calling himſelf their God; for doubtleſs this was done by his command.—Moſes and Aaron demanded that the people ſhould be allowed to go and hold a feaſt to Jehovah their God, in the wilderneſs, that is, a religious feaſt, upon the ſacrifices which they were to offer.—This requiſition was made firſt, that the tyranny of Pharaoh might appear the more evident; as he refuſed the demand, he would certainly have refuſed to let them go entirely.

V. 2. Who, is the Lord?] Pharaoh had probably heard

5 And Pharaoh ſaid, Behold, the people of the land now are many, and you make them reſt from their burdens.

6 And Pharaoh commanded the ſame day the taſk-maſters of the people, and their officers, ſaying,

7 Ye ſhall no more give the people ſtraw to make brick, as heretofore: let them go and gather ſtraw for themſelves.

8 And the tale of the bricks which they did make heretofore, you ſhall lay upon them; you ſhall not diminiſh ought thereof: for they be idle; therefore they cry, ſaying, Let us go and ſacrifice to our God.

9 Let there more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein: and let them not regard vain words.

10 And the taſk-maſters of the people went out, and their officers, and they ſpake to the people, ſaying, Thus ſaith Pharaoh, I will not give you ſtraw.

11 Go ye, get you ſtraw where you can find it: yet not ought of your work ſhall be diminiſhed.

12 So the people were ſcattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt, to gather ſtubble inſtead of ſtraw.

13 And the taſk-maſters haſted them, ſaying, Fulfil your works, your daily taſks, as when there was ſtraw.

14 And the officers of the children of Iſrael, which Pharaoh's taſk-maſters had ſet over them, were beaten, and demanded, Wherefore have ye not fulfilled your taſk in making brick, both yeſterday and to-day, as heretofore?

15 Then the officers of the children of Iſrael, came and cried to Pharaoh, ſaying, ſome general report of Jehovah, as claiming, by his prophets and ſervants, to be the only living and true God, the creator and governor of the whole earth: but he had long triumphed and tyrannized over his people, and deſpiſed them as abjects and ſlaves; and as they ſeemed to have derived ſo little advantage from their God, he concluded that he had as little to fear from him. He therefore treated the whole with the contemptuous indifference of infidelity, ranking Jehovah amongſt, or rather beneath, the gods of the nations, and eſpecially the gods of Egypt. —There is great emphaſis in this word I; 'Shall I, who 'am king of Egypt, and lord it over Iſrael, obey the 'God of that deſpicable people? No, I ſcorn to regard 'him.'—Pharaoh had no knowledge, no fear, or love of God, and therefore he refuſed to obey him, and expreſſly ſet him at defiance. Iſrael was a numerous people, they added much to the populouſneſs and wealth of his kingdom, and to his own greatneſs; and it would not conſiſt with either his honour or intereſt, (to ſpeak in the language of politicians,) thus to depopulate his kingdom. He was accuſtomed to tyrannize over Iſrael, and it would look mean upon ſuch a ſummons, to ſet them at liberty: and if he did not intend to ſet them at liberty, he muſt cruſh their firſt attempts, and not allow them to feel their own ſtrength, or to taſte the ſweets of acting according to their own inclinations. Thus his pride, ambition, covetouſneſs, and political wiſdom engaged him in the conteſt; and a point of honour as it is called, that is an obſtinate determination not to have it ſaid that he was worſted, hardened him to perſiſt in it to his deſtruction.

V. 4, 5.] Pharaoh treated the plea of Moſes and Aaron, concerning the commandment of God, with entire neglect, ſuppoſing the whole plan to originate from ſome ambitious intereſted views of their own; and that they abuſed the people's ſuperſtition to promote their ſelfiſh deſigns.—He therefore ordered them to their burdens, as well as the reſt: and we muſt aſcribe it to a divine interpoſition, that he did not ſend them to a dungeon, or to execution; conſidering his character, the offenſive nature of their meſſage, and the boldneſs with which they delivered it.—He alſo repreſented them as doing a public injury to Egypt, and endangering the peace of the community, by taking ſo large a multitude off from their work.

V. 7. Straw, &c.] Some ſuppoſe that this ſtraw was cut ſhort, and mingled with the clay in making the bricks; the nature of the clay, and the imperfection of their ſkill requiring it: others ſuppoſe that they burnt the bricks with it.—But in many places ſtraw is now uſed in covering the clay before the bricks are formed, and in covering the bricks before they are burnt, to defend them from the burning ſun or heavy rains; and ſomething of this kind is indiſpenſably neceſſary.

V. 8. For they be idle, &c.] Though the fruits of Iſrael's induſtry were many, Pharaoh took it for granted without examining, that the people were not fully employed, or ſuch fancies would not have entered their heads: (and too many of the rich and powerful imitate his example, and act in ſuch matters upon report or conjecture, without enquiry.) To take them off from their conceits, he therefore determined to fill their hands with work, that they might have ſomewhat elſe to think on.

V. 14. The officers, &c.] Thus theſe Iſraelites were urged on, in their own defence, to concur in the oppreſſion of their brethren.

Wherefore dealeſt thou thus with thy ſervants?

16 There is no ſtraw given unto thy ſervants, and they ſay to us, Make brick: and behold, thy ſervants are beaten; but the fault is in thine own people.

17 But he ſaid, Ye are idle, ye are idle: therefore ye ſay, Let us go, and do ſacrifice to the LORD.

18 Go therefore now and work: for there ſhall no ſtraw be given you, yet ſhall ye deliver the tale of bricks.

19 And the officers of the children of Iſrael did ſee that they were in evil caſe, after it was ſaid, Ye ſhall not miniſh ought from your bricks of your daily taſk.

20 And they met Moſes and Aaron, who ſtood in the way, as they came forth from Pharaoh.

21 And they ſaid unto them, The LORD look upon you, and judge; becauſe you have made our ſavour to be abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of his ſervants, to put a ſword in their hands to ſlay us.

22 And Moſes returned unto the LORD, and ſaid, Lord, wherefore haſt thou ſo evil intreated this people? why is it that thou haſt ſent me?

23 For ſince I came to Pharaoh to ſpeak in thy name, he hath done evil to this people; neither haſt thou delivered thy people at all.

CHAP.

V. 20. Who ſtood, &c.] Moſes and Aaron were waiting to hear the anſwer which they received, being deeply intereſted in their concerns.

V. 21. Becauſe, &c.] Pharaoh blamed Moſes and Aaron for taking the people from their work; the people blamed them for increaſing their burdens: and not only the Egyptians denied, but even Iſrael forgat, that the Lord had ſent them, though they had produced their commiſſion ſigned and ſealed! and they even intimated, that they had done it with a bad intention, and that God himſelf would puniſh them for putting the ſword into Pharaoh's hand to deſtroy them!

V. 22. Why, &c?] Thus Moſes himſelf caught the infection, murmured at the Lord for honouring him with this important commiſſion; forgat that God had told him it would be ſo, and almoſt deſpaired of ſucceſs! Lord, what is man at his beſt eſtate!—And yet, if we place ourſelves in his ſituation, and know our own hearts, we may blame, but ſhall not wonder at, his diſtruſt.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ſervants of God are ſometimes called to ſuch employments, as expoſe them to the moſt imminent perils: they may however ſet their faces like a flint; for he who ſends them will bear them out againſt thoſe, who are moſt haughty and imperious, whilſt they obſerve his directions and are faithful to their truſt. The reaſonableneſs of the divine commands will always leave the diſobedient without excuſe: for if we refuſe obedience in thoſe things which are comparatively eaſy, we ſhall never yield it in thoſe inſtances, which require more ſelf-denial: if we refuſe, at his command, to devote a portion of our time and ſubſtance to his ſervice; how ſhall we obey, if he call us to leave all, to take up our croſs, to endure perſecution, and to lay down our lives for his ſake? And yet unleſs we are prepared for this, we cannot be Chriſt's diſciples. But ſinners are afraid of loſing the pleaſure or profit, which they derive or expect from ſin; not knowing that the ſervice of God is perfect freedom, a continual feaſt, and an enduring inheritance. Without that knowledge of God, which is derived from faith and experience, there is no true fear or love of him: and therefore, they who know him not, will habitually diſobey him; and often inſolently deſpiſe him, and preſumptuouſly ſet him at defiance, when his precepts and denunciations interfere with their ambitious and worldly projects.—Nor is this ignorance of God any excuſe; as it ariſes not ſo much from want of inſormation, as from men not liking to retain God in their knowledge. (Rom. i. 19—28.)—It is common for thoſe, who are themſelves hypocritical or irreligious, to treat all the fears, hopes, conſcientious ſcruples, and experiences of true believers, as ſuperſtition and enthuſiaſm; and to cenſure them as vain words and fooliſh fancies. It muſt be allowed that there is much ſuperſtition and enthuſiaſm in the world: but on the other hand, true religion muſt be matter of experience; and muſt firſt produce it's effects upon the heart, and conſcience, before they can appear in the life and converſation. Our buſineſs, therefore, is not to ſanction, or to cenſure all experience together; but to diſtinguiſh betwixt the precious and the vile, according to the ſtandard of the Holy Scriptures. But ſuch perſons are equally diſpoſed to condemn an attention to the ordinances of God as idleneſs, and to conſider all the time or money, which is expended in religion, as waſted to no purpoſe. To this day we find numbers more diſpoſed to blame ſome of their neighbours for ſpending a few hours, ſpared from their worldly buſineſs, in the ſervice of God, crying out, 'Ye are idle, ye are idle;' than to cenſure others, who allot twice the time to diſſipation and intemperance. Thus is the Lord deſpiſed amongſt us, as if nothing could be ſo much miſ-employed, as that which is devoted to him! Nor is it yet an obſolete device of Satan, to fill mens hands with buſineſs, their heads with projects, and their hearts with cares, in order to divert them from the worſhip of God, and from attention to the one thing needful.—They, who deſire to be employed and honoured of God in any public public ſphere of uſefulneſs, ſhould count their coſt: and not only expect to meet with oppoſition from the world, but to experience more painful trials from the impatience, infirmities, and even ingratitude and reproaches of the very perſons, whoſe good they are earneſtly ſeeking; and to be accuſed, not only of thoſe crimes of which they are innocent, but by perſons of different characters of things directly contrary to each other.—Even they who ſeem to believe, will in time of temptation fall away; and they, who really believe, will, under the preſſure of ſevere trials, ſometimes appear to forget all they knew, and diſtreſs the faithful Miniſter with their diſtruſt, impatience, and peeviſh complaints. But ſuch miniſters, conſcious how they themſelves in like manner often diſhonour, and offend God; whilſt they admire his forbearance and compaſſion to themſelves, will learn to imitate it in bearing with their fretful brethren.—The ſervice of Pharaoh, and his cruel taſk-maſters, was very ſevere; but that of ſin and Satan is much more intolerable. Nay, the law of God, though holy, juſt, and good; yet requiring perfect obedience, without any mention of repentance, forgiveneſs, or aſſiſtance, will only convince the tranſgreſſor, that he is in evil caſe: and whilſt ignorance of the Goſpel and unbelief prevail, his ſins will ſeem to be irritated, rather than ſubdued, by its commanding and convincing power. (Rom. vii. 7—13.) Frequently when God is preparing the ſoul for deliverance; the condemnation of the holy law, and the dominion of ſinful paſſions, appear more and more inevitable: the diſquieted ſinner wiſhes he had never heard the convincing word, and is ready to quarrel with the inſtrument, as if he were the cauſe, of his diſtreſs, whilſt Satan would tempt him to deſpair. Yet all this tends to his humiliation, that he may hearken to the Saviour's affectionate invitation, "Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt." Before it be long his chains ſhall be looſed, and his ſoul ſhall walk at liberty, and enjoy ſweet peace and joy in believing. Yet the moſt faithful ſervants of God, not immediately perceiving the effect of their miniſtry, whilſt they return to ſpread the caſe before God, are apt to diſcourage themſelves, and with impatience complain, that they are ſent to no purpoſe, and that he doth not by them deliver the people at all: but this is their ſin, and their folly, of which in due time they will be aſhamed.—Let us not however cloſe this chapter, without contraſting our mild, and benign government, and the civil and religious liberty which we enjoy, with the cruel tyranny and oppreſſion of Pharaoh: and uniting gratitude to God and man for ſuch bleſſings, let us both pray for their continuance to us and to our poſterity; and for the choiceſt bleſſings upon thoſe, who are the inſtruments of God in them: and let us remember how much we are bound to live under ſuch rulers, in all godlineſs and honeſty, and in quietneſs and conſcientious ſubmiſſion.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI.] V. 1. Now, &c.] Moſes had found, to his great diſcouragement, that his interference had only rendered the condition of the Iſraelites worſe than before: Pharaoh had ſet the Lord at defiance, and as it were declared war againſt him; and the Iſraelites were ſinking in abject deſpondency. Now matters were come to this criſis, the Lord declared that he would diſplay his power, and effect their deliverance himſelf, that he might have all the glory of it.—When Pharaoh felt the power of God's indignation, he not only conſented to Iſrael's departure; but he, and his people urged and haſtened it. Yet this conſent was extorted by force, and entirely contrary to Pharaoh's inclinations. (xii. 30—39.)

V. 2, 3.] 'I am,' ſaith God, 'that unchangeable 'perfect Being, who am known by the name Jehovah, 'and always act conſiſtently with that name.'—He was known to the Patriarchs as God Almighty, or the all-ſufficient God, who poſſeſſes all wiſdom, power, and dominion to contrive and effect the purpoſes of his love.—But by his name JEHOVAH was he not known to them. It is moſt probable, that this ſhould be read with an interrogation;—"Was I not known?" For Moſes conſtantly uſed the name Jehovah in the preceding hiſtory: the Patriarchs built their altars and called upon the name of Jehovah: Abraham called the place, where he was about to ſacrifice Iſaac, Jehovah Jireh. (Gen. xxii. 14.) And God ſpeaking to Jacob in Bethel, ſaith, "I am "Jehovah, the children of Iſrael, whom the Egyptians keep in bondage: and I have remembered my covenant.

6 Wherefore ſay unto the children of Iſrael, I am the LORD, and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage: and I will redeem you with a ſtretched-out arm, and with great judgments.

7 And I will take you to me for a people, and I will be to you a God: and ye ſhall know that I am the LORD your God, which bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians.

8 And I will bring you in unto the land concerning the which I did ſwear to give it, to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob: and I will give it you for an heritage: I am the LORD.

9 And Moſes ſpake ſo unto the children of Iſrael: but they hearkened not unto Moſes, for anguiſh of ſpirit, and for cruel bondage.

10 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

11 Go in, ſpeak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, that he let the children of Iſrael go out of his land.

12 And Moſes ſpake before the LORD, ſaying, Behold, the children of Iſrael have not hearkened unto me; how then ſhall Pharaoh hear me, who am of uncircumciſed lips?

13 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, and gave them a charge unto the children of Iſrael, and unto Pharaoh king of Egypt; to bring the children of Iſrael out of the land of Egypt.

14 Theſe be the heads of their fathers' houſes: The ſons of Reuben the firſt-born of Iſrael;

"Jehovah, the God of Abraham." (Gen. xxviii. 13.) The intention of theſe words ſeems to have been this: Moſes was diſcouraged, becauſe the difficulties before him ſeemed inſurmountable: but this was unreaſonable; the ſame glorious God, who revealed himſelf to Abraham, as Almighty, for whom nothing is too hard, revealed himſelf alſo as Jehovah; which is expreſſive of his ſelf-exiſtence, eternity, and immutability. No difficulty therefore could have ariſen, but what he foreſaw when he made the promiſes; nor any, which his power was not at all times able to remove. As if he had ſaid, 'Remember, Moſes, who it was that made the promiſes to 'the fathers, and aſſure thyſelf he is well able to fulfil 'them.'—Thus Jeſus, who is the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever, ſaid to Martha over the grave of Lazarus, "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldeſt believe, "thou ſhouldeſt ſee the Glory of God?" referring to what he ſaid before, "I am the Reſurrection and the "Life." (John xi. 25—40.)—But ſome think, that though the Patriarchs knew the name Jehovah, they were not inſtructed in this meaning and application of it; and that this is the purport of the paſſage.

V. 4. I have, &c.] The Lord, having reminded Moſes of his unchangeable perfection, called to his remembrance the relations in which he ſtood to Iſrael, and the covenant engagements under which he had voluntarily brought himſelf; by which he had pledged the honour of his name for the accompliſhment of his promiſes.

V. 5. And I, &c.] As the juſt and compaſſionate patron and avenger of the oppreſſed, as well as in remembrance of his covenant, the Lord declared himſelf concerned to puniſh the Egyptians, and to reſcue Iſrael.

V. 6. I will redeem, &c.] On all thoſe accounts which had been mentioned, the Lord's determination was abſolute, and he would exert his whole power to accompliſh it: as a man ſtretches forth his arm, and employs his whole force to effect any thing about which he is in earneſt.

V. 7. I will take you to me, &c.] God engaged to take the nation of Iſrael under his eſpecial care and protection, and to maintain his truth and worſhip among them; whilſt other nations were ſuffered to walk in their own ways: which was a ſhadow of the ſpiritual relation, that ſubſiſts betwixt him and true believers.—Thus they would know him as the Lord their God.—This expreſſion is commonly uſed to denote that knowledge of the being, perfection, power, juſtice, goodneſs, or faithfulneſs of God, which is the effect of experience; whether of his mercy and love, or of his righteous vengeance. Iſrael would learn to know that he was the Lord, in the experience of his powerful and faithful loving kindneſs; and might thus diſcover that he was juſtly entitled to all that love and ſervice, which his law required.

V. 9. For anguiſh, &c.] Perceiving no ſenſible tokens of approaching deliverance, but an increaſe of their burdens; the Iſraelites in unbelief and deſpondency, diſregarded the meſſage, and refuſed to make any further attempts.

V. 12. Behold, &c.] The faith of Moſes was ſo far enfeebled, that he could ſcarcely be kept to his work; for prompt obedience always bears an exact proportion to the ſtrength of our faith.—He had already forgotten that the Lord had engaged to deliver the people by a ſtrong hand, and not by perſuaſive words: ſo that his uncircumciſed lips could be no real hindrance to his ſucceſs. This expreſſion is uſed in Scripture for every kind of unſuitableneſs, in any thing to anſwer its proper purpoſe: as the carnal heart, and depraved nature of fallen man are entirely unſuited to the ſervice of God, and the purpoſes of his glory.

V. 14.

16 And theſe are the names of the ſons of Levi, according to their generations: Gerſhon, and Kohath, and Merari: And the years of the life of Levi were an hundred and thirty and ſeven years.

17 The ſons of Gerſhon; Libni, and Shimi, according to their families.

18 And the ſons of Kohath; Amram, and Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel: And the years of the life of Kohath were an hundred thirty and three years.

19 And the ſons of Merari; Mahali, and Muſhi: theſe are the families of Levi, according to their generations.

20 And Amram took him Jochebed his father's ſiſter to wife; and ſhe bare him Aaron and Moſes: And the years of the life of Amram were an hundred and thirty and ſeven years.

21 And the ſons of Izhar; Korah, and Nepheg, and Zichri.

22 And the ſons of Uzziel; Miſhael, and Elzaphan, and Zithri.

23 And Aaron took him Eliſheba, daughter of Aminadab, ſiſter of Naaſhon, to wife; and ſhe bare him Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.

24 And the ſons of Korah; Aſſir, and Elkanah, and Abiaſaph: theſe are the families of the Korhites.

25 And Eleazar Aaron's ſon took him one of the daughters of Putiel to wife; and ſhe bare him Phinehas: theſe are the heads of the fathers of the Levites, according to their families.

26 Theſe are that Aaron and Moſes, to whom the LORD ſaid, Bring out the children of Iſrael from the land of Egypt according to their armies.

27 Theſe are they which ſpake to Pharaoh king of Egypt, to bring out the children of Iſrael from Egypt: theſe are that Moſes and Aaron.

28 And it came to paſs on the day when the LORD ſpake unto Moſes in the land of Egypt, 29 That the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, I am the LORD: ſpeak thou unto Pharaoh king of Egypt all that I ſay unto thee.

30 And Moſes ſaid before the Lord, Behold, I am of uncircumciſed lips, and how ſhall Pharaoh hearken unto me?

CHAP.

V. 13. Gave them, &c.] The Lord abſolutely commanded Moſes and Aaron, without further objections or delays, to proceed with his work; and not only to attempt bringing Iſrael out of Egypt, but abſolutely to effect it: this would tend to increaſe their faith, and raiſe their expectations.

V. 14. Theſe be the heads, &c.] Before the hiſtorian proceeded to relate the performance of this charge, he brake off, to give ſome account of the perſons to whom it was given.—Reuben was the firſt born, and accordingly is firſt mentioned, to mark the accompliſhment of Jacob's prediction: ſeeing he was paſſed by, and the deliverer ſprang not from him.—For the ſame reaſon Simeon ſeems alſo to be mentioned, who was the next in ſeniority: —But the deliverer of Iſrael was not ſprung from him, but from Levi, the third ſon, who though he had been diſgraced, began already to be dignified.

V. 20. His father's ſiſter.] The law ſoon after condemned ſuch marriages as inceſtuous: (Lev. xviii. 13. Numb. xxxvi. 59:) but Moſes with perfect impartiality left it upon record, that both he and Aaron were the offſpring of ſuch an union. The Septuagint makes Jochebed only the couſin to Amram, probably from regard to the honour of Moſes and Aaron.—Moſes lived only to the age of 120, which was yet conſidered extraordinary, though his immediate progenitor had lived much longer: for he fixed the ordinary extent of man's life in his time at 70, or 80 years. (Pſalm xc.) Thus the age of man was gradually rendered ſhorter, until it was reduced to its preſent limits.

V. 23. Eliſheba, &c.] This is the ſame as Elizabeth. She was the ſiſter of Naaſhon, who was of the tribe of Judah, and an anceſtor of Chriſt.—Thus an alliance was immediately formed betwixt the family of the prieſts and that of the kings; which might ſhadow forth him, who was both prieſt and king in one perſon.

V. 26. Their armies, &c.] When the tribes of Iſrael were afterwards regularly encamped, they appeared as ſo many armies prepared for war.

V. 30. And Moſes ſaid, &c.] Having ſhewn who this Moſes and Aaron were, and manifeſted that they were of the houſe of Iſrael, and of the tribe of Levi, the ſacred writer returned to his hiſtory.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are moſt likely to proſper in our attempts to glorify God and ſerve our generation, when we are convinced vinced by experience, that we can do nothing of ourſelves, and are habitually ſenſible that all our ſucceſs muſt be from God: for when we can truly ſay, that our whole dependence is placed on him, and our only expectation from him, we ſhall not intercept his revenue of glory, but ſhall be prepared to mark and to record his works of power and love. He will therefore previouſly prove and humble thoſe, whom he loves and employs, and bring them to feel, as well as acknowledge, their inſufficiency: but whilſt he is thus mortifying their pride and ambition, Satan will take advantage of their unpleaſant ſituation, to tempt them to diſcontent, impatience, and diſcouragement, that their hands may hang down and their knees wax feeble; that they may be unfit for, and reluctant to, the work aſſigned them. But though their unbelief be diſhonourable and diſpleaſing to God; yet he will pity them and remove the diſcouragements under which they labour. Nor is any thing more effectual for this purpoſe, than diſcovering to them his immutable perfection, his incomprehenſible wiſdom and power, his uncontroulable dominion, his condeſcending compaſſion, love, and faithfulneſs; and his oath and covenant, whereby he hath engaged to fulfil his largeſt promiſes to his church, and to every living member of it.—Calling theſe things to remembrance, and recollecting his wonders of old, the drooping heart revives, faith recovers ſtrength, and larger expectations are formed. Thus being ſtrengthened, the ſervant of God riſes ſuperior to his deſpondency, patiently continues in well-doing, is animated to attend to preſent duty, and proceeds in the work given him to perform.

Our compaſſionate Lord regards our groanings under temporal calamities: but when the guilt and power of ſin and temptation become our chief complaint, and extort the exclamation, "Oh wretched man that I am! Who "ſhall deliver me?" He particularly notes it, and will certainly perform to us, "the oath, which he ſware "unto Abraham—That we being delivered from the "hand of our enemies, might ſerve him without fear, in "holineſs and righteouſneſs before him, all the days of "our life." (Luke i. 73—75.) When we find, that we cannot deliver ourſelves, he will ſhew us what he can do, and redeeming us by his ſtrong hand and ſtretched-out arm from the power of our enemies; he will take us to be his people, and will be our God; he will guard us ſafely all the way to that good land, where tears, groans, ſins, and enemies are known no more for ever; and there he will give us everlaſting felicity.

But even ſuch glorious and joyful aſſurances as theſe afford no conſolation to the ſoul which is overwhelmed with preſent trouble, finds matters grow worſe and worſe, and has no ſenſible tokens of the Lord's favour.—For there is a ſtrong propenſity in our nature to expect the continuance and increaſe of ſuch diſpenſations, as we at preſent experience, whether joyful or afflictive: and even univerſal obſervation and experience, of the mutability of human affairs, do not prevent thoſe in proſperity from expecting greater proſperity, and thoſe in adverſity from expecting deeper ſcenes of affliction.—This diſplays much of Satan's management, who takes the advantage to buoy up ſome men in careleſs preſumption, and to depreſs others in heartleſs deſpondency. Faith is the only effectual remedy of theſe evils, nor can we walk comfortably in ſuch a world as this, "except we walk by faith, not by ſight." He, and he only, who habitually believes the teſtimony, and relies on the faithful promiſe of God, will find his heart prepared for humble watchfulneſs, and patient hope, to do the will of God, and to ſubmit to his appointments with chearfulneſs and compoſure.—Such a perſon will carefully watch againſt thoſe ſins, into which he hath been heretofore betrayed; and will often reflect upon his own meanneſs, and unworthineſs of the comforts which he enjoys; which will ſilence his complaints, kindle his gratitude, and quicken his diligence in the ſervice to which he is called.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII.] V. 1. A god, &c.] Moſes as the ambaſſador of Jehovah, repreſenting him and ſpeaking in his name, poſſeſſed and exerciſed an authority over Pharaoh, and laid injunctions, denounced threatenings, and called for judgments upon him, with a power, which Pharaoh, proud and great and he was, could not reſiſt, and was unable to deſpiſe or to endure. Moſes had therefore a decided ſuperiority, and ſtood not in awe of his authority, but made him tremble before him: All which ſeems to be implied in this ſtrong expreſſion; "Thou ſhalt be a god to Pharaoh." (See John x. 35, 36. Ex. iv. 15.)

6 And Moſes and Aaron did as the LORD commanded them, ſo did they.

7 And Moſes was fourſcore years old, and Aaron fourſcore and three years old, when they ſpake unto Pharaoh.

8 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, ſaying,

11 Then Pharaoh alſo called the wiſe-men, and the ſorcerers: now the magicians of Egypt, they alſo did in like manner with their inchantments.

12 For they caſt down every man his rod, and they became ſerpents: but Aaron's rod ſwallowed up their rods.

V. 5. Shall know, &c.] The Egyptians had, in their puniſhment, a full demonſtration that the God of Iſrael was the great Jehovah, the Lord of the whole earth. (Note vi. 7.)

V. 6. And Moſes, &c.] At length Moſes was delivered from his fears, makes no more objections, but being ſtrengthened in faith, went about his arduous work with undaunted courage, and proceeded in it with indefatigable perſeverance.

V. 9. Shew a miracle, &c.] It is here ſuppoſed, that extraordinary divine commiſſions ſhould be atteſted by miracles: yet it will hereafter appear, that in ſome caſes theſe alone are not ſufficient to prove a doctrine divine; and that they may be counterfeited by Satan and his inſtruments. (Deut. xiii. 1—3. 2 Theſſ. ii. 9.) Yet, except when they are brought in proof of ſuch doctrines, as contradict the firſt principles of religion in general, or of revealed truth in particular, they may be conſidered as the ſeal of Heaven affixed to the prophet's commiſſion, and open, undeniable, and repeated miracles are to be received as a divine atteſtation in behalf of the perſon, by whom they are wrought. (John v. 36. vi. 27. x. 38.) Nor can we ſuppoſe that God will allow this his ſeal to be ſo counterfeited, as to impoſe upon the attentive, humble, and impartial enquirer; however he may leave the proud and prejudiced to be deceived by deluſive appearances.—The command given to Aaron implied a prediction of the miracle, which helped to render it more undeniable: though the firſt miracle was not a plague, yet it was of a very menacing nature.

V. 12. They, &c.] Many ſuppoſe that this was a mere illuſion upon the ſenſes of the ſpectators, either by the artifice of the magicians, or the power of Satan; but it ſeems, from the language here uſed, to have been a real change: and the queſtion in that caſe is, how, or by whom was it produced? We cannot ſuppoſe, that either the magicians or Satan could produce this transformation, or that it could be effected in any other way, than by the creative power of God.—Let it be remembered that Pharaoh called for the magicians to confront the miracle, which Moſes wrought for his conviction; becauſe he would not be convinced of that, which was ſo contrary to his ſuppoſed intereſt, honour, and inclinations; and becauſe he wanted ſome cavil to excuſe and cloke his haughty diſobedience. It can ſcarcely be denied by any one, who reverences the language of Scripture, that the magicians were at ſome times aſſiſted by ſatanical influence, and that effects produced by them were beyond human power and ſagacity: nor could they know, but by experiment, the limits of this communicated power, which probably they aſcribed to ſome of their idols. On the other hand it was the deſign of God to harden the heart of this proud rebel: whilſt therefore the magicians were exerciſing their art, he might interpoſe his power, and the production of the ſerpents, apparently by magic, would furniſh Pharaoh with the very objection which he wanted: and if it were righteous in God to give up Pharaoh to final obduracy, it could not be unrighteous in him to employ this method of effecting it. (1 Kings, xxii. 19—23. 2 Theſſ. ii. 9—12. 1 Sam. xxviii. 11—16.) In ſhort, he, 'who hates the truth, ſhall be the dupe of lies:' and it was perfectly conſiſtent with the divine perfection to furniſh an obſtinate infidel with the very objections for which he wiſhed and ſought. The event, when Aaron's rod ſwallowed up their rods, would have ſatisfied an impartial mind, on which ſide the truth lay; and, had not a previous bias lain upon Pharaoh's mind, would have more than counterbalanced the change of the magicians' rods into ſerpents.

V. 13. And he, &c.] It is not neceſſary to underſtand this of the Lord's hardening Pharaoh's heart; as it merely expreſſes its becoming hard, without determining the author of that hardneſs: but however that be, his heart became hard, not by obduracy created in it, but in conſequence of the deluſion of the magicians, which ſerved him for a pretext. He would now ſay, that the magicians had produced ſerpents alſo; and that Moſes and Aaron were only greater adepts in magic; that Jehovah had nothing to do in it, and that there was no occaſion to liberate the Iſraelites. The Lord knowing the ſtate of Pharaoh's mind, and the effect which this circumſtance would have upon it, in ſo appointing it, may be ſaid to have hardened his heart.

V. 15. He goeth, &c.] Some ſuppoſe that Pharaoh went raoh's heart is hardened, he refuſeth to let the people go.

15 Get thee unto Pharaoh in the morning; lo, he goeth out unto the water, and thou ſhalt ſtand by the river's brink, againſt he come: and the rod which was turned to a ſerpent ſhalt thou take in thine hand.

16 And thou ſhalt ſay unto him, The LORD God of the Hebrews hath ſent me unto thee, ſaying, Let my people go, that they may ſerve me in the wilderneſs: and behold, hitherto thou wouldeſt not hear.

17 Thus ſaith the LORD, in this thou ſhalt know that I am the LORD: behold, I will ſmite with the rod that is in mine hand, upon the waters which are in the river, and they ſhall be turned to blood.

18 And the fiſh that is in the river ſhall die, and the river ſhall ſtink; and the Egyptians ſhall lothe to drink of the water of the river.

19 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, Say unto Aaron, Take thy rod, and ſtretch out thine hand upon the waters of Egypt, upon their ſtreams, upon their rivers, and upon their ponds, and upon all their pools of water, that they may become blood: and that there may be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in veſſels of wood, and in veſſels of ſtone.

20 And Moſes and Aaron did ſo, as the LORD commanded: and he lifted up the rod and ſmote the waters that were in the river, in the ſight of Pharaoh, and in the ſight of his ſervants: and all the waters that were in the river were turned to blood.

21 And the fiſh that was in the river died: and the river ſtank, and the Egyptians could not drink of the water of the river: and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt.

22 And the magicians of Egypt did ſo with their inchantments: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, neither did he hearken unto them; as the LORD had ſaid.

23 And Pharaoh turned and went into his houſe, neither did he ſet his heart to this alſo.

24 And all the Egyptians digged round about the river for water to drink: for they could not drink of the water of the river.

25 And ſeven days were fulfilled, after that the LORD had ſmitten the river.

went in the morning to perform his devotions to the river, or it's ſuppoſed tutelar deity.—Moſes was directed to take in his hand the rod which had been turned into a ſerpent; to remind Pharaoh of that preceding miracle, and to be a token of the Lord's power to inflict the judgment he was about to denounce.

V. 21. There, &c.] The very ſight of ſuch immenſe quantities of entire blood muſt have been very horrible; the effects of ſuch a change diſtreſſing and calamitous beyond expreſſion. The Egyptians gloried in, and even idolized, the river Nile, by whoſe inundations the whole country was enriched: but now it, and all the waters derived from it, were become their terror. They had cruelly caſt the children of the Iſraelites into the river; and now the river itſelf was turned into blood. (Rev. xvi. 4—7.) A great part of the proviſion of Egypt conſiſted of fiſh; but now it was all deſtroyed, their waters were all uſeleſs or noxious; terrible conſequences might be apprehended from its continuance; and this plague horribly foreboded all the deſolations which followed by the other judgments. The firſt miracle of Chriſt turned water into wine, the firſt plague upon Egypt turned all their water into blood: For the love of Chriſt to his diſciples changes common mercies into ſpecial bleſſings; but the anger of God towards his enemies renders their moſt valued, or needed advantages, a curſe and miſery to them.

V. 22. And the, &c.] The magicians ſhould have attempted to remove the terrible judgment, and to remedy or prevent its fatal conſequences, if they would have made a fair trial of the efficacy of their art, in oppoſition to the miracles wrought by Moſes: but they only amuſed Pharaoh, and increaſed the diſtreſs of Egypt, either in reality or appearance, by imitating, or rather aping, the ſurpriſing miracle of Moſes; and, by pretending at leaſt, to turn into blood ſome of the little water, which the mercy of God had ſpared them. Yet this ſufficed to harden Pharaoh's heart, and prevent him from acknowledging the hand of God even in this awful judgment; which probably he attributed to the ſuperior ſkill in magic, which Moſes and Aaron had acquired.

V. 23. Turned, &c.] Pharaoh, being full of indignation againſt Moſes, and bidding defiance to God, both diſregarded the preſent diſtreſs of his ſubjects, and was careleſs about the future conſequences of his obſtinate diſobedience.

V. 25. Seven days, &c.] Thus long the awful calamity continued, and was then removed; for the Lord would give reſpite to Egypt and to Pharaoh, and make way for other plagues; that his own power and juſtice, and the obſtinacy of Pharaoh and his ſervants might be the more diſplayed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the Lord hath humbled and proved his ſervants, and fitted them for their work, he will put honour upon them: and the leaſt of thoſe, who are entruſted with his meſſage, and employed to ſpeak in his name, are are in this delegated character, and whilſt faithfully executing their office, ſuperior to the greateſt and haughtieſt of thoſe to whom they are ſent; and ought to ſpeak with firmneſs and authority, without fear of them, reſpect of their perſons, or deſire of pleaſing them, whilſt they are living in diſobedience to God. And in this ſpirit the priſoner Paul may expect to make even Felix tremble. But to deliver the meſſage of God to proud perſecuting tyrants, requires ſuch ſtrength of faith, ſuch intrepid courage, and ſuch meekneſs of wiſdom, as very few are endued with: and we have cauſe to be not only ſatisfied, but thankful, that we are not called to that ſervice.—Joſeph ſtood before Pharaoh to be ruler over all the land of Egypt, at the age of 30; but Moſes and Aaron were above 80, when they demanded Iſrael's deliverance; for the gravity, wiſdom, and experience of old age were peculiarly requiſite to give them due authority: yet ſuch perſons as intrude not themſelves, but are really called to any arduous undertaking, need but implicitly believe, and obey the Lord; and he will certainly bear them out.—They, who refuſe to attend to the word of the Lord, and to acquaint themſelves with him as a God of grace and love for their ſalvation, will feel the effects of his wrath, and become acquainted with him as a God of righteous vengeance to their deſtruction. In one way or other, all men ſhall know his holy majeſty and power: and whether they ſubmit to him or perſiſt in their rebellion, he will glorify himſelf in and by them. How careful then ſhould we be not to provoke him to give us up to hardneſs and impenitency! If we would eſcape that awful judgment, we muſt not continue in the practice of preſumptuous ſins, nor procraſtinate in the great concerns of ſalvation: we muſt watch againſt careleſſneſs under affliction, and inſolence in proſperity; we muſt not turn away our ear from inſtruction and reproof, nor ſtifle convictions of conſcience by diſſipation, buſineſs, company, or ruſhing into ſin; or by hating, and ſhuning the awakening light of divine truth: for theſe are ſome of the ſteps by which men proceed to the brink of that awful precipice.—What men diſlike, as militating againſt their pride and luſts, they will not by any evidence be convinced of; but the leaſt ſhadow of an argument, though counterbalanced by demonſtration itſelf, will produce their belief of thoſe things, which they wiſh to be true. Thus all mental errors in religion originate in ſome degree from the ſtate of our heart, and the contrariety of revealed truths to our prejudices, intereſts, or inclinations; "becauſe I tell you the truth, ye believe "me not." (John viii. 45.) God always accompanies his word with ſufficient evidence of it's divine authority, were we ſuitably diſpoſed to attend to and entertain it: but when men are bent upon diſobedience, and inclined to cavil and object; he often permits a ſnare to be laid, in which they are entangled: nor are any more inſtrumental in the deſtruction of ſinners, than ſuch as reſiſt the truth, in the ſame manner as the magicians withſtood Moſes; namely, by amuſing men with a reſemblance and a counterfeit of it; for Satan himſelf is moſt to be dreaded, when he is transformed into an angel of light, (2 Tim. iii. 8.) But madneſs is in the heart of man, or he would never dare to provoke that God, who can ſo eaſily turn our choiceſt comforts into the moſt dreadful plagues; and may ſo righteouſly render thoſe things, which have been the fuel of our pride or the inſtruments of our cruelty, the weapons of his indignation: and all the aſſiſtance of man cannot remove, and may probably add to our diſtreſs. Nor do men generally underſtand the worth of common mercies, till they are deprived of them.—In the myſtery of God's providence ſubjects often ſuffer through the crimes of their princes; yet for their own ſins, which provoke God to ſend them ſuch rulers in wrath: and they for their own profit will join them in iniquity, and are joined with them in the puniſhment. Yet doth the righteous Lord ſo delight in mercy, that he proceeds by ſlow degrees to extremities with the moſt atrocious offenders: but if neither judgments nor mercies do bring men to repentance, deſtruction will at length overtake them without remedy.

7 And the magicians did so with their enchantments, and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt.

8 Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, and said, Intreat the LORD, that he may take away the frogs from me, and from my people: and I will let the people go, that they may do sacrifice unto the LORD.

9 And Moses said unto Pharaoh, Glory over me: when shall I intreat for thee and for thy servants, and for thy people, to destroy the frogs from thee, and thy houses, that they may remain in the river only?

10 And he said, To-morrow. And he said, Be it according to thy word: that thou mayest know, that there is none like unto the LORD our God.

11 And the frogs shall depart from thee, and from thy houses, and from thy servants, and from thy people; they shall remain in the river only.

12 And Moses and Aaron went out from Pharaoh: and Moses cried unto the LORD, because of the frogs which he had brought against Pharaoh.

13 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses: and the frogs died out of the houses, out of the villages, and out of the fields.

14 And they gathered them together upon heaps: and the land stank.

15 But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

16 And the LORD said unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Stretch out thy rod, and smite the dust of the land, that it may become lice throughout all the land of Egypt.

17 And they did so; for Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod, and smote the dust of the earth, and it became lice, in man and in beast: all the dust of the land became lice throughout all the land of Egypt.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII.] V. 6. Aaron stretched out, &c.] Thus Moses gave the word of command, and Aaron bare the rod which was the token of the divine presence and operation; and at Moses's word he gave the signal of the miracle being performed.

V. 8. Intreat, &c.] Though the magicians succeeded in their attempt to imitate this miracle also; yet Pharaoh felt that the power of God was employed against him: and notwithstanding his haughtiness and impiety, he was constrained to tremble before him, and to pay such respect unto Moses, and Aaron, as to beg of them to intreat the Lord for him.—Under the anguish of this most humiliating, and disgusting judgment, he was inclined to dismiss Israel; but it was an extorted, reluctant willingness, and therefore not durable. (vii. 1.)

V. 9. Glory over me, &c.] This expression seems to mean, that Moses was willing, as we say, to be Pharaoh's humble servant in the business; he would do any thing for him which he could desire, and allow him to fix his own time; so glad would he be to see him submit, and escape destruction, by letting Israel go.—By thus leaving Pharaoh to fix the time when the frogs should depart, it became the more undeniable, that Jehovah both sent and removed the judgment; and this would deprive him of all pretences to ascribe it to other causes.

V. 10. To-morrow, &c.] We are naturally induced on this occasion to enquire, why Pharaoh did not choose to be delivered from the frogs immediately? To this it may be answered, because he still indulged unbelief, and harboured expectations that they would go away of themselves; and then he should get rid of them without being obliged to Moses, or to Jehovah; and without the necessity of liberating Israel. The plague was so terrible, that he could scarcely endure it: yet he would bear up, as well as he could, one day longer in this expectation.

V. 14. They gathered, &c.] It thus appeared that they were real frogs, which God in judgment had first created, and then in mercy destroyed.

V. 15. Saw that, &c.] Pharaoh could have no pretence to question either the power of Jehovah, or the divine mission of Moses: whilst the plague pressed upon him, he was inclined to submit, for it was insupportable: but when it was removed, he mistook, as many do, a respite for a deliverance; motives of ambition, pride, and interest, began again to influence his mind; and thus he was induced to break his promise, and persist in disobedience. Having engaged in the contest, the further he proceeded the more he was infatuated; that, which at first appeared a loss and weakening of his kingdom, was considered as an insufferable degradation of his dignity; and he considered himself engaged in honour not to be thus threatened and forced into submission. This being evidently the state of his mind, both judgments and mercies tended to increase his obduracy.

V. 16. Lice, &c.] Had the Lord sent lions and tygers in large droves, to devour the Egyptians; or armies of victorious enemies to desolate the land, Pharaoh, though crushed, would have appeared in his own eyes, and in the eyes of others, of some consequence: but it was inconceivably humiliating, and rendered him extremely contemptible, to be thus vanquished by such insignificant and despicable creatures, whom yet he could neither escape nor oppose.

18 And

18 And the magicians did ſo with their inchantments to bring forth lice, but they could not: ſo, there were lice upon man, and upon beaſt.

19 Then the magicians ſaid unto Pharaoh, This is the finger of God: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had ſaid.

20 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Riſe up early in the morning, and ſtand before Pharaoh, (lo, he cometh forth to the water) and ſay unto him, Thus ſaith the LORD, Let my people go, that they may ſerve me.

21 Elſe if thou wilt not let my people go, behold, I will ſend ſwarms of flies upon thee, and upon thy ſervants, and upon thy people, and into thy houſes: and the houſes of the Egyptians ſhall be full of ſwarms of flies, and alſo the ground whereon they are.

22 And I will ſever in that day the land of Goſhen, in which my people dwell, that no ſwarms of flies ſhall be there; to the end thou mayeſt know, that I am the LORD in the midſt of the earth.

23 And I will put a diviſion between my people, and thy people: to-morrow ſhall this ſign be.

24 And the LORD did ſo: and there came a grievous ſwarm of flies into the houſe of Pharaoh, and into his ſervants' houſes, and into all the land of Egypt: the land was corrupted by reaſon of the ſwarm of flies.

25 And Pharaoh called for Moſes, and for Aaron, and ſaid, Go ye, ſacrifice to your God in the land.

26 And Moſes ſaid, It is not meet ſo to do; for we ſhall ſacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians to the LORD our God: Lo, ſhall we ſacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians before their eyes, and will they not ſtone us?

27 We will go three days journey into the wilderneſs, and ſacrifice to the LORD our God, as he ſhall command us.

28 And Pharaoh ſaid, I will let you go, that ye may ſacrifice to the LORD your God in the wilderneſs; only you ſhall not go very far away: intreat for me.

29 And Moſes ſaid, Behold, I go out from thee, and I will intreat the LORD, that the ſwarms of flies may depart from Pharaoh, from his ſervants, and from his people, to-morrow: but let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully anymore, in not letting the people go to ſacrifice to the LORD.

30 And Moſes went out from Pharaoh, and intreated the LORD.

31 And the LORD did according to the word of Moſes; and he removed the ſwarms of

V. 18. But they could not, &c.] The Lord allowed the magicians to proceed, (or perhaps, without their knowledge, produced himſelf thoſe effects which they aſcribed to their inchantments,) till his righteous purpoſes were anſwered; and then they could do nothing; to convince them, that they had no power againſt Moſes, but what was given them from above. (John xix. 11.) Some ſuppoſe from the concluding part of the verſe that they attempted alſo to remove the plague, but could not.

V. 19. This is, &c.] The magicians, in order to vindicate their art, and their own ſkill in it, were driven to confeſs, that they were baffled only by the interpoſition of God. Yet this declaration produced no effect on the mind of Pharaoh: for it is far more eaſy to lead men into error and ſin, than to recover them to truth and obedience. Probably he ſtill endeavoured to believe, that Moſes was only a magician of ſuperior attainments.

V. 22. I will ſever, &c.] Perhaps the Iſraelites for their correction had in ſome meaſure had a ſhare in the former plagues, which would help to harden Pharaoh's heart: but it was at this time foretold, that they ſhould be totally exempted, that both they and the Egyptians might perceive the difference.

V. 24. The land was corrupted, &c.] When we conſider that all flies propagate by a maggot, of one kind or other, we ſhall perceive the emphaſis of this expreſſion, and the loathſomeneſs of this plague; for the land would not only be filled and deſolated by the flies themſelves, but deformed with ſtench and filthineſs by their maggots: for we muſt ſuppoſe theſe flies to have been in a ſtate of maturity; however they were produced.

V. 25. In the land, &c.] Pharaoh was aware, that if the Iſraelites departed into the wilderneſs to offer ſacrifice, they would not readily be brought back again; but he intimated, that if they only meant to ſacrifice to Jehovah, they might do it in the land, and he would make no further oppoſition.

V. 26. The abomination, &c.] That is, the objects of their abominable worſhip, namely, the calves or oxen, which the Egyptians adored as deities, and for ſacrificing of which, the Iſraelites alſo would be had in abomination. (1 Kings xi. 5—7. 2 Kings xxiii. 13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

How dangerous is it to provoke that God, who hath ſo many arrows in his quiver; who can employ the moſt deſpicable of his creatures as formidable executioners of his vengeance; and who can ſo readily turn all our pleaſures into loathing, all our comelineſs and decorations into deformity and corruption, and pour contempt on all our pride and ſelf-importance! Nor is there any reſiſtance, or eſcape from his tremendous indignation, whatever meſſengers he employs to convey it. Yet he ſtill continues merciful; he is ready to forgive every ſinner who ſubmits, and only purſues with vengeance ſuch as perſiſt in their rebellion. But let us not miſtake tranſient relentings, or haſty determinations of amendment, for that unreſerved ſubmiſſion which the word of God requires. Under the weight of incumbent affliction, and the dreadful expectation of ſtill heavier ſufferings, the proudeſt and hardeſt heart will feel ſome pangs of remorſe; the deſpiſed and hated ſervants of the Lord will then perhaps be called for; their prayers will be deſired, and amendment promiſed: but alas! ſuch appearances are entitled to ſmall regard, as little dependence can be placed upon them. Even Satan once beſought Chriſt not to torment him; and experience ſhews, that frequently ſuch intreaties and reſolutions ſpring from no higher principle than fear of torment. For when there is reſpite, ſuch men again harden their hearts, throw off their aſſumed and conſtrained ſhews of piety, return to their ſins, and commonly proceed to more ungodlineſs. But though we may not countenance the deluſion of men's living in ſin, in expectation of dying penitent; nor give unſcriptural encouragement to ſuch fallacious appearances: yet knowing that nothing is too hard for the Lord, we ſhould be ready to aſſiſt with our counſel and prayers, even thoſe perſons who have been enemies to us; rendering them every kind of ſervice, and ſhewing them every ſpecies of courteouſneſs, except that of flattering them in their falſe confidence; without being wearied of well-doing by reiterated diſappointments; yet reminding them of their former relapſes, and ſolemnly warning them no longer to deal deceitfully. But the love of ſin, and its ſuppoſed advantages and pleaſures, joined with the pride of the human heart, if they be not mortified by the grace of God, will prevail againſt all convictions and reſolutions. Hence many ſeek to enter in and are not able: they ſeem in earneſt, but there is ſome reſerve, ſome Herodias, ſome beloved ſecret ſin, of which they are ready to ſay, as Lot of Zoar, is it not a little one? They are unwilling to look upon themſelves as in danger of everlaſting miſery: they hope for ſome abatement, or ſome allowance; or propoſe to make ſome compromiſe to bolſter up their hopes, yet keep their ſin: they refrain from other ſins, they do many things, and give liberally, yea puniſh themſelves ſeverely: they abſtain at ſome times, and as it were, let their ſin depart a little way, provided it remain within call. But finally to divorce Herodias! To ſell all, and follow Chriſt, bearing the croſs! Alas! if this be the caſe, they muſt have longer time to conſider; they muſt poſtpone, though not forego, the thoughts of eternal life, and venture all conſequences: they are ſorrowful but depart from Chriſt, determined to keep the world at preſent, and hope for ſome future ſeaſon, when ſalvation may be had without ſuch coſtly ſacrifices. Yet the word of God is peremptory: He is of one mind, and who can turn him! The expected abatement, the favourable ſeaſon, is waited for in vain; the conviction wears off, the heart grows hard, and at length the poor ſinner is driven away in his wickedneſs, and left without hope to execrate his folly. Would we eſcape this dreadful end, we muſt earneſtly ſeek for grace to enable us, "if "our right hand, or eye, or foot offend us," reſolutely to part with it: without reſerve, or delay, we muſt hearken to the voice of Chriſt, finally to divorce every ſin, and renounce all that leads to ſin; and ſtand prepared, as called to it by his command and in his providence, to forſake all for his ſake, and to follow him bearing our croſs, as his true diſciples. Nor let us forget to obſerve, that they who would ſerve God, muſt ſeparate from the ſociety of ſinners, whoſe conduct is an abomination to the true chriſtian, and who reciprocally hold him in abhorrence.—We may alſo obſerve for our comfort, that though wicked men and deceivers often practiſe and proſper, yet their power is limited; and however they may impoſe on others, they cannot hurt the ſervant of God, who truſteth in him; but in due time ſhall be conſtrained to confeſs that

5 And the LORD appointed a ſet time, ſaying, To-morrow the LORD ſhall do this thing in the land.

6 And the LORD did that thing on the morrow, and all the cattle of Egypt died: but of the cattle of the children of Iſrael died not one.

7 And Pharaoh ſent, and behold, there was not one of the cattle of the Iſraelites dead. And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, and he did not let the people go.

8 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, Take to you handfuls of aſhes of the furnace, and let Moſes ſprinkle it towards the heaven in the ſight of Pharaoh.

9 And it ſhall become ſmall duſt in all the land of Egypt, and ſhall be a boil breaking forth with blains, upon man, and upon beaſt, throughout all the land of Egypt.

10 And they took aſhes of the furnace, and ſtood before Pharaoh, and Moſes ſprinkled it up toward heaven: and it became a boil breaking forth with blains, upon man, and upon beaſt.

11 And the magicians could not ſtand before Moſes, becauſe of the boils: for the boil was upon the magicians, and upon all the Egyptians.

12 And the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had ſpoken unto Moſes.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX.] V. 6. All the cattle.] That is, great multitudes of all kinds were ſpeedily ſwept away, all over Egypt. The Egyptians idolized their cattle, the deſtruction of which evinced their ſtupidity, and diſplayed the glory of Iſrael's God.

V. 7. Was hardened, &c.] Pharaoh had ſo long done violence to his conſcience, that it was now become callous, and as it were ſeared with an hot iron. So that, though his curioſity led him to enquire about the cattle of Iſrael, yet the miraculous preſervation of them, according to the expreſs prediction of Moſes, made no manner of impreſſion upon him.

V. 9. And it, &c.] The ſprinkling of the aſhes was merely a token of God's operation, and could have no effect in producing the diſeaſe: but it might be a ſignificant emblem of the corrupting and heating of the air with ſuch baleful effluvia, as produced theſe effects; and denote that the God of heaven, even the Lord God of Iſrael, was the author of this plague.—Though the former miracles ceaſed, diſtreſſed, and impoveriſhed the Egyptians, yet their health and perſons had hitherto been untouched: but the judgments of God came nearer and nearer; ſo that terrible and painful inflammations began to ſeize their bodies, as well as to prey upon the poor remains of their cattle.—(Job ii. 7, 8.)

V. 11. The boil, &c.] The magicians, though baffled, had hitherto it ſeems perſiſted in the conteſt; but, being viſited by this loathſome and painful diſorder, they were now rendered contemptible, and finally driven away.

V. 12. And the Lord, &c.] The Lord had declared twice, that he would harden the heart of Pharaoh, (v. 2. vii. 3.) But this is the firſt time, in which it is expreſſly ſaid that he actually did harden his heart; which expreſſion is afterwards ſeveral times repeated. Hence we may infer, that as God had before permitted and appointed a variety of events, which had a tendency to increaſe Pharaoh's obduracy; ſo now in puniſhment of his preſumptuous rebellion, he totally gave him up to his own heart's luſts, and to the power of Satan: nor can we interpret the expreſſion too ſtrongly; if we only remember this one thing, that God did not by his own power create any hardneſs or wickedneſs in his heart; "for God "is not tempted of evil, neither tempteth he any man," (James, i. 13—17.) Certainly it was God's ſettled purpoſe to have Pharaoh finally hardened, for the accompliſhment of which he effectually provided, and in which he doubtleſs was perfectly righteous. Indeed we can ſee, that this proud tyrant and cruel oppreſſor from the firſt deſerved to be made an example, by the juſt judge of the univerſe: and provided none are puniſhed who do not deſerve it, and none above their deſerts, there can be no cauſe of complaint, or ground of objection. Hardneſs of heart is a figurative expreſſion, denoting that inſenſibility of mind, upon which neither threatenings nor promiſes, judgments nor mercies, can make any abiding impreſſion: but the conſcience being ſtupified, and the heart filled with inſolent pride and preſumption, a man perſiſts in determined 14 For I will at this time ſend all my plagues upon thine heart, and upon thy ſervants, and upon thy people: that thou mayeſt know that there is none like me in all the earth.

15 For now I will ſtretch out my hand, that I may ſmite thee and thy people with peſtilence; and thou ſhalt be cut off from the earth.

16 And in very deed for this cauſe have I raiſed thee up, for to ſhew in thee my power; and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth.

17 As yet exalteſt thou thyſelf againſt my people, that thou wilt not let them go?

18 Behold, to-morrow about this time, I will cauſe it to rain a very grievous hail, ſuch as hath not been in Egypt, ſince the foundation thereof, even until now.

19 Send therefore now, and gather thy cattle, and all that thou haſt in the field: for upon every man and beaſt which ſhall be found in the field, and ſhall not be brought home, the hail ſhall come down upon them, and they ſhall die.

20 He that feared the word of the LORD amongſt the ſervants of Pharaoh, made his ſervants and his cattle flee into the houſes.

21 And he that regarded not the word of the LORD, left his ſervants and his cattle in the field.

22 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, ſtretch forth thine hand toward heaven, that there may be hail in all the land of Egypt; upon man, and upon beaſt, and upon every herb of the field, throughout the land of Egypt.

23 And Moſes ſtretched forth his rod toward heaven, and the LORD ſent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground; and the LORD rained hail upon the land of Egypt.

24 So there was hail, and fire mingled with the hail, very grievous, ſuch as there was none like it in all the land of Egypt, ſince it became a nation.

25 And the hail ſmote throughout all the land of Egypt, all that was in the field, both man and beaſt: and the hail ſmote every herb of the field, and brake every tree of the field.

26 Only in the land of Goſhen, where the children of Iſrael were, was there no hail.

27 And Pharaoh ſent, and called for Moſes and Aaron, and ſaid unto them, I have ſinned this time: the LORD is righteous, and I and my people are wicked.

mined impenitence, unbelief, and diſobedience. The tendency in our nature to this ſtate of mind is alſo called the ſtony heart, and to it is oppoſed the heart of fleſh, the broken and contrite, and the tender heart. Though the boil was upon the magicians, yet probably Pharaoh had eſcaped it, which would ſerve to increaſe his obduracy.

V. 16. For this, &c.] The Lord, who worketh all things according to the counſel of his own will, and who well knew the heart of Pharaoh, in his providence advanced him to the throne, and exalted him to ſuch an height of proſperity, as he knew would exceedingly enhance his inſolence and preſumption; and this at the time, when he intended to liberate Iſrael: on purpoſe that Pharaoh, in the pride and ſtoutneſs of his heart, might engage and perſiſt in this conteſt; from which he intended to take occaſion to diſplay his almighty power, ſovereign authority, and awful juſtice, in the deſtruction of that proud monarch; that all the nations might hear, and know that the God of Iſrael was indeed the Lord of the whole earth, for the glory of his name, and for an extenſive and durable advantage to mankind.

V. 17. As yet exalteſt, &c?] Art thou ſtill ſo infatuated, as to oppoſe thy feeble arm againſt that omnipotence, the effects of which thou haſt already witneſſed, and experienced to thy coſt?

V. 18. Such as, &c.] Rain of any kind is very rare in Egypt, but ſuch a tremendous tempeſt would be entirely unprecedented.

V. 20, 21.] When Moſes had delivered the meſſage, the report ſpread ſwiftly among the people; and ſome were ſo far influenced by what they had ſeen and heard, as to expect the ſtorm and provide againſt it: yet we do not perceive by the ſequel, that many of them were partakers of that true faith, which habitually and abidingly receives, and is influenced by, the teſtimony of God, and eſpecially in thoſe things which pertain unto the ſalvation of the ſoul. This ſeems to have been only a tranſient impreſſion of terror and conviction, which produced no laſting effects.

V. 25. Both man, &c.] Hitherto the lives of the Egyptians had been ſpared; but this plague firſt began to deſtroy them.

V. 30. I know, &c.] Moſes knew, that Pharaoh and his ſervants would not yet give up the conteſt, both as he was acquainted with God's purpoſe, and with the human heart. He was ſenſible that this declaration was not the effect

28 Intreat the LORD (for it is enough) that there be no more mighty thunderings and hail; and I will let you go, and ye ſhall ſtay no longer.

29 And Moſes ſaid unto him, As ſoon as I am gone out of the city, I will ſpread abroad my hands unto the LORD: and the thunder ſhall ceaſe, neither ſhall there be any more hail; that thou mayeſt know, how that the earth is the LORD's.

30 But as for thee and thy ſervants, I know that ye will not yet fear the LORD God.

31 And the flax, and the barley was ſmitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was bolled.

32 But the wheat and the rye were not ſmitten: for they were not grown up.

33 And Moſes went out of the city from Pharaoh, and ſpread abroad his hands unto the LORD: and the thunders and hail ceaſed, and the rain was not poured upon the earth.

34 And when Pharaoh ſaw that the rain, and the hail, and the thunders were ceaſed, he ſinned yet more, and hardened his heart, he and his ſervants.

35 And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, neither would he let the children of Iſrael go, as the LORD had ſpoken by Moſes.

effect of any gracious change, but extorted merely by terror and anguiſh of ſpirit.

V. 31. Was bolled.] That is, it was grown up into ſtems, or ſtalks.

V. 32. Were not grown up.] And therefore they were not ſo much expoſed, and were in conſequence preſerved.

V. 33. Moſes went out of, &c.] Moſes, being aſſured of the divine protection, expreſſed his confidence before Pharaoh and his ſervants, by going forth out of the city in the midſt of this tremendous ſtorm: and thus alſo he illuſtrated the diſtinction and ſeparation betwixt Egypt and Iſrael, before he began his interceſſion.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Did the Lord commonly execute his full vengeance at once, the hearts of ſinners would be diſmayed, and they would not dare to rebel with ſuch ſtoutneſs and contempt as they generally do: but "becauſe ſentence againſt an "evil work is not executed ſpeedily; therefore the heart of "the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil." (Eccle. viii. 11.) But "evil purſueth ſinners," and with rapid, though often unnoticed, ſteps approaches nearer and nearer; nor is there any poſſible eſcape but by repentance, and turning unto God in the way of his appointment. God hath a variety of methods, whereby he can impoveriſh thoſe who have grown rich by injuſtice, and deprive men of thoſe things which they have idolized: and if they will not regard when he bereaves them of their ſubſtance, he can fill their bodies with diſeaſe, and their hearts with terror, and at length cut them off in their wickedneſs.—Satan encourages his ſervants with hopes of great advantage, but he cannot enſure their impunity even in this world; and they, who wait patiently, ſhall ſee the folly of ſeducers and deceivers made manifeſt to all men, as that of theſe magicians alſo was. (2 Tim. iii. 9.) Though men treat the Lord with contempt, and ſet him at defiance, yet they cannot defeat his purpoſes; nay, he will conſtrain them to ſubſerve his glory: and many, in his myſterious providence, have been exceedingly proſpered, and even exalted upon thrones, only to diſcover the wickedneſs of their diſpoſitions, in order that the juſtice and power of God might be diſplayed in their deſtruction. Yet they have none to blame but themſelves for that pride and ungodlineſs, which abuſe both the bounty and patience of God into an occaſion, and encouragement to ſin: for however the Lord harden the hearts of men, he always does it judicially, as a puniſhment of former ſins; and generally of the ſin of hardening their own hearts under ſolemn warnings, deep convictions, ſevere rebukes, and remarkable deliverances. Even in the midſt of wicked nations, which are ripe for vengeance, ſome are more deſtitute of all fear of God, and more daring in ſin, than others. But alas! that men ſhould be more careful of their cattle and property, than of their ſouls!—Would we eſcape the threatened vengeance of God, we muſt notice his warnings, and flee for refuge at his appointment: for they, who diſregard his word, will be convinced of its truth when it is too late. Under the proſpect of impending deſtruction, the anguiſh of ſuffering, and the diſmay of conſcience, the proudeſt ſinner is often appalled, and the moſt humiliating confeſſions, and moſt pious language are extorted which men uſe, not becauſe they thoroughly mean it, but becauſe they are conſcious that it ſuits their caſe and ſituation.—This is indeed neither voluntary nor abiding, and therefore cannot avail the impenitent ſinner; it is, however, honourable to God, and illuſtrates his juſtice in puniſhing ſuch as having reſpite, return back to, and are hardened in, iniquity. And though we muſt ſtill be ready to pray for our enemies; yet we muſt not judge of men's characters by ſuch tranſient pangs of conviction, but by their habitual conduct. Whilſt all things concur in ſealing and haſtening the obſtinate ſinner's condemnation, the Lord gives his people ſafety, amidſt the ſtorms and tempeſts which rage without, but which cannot even diſturb the ſweet calm that prevails within; "for the "work of righteouſneſs ſhall be peace, and the effect of "righteouſneſs, quietneſs and aſſurance for ever." (Iſaiah, xxxii. 17.)

The plague of darkneſs, Pharaoh again treating with Moſes, but again hardened, and again driving him away with threats, v. 21—29.

AND the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Go in unto Pharaoh: for I have hardened his heart, and the heart of his ſervants; that I might ſhew theſe my ſigns before him:

2 And that thou mayeſt tell in the ears of thy ſon, and of thy ſon's ſon, what things I have wrought in Egypt, and my ſigns which I have done amongſt them; that ye may know how that I am the LORD.

3 And Moſes and Aaron came in unto Pharaoh, and ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith the LORD God of the Hebrews, How long wilt thou refuſe to humble thyſelf before me? Let my people go, that they may ſerve me.

4 Elſe if thou refuſe to let my people go, behold to-morrow will I bring the locuſts into thy coaſt.

5 And they ſhall cover the face of the earth, that one cannot be able to ſee the earth: and they ſhall eat the reſidue of that which is eſcaped, which remaineth unto you from the hail, and ſhall eat every tree which groweth for you out of the field.

6 And they ſhall fill thy houſes, and the houſes of all thy ſervants, and the houſes of all the Egyptians: which neither thy fathers, nor thy fathers' fathers have ſeen, ſince the day that they were upon the earth, unto this day. And he turned himſelf, and went out from Pharaoh.

7 And Pharaoh's ſervants ſaid unto him, How long ſhall this man be a ſnare unto us? Let the men go, that they may ſerve the LORD their God: Knoweſt thou not yet, that Egypt is deſtroyed?

8 And Moſes and Aaron were brought again unto Pharaoh: and he ſaid unto them, Go, ſerve the LORD your God: but who are they that ſhall go?

9 And Moſes ſaid, We will go with our young, and with our old, with our ſons, and with our daughters; with our flocks, and with our herds will we go: for we muſt hold a feaſt unto the LORD.

10 And he ſaid unto them, Let the LORD be ſo with you, as I will let you go, and your little ones: look to it, for evil is before you.

11 Not ſo: go now ye that are men, and ſerve the LORD, for that you did deſire. And they were driven out from Pharaoh's preſence.

12 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Stretch out thine hand over the land of Egypt for the locuſts, that they may come up upon the land of Egypt, and eat every herb of the land, even all that the hail hath left.

13 And Moſes ſtretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, and the LORD brought an eaſt-wind upon the land all that day, and all that night: and when it was morning, the eaſt-wind brought the locuſts.

NOTES.

CHAP. X.] V. 6. Which neither, &c.] The ravages, which locuſts make in thoſe countries, are frequently very dreadful. (Joel, i. 4—7. ii. 1—11.) They even darken the earth, by intercepting with their inconceivable multitudes the light of the ſun; they turn fruitful countries into deſolate deſerts, and leave the wretched inhabitants to periſh with famine; nor can they by any means be reſiſted or eſcaped. Theſe locuſts were dreadful beyond example and compariſon, in their ſize and multitudes, and in the deſolations which they occaſioned: and they were thus foretold, that the hand of the Lord in ſending them might be more evident.

V. 10. Let the Lord be ſo, &c.] This was either ſpoken in ſcorn and contempt, as if Pharaoh would ſay, 'Let the 'Lord be with you, and take care of you, if he can, but I 'will not let you go:' or by way of imprecation; as if he meant to ſay, 'I would that the Lord may never be 'any more with you, than I will let you go: for that I am 'reſolved, I never will conſent to.' On the contrary he intended to keep the children, as hoſtages to enſure the return of their parents: And he declared, that if Moſes and Aaron continued thus troubleſome, he would call them to account, and inflict puniſhment on them, for all the damage, which had been done: and conſidering his mad preſumption, he would certainly have attempted it, had not the Lord diſmayed and reſtrained him.

14 And the locuſts went up over all the land of Egypt, and reſted in all the coaſts of Egypt: very grievous were they; before them there were no ſuch locuſts as they, neither after them ſhall be ſuch.

15 For they covered the face of the whole earth, ſo that the land was darkened, and they did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees, which the hail had left: and there remained not any green thing in the trees, or in the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt.

16 Then Pharaoh called for Moſes and Aaron in haſte; and he ſaid, I have ſinned againſt the LORD your God, and againſt you.

17 Now therefore forgive, I pray thee, my ſin only this once, and intreat the LORD your God, that he may take away from me this death only.

18 And he went out from Pharaoh, and intreated the LORD.

19 And the LORD turned a mighty ſtrong weſt-wind, which took away the locuſts, and caſt them into the Red ſea: there remained not one locuſt in all the coaſts of Egypt.

20 But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, ſo that he would not let the children of Iſrael go.

21 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Stretch out thine hand toward heaven, that there may be darkneſs over the land of Egypt, even darkneſs which may be felt.

22 And Moſes ſtretched forth his hand toward heaven: and there was a thick darkneſs in all the land of Egypt three days.

23 They ſaw not one another, neither roſe any from his place for three days: but all the children of Iſrael had light in their dwellings.

24 And Pharaoh called unto Moſes, and ſaid, Go ye, ſerve the LORD; only let your flocks and your herds be ſtayed: let your little ones alſo go with you.

25 And Moſes ſaid, Thou muſt give us alſo ſacrifices, and burnt-offerings, that we may ſacrifice unto the LORD our God.

26 Our cattle alſo ſhall go with us; there ſhall not an hoof be left behind: for thereof muſt we take to ſerve the LORD our God; and we know not with what we muſt ſerve the LORD, until we come thither.

27 But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he would not let them go.

28 And Pharaoh ſaid unto him, Get thee from me, take heed to thyſelf, ſee my face no more: for in that day thou ſeeſt my face, thou ſhalt die.

29 And Moſes ſaid, Thou haſt ſpoken well, I will ſee thy face again no more.

CHAP.

V. 16, 17.] Pharaoh now had nothing before his eyes but the inevitable death of himſelf, and his people by famine; unleſs ſome reſpite could be obtained. He therefore confeſſed his ſins to Moſes, craved forgiveneſs of him, and intreated him to pray for him: but we never read that he confeſſed his ſins unto the Lord, humbled himſelf before him, or beſought him to forgive him. (2 Chron. xxxiii. 12—19.)

V. 19. Red ſea, &c.] Or weedy ſea, for ſo it is in the original.—The Greek tranſlators of the Bible call it the Red ſea, either from the colour of the waters, of the ſoil, or of the weeds; or from the neighbourhood of the Edomites, whoſe name ſignifies red. This is a large arm of the ſea, which runs up between Arabia and Idumea on one hand, and Egypt on the other, and ſeparates the continents of Africa and Aſia from each other; except as they communicate by the narrow iſthmus of Suez, which lies betwixt the end of the Red ſea, and the Mediterranean ſea.—Some learned men are of opinion, that only a ſmall part of this arm of the ſea was intended, and that the Red, or weedy ſea ſhould be diſtinguiſhed from the Arabian gulph.—The Red ſea in many ancient writers is uſed for that which is now called the Indian ocean.

V. 21. Darkneſs, &c.] It is generally ſuppoſed that the clammy fog, which occaſioned this judgment, extinguiſhed all the lamps of the Egyptians, and left them in total darkneſs; which could be felt in the pain which it excited.—But certainly it was ſuch a darkneſs as we have no conception of, and nearly allied to the "blackneſs of darkneſs "for ever." (Jude, 13. Rev. xvi. 10, 11.)

V. 23. They ſaw not, &c.] It is a tradition of the Jews, that the Egyptians were affrighted by horrible noiſes, occaſioned by evil ſpirits, and that this is the meaning of the expreſſion of the Pſalmiſt, "He ſent evil angels among "them!" (Pſalm lxxviii. 49.) Doubtleſs their own conſciences would be filled with horror, and inflict torment upon them, when thus incloſed in this tremendous darkneſs.—The Iſraelites might now have marched off unmoleſted; but it was the Lord's pleaſure that they ſhould go forth, not as abject fugitives, but as triumphant conquerors.

V. 29. Thou haſt ſpoken, &c.] The next chapter ſeems an appendix to this, and the conference therein recorded appears to have taken place directly; and Moſes afterwards went out, intending not to ſee Pharaoh's face again.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ultimate end of all the Lord's diſpenſations, whether in judgment or in mercy, is the manifeſtation of his own glory: and though we may not at present clearly discern it; yet we shall hereafter behold it in its full lustre, and the whole world shall either with joyful acclamations proclaim, or in silence admit, that he is righteous in all his ways and holy in all his works. At present it is our duty to believe, and we shall hereafter see the glory of God.—The examples of severity and goodness, which are recorded in the Sacred Scriptures, were written for our profit; and the Lord's wisdom and justice in them will more evidently appear, if our own experience evince their extensive and lasting usefulness. Whatever we learn from the Word, and from the works of God, we should point out and interpret to our children, and shew them the power, wisdom, justice, and love of the Lord displayed in them; for they were intended not only for our good, but that of our children also.—We should also remember that Satan and his instruments are extremely averse to our serving God with our sons and our daughters; and that they employ various methods of keeping them from the Lord.—We have need therefore to be more peremptory about it, and careful to initiate them, even when "little "ones," in the ways and worship of God; "for of such "is the kingdom of heaven:" and we ought not to imitate some apparently religious parents who act as if they were of Pharaoh's opinion, and supposed that the service of God was only for men and women; for they allow their children to stay behind when they go to worship, and permit them to spend their time in dissipation and vanity; as if they would leave them in Egypt, as hostages for their own return.—Nor should young people forget the admonition of the Lord, "Remember thy Creator in the days "of thy youth;" while Satan's counsel is to keep children in a state of slavery to sin and to the world, till they grow older.—But we must not only serve God with our households, but with all our substance, not leaving a hoof behind; not suffering the enemy to keep possession of any part of it, either by avariciously hoarding it, or by spending it upon our pride and lusts: considering all our possessions, as the Lord's property committed to our stewardship, and not knowing what he may immediately demand; we shall be prepared to expend, or part with, any proportion that may be required, with less hesitation and reluctance.—Neither should we regard the contempt and reproach, nor even the threats of those, who would deter us from serving God: they will often affright us with the idea, that evil is before us; but we shall not find it so, if we trust and obey the Lord. He will be for us, and perhaps they will be ere long constrained to bow before us, and make their supplications unto us: certainly, in the days of adversity, and in the gloomy vale of death, when the wicked are silent in darkness, consumed with terrors, and tormented by their own consciences, we shall walk in the light of God's countenance, and rejoice in his salvation: and when they are driven into the blackness of eternal darkness, we shall have an inheritance amongst the saints in light eternal. Let us then lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth near. Only "looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God:" for the hardest sinner often trembles, the most stupid is sometimes self-condemned; nay some, that are finally lost, have "been al-"most persuaded to be Christians." But pride of heart, the love of sin, and procrastination form the three-fold cord which they cannot break; upon such persons all counsel is thrown away, though backed with the evidence of the most undeniable facts, and the certain prospect of destruction. They would treat about reconciliation, but they will not consent to yield unreservedly, to part with every sin, and cast themselves wholly upon the Lord's mercy: He therefore rejects their proposals with disdain; and every relenting and respite leaves them still harder, as the winter sun thaws the snow, which, when its beams are withdrawn, congeals into ice.—We may find such persons using good words, and putting the Lord's servants in his place, as if they were gods to them, (Ex. vii. 1,) and seeming to expect salvation from them: but they pray not earnestly and constantly for themselves; and therefore sin retains its dominion, and Satan his possession, and their last state is worse then the first.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1. Yet will I, &c.] It seems that this was a secret revelation to Moses, whilst he was in the presence of Pharaoh, in order that he might denounce this last dreadful judgment, before he went out from him. Doubtless Moses would be glad to hear of so speedy a period being put to this contest, which desolated Egypt in order to deliver Israel.

V. 3. Very great, &c.] The people reverenced Moses as a very extraordinary person, of wonderful courage, wisdom, and sanctity, and endued with powers of inflicting

6 And there ſhall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, ſuch as there was none like it, nor ſhall be like it any more.

9 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Pharaoh ſhall not hearken unto you: that my wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt.

10 And Moſes and Aaron did all theſe wonders before Pharaoh: and the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, ſo that he would not let the children of Iſrael go out of his land.

ing judgments, or removing them at pleaſure: and probably many of them were ſecretly perſuaded, that he had juſtice on his ſide; and were diſpoſed to blame Pharaoh, as the author of their calamities: for though princes are oft infatuated, and hireling courtiers flatter them and perſuade them of the contrary; yet the moſt of the people generally favour the cauſe of the oppreſſed, and conſider ſome meaſure of liberty as the common right of mankind.

V. 4. Will I go out, &c.] The Lord went out as a mighty conqueror to trample down, and triumph over his enemies.

V. 7. Move his tongue, &c.] 'None ſhall dare to do, 'or to ſpeak any evil of them; but all ſhall ſtand in awe 'of them.'

V. 8. In a great anger, &c.] Moſes thus expreſſed his deteſtation of Pharaoh's obſtinacy, who probably treated this laſt meſſage with contempt: and thus he ſolemnly left him to the judgment of God, as an incurable rebel.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the Lord has inflicted ſo many, and ſuch ſevere judgments, that man can ſcarcely conceive any thing worſe; he has ſtill more terrible plagues in reſerve: but he generally executes thoſe laſt, which he denounced firſt (iv. 23.) Still "enduring with much long ſuffering even the veſſels "of wrath, which are fitted for deſtruction, that he may "ſhew his wrath, and make his power known." (Rom. ix. 22.) But what are all theſe ten plagues combined, when compared with the wrath to come, that one plague reſerved for all obſtinate rebels in another world!—The Lord can make his people a burdenſome ſtone to all, who burden themſelves with them, (Zech. xii. 3;) and render all ſenſible that it is at their peril they touch them; nay he is able to give them favour in the ſight of thoſe who have been their enemies.—When he enables his ſervants to maintain a conſiſtency of character, he will put ſuch honour upon them, as ſhall ſilence all that ſlander, confound all who deſpiſe them, and conſtrain all to approve of their conduct, reverence their perſons, and even to bow down before them: and when the people of God ſhall triumph in his redemption, and their enemies cry out under the anguiſh of his indignation, the difference will be too evident to remain longer unnoticed. They, who are employed of God in public ſervices, may, conſiſtently with the deepeſt humility, magnify their office; and without deviating from chriſtian meekneſs, may expreſs deep indignation, as well as ſorrow, at the wickedneſs of mankind; after his example, who "looked around with anger being grieved with the hard-"neſs of their hearts." Such anger againſt the ſin of thoſe, whoſe good they have perſeveringly ſought in vain, and for whom their prayers have again and again prevailed, is a terrible indication, and common forerunner, of the wrath of God. The Lord, however, will at laſt be glorified in all his diſpenſations; and as he hath foretold that his Goſpel would be ſlighted and abuſed, we muſt not think the worſe of it on that account.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 2. This month, &c.] That is, the month Abib, (Exod. xxxiv. 18. Deut. xvi. 1;) called elſewhere, Niſan, (Eſther iii. 7:) which anſwers nearly to the latter part ginning of months: it ſhall be the firſt month of the year to you.

3 Speak ye unto all the congregation of Iſrael, ſaying, In the tenth day of this month, they ſhall take to them every man a lamb, according to the houſe of their fathers, a lamb for an houſe.

4 And if the houſhold be too little for the lamb, let him, and his neighbour next unto his houſe, take it according to the number of the ſouls; every man, according to his eating, ſhall make your count for the lamb.

5 Your lamb ſhall be without blemiſh, a male of the firſt year: ye ſhall take it out from the ſheep or from the goats.

6 And ye ſhall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the ſame month: and the whole aſſembly of the congregation of Iſrael ſhall kill it in the evening.

7 And they ſhall take of the blood, and ſtrike it on the two ſide poſts, and on the upper door-poſt of the houſes, wherein they ſhall eat it.

8 And they ſhall eat the fleſh in that night; roaſt with fire, and unleavened bread, and with bitter herbs they ſhall eat it.

9 Eat not of it raw, nor ſodden at all with water, but roaſt with fire: his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof.

10 And ye ſhall let nothing of it remain until the morning: and that which remaineth of it until the morning, ye ſhall burn with fire.

11 And thus ſhall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your ſhoes on your feet, and your ſtaff in your hand: and ye ſhall eat it in haſte; it is the LORD's paſſover.

12 For I will paſs through the land of Egypt this night, and will ſmite all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beaſt: and againſt all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment; I am the LORD.

13 And the blood ſhall be to you for a token upon the houſes where you are: and when I ſee the blood, I will paſs over you, and the plague ſhall not be upon you, to deſtroy you, when I ſmite the land of Egypt.

part of March, and the beginning of April, with us.—This had hitherto been the ſeventh month; and the Iſraelites continued to compute ſeveral of their civil concerns in the ſame manner: but in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, when they were formed into a nation and a church, and received as it were a new kind of exiſtence, it was appointed to be the firſt month of the year to them, and their ſacred inſtitutions were in general reckoned from it. This new ſtyle began the year with the ſpring, when the face of the creation was renewed.

V. 3. Speak ye unto, &c.] Doubtleſs the congregation had been inſtructed to hold themſelves in readineſs to depart at an hour's warning, and were much engaged in preparation; yet they muſt ſpare time to obſerve a ſacred feſtival; for we muſt never be too buſy to attend upon God's ordinances.—The Iſraelites were enjoined to eat the paſſover with their families and relatives, as much as poſſible.

V. 4. Make your count, &c.] That every one might appear to have an equal intereſt in this typical ſacrifice, they were to join in the purchaſe of the lamb, according to their numbers.

V. 6. Ye ſhall keep, &c.] This preparation would prevent diſtraction at the time; and was a figurative inſtruction to prepare their hearts for ſolemn ordinances.—Each of the congregation ſeems to have killed his own lamb; but it was ordered to be done publicly in the preſence of the aſſembly of the elders, or repreſentatives.—It is generally ſuppoſed that the paſſover was ſlain between 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and ſun-ſet.

V. 7. The two ſide-poſts, and on the, &c.] But not on the threſhold.

V. 10. And ye ſhall let nothing, &c.] Leſt they ſhould reſerve it for ſuperſtitious purpoſes.

V. 11. With your, &c.] The Iſraelites were ordered to eat the paſſover as men in haſte, being in readineſs to ſet out upon their journey. There is no appearance of the paſſover being afterwards eaten in this poſture: Chriſt and his apoſtles ſeem to have eaten it ſitting. (Matt. xxvi. 20. Mark, xiv. 18. Luke, xxii. 14.) Probably ſeveral of theſe circumſtances were only intended to be obſerved at that time, and not afterwards.

V. 12. I will, &c.] The awful proofs which Jehovah gave of his preſence and vengeance upon his enemies, was a triumph over the gods of Egypt; and probably was attended with a deva ſtation of their idols and temples; as Dagon was thrown down before the ark. (1 Sam. v. 1.)

V. 14. You ſhall keep it, &c.] The paſſover was both a remembrance of Iſrael's preſervation and deliverance out 15 Seven days ſhall ye eat unleavened bread, even the firſt day ye ſhall put away leaven out of your houſes: for whoſoever eateth leavened bread, from the firſt day until the ſeventh day, that ſoul ſhall be cut off from Iſrael.

16 And in the firſt day, there ſhall be an holy convocation, and in the ſeventh day there ſhall be an holy convocation to you: no manner of work ſhall be done in them, ſave that which every man muſt eat, that only may be done of you.

17 And ye ſhall obſerve the feaſt of unleavened bread; for in this ſelf-ſame day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt: therefore ſhall ye obſerve this day in your generations, by an ordinance for ever.

out of Egypt, and a remarkable type of Chriſt. Though the Iſraelites were not guilty of the ſame crimes, and with the ſame aggravations, as the Egyptians were; yet they alſo were ſinners. Their preſervation and deliverance were not the recompence of their own righteouſneſs, but the reſult of diſtinguiſhing mercy: (Deut. ix. 4—6. Ezek. xx. 7—9;) of this they were reminded; and by this ordinance inſtructed that all bleſſings came to them, being ſinners, through the ſhedding and ſprinkling of blood, as prefiguring the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world, (Rev. xiii, 8;) according to God's purpoſe, ſhewn by theſe types and ſhadows. The ſlaying of the paſchal lamb, the ſprinkling of the blood, and the eating of the fleſh by the Iſraelites in Egypt, was a confeſſion of ſin, a profeſſion of faith, and an act of external obedience; in which doubtleſs ſome were ſpiritual worſhippers, who through the ſign diſcerned the thing ſignified; the moſt, it is to be feared, reſted in the outward performance, which however ſecured the external deliverance: but had any, in preſumption and contempt, refuſed obedience, they would have been expoſed to the ſame judgments as the Egyptians were. In after ages the power and love of God, in the deliverance of Iſrael from Egypt, were commemorated by this obſervance: and though numbers ſaw no farther; yet ſome would diſcover the price of that redemption, and of all other bleſſings; and to them it would not only be a joyful tribute of gratitude for former temporal mercies, but an act of humble faith and dependence on the promiſed Saviour even until his coming. Though ſome of theſe circumſtances might have reference to the haſty departure of Iſrael out of Egypt; yet they all more aptly ſhadow forth the great Antitype. In him every true Iſraelite has an equal intereſt: he was indeed the Lamb without ſpot and blemiſh (1 Peter i. 19.) In the fulneſs of time, 4000 years after the firſt promiſe of him, he was ſlain for ſinners: the whole aſſembly of the congregation of Iſrael demanding, and witneſſing his death. Not only was his blood ſhed, but he ſuffered agonies unknown from that juſtice of God, which is as a conſuming fire, and which is here ſhadowed forth by the roaſting of the paſchal lamb. But the ſhedding of his blood, and the intenſeneſs of his ſufferings, are only the preparation of ſalvation; without the application of it to ourſelves, we ſhall reap no benefit from it: receiving the atonement by faith alone gives ſecurity to our guilty ſouls, that we ſhall not be deſtroyed in the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. Whilſt we reap the benefit of the Redeemer's blood, we muſt not be aſhamed openly to profeſs our dependence on him, and obligations to him; but the vile apoſtate, or the abuſer of Goſpel Grace, who tramples the blood under his feet, contracts the deepeſt guilt. (Heb. x. 28, 29.) And as the Lamb of God is the ſacrifice for our ſins; he is alſo the food of our ſouls, on which we ought "to feed in our "hearts by faith with thankſgiving:" receiving him, and the whole of his purchaſed bleſſings, with equal valuation; and not ſeparating his teaching and government, from his ſacrifice. Leaven, the known emblem of hypocriſy (Luke xii. 1,) and of malice and wickedneſs, (1 Cor. v. 7, 8,) muſt be purged out, and the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth ſubſtituted. The true penitent alone, who bitterly mourns for ſin, (Zech. xii. 10,) and mingles his rejoicing in Chriſt with godly ſorrow, can properly eat this paſſover: temptations, and chaſtiſements, though they ſeem to alloy the feaſt, yet render it doubly ſweet to the experienced chriſtian; who refreſhed and ſtrengthened by this ſpiritual food, ſtands prepared to do his maſter's will, and to walk in his ways, though rough and narrow; having his loins girded about with truth, and his feet ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace: and being a ſtranger and pilgrim upon earth, he is ready to renounce the world and ſin, and to march with alacrity towards the heavenly Canaan. Some glimpſes of this light believers of old diſcovered: with the New Teſtament in our hands we may have clearer notions than they had; but the queſtion is, whether we have more lively affections?

V. 15. Seven days, &c.] This is a further type of the chriſtian's holy life, which is the fruit of the Saviour's ſuffering death, and the effect of true faith in him; in which the old leaven of ſin is put away with abhorrence, while love and purity unfeigned prevail; not only at a few favoured ſeaſons of ſpecial comfort in communion with God, but habitually and with continuance.—They who violated this command were either deprived of the privileges of an Iſraelite, or cut off by death; which may be examined more fully on another occaſion. This was an expreſſion of the Lord's indignation againſt ſuch as deſpiſed his command; and an emblem of his abhorrence of hypocriſy in thoſe who profeſs faith in Chriſt, and yet live in the practice of known ſin.

V. 16. An holy convocation, &c.] That is an aſſembly of the people for ſolemn worſhip, and for the offering of ſacrifices.—No manner of work was permitted to be done, that the people might be the more at liberty to attend on the ordinances of God.

vened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even.

19 Seven days ſhall there be no leaven found in your houſes: for whoſoever eateth that which is leavened, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from the congregation of Iſrael, whether he be a ſtranger or born in the land.

20 Ye ſhall eat nothing leavened: in all your habitations ſhall ye eat unleavened bread.

21 Then Moſes called for all the elders of Iſrael, and ſaid unto them, Draw out and take you a lamb according to your families, and kill the paſſover.

22 And ye ſhall take a bunch of hyſſop, and dip it in the blood that is in the baſon, and ſtrike the lintel and the two ſide-poſts with the blood that is in the baſon: and none of you ſhall go out at the door of his houſe until the morning.

23 For the LORD will paſs through to ſmite the Egyptians, and when he ſeeth the blood upon the lintel, and on the two ſide-poſts, the LORD will paſs over the door, and will not ſuffer the deſtroyer to come in unto your houſes to ſmite you.

24 And ye ſhall obſerve this thing for an ordinance to thee, and to thy ſons for ever.

25 And it ſhall come to paſs, when ye be come to the land, which the LORD will give you according as he hath promiſed, that ye ſhall keep this ſervice.

26 And it ſhall come to paſs, when your children ſhall ſay unto you, What mean you by this ſervice?

27 That ye ſhall ſay, It is the ſacrifice of the LORD's paſſover, who paſſed over the houſes of the children of Iſrael in Egypt, when he ſmote the Egyptians, and delivered our houſes. And the people bowed the head and worſhipped.

28 And the children of Iſrael went away, and did as the LORD had commanded Moſes and Aaron, ſo did they.

29 And it came to paſs that at midnight the LORD ſmote all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt, from the firſt-born of Pharaoh that ſat on his throne, unto the firſt-born of the captive that was in the dungeon; and all the firſt-born of cattle.

30 And Pharaoh roſe up in the night, he and all his ſervants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a great cry in Egypt: for there was not a houſe where there was not one dead.

31 And he called for Moſes and Aaron by night, and ſaid, Riſe up, and get you forth from amongſt my people, both you and the children of Iſrael: and go ſerve the LORD, as ye have ſaid.

32 Alſo take your flocks and your herds, as ye have ſaid, and be gone: and bleſs me alſo.

33 And the Egyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might ſend them out of the land in haſte: for they ſaid, We be all dead men.

34 And the people took their dough before it was leavened, their kneading troughs being bound up in their clothes upon their ſhoulders.

V. 22. None of you, &c.] The blood which the Iſraelites had ſprinkled, was their only ſecurity from the deſtroying Angel, under the protection of which they were ſtedfaſtly to abide.

V. 27. It is the ſacrifice.] The paſſover was a ſacrifice, as offered to God, and typical of Chriſt: but it differed from all the other ſacrifices, in that no part of it was conſumed upon the altar. It typified the extreme ſufferings of Chriſt, and the application of his atonement to the conſcience; as others did his ſacrifice, when preſented to, and accepted of, the Father.

V. 29. At midnight, &c.] This circumſtance would exceedingly increaſe the terror of the tremendous execution. The Egyptians, for three days and nights juſt before, had been kept in perpetual ſolicitude and horror by the darkneſs; and now their reſt was broken by a more terrible calamity. By the death of the firſt-born they were righteouſly puniſhed for murdering the children of the Iſraelites; as well as for keping that nation in bondage, which God honoured by calling his ſon, and his firſt-born.

V. 30. There was not, &c.] Words can never expreſs the terror and bitterneſs of this ſudden blow from an inviſible hand, deſtroying the pride, hope, and comfort of every family, of every rank, throughout this populous kingdom: the whole nation at once mourning over their dead, and trembling for themſelves! (33.)

V. 34. Their dough before, &c.] The Iſraelites being kept in conſtant expectation of departing, were probably making preparation; but were driven away before their dough was baked, or even leavened. Thus the Lord enſured their preſent obſervance of the feaſt of unleavened bread; and their haſty departure would be ever after commemorated by the ſame annual feaſt.

35 And the children of Iſrael did according to the word of Moſes: and they borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of ſilver and jewels of gold, and raiment.

36 And the LORD gave the people favour in the ſight of the Egyptians, ſo that they lent unto them ſuch things as they required: and they ſpoiled the Egyptians.

37 And the children of Iſrael journeyed from Rameſes to Succoth, about ſix hundred thouſand on foot that were men, beſides children.

38 And a mixed multitude went up alſo with them; and flocks, and herds, even very much cattle.

39 And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened: becauſe they were thruſt out of Egypt, and could not tarry, neither had they prepared for themſelves any victual.

40 Now the ſojourning of the children of Iſrael, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years.

41 And it came to paſs, at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the ſelf-ſame day it came to paſs, that all the hoſts of the LORD went out from the land of Egypt.

42 It is a night to be much obſerved unto the LORD, for bringing them out from the land of Egypt: this is that night of the LORD to be obſerved of all the children of Iſrael, in their generations.

43 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes and Aaron, This is the ordinance of the paſſover: there ſhall no ſtranger eat thereof.

44 But every man's ſervant that is bought for money, when thou haſt circumciſed him, then ſhall he eat thereof.

45 A foreigner, and an hired ſervant ſhall not eat thereof.

46 In one houſe ſhall it be eaten, thou ſhalt not carry forth ought of the fleſh abroad out of the houſe: neither ſhall ye break a bone thereof.

47 All the congregation of Iſrael ſhall keep it.

48 And when a ſtranger ſhall ſojourn with thee, and will keep the paſſover to the LORD, let all his males be circumciſed, and then let him come near and keep it; and he ſhall be as one that is born in the land: for no uncircumciſed perſon ſhall eat thereof.

49 One

V. 35. They borrowed, &c.] In this extreme terror, the Egyptians were willing to purchaſe the favour and the ſpeedy departure of Iſrael at any price: and thus the Lord both took care that their hard-earned wages ſhould at laſt be paid, and that the people ſhould be well provided for their journey.

V. 36. Spoiled the Egyptians, &c.] They departed laden with their wealth, as if they had plundered them in war.

V. 37. Six hundred thouſand, &c.] Conſidering the proportion that women and children bear in general to grown men, the whole company could not be much leſs than two millions: an immenſe increaſe from ſeventy perſons, in but a little more than 200 years!

V. 38. A mixed multitude, &c.] Some probably would leave Egypt becauſe it was deſolated, others becauſe they were diſtreſſed or diſcontented; others out of curioſity to ſee what would become of Iſrael, and how they would ſerve the Lord; and perhaps a few, out of cordial love to them and their religion. But theſe were few indeed; for the bulk of this mixed multitude became a ſnare to them, (Num. xi. 4,) and probably after a time returned into Egypt. Theſe typify ſuch, as in all ages outwardly adhere to, but are not really of, the Church of God.—Their cattle ſeem to have been the only property, which they poſſeſſed in Egypt, and which the Lord had lately cauſed exceedingly to increaſe.

V. 40. Four, &c.] From the firſt calling of Abraham to the departure out of Egypt ſeems to have been exactly 430 years: The Septuagint reads it, 'the ſojourning of 'Iſrael,—in Egypt and in the land of Caanan.' But this is no more than a comment, though a juſt one.

V. 41. The hoſts, &c.] The Lord's armies, enliſted under his banner, and marching at his command.

V. 45. A foreigner, &c.] That is, until he be circumciſed. This teaches us, that without the circumciſion of the heart, or "being born of the Spirit," we can receive no benefit from the ſacrifice of Chriſt: and although, not being able to ſee this circumciſion of the heart, except in it's outward effects, we cannot make it the rule of admiſſion to the ſacred ordinance of the Lord's Supper; yet men ſhould "examine themſelves" reſpecting it, "and ſo eat of that bread, and drink of that cup." (1 Cor. xi. 28.)

V. 46. Neither ſhall ye break a bone, &c.] (John, xix. 36.)

V. 48. All his males, &c.] A man was not allowed to eat of the paſſover, till all the males, under his authority, were circumciſed as well as himſelf: for we muſt uſe our influence to promote attendance upon God's ordinances in our families.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

50 Thus did all the children of Iſrael; as the LORD commanded Moſes and Aaron, ſo did they.

is the commencement to them of a new life, of new hopes, pleaſures, and employments: and on the other hand we ſhall do well, if we begin every year, and every day with the ſervice of God. Happy they, who begin their lives with it, by remembering their Creator in the days of their youth. Whatever religious ordinance we are engaged in, we ſhould in due time and manner engage our families alſo in it: nor is any thing more honourable to God, or more profitable to men, than harmonious family religion: it is the beſt bond of domeſtic peace, the beſt ſolace of domeſtic afflictions, and the beſt ſecurity for the continuance and increaſe of domeſtic felicity; whilſt it affords an important advantage for conſtant growth in grace, and the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt. But in all our attendance on religious ordinances, ſecret, ſocial, or public, we muſt take heed and beware of this leaven of the Phariſees, which is hypocriſy. This is generally connected with the leaven of malice and wickedneſs, and often with that of covetouſneſs; which corrupt our ſervices, and render them an abomination unto a holy, heart-ſearching God. (Iſai. i. 10—17. lxvi. 3, 4. Matt. xxiii. 14—35.) Whatever we offer unto the Lord, or employ in his ſervice, muſt be the beſt of the kind. (Mal. i. 14.)—It is our bounden duty to attend upon all the appointments of God, and to endeavour ourſelves to underſtand, that we may explain to our children, the intention of every part: who ought therefore to be encouraged in their enquiries, and informed by clear and ſatisfactory anſwers; that, in the moſt eaſy and agreeable manner, they may become acquainted with the word and works of God, and join with us in celebrating the praiſes of his truth and mercy, and the wonders of his powerful arm. But though we muſt attend upon every ordinance of God; yet upon every one in it's ſtated order and ſeaſon: and though we may not proudly neglect, or deſpiſe any of his appointments, leſt we be cut off from the privileges of the Iſrael of God; yet we may properly take time for ſerious enquiry, and conſcientious preparation, that we may at length with more ſolemnity, and to better purpoſe attend on them.—When the Lord's time comes to perform his promiſes, mountains ſhall melt and flow down at his preſence, and nothing ſhall create any more difficulty, than is proper to illuſtrate his powerful operation.—As the greateſt and proudeſt ſinner is not exalted out of the reach of his omnipotent vengeance; ſo the leaſt are not beneath his notice: and if a temporal calamity filled Egypt with ſuch terror and lamentation; what will be the conſternation of the wicked at the approaching judgment day! For fear of impending death, the Egyptians were willing to part not only with their bond-ſlaves, but with their gold and ſilver: "What "then ſhall a man be profited, if he gain the whole "world, and loſe his own ſoul? Or what ſhall a man "give in exchange for his ſoul?" (Matt. xvi. 26.) Alas! riches will not profit in the day of wrath; it coſts more to redeem ſouls from deſtruction: yet if we would eſcape, we muſt moderate our worldly attachments, give up all our ſinful projects, and hold ourſelves in continual readineſs to leave all and follow Chriſt: and if we ſhould be called to part with, not only our wealth, but every temporal comfort; the perfect freedom of his ſervice will give a reliſh to our mean and unſavoury proviſions. But his blood is the only ranſom for our ſouls: without the ſhedding of it there could have been no remiſſion; without the ſprinkling of it there can be no ſalvation. Chriſt our paſſover is ſacrificed for us: but have we, by faith in his name, ſheltered our ſouls from the deſerved vengeance of God, under the protection of his atoning blood? Do we keep cloſe to him in the exerciſe of habitual dependence on his merits, and acceſs to the throne of Grace through his interceſſion? Do we ſo profeſs our faith in, and our obligations to, the Redeemer, that all, who paſs by, may know, as by the blood-beſprinkled door, to whom we belong? Are we careful not to abuſe, or diſgrace, this our profeſſion by any inconſiſtent conduct, leſt we ſhould trample the blood of the covenant under our feet? Is Chriſt indeed, in his purchaſed bleſſings, the food and feaſt of our ſouls? Do we feed upon him in our hearts by faith with thankſgiving, deriving all our life, ſtrength, hope, and conſolation from his fulneſs of truth and grace? Do we receive him in his whole character, and for all the purpoſes of ſalvation, from wrath, from ſin, from this evil world, and from the powers of darkneſs? Do we in conſequence ſtand prepared for his ſervice, and prompt to walk in his ways, to ſeparate ourſelves from his enemies, and aſſert that liberty, with which he makes his people free? Theſe are queſtions of vaſt importance to our ſouls, the Lord direct our conſciences to give an honeſt anſwer. Without the daily exerciſe of godly ſorrow and true repentance, we can never eat of this paſſover; we muſt alſo bear our croſs, and have our feaſt alloyed by the bitter herbs of tribulation and temptation; yet ſhall we find the life of faith and grace a feaſt indeed, a ſource of joy, ſuch as the world can neither give, nor take away.—Finally the Lord's Supper is our unbloody paſſover, our feaſt upon the ſacrifice, our ſacrifice itſelf of praiſe and thankſgiving. Having previouſly examined ourſelves, whether we be in the faith, and ſeriouſly as ſinners applied to the Lord Jeſus for his ſalvation, and devoted ourſelves to his ſervice; let us frequently and conſtantly, in this appointed way, remember our Redeemer's love and ſufferings; let us make this confeſſion of our ſins, this profeſſion of our faith, this declaration of our gratitude, and this ſurrender of ourſelves to his ſervice, as "bought with a price to glorify him, both "in body and ſpirit which are his." Thus uniting ourſelves to, and having fellowſhip with, him and his people here, we ſhall receive from his fulneſs, rejoice in his ways on earth, and at length ſit down with him in his heavenly kingdom.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Sanctify unto me all the first-born, whatsoever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and of beast: it is mine.

3 And Moses said unto the people, Remember this day, in which ye came out from Egypt, out of the house of bondage; for by strength of hand the LORD brought you out from this place: there shall no leavened bread be eaten.

4 This day came ye out, in the month Abib.

5 And it shall be when the LORD shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which he sware unto thy fathers to give thee, a land flowing with milk and honey, that thou shalt keep this service in this month.

6 Seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread, and in the seventh day shall be a feast to the LORD.

7 Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days: and there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee in all thy quarters.

8 And thou shalt shew thy son in that day, saying, This is done because of that which the LORD did unto me, when I came forth out of Egypt.

9 And it shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes; that the LORD's law may be in thy mouth: for with a strong hand hath the LORD brought thee out of Egypt.

10 Thou shalt therefore keep this ordinance in his season from year to year.

11 And it shall be when the LORD shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, as he sware unto thee and to thy fathers, and shall give it thee, 12 That thou shalt set apart unto the LORD all that openeth the matrix: and every firstling that cometh of a beast, which thou hast, the males shall be the LORD's.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII.] V. 2. Sanctify, &c.] In remembrance of the destruction of the first-born of Egypt, both man and beast, and the preservation of those of Israel, and of their deliverance out of bondage by means of that judgment, the first-born males of the Israelites were solemnly presented and dedicated to the Lord, and a price appointed to be paid for their redemption. By this it was also represented to them, that the preservation of their lives, when others were, and they justly might have been destroyed, was vouchsafed them through the ransom of the atonement, which in due time was to be made for sin: and that they ought to consider their lives, thus ransomed from death, as now consecrated to the service of God.—The whole assembly of the Lord's people are "the church of the first-born." (Heb. xii. 23:) Their lives are continued, their souls are saved from destruction, and they are made heirs of God, through the ransom of the blood of Christ: thus rescued by his sacrifice, from being sacrifices to the justice of God which they had offended they are required to present their bodies a living sacrifice, to be devoted to his service. (Rom. xii. 1, 2.)

V. 7. Neither, &c.] The Jews were very careful in searching every corner of their houses, that no leaven might remain in them; and what they found, they burnt, buried, or otherwise destroyed, before the feast of the passover.—Thus careful should we be to discover and mortify our sins, to avoid and watch against temptations, and to prepare our hearts for attendance on God's ordinances.

V. 9. A sign, &c.] The constant and frequent observance of these institutions, with plain and easy explications of their meaning, would render the deliverance from Egypt familiar to the Israelites; and be a continual memorial, as well as an open profession, of their obligations to love and serve the Lord: as those persons who wish to remember, and fear to forget any thing, use a variety of signs to remind them. Inscribing any thing upon the hand, placing it before their eyes, or as a frontlet upon their foreheads, seem to have been used in those times for such purposes. In like manner Baptism and the Lord's Supper, if thus explained and attended to, would render the nature of Christianity, and the obligations of Christians, familiar 13 And every firſtling of an aſs thou ſhalt redeem with a lamb; and if thou wilt not redeem it, then thou ſhalt break his neck: and all the firſt-born of man amongſt thy children ſhalt thou redeem.

14 And it ſhall be when thy ſon aſketh thee in time to come, ſaying, What is this? that thou ſhalt ſay unto him, By ſtrength of hand the LORD brought us out from Egypt, from the houſe of bondage.

15 And it came to paſs when Pharaoh would hardly let us go, that the LORD ſlew all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt, both the firſt-born of man, and the firſt-born of beaſt: therefore I ſacrifice to the LORD all that openeth the matrix, being males; but all the firſt-born of my children I redeem.

16 And it ſhall be for a token upon thine hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes: for by ſtrength of hand the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt.

17 And it came to paſs when Pharaoh had let the people go, that God led them not through the way of the land of the Philiſtines, although that was near: for God ſaid, Leſt peradventure the people repent when they ſee war, and they return to Egypt.

18 But God led the people about, through the way of the wilderneſs of the Red ſea: and the children of Iſrael went up harneſſed out of the land of Egypt.

19 And Moſes took the bones of Joſeph with him: for he had ſtraitly ſworn the children of Iſrael, ſaying, God will ſurely viſit you; and ye ſhall carry up my bones away hence with you.

20 And they took their journey from Succoth, and encamped in Etham, in the edge of the wilderneſs.

21 And the LORD went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light: to go by day and night.

22 He took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night from before the people.

miliar to our minds, and remind us, or give us occaſion to remind one another, of our profeſſion and of our duty.

V. 13. Redeem, &c.] The firſtlings of ſuch beaſts as were not uſed in ſacrifice, were required either to be exchanged for ſuch as were, or to be deſtroyed.—Our ſouls being forfeited to God's juſtice, unleſs ranſomed by the ſubſtituted ſacrifice of Chriſt, will certainly periſh.

V. 17. Although, &c.] It was only a few days march by the neareſt road from Egypt to Canaan: But the Philiſtines were a hardy warlike people; and the Iſraelites were unarmed, diſpirited by long bondage, and not acquainted with war: they were therefore not prepared to encounter them, and would have been greatly diſcouraged if reduced to a neceſſity of ſo doing. This was one reaſon, and probably the avowed reaſon, why the Lord led them another way; but he had others, which will be ſpeedily unfolded.

V. 18. But God led, &c.] At the expreſs command of God, the Iſraelites took their rout, much more to the ſouth than the direct road lay, and ſo marched towards the banks of the Red Sea; inſtead of making for the iſthmus of Suez, which communicates betwixt Africa and Aſia.—The margin of the Bible intimates that the word, tranſlated harneſſed, ſignifies "by five in a rank;" but the room ſuch a multitude muſt have taken from the van to the rear, is immenſe, had they marched in this manner: it ſeems rather to mean that they marched in five diſtinct ſquadrons. The Septuagint renders it, "in the fifth ge-"neration;" but that ſeems erroneous: for it was in the fourth generation from Levi, who went down with Jacob into Iſrael, and more than the fifth from Abraham. (Gen. xv. 16. Exod. vi. 18—20.) The Pſalmiſt informs us, that "there was not one feeble perſon amongſt "their tribes." (Pſalm cv. 37.) This was a very extraordinary circumſtance, which the hiſtory of the world cannot parallel; yet was very ſuitable to their ſituation, who had ſufficient incumbrances in their march, without having a number of invalids to take care of: it alſo completed their triumph over Pharaoh and the Egyptians; when they were not conſtrained to leave one of their company behind them.

V. 19. Moſes took, &c.] Theſe bones had been long a pledge of Iſrael's deliverance; and were a proper memento to Moſes, what the greateſt of men muſt ſhortly come to: and in their hurry they were not forgotten.

V. 21. Pillar, &c.] This ſymbol of the divine preſence would be peculiarly uſeful to the Iſraelites; as it afforded them light by night, and was a ſhade to them by day; and both by day and night, it was a guide and a pledge of the divine protection.—This pillar typified the guidance, protection, comfort, and ſecurity, which the Lord affords his true people, from the time when they firſt renounce the ſervice of ſin and Satan, until they ſafely arrive in heaven. The Church, being then in its infancy, was ſpoken to by theſe ſenſible tokens in its own language: but we now walk by faith, not by ſight, and may be aſſured of the Lord's preſence, though we have not ſuch external ſymbols of it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

So unteachable are we in divine things, that we need to be taught the ſame leſſons over and over, and in a variety of different ways, before we make any tolerable proficiency in them: and repetitions are therefore neither impertinent nor uſeleſs. The tendency of the teachings of God in his word, is to make his truths and precepts very plain and familiar to our minds, that we may have them continually in view, be frequently conversing about them, and regulating our conduct by them: the same therefore should be the aim of the minister in teaching his people; and of the parent in teaching his children.

By creation we are the Lord's property, and he has a right to dispose of us as he pleases: but redemption gives him a new and more endearing title to our bodies, souls, and services. Our exemption from the desolations of the wicked, and our deliverance from the malice of our enemies flow from the Lord's mercy, through the ransom of the Redeemer's blood, and by the power of his mighty arm: thus purchased, and thus delivered, we are sanctified to his service who has rescued us from destruction: nor shall we ourselves ever enjoy so much liberty, or our children and substance afford us so much comfort, as when we are all most unreservedly devoted to God. "The "strong man," armed with our lusts and passions, our inveterate habits and intimate evil connections, vehemently opposes our conversion, and "will hardly let us go:" but "when a stronger than he comes upon him, he takes "from him his armour wherein he trusted, and divides "the spoil." Then being delivered from thraldom, the leaven of iniquity, once pleasant to us, is thrown aside, and we learn to feast upon that unleavened bread of sincerity and truth, of piety and purity, which once we relished not. The Lord will then proportion our difficulties to the strength which he gives, and so order every thing in his providence, as may most effectually keep us from returning back to sin and the world. Through all the intricacies and dangers of the way, he will guide and guard us by his word, and Spirit: he will enlighten every one of our dark nights of affliction, and shelter us from the burning sun of temptation, until he bring us to his heavenly rest with everlasting songs of joy.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV.] V. 2. Turn, &c.] The Israelites had not before this marched the direct road to Canaan, but more to the south, towards the Red sea; until they came to the edge of the wilderness, whither the Egyptians expected they were retiring to offer their sacrifices to the Lord. (xiii. 20.) But now they received orders to turn still further out of the road, into some impervious straits, or other difficult places, where they would seem to be so entangled, that they could not possibly escape.

V. 3. For Pharaoh, &c.] It was avowedly the Lord's intention to harden the heart of Pharaoh; and he well knew how to effect it, without being in any sense the author of his sin. He only needed to remove all restraints from his heart and conscience; leave him entirely to his own headstrong impetuous lusts, and to the instigations of Satan; and order the dispensations of his providence, as most effectually to inspire him with hopes of yet prevailing in the contest. The proud heart of Pharaoh had been sorely galled, but was not in the least humbled: he had been repeatedly baffled and frighted, and forced to yield; yet his indignant spirit was not subdued, but revolted against the violence which had been put upon him, was fired with resentment, and thirsted for revenge: his covetousness and ambition had been severely disappointed; his kingdom had been desolated and almost depopulated, and his first-born son slain: he had suffered an ignominious defeat; and nothing but despair of success, and the urgent terror of death, could have extorted his consent to Israel's enlargement.—Whilst under the immediate pressure of the last dreadful visitation, every thing, except the preservation of his life, was forgotten. But when his terror and anguish were somewhat subsided, his convictions abated; and the thoughts of the mortifications, ignominy, and loss which he had sustained, with all their probable or possible effects, would rush into his mind. Then every thing would be welcome, which could point out the way, or inspire the hope, of reducing Israel, or of wreaking his vengeance upon them. Had they marched directly towards Canaan, they would probably have been out of his dominions before he had recovered from his fright, and he might have given them up in despair: but as they turned another way, and were as he supposed entangled in the wilderness, and of his ſervants was turned againſt the people, and they ſaid, Why have we done this, that we have let Iſrael go from ſerving us?

6 And he made ready his chariot, and took his people with him.

7 And he took ſix hundred choſen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them.

8 And the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and he purſued after the children of Iſrael: and the children of Iſrael went out with an high hand.

9 But the Egyptians purſued after them, (all the horſes and chariots of Pharaoh, and his horſemen and army,) and he overtook them encamping by the ſea, beſide Pi-hahiroth before Baal-zephon.

10 And when Pharaoh drew nigh, the children of Iſrael lifted up their eyes, and behold, the Egyptians marched after them, and they were ſore afraid: and the children of Iſrael cried out unto the LORD.

11 And they ſaid unto Moſes, Becauſe there were no graves in Egypt, haſt thou taken us away to die in the wilderneſs? Wherefore haſt thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt?

12 Is not this the word that we did tell thee in Egypt, ſaying, Let us alone, that we may ſerve the Egyptians? For it had been better for us to ſerve the Egyptians, than that we ſhould die in the wilderneſs.

13 And Moſes ſaid unto the people, Fear ye not, ſtand ſtill, and ſee the ſalvation of the LORD, which he will ſhew to you to-day: for the Egyptians whom ye have ſeen to-day ye ſhall ſee them again no more for ever.

14 The LORD ſhall fight for you, and ye ſhall hold your peace.

15 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Wherefore crieſt thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Iſrael, that they go forward.

16 But lift thou up thy rod, and ſtretch out thine hand over the ſea, and divide it: and the children of Iſrael ſhall go on dry-ground through the midſt of the ſea.

and ſhut up by ſurrounding rocks, mountains, and ſeas; he would conclude that they were not under an infallible guidance, and thence infer that they were not under Almighty protection, but might yet be ſubdued to his will. What he ardently wiſhed feeble evidence would induce him to believe, and every paſſion of his heart favoured the concluſion which he drew from theſe circumſtances.—This the Lord foreſaw; and that he might be honoured upon the Egyptians, and make his power and juſtice known among them, he gave theſe orders unto the Iſraelites.

V. 5. That the, &c.] Though the Egyptians had conſented to, and urged, the departure of the Iſraelites, and certainly expected them to return no more; yet that had not been mentioned: when therefore they ſtopped not to offer ſacrifices, but marched forward, eſpecially in that intricate road, they termed it a flight.—Some of Pharaoh's ſervants had counſelled him to diſmiſs Iſrael: yet now conſidering themſelves ſharers in his loſs and diſgrace, and being again encouraged to expect better ſucceſs; they blamed themſelves for having let them go, and gave Pharaoh more agreeable advice, which, however, forwarded his deſtruction.

V. 8. With, &c.] The Iſraelites at firſt were in high ſpirits, and ſeemed very courageouſly to ſet the Egyptians at defiance.

V. 9. Beſide Pi-hahiroth, &c.] It is generally ſuppoſed that on the right and left of this encampment were impaſſible mountains or fortifications; whilſt the Red ſea was in the front of Iſrael, and Pharaoh with his army preſſed upon their rear. The Red ſea is ſuppoſed by ſome perſons, to have been in this place between fifteen, and twenty miles acroſs: but we cannot obtain any exact knowledge in this reſpect.

V. 10. Cried out, &c.] Some of the people cried out unto the Lord, whilſt others vented their trouble in complaints againſt Moſes.

V. 11. Becauſe, &c.] Theſe murmurers were ſenſible that ſuch an unarmed multitude could not withſtand Pharaoh's diſciplined army: they had no thoughts therefore of fighting, no proſpect of eſcaping by flight, no hope in ſubmitting to ſuch an enraged tyrant; and no confidence in, or expectation from, the Lord:—ſo that death ſeemed inevitable. They therefore ſpake, as if Moſes had of himſelf brought them out of Egypt. Pharaoh in mad preſumption, and they in unbelieving deſpondency, had alike forgotten the wonderful works of God, which they had witneſſed.

V. 13. Stand ſtill, &c.] Moſes, in the exerciſe of faith, poſſeſſed admirable preſence of mind; and encouraged the people to keep their ground, and not to put themſelves into any diſorder, but to expect the Lord's interpoſition, and to hold themſelves in readineſs to obey his orders.

V. 15. Wherefore, &c.?] Moſes was earneſt in prayer at this trying conjuncture; and we ought not to ſuppoſe that the Lord was diſpleaſed with him: but he thus aſſured him, that his requeſt was granted, that he was about to effect their deliverance; and that he had nothing to do, but to excite and encourage the people to march forward; and he would clear the way for them, in an unexpected and unheard-of manner.

17 And I, behold I, will harden the hearts of the Egyptians, and they ſhall follow them: and I will get me honour upon Pharaoh, and upon all his hoſt, upon his chariots, and upon his horſemen.

18 And the Egyptians ſhall know that I am the LORD, when I have gotten me honour upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horſemen.

19 And the angel of God, which went before the camp of Iſrael, removed and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and ſtood behind them.

20 And it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Iſrael; and it was a cloud of darkneſs to them, but it gave light by night to theſe: ſo that the one came not near the other all the night.

21 And Moſes ſtretched out his hand over the ſea, and the LORD cauſed the ſea to go back by a ſtrong eaſt-wind all that night, and made the ſea dry-land, and the waters were divided.

22 And the children of Iſrael went into the midſt of the ſea upon the dry-ground: and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.

23 And the Egyptians purſued, and went in after them, to the midſt of the ſea, even all Pharaoh's horſes, his chariots, and his horſemen.

24 And it came to paſs that in the morning-watch the LORD looked unto the hoſt of the Egyptians, through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the hoſt of the Egyptians,

25 And took off their chariot wheels, that they drave them heavily: ſo that the Egyptians ſaid, Let us flee from the face of Iſrael; for the LORD fighteth for them againſt the Egyptians.

26 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Stretch out thine hand over the ſea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horſemen.

27 And Moſes ſtretched forth his hand over the ſea, and the ſea returned to his ſtrength when the morning appeared, and the Egyptians fled againſt it: and the LORD overthrew the Egyptians in the midſt of the ſea.

28 And the waters returned and covered the chariots, and the horſemen, and all the hoſt of Pharaoh that came into the ſea after them: there remained not ſo much as one of them.

29 But the children of Iſrael walked upon dry-land in the midſt of the ſea: and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.

30 Thus the LORD ſaved Iſrael that day out of the hand of the Egyptians: and Iſrael ſaw the Egyptians dead upon the ſea-ſhore.

V. 17. I, behold I, &c.] This ſpeaks the certainty of the event, as the Lord himſelf undertook for it, that the heart of Pharaoh and of his ſubjects ſhould be hardened: they had aſſociated themſelves with him in rebellion, and were thus with him doomed to the ſame deſerved puniſhment.

V. 18. The Egyptians.] That is, the miſerable remains of this once flouriſhing people.

V. 19. The angel, &c.] Either a created angel, by whoſe miniſtry this pillar of cloud and of fire was produced, and moved; or, Chriſt the Angel of Jehovah's preſence; (24.)

V. 20. It was a cloud, &c.] Even in the night the cloud cauſed an additional gloom to diſmay the Egyptians; yet at the ſame time it was a light to direct the ſteps of the Iſraelites.—Evey diſpenſation of providence, and every part of Scripture has a dark ſide for the enemies, and a bright ſide for the people of the Lord.—The Iſraelites marched forward to the brink of the Red ſea, and the Egyptians purſued them: and though the latter deemed themſelves ſecure of their prey, yet were ſo bewildered in the darkneſs, as not to able to ſeize upon it.

V. 21. To go back, &c.] At the ſtretching forth of Moſes' hand, and the waving of his conſecrated rod, the Lord cauſed a ſtrong eaſt wind to blow. This was only the ſignal, by which he anſwered that of Moſes; and then by his power He divided the waters, till they wonderfully formed two mighty walls, and a ſpacious road betwixt, through which the Iſraelites ſecurely marched!

V. 22, 23.] The people boldly marched on in the path thus opened for them, encouraged outwardly by the word of Moſes, but inwardly by the power of God.—Whilſt the Egyptians, being given up to deſperate hardneſs of heart, without fear followed the example.—Some, however, think, that, bewildered by the darkneſs, and hearing the Iſraelites before them, they were not aware that they had entered the channel of the ſea, till it was too late to eſcape.

V. 24. Looked unto thee, &c.] The Lord terrified the Egyptians by ſomething which they ſaw and heard, or by a powerful operation upon their minds.

V. 25. Took off their, &c.] The Lord ſo ordered it, that they could not get forward; we need not enquire in what manner.

V. 30. Dead, &c.] The Egyptians were eminent for the art of embalming the dead, and all their grandees had formerly been thus diſtinguiſhed: but the Lord now poured contempt upon them, and denied them even burial!

31 And Iſrael ſaw that great work which the LORD did upon the Egyptians: and the people feared the LORD, and believed the LORD, and his ſervant Moſes.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord, in all his commands and diſpenſations will make trial of men's ſpirits; and every thing will eventually co-operate to harden the hearts of obſtinate rebels to their deſtruction, and to exerciſe and increaſe the faith of his people: that by making known the glories of his name, he may be honoured by the one, and upon the other. Would we therefore eſcape the awful ſentence of being judicially hardened, we ſhould take care not to harden our own hearts in ſin, when called upon to repent and ſubmit ourſelves to God; for none are thus puniſhed, who have not righteouſly deſerved it.—Herein conſiſts the excellency and benefit of faith, that it gives the Lord credit for his wiſdom, faithfulneſs, and love, even where they are not diſcernible; and expects the accompliſhment of his promiſes in the unreſerved obedience to his commandments, however contrary to the ſuggeſtions of human policy; and remains ſatisfied that the event will clear up every difficulty.—Unleſs the heart be truly humbled, and ſin of every kind hated out of love to God and holineſs, no religious impreſſions will be abiding. Under remorſe of conſcience, the ſmart of ſufferings, and the terrors of impending deſtruction, and whilſt temptations are out of ſight, ſinful propenſities appear to be ſlain: but they will ſoon revive, when there is reſpite, when convictions wear off, when terrors ſubſide, and temptations return; and will only rage with redoubled force, for having received a temporary check: forgetfulneſs of the paſt will ſoon intervene, and the heart grow harder than ever in bold preſumption; till given up of God, and infatuated by Satan, ſuch perſons will even be aſhamed and repent of their conſtrained repentance, and impetuouſly ruſh upon their own deſtruction. Such is the progreſs of thoſe who rebel againſt the light, and encourage one another in wickedneſs, until they are involved in one common ruin. Let us fear leſt we alſo ſhould be hardened by the deceitfulneſs of ſin.—How dark do all the counſels and truths of God appear to thoſe, who are thus fighting againſt him! Even his very Goſpel becomes to them a ſavour of death unto death! (2 Cor. ii. 15, 16.) Who then can ſtand before him, who hath all creatures at his command! And how dreadful will that day be, when the wicked ſhall be overwhelmed in the depths of hell, yea all the nations that forget God! But men are not only prone preſumptuouſly to forget the works of God, and his threatened deſtruction of the wicked, but alſo in deſpondency to forget his wonders of love and promiſes of deliverance to his people: and in large companies even of his profeſſed worſhippers, there will be many deſtitute of faith and grace. Theſe in times of trial, when others are crying to the Lord for help, will be venting their impatience and rebellion againſt God, by quarrelling with his ſervants; and will often diſcourage others, and lead them to mingle unbelieving murmurs and peeviſh complaints, with their prayers and ſupplications; and for a time to forget all their former experience and obſervation of the Lord's power and love. And indeed it is very common, when men meet with unexpected difficulties in their firſt entrance upon a religious life, or upon any particular ſervice, that they are tempted to wiſh they had never gone about it, or to utter expreſſions equally unreaſonable and ſinful.—But the Lord pities and pardons thoſe, who are upright in heart; and makes uſe of the faith and courage of ſome, to animate and quicken others: and if we belong to him, and march forward in the path of duty, depending on him and calling upon him; he will ſurely open a way for us, through difficulties and obſtacles, as inſurmountable as mountains and ſeas.—For when we ſee no poſſible method of eſcape, or of ſucceſs, and have none other to look to but the Lord; then we are prepared to receive deliverance from him in a proper manner, to be ſuitably affected with it, and to give him all the glory. But there is more difficulty to prevail with man to uſe the means of ſalvation, than with God to bleſs the means, he appoints; and to find a willing people to welcome a willing Saviour. (Pſalm cx. 3.) This alſo he effects in the day of his power; and under his guidance and protection, enlightened by his Word and Spirit, his true Iſrael wait for his ſalvation; from time to time on earth, they are delivered from their enemies, for the encouragement of their faith and hope, and for their incitement to obedience, and that they may be aſhamed of their impatience and diſtruſt: and at laſt they ſhall witneſs the final deſtruction of all oppoſers with ſongs of grateful praiſe.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV.] V. 1. Then ſang Moſes. &c.] Doubtleſs Moſes compoſed this ſong by divine inſpiration, and inſtructed the people thus to expreſs their gratitude and joy; and to celebrate the Lord's praiſes on account of their late deliverance, for his glory and for their own encouragement. The capacity for poetry and muſic, and for being delighted with them, however abuſed through the ſinfulneſs of the human heart, is no more the effect of that ſinfulneſs, than the other capacities of the ſoul, or 2 The LORD is my ſtrength and ſong, and he is become my ſalvation: he is my God, and I will prepare him an habitation; my fathers' God, and I will exalt him.

3 The LORD is a man of war: the LORD is his name.

4 Pharaoh's chariots and his hoſts hath he caſt into the ſea: his choſen captains alſo are drowned in the Red ſea.

5 The depths have covered them: they ſank into the bottom as a ſtone.

6 Thy right hand, O LORD, is become glorious in power: thy right hand, O LORD, hath daſhed in pieces the enemy.

7 And in the greatneſs of thine excellency thou haſt overthrown them that roſe up againſt thee: thou ſenteſt forth thy wrath, which conſumed them as ſtubble.

8 And with the blaſt of thy noſtrils the waters were gathered together: the floods ſtood upright as an heap, and the depths were congealed in the heart of the ſea.

or the members of the body, which are alſo in like manner often proſtituted to the ſervice of ſin. Having been implanted by God himſelf in human nature, they ought to be employed in his ſervice, and conſecrated to his glory. Accordingly hymns, or ſongs of praiſe, were compoſed under the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, and form a conſiderable portion of the ſacred Scripture: ſome of them were ſuited to particular occaſions; and were at the time ſung by the congregation of the Lord, as an act of public worſhip; and afterwards in commemoration of thoſe events, and in accommodation to other circumſtances with which they might accord. Others ſeem to be of more general deſignation, and naturally ſuit the experiences, and expreſs the affections, of true believers in all ages. The poetry of theſe ſacred hymns has been carefully inveſtigated, and much admired by many perſons of eminent attainments in ancient learning; and allowed to be in many reſpects ſuperior to all other remains of antiquity; eſpecially by Dr. Lowth, the late Biſhop of London, in his "Prælectiones," &c. This ſong of Moſes is the moſt ancient compoſition of the kind extant in the world; and it was ſung by Moſes, and the congregation of the Iſraelitiſh men; whilſt Miriam led the women to accompany them, not only with ſinging, but alſo with timbrels and dances. Mr. Henry obſerves, that this proves pſalm-ſinging to be more ancient than the ceremonial law, and therefore no part of it: It proves the ſame alſo concerning the uſe of inſtrumental muſic in the worſhip of God, and even of religious dances. Whether, rebus ſic ſtantibus, either the one, or the other tend to the glory of God and the edification of men, and therefore whether either of them ought to be retained, or both excluded from the worſhip of the New Teſtament Church, is another queſtion: but it ſeems evident that they form no part of the ceremonial law, and are neither commanded nor prohibited in the Scripture; though we have examples for them in the Old Teſtament, and none for them in the New. Upon ſuch points godly perſons will differ in their judgments; but it is well when, "endeavouring to keep the unity of the ſpirit in the bond of peace," they differ with meekneſs and in love.—There had been a long conteſt betwixt the king of Egypt and the God of Iſrael, but now it was undeniably terminated, and the God of Iſrael had got a complete victory over Egypt and her king, and over her gods alſo.

V. 2. The Lord, &c.] Iſrael depended entirely upon Jehovah for victory over their potent foes, and protection againſt them; he was now become their ſalvation, and they celebrated his praiſes in their ſong. All this typifies the dependence, ſalvation, triumph, and praiſe of the true Church of God, and of every true believer, over their ſpiritual enemies. (Rev. xv. 3.)—Jehovah is the object of the believer's love, worſhip, obedience, and dependence, from whom he expects happineſs, and to whom he devotes himſelf.—This Iſrael in general, and every Iſraelite in particular, was taught to profeſs; and to ſubjoin the purpoſe of preparing him an habitation; referring to the tabernacle, and temple, which were types of the human nature of Chriſt, the true temple, "in whom dwelleth all the fulneſs of the "godhead bodily," and in which he diſplays his glory, "as "reconciling the world unto himſelf." Through him alſo the believer's heart is a temple, in which he delights to dwell, "an habitation of God through the Spirit." (Iſ. lxvi. 1, 2. John ii. 19—21. 2 Cor. v. 19. Eph. ii. 22. Col. ii. 9.)—The Lord had alſo manifeſtly ſhewn himſelf to be the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, by fulfilling the promiſes he had made to them.

V. 3. The Lord, &c.] Jehovah had acted as a renowned warrior and conqueror, whoſe atchievements ought to be celebrated in ſacred ſongs of praiſe: as thoſe of the heathen conquerors were in their profane poems; emphatically ſo called, whilſt they aſcribe the honours due to God to ſome vile ambitious cruel man.

V. 6. Glorious, &c.] Or thy hand is "glorified in "power:" All men would ſee and admire the greatneſs and power of God, as glorified in the deſtruction of Pharaoh.

V. 7. Excellency.] Not only excelling in power, but excellent in juſtice, wiſdom, truth, and goodneſs.

V. 8. The blaſt of, &c.] The wind is by a ſtrong metaphor called, "the blaſt of the Lord's noſtrils," being the token and in ſome ſenſe the inſtrument, of dividing the Red ſea; as well for the purpoſe of executing vengeance upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians, as of effecting the deliverance of Iſrael.—The waters deep before, but now made much deeper on each ſide the road, on which Iſrael marched; ſtood as if petrified into ſolid rocks.

V. 9. The enemy ſaid, &c.] This verſe moſt poetically shall be satisfied upon them, I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them.

10 Thou didst blow with thy wind, the sea covered them: they sank as lead in the mighty waters.

11 Who is like unto thee, O LORD, amongst the gods? who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?

12 Thou stretchest out thy right hand, the earth swallowed them.

13 Thou in thy mercy hast led forth the people which thou hast redeemed: thou hast guided them in thy strength unto thy holy habitation.

14 The people shall hear and be afraid: sorrow shall take hold on the inhabitants of Palestina.

15 Then the dukes of Edom shall be amazed, the mighty men of Moab trembling shall take hold upon them: all the inhabitants of Canaan shall melt away.

16 Fear and dread shall fall upon them; by the greatness of thine arm they shall be as still as a stone: till thy people pass over, O LORD, till the people pass over, which thou hast purchased.

17 Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O LORD, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in: in the sanctuary, O LORD, which thy hands have established.

18 The LORD shall reign for ever and ever.

19 For the horse of Pharaoh went in with his chariots, and with his horsemen into the sea, and the LORD brought again the waters of the sea upon them: but the children of Israel went on dry-land in the midst of the sea.

20 And Miriam the propheteſs, the sister of Aaron, took a timbrel in her hand; and all the women went out after her, with timbrels and with dances.

cally describes the rage, pride, and presumption of Pharaoh and of the Egyptians; and confirms what was spoken upon that subject in the foregoing chapter. Whilst the next verse, with inimitable simplicity and sublimity, describes the infinite ease, with which they were checked, and overwhelmed in the sea.

V. 11. Amongst the gods, &c.] The objects of the idolatrous worship of the Egyptians and heathens; in and through which Satan proudly affected to be worshipped as the god of this world, and ambitiously rivalled Jehovah, were thus shewn to be wholly unworthy in any respect to be compared to him.—The righteousness, faithfulness, purity, and love, that is, the holiness of the divine character, form the essential glory and excellency of Jehovah; and reflect glory upon all the contrivances of his wisdom, and the operations of his almighty power; which, if not devised and performed in holiness, would be tremendous, but not glorious.—Such majesty also and excellency are displayed in the Lord's works of love and mercy, as cannot be suitably admired and praised, without filling the mind with solemn awe and reverential fear.

V. 12. The earth, &c.] The dead bodies of many of the Egyptians soon sank to the bottom, and were buried in the sand.

V. 13. In thy mercy, &c.] It is here acknowledged, that the deliverance of Israel was as much a display of mercy, as the destruction of the Egyptians was an act of justice. And this redemption from bondage by a miracle was an earnest of their being put in possession of Canaan, which is spoken of as if it had been already accomplished: Canaan seems to be here called the holy habitation of Jehovah, as afterwards (17.) "the mountain of his "inheritance," and "the sanctuary;" because God had chosen it for the place of his future special residence, where he would manifest his presence and love, establish his holy ordinances, and publish his holy word. All this is typical of the believer's merciful redemption from the guilt and bondage of iniquity; and of his being powerfully guided to God's holy habitation in heaven.

V. 14. Sorrow shall, &c.] The Philistines had been the objects of terror to Israel; but they now suppose them filled with dismay and anguish at the tidings of this wonderful deliverance: And we may be sure that it would produce very great effects upon all the surrounding nations, for a time at least. The inhabitants of Jericho, forty years after, had not got over the fright which it occasioned. (Joshua ii. 9, 10.)

V. 16. Still, &c.] These nations would be awed into silence, and be restrained from resistance, by the glory of Jehovah's power and indignation; seeing he had delivered his people at the price of the destruction of so flourishing a country as Egypt. (Isaiah xliii. 3.) In this they were a type of "the Church of God, which "he hath purchased with his own blood." (Acts xx. 28.)

V. 18. The Lord, &c.] In perfect wisdom, justice, and goodness, Jehovah shall reign as the only lawgiver and judge over his willing people, who with joyful hearts shall render him loyal obedience; and he shall finally and eternally crush all his enemies with irresistible force.

V. 20. Miriam the propheteſs, &c.] Miriam is mentioned by Micah, as joined with Moses and Aaron in leading forth the people, (Micah vi. 4;) and is here called a propheteſs; nothing is recorded of her 21 And Miriam anſwered them, Sing ye to the LORD, for he hath triumphed gloriouſly; the horſe and his rider hath he thrown into the ſea.

22 So Moſes brought Iſrael from the Red ſea, and they went out into the wilderneſs of Shur: and they went three days in the wilderneſs, and found no water.

23 And when they came to Marah, they could not drink of the waters of Marah, for they were bitter: therefore the name of it was called Marah.

24 And the people murmured againſt Moſes, ſaying, What ſhall we drink?

25 And he cried unto the LORD, and the LORD ſhewed him a tree, which when he had caſt into the waters, the waters were made ſweet: there he made for them a ſtatute and an ordinance, and there he proved them,

26 And ſaid, If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, and wilt do that which is right in his ſight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his ſtatutes; I will put none of theſe diſeaſes upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians: for I am the LORD that healeth thee.

27 And they came to Elim, where were twelve wells of water, and threeſcore and ten palm-trees: and they encamped there by the waters.

her in that character, but her leading the women in this ſong of praiſe, joined, according to the uſages of the times, with timbrels and dances. She was now about 90 years of age, and is called the ſiſter of Aaron, as ſhe probably reſided with him.

V. 23. They could, &c.] It ſeems that theſe waters were not only extremely nauſeous, but unwholeſome likewiſe. So great a multitude marching for three days without any water, except they carried ſome ſmall quantity with them, would occaſion great diſtreſs and perhaps diſeaſe: and having found water, but not being able to drink it, they muſt have been greatly diſappointed.

V. 24. Murmured, &c.] When the Iſraelites were delivered from the Egyptians, "they feared the Lord, and "believed the Lord, and his ſervant Moſes," as commiſſioned by him, and acting according to his command. "But they ſoon forgat his works." (Pſalm cvi. 12, 13,) and began to vent their diſcontent and diſtruſt in peeviſh murmurs againſt Moſes, as if he had acted of himſelf.

V. 25, 26.] The change was not wrought by any natural efficacy of the wood; but it was a token of the Lord's operation; (2 Kings, ii. 19—22. iv. 38—41.) It was alſo to be conſidered as a type of the bleſſings of the Goſpel, which Chriſt purchaſed for us when he hung upon the tree: theſe infuſed, ſo to ſpeak, into our inward and outward trials, ſweeten them all by peace in the conſcience, comfort in the heart, and the hope of everlaſting glory.—In this place the Lord put the people upon their good behaviour; and whilſt he aſſured them that he would provide for them, and continue their health and comforts if they were obedient, he intimated that if they were rebellious, the very diſeaſes and judgments, which they had ſeen inflicted upon the Egyptians, would come upon them alſo. Perhaps the want of water, and ſome of them having drunk of the unwholeſome waters of Marah, had occaſioned ſickneſs among them, and filled them with apprehenſions, which were thus obviated and over-ruled for good purpoſes.

V. 27. Twelve, &c.] A well of water to each tribe, and the palm-trees for a cooling ſhade. It is remarkable that the number anſwers to the twelve patriarchs, and their ſeventy elders; and to the twelve apoſtles, and the ſeventy diſciples.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Thoſe events in providence, and thoſe experiences in the life of faith, which have occaſioned our moſt diſtreſſing apprehenſions, are often ſo turned about, as to fill our hearts with gratitude and our mouths with praiſe: nor would the Lord lead thoſe whom he loves into ſuch ſtraits, did he not intend to render them ſubſervient to his own glory, and to their comfort and advantage. When in patience and quietneſs we have waited for deliverance out of trouble, and have had our expectations anſwered, we ſhould proclaim to all around us the wonderful works of God; and every one, in the improvement of his talent, and the exerciſe of his peculiar endowments, ſhould concur in ſo pleaſant and reaſonable a ſervice. They who oppreſs the people of God, are his declared enemies; he will certainly triumph over them completely; and all ſhall acknowledge that he is not only "glorious in power," but "glorious in ho-"lineſs," in their deſtruction, and in that of all impenitent ſinners. But they, who humbly ſubmit to him and truſt in his mercy, will find that he will become their ſalvation, and "compaſs them about with ſongs of deliverance."—What his grace begins, his power and faithfulneſs will complete; and having redeemed them from the bondage of ſin and Satan, every paſt favour becomes an earneſt of further benefits, until he bring them to his holy habitation in heaven.

The judgments inflicted on ſome of God's enemies are evidences that judgment will be executed on the reſt; and he often firſt intimidates thoſe whom he intends to puniſh. Ere long every enemy ſhall be deſtroyed, which hath done evil in his ſanctuary; and the whole church ſhall ſing the ſong of Moſes and of the Lamb, as triumphing over the fall of every antichriſt; and the Lord ſhall reign for ever and ever, to the eternal ſatisfaction of his redeemed people, and the eternal confuſion of his enemies.

Contains, 1st. Israel's march into the wilderness of Sin; their being in want of bread, and murmuring: Manna promised, and the people rebuked, v. 1—10. 2d. Manna and quails sent; a description of the manna; rules for gathering it, the disobedience of Israel in hoarding it, and in going out to seek for it on the sabbath day, with the consequences, v. 11—31. 3d. An omer commanded to be preserved, v. 32—36.

AND they took their journey from Elim, and all the congregation of the children of Israel came unto the wilderness of Sin, which is between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month, after their departing out of the land of Egypt.

2 And the whole congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness.

3 And the children of Israel said unto them, Would to God we had died by the hand of the LORD in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh-pots, and when we did eat bread to the full: for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger.

4 Then said the LORD unto Moses, Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you: and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no.

5 And it shall come to pass, that on the sixth day they shall prepare that which they bring in; and it shall be twice as much as they gather daily.

6 And Moses and Aaron said unto all the children of Israel, At even then ye shall know that the LORD hath brought you out from the land of Egypt.

7 And in the morning then ye shall see the glory of the LORD; for that he heareth your murmurings against the LORD: And what are we, that ye murmur against us?

8 And Moses said, This shall be when the LORD

In this world we must pass through many changes: and those praises, which only spring from gratified self-love, will soon be turned into rebellious murmurs. Hypocrites may have a temporary faith, and very high affections, and be vastly earnest in religious exercises; but in time of temptation they often fall away: And even true believers, in seasons of sharp trial, will be tempted to fret, distrust, and murmur. But in every dispensation we should cast our care upon the Lord, and pour out our prayers before him; and we shall find that a submissive will, a peaceful conscience, and the comforts of the Holy Spirit, will render the bitterest trial tolerable, yea pleasant. And let us not forget that we are preserved from destruction, and delivered from our enemies, to be the Lord's servants; that he proves us in order to our more unreserved obedience; that our exemption from the afflictions, which others endure, is intended to encourage us in the path of duty; and that the evidence of our being interested in his redeeming love, arises from the habitual disposition, of which we are conscious, to keep his commandments. Our health, both of body and soul, depend on the Lord; may he then sanctify our bodily sicknesses, restore our souls to the health of holiness, enable us "to draw water with joy from the "wells of salvation," and "to sit down under his shadow "with great delight, and find his fruit sweet to our taste." (Sol. Song, ii. 3. Isa. xii. 3.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI.] V. 3. By the, &c.] The Israelites wished they had died by some sudden judgment, as the first-born of Egypt had been slain; and they seemed to envy their speedy death, whilst they considered themselves reserved to a more lingering and painful execution.—They had forgotten all the fatigue and oppression of their bondage; and only remembered and magnified the plenty which they had enjoyed: as if their enslaved condition in Egypt had been a most desirable privilege! And not daring directly to arraign the divine justice, and not feeling disposed to acknowledge the Lord's goodness, they purposely overlooked him, and ascribed the whole transaction to Moses and Aaron; as if they had only intended their destruction, and that of the whole congregation: for as they could not themselves see, in what manner they could be victualled, they had no confidence in the power of God to effect it.

V. 4. I will, &c.] The manna came down from the upper regions of the air, where it was miraculously produced, and whence it descended in the form of rain, or dew. (Note Gen. i. 1.) By this kindness the Lord intended to make a fair trial of the people, whether any reasonable indulgence, or any miraculous interposition, would induce them to obedience.

V. 5. On the, &c.] On the day before the sabbath, (which is spoken of in this chapter, as an appointment previously known to Israel,) probably a much larger quantity fell than on other days.

V. 7. And in the morning, &c.] The people saw in the evening when the quails came, and in the morning when the manna descended, an additional, miraculous, and merciful proof, that the Lord had brought them out of Egypt; that whilst they beheld the glory of his power and love, in

LORD ſhall give you in the evening fleſh to eat, and in the morning bread to the full; for that the LORD heareth your murmurings which ye murmur againſt him: And what are we? your murmurings are not againſt us, but againſt the LORD.

9 And Moſes ſpake unto Aaron, Say unto all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, Come near before the LORD: for he hath heard your murmurings.

10 And it came to paſs, as Aaron ſpake unto the whole congregation of the children of Iſrael, that they looked toward the wilderneſs, and behold, the glory of the LORD appeared in the cloud.

11 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

12 I have heard the murmurings of the children of Iſrael; ſpeak unto them, ſaying, At even ye ſhall eat fleſh, and in the morning ye ſhall be filled with bread: and ye ſhall know that I am the LORD your God.

13 And it came to paſs, that at even the quails came up, and covered the camp: and in the morning the dew lay round about the hoſt.

14 And when the dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderneſs there lay a ſmall round thing, as ſmall as the hoar froſt on the ground.

15 And when the children of Iſrael ſaw it, they ſaid one to another, It is manna: for they wiſt not what it was. And Moſes ſaid unto them, This is the bread which the LORD hath given you to eat.

16 This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded, Gather of it every man according to his eating: an omer for every man, according to the number of your perſons, take ye every man for them which are in his tents.

17 And the children of Iſrael did ſo, and gathered, ſome more, ſome leſs.

18 And when they did mete it with an omer, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack: they gathered every man according to his eating.

19 And Moſes ſaid, Let no man leave of it till the morning.

20 Notwithſtanding they hearkened not unto Moſes, but ſome of them left of it until the morning, and it bred worms and ſtank: and Moſes was wroth with them.

thus ſupplying their wants, they might be ſhamed out of their murmurings and diſtruſt.—They had reflected upon Moſes, as if he were unkind, unjuſt, or unwiſe, in bringing them out of Egypt; but were not aware that they were murmuring againſt God, for HE had brought them forth, and Moſes was but his inſtrument.

V. 10. The glory of the Lord, &c.] Some extraordinary ſplendour, which denoted God's ſpecial preſence; and from which he probably ſpake in an audible voice.

V. 12. Ye ſhall know, &c.] The people would be convinced, not only that the Lord was able, but that he conſidered himſelf engaged, to protect and provide for them, unleſs they forfeited their privilege by rebellion and apoſtacy.

V. 13. Quails, &c.] Theſe were feathered fowl, though it is not certainly known of what ſpecies. (Pſ. lxxviii. 27.) Such numbers were miraculouſly brought thither, and lighted amongſt the people, that they caught with eaſe as many as ſufficed for their uſe. We may compare this miracle of mercy to Iſrael, with the miracle of the locuſts which were ſent to devour the ſuſtenance of Egypt.

V. 15. It is manna, &c.] The meaning ſeems to be, that the people ſaid, Man-hu? or, What is this? which thence became the name of it.

V. 16. Omer.] About five Engliſh pints: thus much of this extraordinary food they were able to gather for every individual of this vaſt company, every day, for forty years together!

V. 18. He that, &c.] This is by ſome interpreted to ſignify, that when the maſter of every family came to mete out to every one his portion, he found that they had one with another gathered as much as was neceſſary, and no more. Yet as ſome endeavoured to hoard the manna, this interpretation ſeems ſcarcely admiſſible; for in this caſe there would have been none for them to have hoarded: nor can we, for the ſame reaſon, admit a miracle to have been wrought in augmenting, or diminiſhing, the quantity which they ſeverally had gathered. But, as the Apoſtle applies this paſſage to Chriſtians imparting their abundance to ſupply the neceſſity of ſuch as were in want, we might interpret the words in this manner; they, who had gathered much, that is more than they wanted, were generally led to impart their ſuperfluity, to make up the deficiency of thoſe who had too little; in confidence of a freſh ſupply the next day. (2 Cor. viii. 12—15.) It is, however, generally ſuppoſed, that matters were ſo ordered by the divine interpoſition, that an omer for each was regularly gathered by the perſons of every family, one with another;

21 And they gathered it every morning, every man according to his eating: and when the ſun waxed hot, it melted.

22 And it came to paſs that on the ſixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man: and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moſes.

23 And he ſaid unto them, This is that which the LORD hath ſaid, To-morrow is the reſt of the holy ſabbath unto the LORD: bake that which ye will bake to-day, and ſeethe that ye will ſeethe; and that which remaineth over, lay up for you to be kept until the morning.

24 And they laid it up till the morning, as Moſes bade: and it did not ſtink, neither was there any worm therein.

25 And Moſes ſaid, Eat that to-day; for to-day is a ſabbath unto the LORD: to-day ye ſhall not find it in the field.

26 Six days ye ſhall gather it; but on the ſeventh day, which is the ſabbath, in it there ſhall be none.

27 And it came to paſs that there went out ſome of the people on the ſeventh day for to gather, and they found none.

28 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, How long refuſe ye to keep my commandments and my laws?

29 See, for that the LORD hath given you the ſabbath, therefore he giveth you on the ſixth day the bread of two days: abide ye every man in his place, let no man go out of his place on the ſeventh day.

30 So the people reſted on the ſeventh day.

31 And the houſe of Iſrael called the name thereof Manna: and it was like coriander-ſeed, white; and the taſte of it was like wafers made with honey.

32 And Moſes ſaid, This is the thing which the LORD commandeth, Fill an omer of it to be kept for your generations; that they may ſee the bread wherewith I have fed you in the wilderneſs, when I brought you forth from the land of Egypt.

33 And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, Take a pot, and put an omer full of manna therein, and lay it up before the LORD, to be kept for your generations.

34 As the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo Aaron laid it up before the Teſtimony, to be kept.

35 And the children of Iſrael did eat manna forty years, until they came to a land inhabited:

another; and that it was out of this quantity, ſome of them diſtruſtfully attempted to hoard; inſtead of freely uſing it, or imparting it to thoſe who required more, in ſimple dependence on God for the future.

V. 21. When the ſun, &c.] This was a very extraordinary circumſtance, that a ſubſtance, which was ſo eaſily diſſolved and exhaled, ſhould be ſufficiently nutrimental, to ſupport the people in health, and vigour, for ſo long a time. They were thus taught to be induſtrious, and to riſe early to their work; and we are taught to ſeek the Lord early, without delay, and with diligence.

V. 23. Bake ye that, &c.] The Iſraelites were not allowed to kindle any fire on the ſabbath days, (xxxv. 3:) they were therefore required to prepare the manna for uſe on the preceding day, in what manner they choſe; that the religious reſt of that holy day might not be interrupted: and after uſing what they wanted the day before, to reſerve that which remained, in what form they pleaſed, for the ſabbath.

V. 24. It did not ſtink, &c.] There was a combination, as it were, of miracles wrought every week in honour of the ſabbath, even before the promulgation of the Moſaic law. Double the quantity fell the day before; (29;) none fell on the ſabbath day; nor did that ſtink, which they kept for that day: this confirms the ſuppoſition that the inſtitution of the ſabbath was from the beginning.

V. 29. Hath given you, &c.] Not the Lord is about to appoint, but he hath given you the ſabbath: as a ſpecial benefit he hath inſtituted this day of holy reſt for you.

V. 34. So Aaron laid it up, &c.] This was done ſome months after; when the ark, the teſtimony of God's preſence with Iſrael, his care of them, and relation to them, was formed and put into the holy of holies. Thus by miracle, the manna, which when kept in diſtruſt ſtank in one night, was preſerved pure from generation to generation.

V. 35. Did eat manna, &c.] The manna was a type of Chriſt, "the true Bread, that came down from heaven; provided of God, and given to periſhing ſinners, notwithſtanding their unworthineſs, and their diſpoſition to deſpiſe or undervalue ſo precious a gift. The careleſs multitude underſtand not what this heavenly manna is, or what uſe they are to make of it, till inſtructed that it is the bread which the Lord hath given them. The hypocrite retains the doctrine as a notion, which corrupts and produces pride and vain confidence. The true Chriſtian, having an appetite for this heavenly proviſion, ſeeks it diligently and early, day by day; labours for it though habited: they did eat manna, until they came unto the borders of the land of Canaan.

36 Now an omer is the tenth part of an ephah.

though it be the gift of God; (John vi. 27:) and feeds upon it in his heart by faith with thankſgiving; by which his ſoul acquires health and vigour, and he becomes ſtrong to labour and to fight with his enemies. There is a ſufficiency in this proviſion for the whole congregation of Iſrael, but nothing over for any one. We muſt have it freſh, and feed upon it daily, to the end of our journey to the Canaan above; and though it appear to ſome light bread, it will hold out to the end: that is, we muſt by faith receive from Chriſt, as the purchaſe of his ſacrifice, pardon and peace, grace and ſtrength, every day till we come to heaven. And though we now ſeem to gather a double portion on the ſabbath days; yet when we keep our heavenly ſabbath, we ſhall not need to gather any more, nor will the ſtock we have acquired any more corrupt, but in that holy of holies it will preſerve for ever, as proviſion for our ſouls, to the glory of our God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As changes are prepared for us in this world, we ſhould be prepared for them; and be ready to endure hardſhip, and to exerciſe faith, patience, and ſelf-denial, whenever called to it. But before we too ſeverely cenſure others, we ſhould put our ſoul in their ſoul's ſtead: we may eaſily condemn the Iſraelites; but perhaps do not readily ſuſpect, that in much leſs trials, we ſhould diſtruſt, deſpond, and murmur, if we were proved and left to ourſelves: nor are we apt to regard their conduct as an intended picture of human nature, and their hiſtory, as that of the human heart, under the varying diſpenſations of providence. Whatever ſituation we are placed in, we are prone to undervalue our mercies, and to aggravate our troubles; and to compare the unfavourable ſide of our preſent circumſtances with the favourable ſide of ſome former, or ſome imaginary ſituation: by which means we are ingenious in rendering ourſelves diſcontented and unthankful; and are ever wiſhing for ſome change, yet ever ſeeming to change for the worſe. When we are aſhamed to reflect directly upon God; we are apt to vent our impatience in complaining againſt the inſtruments, or mere occaſions, of our uneaſineſs; not aware that our murmurings are againſt the Lord himſelf. It behoves us therefore to watch and pray againſt this rebellious unthankful ſpirit, the offspring of pride and unbelief; that confiding in the Lord's wiſdom, and conſcious of our own unworthineſs, we may ſtudy contentment: and if plain and ſharp reproofs tend to humble and quiet us, they are not miſplaced. But the Lord is ſlow to anger, and mercifully conſidereth our frame; and He knows how hard we find it to bear urgent want without impatience; and to believe his word in direct oppoſition to every appearance of probability. He will therefore frequently ſhew us his glory, and prove our obedience by ſupplying our wants, and exceeding our expectations; that we may not plead, we want encouragement to truſt and ſerve him in future. He could at all times, and therefore in ſome caſes he does, ſupply his people with ſuperfluities: but in general he ſees it beſt for them to have only things neceſſary, and that from day to day; and conſtrains moſt of them to expect their ſupport from him on the morrow, that they may ſee the glory of his power, and taſte the ſweetneſs of his truth and love, in their daily bread. Nor, if our faith were ſtrong, ſhould we ſleep any worſe, though, like Iſrael, we went to reſt without one morſel in the houſe for the next day; or any other confidence of obtaining it, except confidence in him, who, as "a Father, knoweth what "things we have need of." Yet we muſt labour even for the meat that periſheth, in ſubordination to our labouring for that which endureth unto everlaſting life; though both be the gift of God: and it is the Lord's will that the poor be liberal of their little, as well as the rich out of their abundance. (Eph. iv. 28.) Whether we have much or little, that which is hoarded in covetouſneſs and diſtruſt, corrupts, breeds worms, and ſtinks; and that alone is uſeful, which ſupplies our wants and thoſe of others. Whatever diligence we uſe in worldly buſineſs on other days, we are to conſider the ſabbath as the Lord's gift to us; and ſhould previouſly contrive every thing, even in reſpect of our food, in that manner, which may beſt render it a day of holy reſt from worldly, and of holy reſt in ſpiritual, employments: and he will contrive that we ſhall eventually be no loſers by ſo doing. But there is in us a ſpirit of perverſeneſs, and we ſeem to take pleaſure naturally in doing the very reverſe to the Lord's commands: this muſt be mortified, and ſubdued. Whatever providence in any honeſt way allots us, we ſhould conſider as the bread, which the Lord giveth us to eat, and be thankful for it, and contented with it. But if we cannot merit our bodily food, what claim can we have to that bread which came down from heaven, without which we muſt have inevitably periſhed? (John, vi. 27—58.) Let us then thankfully welcome, early and diligently go forth to gather, and joyfully feed upon this heavenly proviſion: let us ſeek earneſtly for the grace of God's Spirit to turn all our knowledge of the doctrine of Chriſt crucified, into the ſpiritual nouriſhment of our ſouls by faith and love; that we may not reſt in barren notions, or feed on worldly vanities, or ſatisfy ourſelves with former ſuppoſed experiences: but living upon this bread from day to day, in the attendance on all the means of grace, we ſhall ſhow that our ſouls are thereby nouriſhed in all holineſs, and fitted for all obedience. And thus alſo edifying others by the way, we ſhall in due time arrive at the heavenly Canaan, there to feaſt for ever on the rich proviſions of our Father's houſe above.

CHAP. XVII. V. 2. Tempt the Lord, &c.] The people were ſtill diſpoſed, after all they had ſeen and heard, even whilſt marching under the guidance of the cloud, and living upon the manna, to forget God, and to act as if they thought that Moſes and Aaron had of themſelves brought them out of Egypt! Thus they put the Lord's omniſcience and omnipotence to the trial; and behaved, as if they would tempt him to ſhew them in vengeance, that he was amongſt them, or to leave them to the conſequences of their perverſeneſs and unbelief; or would preſumptuouſly preſcribe to him what he ought to do; or limit him, and put it to the proof, whether he were able to perform their requirements or not, being determined to reject his authority, if he did not. (Pſalm lxxviii. 18—20.)

V. 6. I will, &c.] The Lord promiſed to diſplay his viſible glory by the cloud, which would mark out the particular rock that was to be ſmitten.—An immenſe quantity of water would be required for ſuch a vaſt multitude, and for their flocks and herds, in one day: but we have reaſon to conclude that this water followed them in the wilderneſs from place to place for ſome time at leaſt (Pſalm lxxviii. 15, 16. 20. cv. 41.) A kind of river ſeems to have flowed from this rock, that not only afforded the people ſome ſcanty and temporary relief, but was an abundant and durable ſupply for the whole company. The apoſtle ſays, that "this rock was Chriſt;" (1 Cor. x. 4,) that is a type of him: and it is obſervable, that God is never in Scripture called a Rock till after this event; but this title afterwards became common. A rock is firm and unſhaken, as a foundation on which to build; but from a rock of flint we might ſooner expect, as it were, fire than water: Chriſt is a tried foundation of immoveable power and ſtability; but we ſinners had more reaſon to have expected vengeance from his juſtice, than grace from his fulneſs. This rock muſt be ſmitten by the rod of Moſes, the giver of the law, even that rod by which the plagues were inflicted upon Egypt: Chriſt was made under the law, and was ſmitten by its righteous curſe, and bare that puniſhment in the believer's ſtead, which the unbeliever muſt himſelf ſuffer for ever. The rock was ſmitten by Moſes, at the Lord's command, once in the preſence of the elders of Iſrael, who were then full of rebellion; whilſt the ſymbol of God's preſence and glory reſted upon it: Chriſt was wounded for our tranſgreſſions of the law, in the preſence of the rebellious Jewiſh elders, once for all, by man's inſtrumentality, but by his determinate purpoſe, who ſaid, "Awake, "O ſword, againſt the ſhepherd, againſt the man, who "is my fellow, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, ſmite the ſhepherd;" (Zech. xiii. 7;) whilſt evident tokens of divine majeſty attended his crucifixion and death; (Matt. xxvii. 45—54.) After the rock was ſmitten, the waters flowed forth abundantly, without which ſupply Iſrael muſt have periſhed: after Chriſt's crucifixion, and in conſequence of his reſurrection, aſcenſion, and interceſſion, the Holy Ghoſt, in all his humbling, ſanctifying, and comforting influences, as well as in his manifold gifts and operations, was abundantly communicated, (John, vii. 37—39;) without which we all muſt have periſhed in our ſins. Numerous as the Iſraelites were, there was water enough for them all, and a conſtant abundant ſupply: numerous as believers are, the ſupply of the Spirit of Chriſt ſuffices for them all; and there is ſo large and inexhauſtible a fulneſs in him, that millions of millions might drink and be ſatisfied, if there were ſo many athirſt for theſe living waters. The water flowed from of it, that the people may drink. And Moſes did ſo in the ſight of the elders of Iſrael.

7 And he called the name of the place Maſſah and Meribah, becauſe of the chiding of the children of Iſrael, and becauſe they tempted the LORD, ſaying, Is the LORD among us, or not?

8 Then came Amalek, and fought with Iſrael in Rephidim.

9 And Moſes ſaid unto Joſhua, Chooſe us out men, and go out, fight with Amalek: to-morrow I will ſtand on the top of the hill, with the rod of God in mine hand.

10 So Joſhua did as Moſes had ſaid to him, and fought with Amalek: and Moſes, Aaron, and Hur, went up to the top of the hill.

11 And it came to paſs when Moſes held up his hand, that Iſrael prevailed: and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed.

12 But Moſes' hands were heavy, and they took a ſtone and put it under him, and he ſat thereon: and Aaron and Hur ſtayed up his hands, the one on the one ſide, and the other on the other ſide; and his hands were ſteady until the going down of the ſun.

13 And Joſhua diſcomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the ſword.

14 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearſe it in the ears of Joſhua: for I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven.

15 And Moſes built an altar, and called the name of it JEHOVAH-NISSI.

16 For he ſaid, Becauſe the LORD hath ſworn that the LORD will have war with Amalek from generation to generation.

from the rock in ſtreams to refreſh the wilderneſs, and attended them on their way to Canaan: and this water flows from Chriſt through the ordinances, in the barren wilderneſs of this world, to refreſh our ſouls, to purify and fructify them, until we come to glory. Multitudes, however, who drank of the water, which flowed from the rock, periſhed in the wilderneſs: but "whoſoever drinketh of "the water which Chriſt ſhall give him, it ſhall be in "him a well of water ſpringing up into everlaſting life," (Iſai. xli. 17, 18. xliii. 19, 20. xlviii. 21. John iv. 10, 13, 14.)

V. 7. Maſſah, Meribah.] That is, temptation and chiding; the people tempted the Lord, and chided with Moſes.

V. 8. Amalek.] We find Amalek among the deſcendants of Eſau, (Gen. xxxvi. 16:) whence ſome ſuppoſe, that the Amalekites were a tribe of the Edomites. If ſo, they were the more inexcuſable in this unprovoked attack upon their brethren, who attempted not to moleſt them: but this is very doubtful. Nay, as they are always mentioned as a diſtinct nation from the Edomites; and as they ſeem to have been a conſiderable people before Eſau's time; we have every reaſon to conclude that they were not his deſcendants. (Gen. xiv. 7. Num. xxiv. 20.)

V. 10. To the top, &c.] Whence Moſes could witneſs the battle; and with his rod, by which ſuch wonders had been wrought, he would be viſible to the ſoldiers for their encouragement.

V. 11. Moſes held, &c.] This typified Chriſt's interceſſion for his people, when conflicting with their enemies; who prevail in conſequence, and ſhould take encouragement from it. It repreſented alſo the efficacy of fervent prayer: nor ſhould we forget that Moſes with whom the people had juſt before chided, and whom they ſeemed ready to murder, now ſtretched out his hands holding the rod, as the token of their victory!

V. 14. Write this, &c.] This is the firſt time writing is mentioned in Scripture: probably Moſes had before been inſtructed to write ſome of his hiſtory; though ſome think this was ſpoken by anticipation; that the law written by the finger of God was the firſt writing; and that Moſes was thenceforth inſtructed in writing his books.—As Joſhua was choſen to command in the wars of Iſrael, it was proper that he ſhould be informed of this ſentence, that he might embrace every opportunity of executing it: and enjoin the ſame conduct to his ſucceſſors.—This ſentence was completed by David, after whoſe times we ſeldom read of the name of Amalek.

V. 15. JEHOVAH-NISSI.] That is, the Lord my Banner. Moſes aſcribed the victory to the Lord's banner under which Iſrael fought; gave him the glory of it; and conſidered it as an earneſt of many more. This is the firſt altar, which we read of, after Jacob's going down into Egypt, during which period ſacrifices had been greatly interrupted.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When we are walking according to the commandments of the Lord, we may ſecurely depend upon him to ſupply our real wants, in his own time and manner: but we muſt expect trials, and learn to exerciſe patience as well as faith. Inordinate and impatient thirſting, even for needful things, puts the mind into a ferment, renders us forgetful of our former experience of the Lord's power and goodneſs, and diſpoſes us to quarrel with and upbraid our beſt friends, and even preſumptuouſly to tempt, diſtruſt, and preſcribe to God himſelf. They, who are employed in endeavours to do important good to others, muſt expect much unreaſonable and ungrateful behaviour; and not only to be reproached, but expoſed to danger for their beſt ſervices: they have need therefore to be armed with much patience, prudence, and meekneſs; and to have much communion with God; that they may ſpread every caſe before him, and ſeek comfort, protection, and direction from him. The good advice which Jethro gave to Moses, and Moses' concurrence with it, v. 13—26. 3d. Jethro's departure, v. 27.

WHEN Jethro the priest of Midian, Moses' father in law, heard of all that God had done for Moses, and for Israel his people, and that the LORD had brought Israel out of Egypt:

2 Then Jethro, Moses' father in law, took Zipporah Moses' wife, after he had sent her back,

3 And her two sons, of which the name of the one was Gershom, (for he said, I have been an alien in a strange land,)

4 And the name of the other was Eliezer, (for the God of my father, said he, was mine help, and delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh:)

5 And Jethro, Moses' father in law, came with his sons and his wife unto Moses into the wilderness, where he encamped at the mount of God.

6 And he said unto Moses, I thy father in law Jethro am come unto thee, and thy wife, and her two sons with her.

7 And Moses went out to meet his father in law, and did obeisance, and kissed him, and they asked each other of their welfare: and they came into the tent.

8 And Moses told his father in law all that the LORD had done unto Pharaoh, and to the Egyptians for Israel's sake, and all the travail that had come upon them by the way, and how the LORD delivered them.

9 And Jethro rejoiced for all the goodness which the LORD had done to Israel; whom he had delivered out of the hand of the Egyptians.

10 And Jethro said, Blessed be the LORD, who hath delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of Pharaoh, who hath delivered the people from under the hand of the Egyptians.

11 Now I know that the LORD is greater than all gods: for in the thing wherein they dealt proudly he was above them.

12 And

Lord will honour those, who behave thus in trying circumstances, in the presence of their despisers, and perhaps make them instruments of their preservation. And he himself teaches us by his example, not "to be overcome "of evil, but to overcome evil with good:" when the rod of Moses, which might justly have been the token of deserved vengeance after the manner of Egypt, was stretched forth to smite the rock, that he might give drink to his people, his chosen, though they were so rebellious. How can his servants want, when such a gracious God has power to command food from the clouds, and water from a rock in rich abundance?—Thus whilst the curse of God might righteously have been executed upon our guilty souls; behold the Son of God becomes a curse for us! From this smitten rock flow the streams of salvation, which follow us through the wilderness. Thence the believing soul receives in measure answerable, not only to his necessities, but to his largest expectations: whilst all, who are athirst, yea all that will, are invited to come, and take of them freely. Let us then ask, and receive, and drink, and rejoice, and live for ever.—But we must observe that our enemies will especially assault us, when drinking most abundantly of these living streams: they will, however, prepare us for the conflict; and fighting under the Lord our banner, we shall finally prevail, and give him the glory. We may also observe that some men are useful in one way, and some in another; but none so serviceable as they, who serve the public by fervent persevering prayers. Little do statesmen in the cabinet, or commanders in the field, understand, how much the success of their deliberations is influenced by the prayers of the true Christian in his closet, in his family, and in the house of God. But alas! how soon we flag in these spiritual exercises, even sooner than the soldier wearies in the field of battle; and we have need to be supported, and animated by each other: but especially we need continual assistance from the Lord, that we may pray always and not faint. And they have indeed cause to tremble, who have not only the sword of an enemy, but the prayers of God's people, and the memorials of God's word against them; for the complete salvation of the righteous is inseparable from the entire destruction of the wicked.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII.] V. 6. He said, &c.] Jethro sent a messenger to inform Moses of his arrival, by whom he thus addressed him, and he accordingly went forth to meet him. (Matt. viii. 5—10. Luke vii. 2—10.)

V. 11. I know, &c.] Jethro declared, that he was greatly confirmed in his faith, and encouraged in his worship of the true God, by this decided victory, which Jehovah had obtained over the proud and presumptuous opposition of 12 And Jethro, Moſes' father in law, took a burnt-offering, and ſacrifices for God: and Aaron came, and all the elders of Iſrael to eat bread with Moſes' father in law before God.

13 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that Moſes ſat to judge the people: and the people ſtood by Moſes, from the morning unto the evening.

14 And when Moſes' father in law ſaw all that he did to the people, he ſaid, What is this thing that thou doeſt to the people? Why ſitteſt thou thyſelf alone, and all the people ſtand by thee from morning unto even?

15 And Moſes ſaid unto his father in law, Becauſe the people come unto me to enquire of God.

16 When they have a matter, they come unto me, and I judge between one and another, and I do make them know the ſtatutes of God and his laws.

17 And Moſes' father in law ſaid unto him, The thing that thou doeſt is not good.

18 Thou wilt ſurely wear away, both thou, and this people that is with thee: for this thing is too heavy for thee; thou art not able to perform it thyſelf alone.

19 Hearken now unto my voice, I will give thee counſel, and God ſhall be with thee: Be thou for the people to God-ward, that thou mayeſt bring the cauſes unto God:

20 And thou ſhall teach them ordinances and laws, and ſhalt ſhew them the way wherein they muſt walk, and the work that they muſt do.

21 Moreover, thou ſhalt provide out of all the people, able men, ſuch as fear God, men of truth, hating covetouſneſs: and place ſuch over them, to be rulers of thouſands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

22 And let them judge the people at all ſeaſons: and it ſhall be, that every great matter they ſhall bring unto thee, but every ſmall matter they ſhall judge: So ſhall it be eaſier for thyſelf, and they ſhall bear the burden with thee.

23 If thou ſhalt do this thing, and God command thee ſo, then thou ſhalt be able to endure, and all this people ſhall alſo go to their place in peace.

24 So Moſes hearkened to the voice of his father in law, and did all that he had ſaid.

25 And Moſes choſe able men out of all Iſrael, and made them heads over the people, rulers of thouſands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

26 And they judged the people at all ſeaſons: the hard cauſes they brought unto Moſes, but every ſmall matter they judged themſelves.

27 And Moſes let his father in law depart; and he went his way into his own land.

of Pharaoh and the Egyptians, and by the redemption of Iſrael. Jethro was one of Abraham's deſcendants by Keturah, being a Midianite.

V. 12. And Jethro, &c.] The Aaronic prieſthood was not yet eſtabliſhed: Jethro therefore, as an ancient prieſt of the Lord, officiated in theſe ſacrifices, in which though not of Iſrael, he had fellowſhip with Iſrael, which appeared favourable to the caſe of the Gentiles. Having offered a burnt-offering, they ſacrificed other ſacrifices, and feaſted together with thankfulneſs and ſober chearfulneſs, as before God; which was a repreſentation of the life of faith in Chriſt, and the communion of the ſaints.

V. 13. To judge the people, &c.] Moſes had undertaken to try the cauſes of the Iſraelites, to decide their differences; and in ſome caſes to enquire of God for them what they ought to do. (15.) As the people were ignorant, and we may well conclude very contentious, as well as numerous; as Moſes was very acceſſible and meek; and as their ſuits were managed without coſt, or trouble; they would doubtleſs furniſh him with abundance of employment.

V. 19. Be thou, &c.] Jethro adviſed, that in ſuch cauſes as were more difficult, and required direction from God or more immediately referred to his worſhip and ſervice, there ſhould be an appeal to Moſes.

V. 23. God command thee ſo, &c.] It was thus intimated that Moſes ought to refer this matter to God, and follow Jethro's counſel, in caſe God approved of it. Accordingly this and ſome other arrangements were made by the Lord's appointment, and the people's approbation.—(Numb. xi. 16. Deut. i. 9—18.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The report of the Lord's power and goodneſs, ſhewn in behalf of Iſrael, having reached diſtant places, confirmed the faith, and excited the joy and gratitude of ſuch, as were not perſonally intereſted in thoſe peculiar benefits: and the records of the ſame events, having been handed down to theſe diſtant ages, ſhould produce the ſame effects upon our minds; that we too may be eſtabliſhed in the faith, and ſtirred up to truſt and praiſe the Lord for his mercies to Iſrael.—Huſbands and wives may, on ſome occaſions, be obliged to ſeparate for a time: but the ſooner they come together again, and the more they live together the better: extraordinary ſervices and dangers may be improper for the female ſex to ſhare in; but ordinary cares, and every comfort and honour of the huſband, the wife ought to participate. Nor ſhould children needleſsly be deprived of the great benefit, which they may derive from the care, inſtruction, and example of pious and wiſe parents: and the people will be much edified, when they witneſs how well they who are entruſted with the adminiſtration of public affairs, and take care of the church of God, regulate their own families. When we record our trials, we ſhould be careful to record our mercies alſo: "Perſecuted, but not "forſaken; caſt down, but not deſtroyed;" exiles, but protected by the God of our fathers. It is very comely, when perſons, employed in the moſt important public ſervices, pay a proper attention to the duties and regards of private life: and when they, who are highly honoured of God, are very humble and affable, and ſhew all reſpect to ſuperior relations, and gratitude to old benefactors.—Our meeting from time to time with our friends on earth will be very comfortable and uſeful, if we converſe together concerning the loving kindneſs and wonderful works of God; if we unite in praiſe and thankſgiving; and if, by ſobriety, love, gratitude, and the fear of God, we turn every feſtive interview into a religious ordinance, a ſacrifice acceptable, well-pleaſing to the Lord: What then will be our final meeting in heaven, where the love, joy, and praiſe will be complete, uninterrupted, and eternal!—But our affectionate attention to relatives and friends muſt not render us negligent of our proper buſineſs; any more than the ingratitude, which we experience, ſhould render us weary of doing good. The moſt exalted ſtations have the heavieſt work connected with them, if they be properly filled: for ſuch is human nature, that it is not only an arduous undertaking to reſtrain men from ungodlineſs, but very difficult to keep them from devouring one another: and they, who would adminiſter juſtice, keep the peace, and repreſs violence and fraud, will have enough to engroſs their thoughts, to burden their ſpirits, and to occupy their time. Yet, in doing with our might, whatever our hand findeth to do, a prudent regard to health is not only allowable, but our duty; which it is not good to neglect, however well we may be employed: and wiſdom is profitable to direct men in high ſtations, what they muſt do themſelves, and what they may do by others. The Lord hath alſo divided his gifts ſeverally to different men; and an impartial obſerver, though of inferior endowments, may ſometimes ſuggeſt a counſel, which the wiſeſt of men may very profitably attend to: yea his wiſdom will diſpoſe him to attend to it; "for "give inſtruction to a wiſe man, and he will yet be wiſer;" "but fools deſpiſe wiſdom, and inſtruction." Yet we muſt not follow the wiſeſt counſel, until we have, by attention to the ſcriptures and prayer, conſulted the Lord alſo; who often counſels us by the advice of our pious friends, that we may love and be united to them, as well as dependent on, and thankful to him.—Magiſtracy, (as well as the miniſtry of the Goſpel,) is an ordinance of God: they therefore, who are employed in the moſt ſubordinate offices of government, ſhould be ſelected perſons, "able "men," of clear heads, and ſound judgments; ſuch as "fear God," and from a principle of genuine piety become "men of truth," of integrity and fidelity; and have learned to "hate covetouſneſs," that they "may ſhake "their hands from holding of bribes," and adminiſter juſtice impartially. What then ought law-givers, ſupreme magiſtrates, and the miniſters of religion to be! Happy indeed are the people, that are bleſſed with ſuch rulers and teachers; "yea bleſſed are the people who have the Lord "for their God."

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 1. On the, &c.] The Iſraelites left Egypt on the 15th day of the firſt month, and are ſuppoſed to have arrived at Sinai on the firſt day of the third month, that is on the 47th day from their departure. Three days afterwards the law was delivered; that is on the 50th day; on which the feaſt of pentecoſt was held, as it is ſuppoſed, in commemoration thereof.

V. 3. Moſes, &c.] Moſes went up to mount Sinai, doubtleſs by the Lord's command, in order to receive his meſſage to the people, who were now to be incorporated, and formed into a church and nation, under the government of God, and in covenant with him: Having hitherto been firſt a ſingle family, and then a number of ſlaves.

V. 4. On Eagles', &c.] As the Eagle carries her young upon her wings, (Deut. xxxii. 11,) out of the reach of thoſe who tians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myſelf.

5 Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye ſhall be a peculiar treaſure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine.

6 And ye ſhall be unto me a kingdom of prieſts, and an holy nation. Theſe are the words which thou ſhalt ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael.

7 And Moſes came and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces all theſe words which the LORD commanded him.

8 And all the people anſwered together, and ſaid, All that the LORD hath ſpoken, we will do. And Moſes returned the words of the people unto the LORD.

9 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Lo, I come who would attempt their deſtruction: Thus the Lord reſcued the Iſraelites from Egypt, that they might be his people, dwelling under his protection, and devoted to his worſhip and ſervice.

V. 5. Keep my covenant, &c.] The national covenant with Iſrael was here meant; the covenant of peculiarity; the charter, upon which they were incorporated as a people under the government of Jehovah. It was an engagement of God to give them poſſeſſion of Canaan, and to protect them in it; to render the land fruitful, and the nation victorious and proſperous, and to perpetuate his oracles and ordinances amongſt them; as long as they did not, as a people, reject his authority, apoſtatize to idolatry, and tolerate open wickedneſs. Theſe things would conſtitute a forfeiture of the covenant; as their national rejection of Chriſt did afterwards.—At the ſame time true believers among them were perſonally dealt with according to the covenant of mercy and grace, even as true Chriſtians now are: and unbelievers were under the covenant of works, and liable to condemnation by it, as at preſent. Yet the national covenant was not ſtrictly either the one or the other, but had ſomething in it of the nature of each. It had not reference to their final ſalvation perſonally, nor was it broken by the perſonal diſobedience, or even idolatry of any number of individuals; provided it was not ſanctioned or tolerated by public authority. It was, however, a type of the covenant, which is made with true believers in Chriſt Jeſus; as were all the tranſactions with Iſrael: but like other types, it had not the very image, but a ſhadow, of good things to come. As a nation they broke this covenant: therefore the Lord declared that he would make a new covenant with Iſrael, putting his law, (not only in their hands,) but in their inward parts, and writing it, (not upon tables of ſtone,) but in their hearts; forgiving their iniquity, and remembering their ſins no more. (Jer. xxxi. 32—34. Heb. viii. 7—12. x. 16, 17.)—In all the ſcriptures referred to, the covenant ſpoken of, as ready to vaniſh away, is evidently not the covenant of works, but the national covenant with Iſrael, which they had vacated by their ſins. Without we carefully attend to this diſtinction, and keep in view continually this national covenant with Iſrael, we ſhall be liable to fall into perpetual miſtakes in reading the Old Teſtament. Nothing can be more abſurd than to ſuppoſe, that the nation of the Jews was under the covenant of works, which knows nothing of repentance, faith in a mediator, forgiveneſs of ſins, or grace: yet we oft meet with language in many authors, which ſeems to convey ſuch an idea. Though it is more common to hear the whole nation of Iſrael ſpoken of, as if they all bare the character, and poſſeſſed the privileges, of true believers, actually intereſted in the covenant of grace; and concluſions are drawn from ſuch premiſes, as if they were undeniable.—But in fact, they were all under a diſpenſation of mercy, and had outward privileges, and advantages many ways for ſalvation: but like profeſſing Chriſtians, they many of them reſted in them and looked no further. (Rom. ii. 17—29. iii. 1—9.) "All were not Iſrael, that were of Iſrael."—The outward covenant was made with the nation, entitling them to outward advantages, upon the condition of outward national obedience. The covenant of grace was ratified perſonally with the true believer, and ſealed and ſecured ſpiritual bleſſings, by producing a holy diſpoſition of heart, and ſpiritual obedience to the law of God.—In caſe Iſrael kept the Lord's covenant, he promiſed, that they ſhould be to him a peculiar treaſure; which is ſafely repoſited, becauſe highly valued. The Septuagint renders it a peculiar people, (Tit. ii. 14. 1 Pet. ii. 9.) All the earth being the Lord's, he might have any where found a nation as proper to be choſen as the people of Iſrael: this implied, that, as his choice of them was gratuitous, ſo, if they rejected his covenant, he would reject them as a people, and communicate their privileges to others; as he hath done, ſince the introduction of the Chriſtian diſpenſation.

V. 6. A kingdom of prieſts, &c.] A kingdom, of which Jehovah would act as Lawgiver, Judge, and protector, from his mercy ſeat: A kingdom of prieſts ſeparated from other people, conſecrated to him, permitted to approach him, to offer ſacrifices and ſupplications, and poſſeſſing a ſacred character amongſt the nations of the earth; and a holy people, as being a kingdom of prieſts. All this Iſrael was in profeſſion, and outward privilege: All this the true Chriſtian is in his ſpiritual privileges and real character, in the ſight of God, and in the ſight of the world. (1 Pet. ii. 9. Rev. i. 6.)

V. 7. Laid before, &c.] Moſes plainly laid before the elders the terms of this national covenant, and demanded their determination concerning it. Theſe ſeem to have been the principal perſons, who repreſented the people.

V. 8. All that, &c.] Thus the people conſented to the covenant, though probably with too great confidence:—This being ſettled, preparations were made for the promulgation of the law, according to which that covenant was to be framed.

V. 9. Lo, I come, &c.] The ſolemn manner, and terrible majeſty, with which the law was delivered, from Mount come unto thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I ſpeak with thee, and believe thee for ever. And Moſes told the words of the people unto the LORD.

10 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Go unto the people, and ſanctify them to-day, and to-morrow, and let them waſh their clothes.

11 And be ready againſt the third day: for the third day the LORD will come down in the ſight of all the people, upon mount Sinai.

12 And thou ſhalt ſet bounds unto the people round about, ſaying, Take heed to yourſelves, that ye go not up into the mount, or touch the border of it: whoſoever toucheth the mount, ſhall be ſurely put to death.

13 There ſhall not an hand touch it, but he ſhall ſurely be ſtoned or ſhot through; whether it be beaſt or man, it ſhall not live: when the trumpet ſoundeth long, they ſhall come up to the mount.

14 And Moſes went down from the mount unto the people, and ſanctified the people, and they waſhed their clothes.

15 And he ſaid unto the people, Be ready againſt the third day: come not at your wives.

16 And it came to paſs on the third day in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; ſo that all the people that was in the camp trembled.

17 And Moſes brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God, and they ſtood at the nether part of the mount.

18 And mount Sinai was altogether on a ſmoke, becauſe the LORD deſcended upon it in fire: and the ſmoke thereof aſcended as the ſmoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly.

19 And when the voice of the trumpet ſounded long, and waxed louder and louder, Moſes ſpake, and God anſwered him by a voice.

20 And the LORD came down upon mount Sinai, on the top of the mount: and the LORD called Moſes up to the top of the mount, and Moſes went up.

21 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Go down, charge the people, leſt they break through unto the LORD, to gaze, and many of them periſh.

22 And

Mount Sinai out of the thick cloud, was chiefly intended to render the people ever after willing to hear the Lord's meſſage from the mouth of Moſes, and believe his teſtimony; rather than to behold ſuch a ſight any more. The thick cloud alſo repreſented the comparative darkneſs of that diſpenſation: when Chriſt was transfigured, the voice came out of a bright cloud, "this is my beloved Son, in "whom I am well pleaſed, hear ye him."

V. 10. Sanctify them, &c.] The waſhing with water, and other obſervances of external purification, repreſented that inward preparation of heart, that ſeparation from ſin, and indifference about even lawful cares and affections, which become us, when ſolemnly joining ourſelves unto God in a perpetual covenant not to be forgotten.

V. 11. Will come down, &c.] That is, the Lord would give evident and awful tokens of his preſence and glory.

V. 12. Thou ſhalt, &c.] Theſe regulations, and all the terrific ſolemnities of this tranſaction, were calculated to impreſs the minds of the people with a deep ſenſe of the divine majeſty and purity, and to convince them of their own guilt and unholineſs; to ſhew them that they could not ſtand in judgment before God by their own obedience to the law, which was about to be delivered; that conſidered in itſelf it was more ſuited to exclude them from the preſence of God, than to bring them near to him: and thus to prepare them to underſtand and receive the Goſpel, which was preached to them in the ceremonial law.

V. 13. When the, &c.] This was effected by the miniſtration of Angels, and at this ſignal the people were directed to approach the preſcribed bounds. (Gal. iii. 19. Heb. ii. 2.) Some ſuppoſe this trumpet was a repreſentation of the Goſpel, to which the law has a ſubſerviency.—The law of itſelf would drive us from God; but being humbled by the knowledge of ſin; we are by the ſound of the Goſpel encouraged to approach him.

V. 15. Come, &c.] (1 Cor. vii. 5.)

V. 19. Moſes ſpake, &c.] Then it is probable he ſaid, "I exceedingly fear, and quake:" Yet he and Aaron were commanded and encouraged to go up into the mount: (20—24;) not only as types of Chriſt, in his mediatorial character; but as juſtified believers, who need not fear the juſtice of God, or the curſes of the law, being redeemed from them, by him who was made a curſe for them.

V. 21. To gaze, &c.] It might have been ſuppoſed that the terror of this proſpect would have checked the preſumptuous curioſity of the people: but the hard heart of an unawakened ſinner can trifle with the moſt terrible denunciations,

22 And let the priests also which come near to the LORD, sanctify themselves, lest the LORD break forth upon them.

23 And Moses said unto the LORD, The people cannot come up to mount Sinai: for thou chargedst us, saying, Set bounds about the mount, and sanctify it.

24 And the LORD said unto him, Away get thee down, and thou shalt come up, thou, and Aaron with thee: but let not the priests and the people break through, to come up unto the LORD, lest he break forth upon them.

25 So Moses went down unto the people, and spake unto them.

tions and judgments of an angry God; and convert them all into a mere diversion and amusement; or make them the subject of curious speculations, which leave the heart and conscience untouched.

V. 22. The priests also, &c.] These must have been certain persons, who had been appointed, or accustomed to offer sacrifices in their different tribes, before the Aaronic priesthood.

V. 24. Lest he break forth, &c.] Every circumstance and expression were intended to evince, that the law now about to be given, though holy, just, and good, could speak nothing but terror and destruction to the transgressor; and fill the heart with horror, dismay, and desperation. But in subserviency to the Covenant of Grace, its uses are manifold. There the sinner discovers what he ought to be, and what he is, and consequently what he wants. There he learns the nature, necessity, and glory of redemption and sanctification; and having been warned to flee for refuge to the atonement of Christ, and learned to depend on, cleave to, and love the Saviour; the law in his hand is the rule of his obedience; the law in his heart is the source of that obedience, and the evidence of his forgiveness: and as the test of self-examination, he is thereby continually made sensible of his sinfulness, and entire dependence on the Saviour, and urged to press forwards after nearer and nearer conformity to this perfect standard. These are some of the uses of the law to sinners, in bringing them unto Christ that they may be justified by faith; and in directing the believer in attaining assurance and glorifying God. It served also to the Israelites, and still does among us, to restrain the excesses of wicked men by its terrors, and to keep the world in some degree of order; so long as men are not driven to desperation by a knowledge of its full strictness and severity. It discovers also the moral character of the Deity, and manifests his justice in the judgments which he executes; and will make the wickedness of men, and the righteousness of God, more conspicuous, in the great day of judgment and of perdition of ungodly men. But it is very difficult to drive men from the unreasonable notion, that a sinner should seek justification before God by his imperfect, scanty, and external obedience to this law: and to counteract that propensity, this tremendous scene was exhibited; as well as to teach the Israelites, that even in respect of their national covenant, though their obedience was required, yet the blessings were not merited by it, but freely given by a gracious God in a way becoming his own holiness.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Though our blessedness as God's people originate from his unmerited kindness, yet we must evidence that it belongs to us, by our upright and voluntary obedience to his commandments; without which we have no proof that we are his peculiar treasure, above the rest of our fallen race.—We can never enough admire the Lord's condescension and compassion to us, in our low estate and undone condition, in all he has done for us and conferred upon us: and we may not only rejoice that the Lord reigneth; but that, though he delivers his holy law from mount Sinai, we may approach him upon his holy hill of Zion, upon a mercy seat, as God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself.—Blessed be God, we are under a dispensation of mercy, and have, like Israel, the outward seals and advantages of the covenant; but let us not rest in them. As upon the throne of grace, the Lord mildly receives the submission of repenting sinners, and reigns over his redeemed people; let us draw near unto him, and thankfully receive the salvation which he bestows, and yield ourselves up to him as his willing subjects. Such are a holy priesthood, and offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable unto God the Father, through Jesus Christ; they have him for their portion, and are consecrated to his service; and should never forget their sacred character, nor disgrace it by any inconsistent conduct.—But alas! we are more apt to profess, and to resolve, than to practise. Let us not then say, that we will do so and so; but beg of God to enable us so to do.—The ministers of God are required fairly and plainly to lay the whole of their message before the people, and in prayer they report before him the reception with which it meets; but they are not answerable for consequences. The more seriously we prepare for the ordinances of God, and the more our minds are abstracted from all earthly objects, the greater benefit shall we receive. But in approaching to God we must never lose sight of his holiness and greatness, or of our own meanness and pollution. Even upon mount Zion our God is a consuming fire, and must be worshipped with reverence and godly fear, without presumptuous familiarity, or vain curiosity.—(Heb. xii. 28, 29.)

How then shall we approach him upon this terrible mount Sinai! Could we rush uncalled into the midst of the fire, tempest, and earthquakes? no more can we stand in judgment before him according to the tenor of his righteous law. And if such tremendous tokens of the divine justice accompanied its promulgation: what will that day be when the earth shall be encircled in flames; and all, who ever dwelt thereon, shall be gathered before the tribunal of the Judge, to hear their final and decisive sentence according to it! Happy they, who have felt their need of a Mediator, have hearkened to the voice of the Saviour, have from him obtained forgiveness of all their sins, and acceptance with God; who have received the law, disarmed of it's curses and stripped of it's terrors, from his loving hands, and have been taught by his grace to love and obey it in ſincerity and truth. Theſe, like Moſes and Aaron, though at firſt they tremble at God's word, and are always humbled before him, yet will through Chriſt grow, as it were, familiar with mount Sinai; and fearleſs of condemnation will meditate on the terror of the ſentence of the law, and thence draw arguments to increaſe their gratitude, and quicken their willing ſervices: and at laſt they will triumph, when the wicked ſhall be calling in vain to the rocks, to cover them from the wrath of their offended Judge.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX.] V. 1. And God ſpake, &c.] The voice of God was heard, but no ſimilitude was ſeen; (Deut. v. 22:) and this voice was ſo loud, that all the immenſe multitude of the Iſraelites could clearly diſtinguiſh all the following words; namely, the ten commandments and no more, which may be conſidered as the grand outlines of the moral law of God.—Of that law ſome traces are diſcoverable by reaſon, and the whole is conſonant to reaſon: every part of it has its foundation in the nature of God and of man; in the relations which we bear to him and to each other; and in thoſe obligations which thence ariſe. It is evident that there is a diſtinction betwixt moral precepts and inſtituted appointments: ſome things, which God hath commanded, are in themſelves ſo indifferent, that he might without impropriety have prohibited them; as the uſe of bread and wine in one religious ordinance, and the uſe of water in another. But there are laws of a different nature: and it is abſurd to ſuppoſe that God could, conſiſtently with infinite wiſdom and goodneſs, have reverſed the commandments which he hath given his creatures, to love him and one another, to ſpeak truth, and to do juſtice. Indeed ritual precepts are equally obligatory except when they come in competition with moral duties; and then the Lord "will have mercy and not "ſacrifice." But the ritual injunction is of temporary obligation, had no exiſtence before its expreſs appointment, may be vacated by the ſame authority, or having anſwered the purpoſe, its obligation may ceaſe of courſe: whilſt the moral precept is of immutable and eternal validity. The different circumſtances, indeed, in which rational creatures may be placed, occaſion circumſtantial alterations: thus the entrance of ſin and miſery hath rendered patience and forgiveneſs of injuries a part of the law of love to God and to our neighbours, which otherwiſe had found no place for exereiſe. Theſe duties, and many others, required of us in our preſent ſituation, will ceaſe entirely in heaven. Yet the grand principles, which neceſſarily require them of man, circumſtanced as he now is, would have been the ſame had he never ſinned, and will remain the ſame to all eternity.

As the foundations of the moral law are immutable, ſo its obligations are univerſal: the law, though given on this particular occaſion to Iſrael, demands obedience from all mankind; and the whole world will be judged according to it, and to the opportunity which they have had of becoming acquainted with it; whether by reaſon and tradition alone, or by the light of the written word: except as the believer has obtained deliverance from its merited condemnation.

The law is alſo ſpiritual, and takes cognizance of the ſecret thoughts, deſires, intentions, and diſpoſitions of the heart; and above all things requires a proper regulation of the judgment, will, and affections. Its grand demand is LOVE, without which the beſt external obedience is condemned as mere hypocriſy. This is a peculiarity of the law of God, whoſe incommunicable prerogative it is to ſearch the heart: but, in common with other laws, it requires perfect, unfailing, uninterrupted, and perpetual obedience; for no law in the world tolerates diſobedience to itſelf. From the entrance to the cloſe of life, the law of God requires exact conformity to every precept; and he that "keepeth the whole law, and of-"fendeth in one point, is guilty of all." Every omiſſion, or commiſſion, exceſs, defect, or variation, internal or external, in word or deed, is ανομια, a violation of the law, or a deviation in one way or other from that perfect rule. This is the Apoſtle's definition of ſin; (1 John iii. 4.) and the wages of ſin is death; (Rom. vi. 23.) from which ſentence there is no deliverance but by the mercy of our Prince. "Thus by the works of the law ſhall no fleſh "be juſtified in the ſight of God; for by the law is the "knowledge of ſin;" but not the knowledge of ſalvation. (Rom. iii. 20—23.)—The ten commandments may be conſidered as the text of this moral law, which is ſtill more abridged in the two great commands, "of loving "God with all our heart, and our neighbour as our-"ſelves:" and we are authorized by the example of Chriſt to interpret every one of them in the ſtricteſt, moſt ſpiritual, and extenſive ſenſe of which it is capable; and to conſider all the preceptive part of Scripture, as a divinely-inſpired comment upon them. Even repentance of ſin, faith in a Mediator, love, gratitude, and obedience to that Mediator, and other evangelical graces and duties, are all exerciſes of ſupreme love to God; and are neceſſarily required by the law from man, circumſtanced as he now is, under the condemnation of a ſinner, and under the diſpenſation of mercy, in the particular mode revealed in the Goſpel. In this view we may decide, or rather wave, the controverſy about the rule of duty, whether it be the ten commandments or the whole Scriptures, as the one is the text, and the other the expoſition, and the whole "ex-"ceeding broad." Chriſt fulfilled the requirements of this

4 Thou ſhalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeneſs of any thing, that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, this law moſt perfectly: yet in his peculiar circumſtances, it actually required all that love for the Father, and for his brethren, and all thoſe expreſſions of it, which, ſubſequent to his incarnation that he might be our Mediator, he manifeſted in his life and death. Nor did ever apoſtle, or prophet reach, in one ſingle inſtance, that degree of love and purity which it demands.

The knowledge of the extent, excellency, nature, and uſes of the law of God, in connexion with, and ſubſerviency to the Goſpel of Chriſt, is of ſuch vaſt importance, towards ſolving difficulties, anſwering objections, determining controverſies, and preventing miſtakes; that I hope for the reader's forgiveneſs, if I expatiate, in the expoſition of this chapter, conſiderably beyond my general limits. The dreams of a purgatory, either before or after the day of judgment; the flattering illuſions of the merit of human obedience; the palliating excuſes that are made for ſin; the objections that are made to the ſovereignty of divine Grace in the Goſpel, and to God's method of juſtifying ſinners; and all Antinomian abuſe of thoſe precious truths of revelation, ſeem to have their principal foundation in ignorance of the law of God. Ignorance of its extenſive requirements ſupports careleſs preſumption, and Phariſaical ſelf-confidence: ignorance of its excellency excites murmurs and outcries againſt the ſeverity of its awful ſanction; and gives riſe to ſtrange notions of being ſaved from the law itſelf as an enemy which Chriſt hath deſtroyed, inſtead of being ſaved from the condemnation and power of ſin, and taught to delight in the law of God after the inward man. The ſame ignorance hath led ſome to frame in imagination a new law, which hath been ſubſtituted in the place of the old law, ſince by ſin man became unable to obey it; hath occaſioned innumerable objections to the doctrine, and miſtakes about the nature, of regeneration; and indeed hath prevented many real Chriſtians from glorifying God in that manner, which they otherwiſe might have done. Were the law of God well underſtood, the perſon and offices of the Saviour muſt appear moſt ſuitable and precious; the nature and neceſſity of regeneration evident and rational; and the genuine beauty of Chriſtianity, as reinſtating a loſt ſinner in his Maker's favour, and recovering him to his image, in a way honourable to all the perfections of the Deity, would ſhine forth with unclouded luſtre. It is true that no expoſition can effect theſe purpoſes: but as crude notions and unguarded expreſſions tend to increaſe the evils complained of; ſo a ſcriptural ſtatement of the matter may, by God's bleſſing, have ſome ſalutary effect in checking their progreſs.

It may be proper further to premiſe, that though the law, ſtrictly ſpeaking, contains in it no mention of mercy, and has no reference ro redemption; but is ſimply man's rule of duty as a rational creature, and God's rule of diſpenſing rewards to the obedient and inflicting puniſhments on tranſgreſſors: yet, as given to Iſrael for the foundation of their national covenant, it mentions the redemption out of Egypt, and the mercy which God had in ſtore for them. For we may conſider the giving of the law from mount Sinai, either as a publication to mankind of the law of their reaſon and nature, as originally written in their hearts, but eraſed or obſcured by ſin; which was intended in gracious ſubſerviency to the Goſpel, for the conviction and inſtruction of the Church in all ages; or as given to Iſrael for the rule and foundation of their national covenant. For want of adverting to this obvious diſtinction, it hath been incautiouſly aſſerted that the law itſelf was given only to the redeemed: which ſentiment not only ſuppoſes the reſt of God's univerſal kingdom without a law, but vacates redemption itſelf; for where there is no law, there is no tranſgreſſion, no condemnation, no occaſion for redemption. Thus men are driven to extremes: and whilſt ſome argue that the believer has in no ſenſe any thing to do with the law, becauſe redeemed from its curſe; others contend that none elſe have any thing to do with it, becauſe unable or indiſpoſed to obey it. "Do we then make void the law through faith? "God forbid: yea we eſtabliſh the law." (Rom. iii. 31). All rational creatures are bound by its authority; all tranſgreſſors are under condemnation by it: but Chriſt having fulfilled its righteouſneſs and borne its curſe; all, who hear the Goſpel are under a diſpenſation of mercy, and have forgiveneſs propoſed to them, all true believers are actually pardoned and juſtified; and all required, and inwardly diſpoſed to a ſincere, unreſerved, habitual obedience to the law, though not able to obey it perfectly.

V. 2. I am the LORD.] The great Lawgiver proclaims his eſſential glory and immutable excellency, as the foundation of his authority, and the reaſon of our obedience.—As the fountain of Being, and conſequently of all power, knowledge, wiſdom, juſtice, truth, and love, and the ſtandard of excellence and beauty, from which all created amiableneſs is an emanation, and of which it is a feeble reflection: to him alone the throne belongs; he alone is entitled, and qualified to be the Lawgiver and Judge of the univerſe; and he alone is worthy of that love and ſervice which his law demands.

Thy God.] This expreſſes our obligations, and thoſe of Iſrael, to the great Creator, as the name of JEHOVAH expreſſed his eſſential perfection. By him all were created; by him all are upheld, protected, and maintained; ſo that paſt and preſent benefits lay them under further obligations to obedience. Furthermore, the Iſraelites were the children of the covenant made with Abraham, had the external ſeal of circumciſion in their fleſh, had his glorious preſence amongſt them, and had juſt conſented to enter into covenant with him as their God: And profeſſing Chriſtians, dedicated to God in the external initiatory ordinance of baptiſm, favoured with the light of revelation, and calling themſelves his worſhippers, ſtand in a ſimilar relation to him.

Which have brought thee out, &c.] The recent deliverance of the Iſraelites from Egypt was ſuch a glorious diſplay of the divine power, and ſuch a ſpecial act of kindneſs, as laid them under additional obligations to obedience, beneath, or that is in the water under the earth.

5 Thou ſhalt not bow down thyſelf to them, nor ſerve them: for I the LORD thy God dience, and afterwards rendered their diſobedience more inexcuſable. (Iſaiah, v. 1—8). This was a type of redemption from ſin and Satan, and the true people of God will conſider themſelves as peculiarly bound to obedience, and inexcuſable when they fail of it.

V. 3. Thou ſhalt, &c.] The commandments are delivered in the ſingular number to every individual; Chriſt teaches us to pray in the plural number, "Our Father "who art in heaven:" for obedience is demanded of us ſingly, but we ought to pray for others, even for all men. Several of the commandments are delivered in the form of prohibitions; yet they all imply a poſitive duty, which muſt be conſidered in explaining them. This firſt commandment implies the duty of an inward diſpoſition and an outward behaviour, ſuited to the relations in which we ſtand to Jehovah as our God. He alone is the adequate object of our affections: he alone can ſatisfy the capacities, with which he hath created us: all we are and have being derived from him, he poſſeſſes an unalienable right of directing the uſe which we ſhould make of our bodies, ſouls, and poſſeſſions. He has ſo clear a title to our love, gratitude, reverence, worſhip, ſubmiſſion, implicit credence, and obedience, that we cannot withhold them from him, or render them to any other, without the moſt palpable injuſtice. Conſidering WHO HE IS, and WHAT HE HATH DONE FOR US, except we love him ſupremely, to the utmoſt meaſure of our natural capacities, and with all the powers of our ſouls, we cannot be deemed to love him in a ſuitable manner at all. Did we love him with all our heart, mind, ſoul, and ſtrength, all contrary affections would be excluded, all other affections ſubordinated. Approving and admiring his excellency, deſiring and delighting in his favour, depending on his power, truth, and love, and being zealous for his glory, with all the energy of our whole ſouls; it is evident that our affections towards all other objects, would be exerciſed entirely for his ſake, according to his will and allowance, and in abſolute ſubordination. Filled with gratitude for the paſt, and ſatisfaction with the preſent, and fearing nothing but offending him; no creature could then rival God in the judgment and choice of our hearts, or prevail with us to diſobey his commands, or to neglect his delightful worſhip: And whilſt we rendered him his tribute of glory, he would be our portion and felicity: This is the reaſonable ſtate of things. Thus it hath ever been with holy angels; thus it will ever be with the redeemed in heaven; and all that is ſhort of this, or contrary to it on earth, is ſin, the effect of the fall, and evinces man a ruined creature.—With theſe things before our eyes, we ſhall be enabled with greater preciſion to ſtate the nature and extent of the prohibition before us. The diſlike, which the unholy heart of man has to the holy character, worſhip, and ſervice of God, connected with its blindneſs and pride, has in all ages betrayed the human ſpecies into the ſnare of Satan, and cauſed them to fall into idolatry. For man's reaſon and conſcience being diſſatisfied without ſome object of worſhip, and ſome ſort of religion; and his heart diſreliſhing the true God and his ſpiritual worſhip, he hath been eaſily induced to ſubſtitute deities and religious rites more ſuited to his own character and inclinations. Thus, to the diſgrace of the human underſtanding, groſs idolatry hath almoſt every where prevailed; and that ambitious proud ſpirit, who is the enemy of God and man, hath been gratified in the ſucceſs of his preſumptuous attempts to become, under theſe diſguiſes, the GOD OF THIS WORLD.—This worſhip of creatures is the grand offence here prohibited: whether they be creatures of God, or mere creatures of the human imagination. By rendering them religious worſhip, almighty power, omnipreſence, and other divine perfections, are aſcribed to them; the glory which belongs to God is given them; and that help and thoſe bleſſings are expected from them, which he alone can afford. Theſe idolatries of the heathens were continually imitated by the Jewiſh nation: and that divine worſhip, which the church of Rome enjoins to be paid to ſaints and angels, is as evident a violation of this commandment, as ever the Pagans were guilty of, and in ſome reſpects more aggravated. Far would I be from inſinuating that every one of that vaſt multitude, which forms the Roman church, is involved in this enormous guilt. It is, indeed, proper to proteſt againſt the idolatries and ſuperſtitions, which have been ſanctioned by the hierarchy of Rome, and I would lament that they are ſtill ſo generally complied with, throughout its dependencies: but the perſons of Papiſts I would leave to the judgment of God. Without here entering into the queſtion concerning the real exiſtence of witchcraft, it may be remarked, that all pretenſions to any thing of that nature; or to magic, fortune-telling, charms, aſtrology, or ſuch like methods of diſcovering future events, and obtaining protection or deliverance, are evident violations of this commandment; as in theſe ways men expect that information or aſſiſtance from other beings, which God alone can afford.—The commandment however is ſpiritual, and reaches much further. To love, deſire, delight in, or expect good from any ſinful indulgence, though in the ſmalleſt degree, is thereby prohibited: as alſo to ſuffer the moſt valuable and excellent creature to ſupplant, or rival God in our affections; which implies in proportion contempt of him. All atheiſm, infidelity, and irreligion, violate this commandment: for by theſe things men ſet up themſelves as gods, aſpire at independence, pretend to be ſufficient for their own happineſs, reject ſubordination, and refuſe to render homage, worſhip, love, or praiſe, to any ſuperior or benefactor: however moral, therefore, ſuch perſons may be in their conduct towards men, they are the rivals and enemies of God, and withhold, or even intercept his tribute. The proud man alſo is his own idol, and deifies, admires, loves, truſts in himſelf, and, as it were, burns incenſe, and offers ſacrifices at his own ſhrine; and expects others to do the ſame. The ambitious man makes a deity of the applauſe of men, of honourable appellations, and of domination over his fellow creatures. The revengeful tions, and of domination over his fellow creatures. The revengeful man uſurps the throne of God, and attempts to wreſt the ſword of juſtice from his hand, that he may wield it himſelf. The covetous man deifies his wealth; which he ſupremely loves, deſires, delights in, depends on, and expects felicity from; and to it ſacrifices every nobler conſideration. The ſenſualiſt worſhips a group of filthier deities, than ever diſgraced a Pagan temple. The romantic lover's life and felicity are wrapt up in the ſmiles of the object of his idolatrous affection: his heaven is placed in her favour, and her frown determines him the moſt miſerable of creatures.—Nay the doating huſband, or the indulgent parent, by inordinate affection deifies the wife, or child, whom he ought to love tenderly, but in ſubordination to the love of God, and in ſubmiſſion to his will.

But the moſt copious comment cannot equal the breadth of this command. Whatever is inconſiſtent with, or comes ſhort of, that perfect love, gratitude, reverence, and worſhip, which have before been deſcribed, is a tranſgreſſion of it, and as ſuch expoſes us to condemnation.—In ſhort, it requires us to love God and all his creatures, according to their real worthineſs; not more nor leſs; except as a creature is incapable of worthily loving infinite excellency: and to put each in its proper place in our judgment and heart; the Lord upon the throne, and ourſelves and all other creatures in regular ſubordination; and to ſhew this in a correſpondent conduct.—But the violation of the commandment diſturbs this order, dethrones God in the heart, and allows ſome created object to uſurp his place.—Well may it ſtand foremoſt in the Decalogue: for obedience in this, would infallibly enſure it in all other reſpects. Tranſgreſſion in every caſe muſt injure the ſubject, and affront the Sovereign; but here it is high treaſon, which is the chief crime in all governments: no wonder therefore that it is called an abomination. Nor is it leſs injurious to man, who thereby forſakes the fountain of living waters, to hew out broken ciſterns which can hold no water: its reaſonableneſs, and excellency therefore are equal to its ſtrictneſs and ſpirituality; and without conformity to it in its fulleſt extent, the glory of God, and the felicity of rational creatures cannot be ſecured.—The words before me, mean either under the immediate inſpection of God, and with the manifeſtations of his glory before their eyes; which was eſpecially the caſe of Iſrael, both in the wilderneſs and in the promiſed land: Or they imply, that idolatry moſt abſurdly and wretchedly prefers the creature to the infinite Creator.

V. 4. Thou ſhalt not make, &c.] The ſecond commandment eſpecially requires, that the worſhip we render to the Lord our God be worthy of him, and honourable to him.—The perfections of God are inconceivable, his nature is incomprehenſible: nor can he poſſibly be repreſented by any ſimilitude.—The moſt exquiſite ſculpture or painting, and the moſt coſtly materials can only repreſent the external reſemblance of a man; but form no ſimilitude of the powers and capacities of his rational ſoul: How diſhonourable then muſt it be to the infinite God, to repreſent him by material images and pictures! Such devices, which have been almoſt univerſal in the world, are the reſult of the blindneſs of man's underſtanding, and of his low apprehenſions of God; which at the ſame time they tend exceedingly to increaſe.—Not only the direct worſhipping of the image or picture itſelf is forbidden; (for none except the moſt ſtupid of the heathens could be guilty of ſuch an abſurdity;) but alſo the repreſentation of the inviſible object of worſhip to the mind, through the medium of a viſible object preſented to the ſenſes:—nor have the Papiſts uſed any arguments in defence of their palpable violation of this commandment, which would not be equally plauſible in vindication of the worſhip of the golden calves, or of the image of Diana which fell down from Jupiter.—Pictures and ſtatues are not in themſelves unlawful; for by God's appointment they were uſed in the conſtruction of the tabernacle; though not to repreſent the object of adoration. But it is abſolutely prohibited to make any image or picture of the Deity, in any form, or for any purpoſe whatſoever: or to worſhip any creature, or any image or picture of it. By parity of reaſon all kinds of ſuperſtition are prohibited: that is the introduction of human inventions into the religious worſhip of God, as if they were eſſential to that worſhip, or rendered it acceptable to him.—The uſe of things indifferent in religion, without any command from God, has a natural tendency to fill men's minds with groſs apprehenſions of him, and to lead them to be delighted with external ſplendour in divine worſhip: as well as to draw off their dependence from the merits of Chriſt, and their attention from God's own ordinances and commandments, ſubſtituting ſomething elſe in the place of them, as of equal efficacy: and it has commonly iſſued in impoſing ſuch inventions upon the conſciences of others, and in perſecuting all who did not conform thereto.—But as many circumſtances of worſhip muſt be regulated by human diſcretion; and as it has not been found eaſy to fix exact limits to the exerciſe of that diſcretion: it ſeems ſufficient for the private Chriſtian to conſider ſeriouſly how far he complies with any thing which leads to the aforementioned evils in his own experience; and neither to attempt impoſing his ſentiments or practices upon others; nor yet deſpiſe, deride, cenſure, or judge thoſe who differ from him—All hypocriſy and formality are violations of this commandment, which ariſe from unworthy apprehenſions of God. And ſo are all unſcriptural delineations of the divine character:—Men, leaning to their own underſtanding, and forſaking the light of revelation; according to their own inclinations, and in their imaginations, frame an idea of the Deity: This creature of the fancy, which poſſeſſes not truth, juſtice, and holineſs; but is of too humane a diſpoſition to execute vengeance, or inflict puniſhment, they dignify with the title of the Supreme Being. This is the object of their love and worſhip; whilſt, like the Jews of old, who fancied they worſhipped the true God, 7 Thou ſhalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain: for the LORD will not hold him guiltleſs that taketh his name in vain.

8 Remember

they are found haters of the Son of God, and of the Father that ſent him. (John xv. 23, 24.) And it will one day appear that theſe images, formed and ſet up in the heart, are as diſhonourable to God, as thoſe images which formerly were, and ſtill are throughout immenſe regions of the earth, ſet up in temples; and are not all his likeneſs, but his rivals.—In ſhort this commandment reaſonably requires us to collect our knowledge of the object of our worſhip, both in reſpect of his attributes and his mode of ſubſiſtance, from revelation, by faith; to form, and retain apprehenſions of him conformable to the ſcriptures; to preſent him to our our minds by faith, not by fancy; to worſhip him as a Spirit, not with groſs corporeal repreſentations of him in the mind, any more than with images of him before our eyes; in ſpirit, and in truth; inwardly and ſincerely, with honourable thoughts of his majeſty, purity, and excellency, and a realizing ſenſe of his knowledge of our hearts; in the ordinances which he hath appointed, in all of them, and in no other: for where he hath appointed to meet us, thither alone we ought to come, and may come in faith, and expect a bleſſing, being ſatisfied that God will account himſelf honoured by us. Finally this worſhip muſt be frequent, ſtated, habitual, and delightful to our ſouls.

Any likeneſs, &c.] All creatures being infinitely diſtant from the great Creator, all are alike improper to be uſed as a viſible repreſentation of his inviſible glory, and therefore equally prohibited. There are ſome devices, frequently uſed in pictures, as emblematic or repreſentative of the Trinity, which ſeem not to accord with the ſtrictneſs of this prohibition.

V. 5. A jealous God, &c.] In reſpect of idolatry, God is as tenacious of his honour that it be not given to another, eſpecially by any of his profeſſing people; as the huſband is jealous of the wife whom he ſuſpects of adultery. Every appearance of it, or approach to it, excites his indignation, and kindles his reſentment. Therefore every practice that looks like idolatry, or tends to it, ſhould be ſcrupulouſly avoided.

Viſiting the iniquity, &c.] It has already been obſerved that children actually do ſuffer, in the courſe of God's providence, for the ſins of their parents by neceſſary conſequence: and God declares that thus it ſhall be, in order to reſtrain us from wickedneſs, by working upon our natural affection for our children. But further, as idolatry was a breach of the national covenant made with Iſrael, and a forfeiture of its bleſſings, their poſterity would be ſure to ſuffer for their ſins: though the Lord's kindneſs and readineſs to forgive is expreſſed in the intimation, that this ſhould be only to the third and fourth generation; that is, in caſe the children did not perſiſt in imitating the example of their parents.

Them that hate me, &c.] The preference given by men to falſe gods, and to the works of their own hands, above the true God, is conſtrued into an hatred of him: and indeed the wife, who ſhould prefer every worthleſs ſtranger to her huſband, would be conſidered as even hating him. Thus the carnal mind is enmity againſt God; becauſe it chooſes worldly objects in preference to his favour.

V. 6. Shewing mercy, &c.] The law, as given to ſinners in ſubſerviency to the covenant of Grace, (as well as to Iſrael with reference to their national covenant,) makes mention of the mercy of God, though not properly belonging to its own nature; with an eſpecial reference to the character of God, diſplayed by that covenant, and in order to manifeſt how deſerving he is of that love and ſervice, which he claims from them as his unalienable right.—This mercy is extended unto thouſands, not only to vaſt multitudes, but ſucceſſive generations to the end of time. (Deut. vii. 9.) The Lord's dealings with the poſterity of Abraham, who believed his word, loved him, and kept his commandments with the upright obedience of faith, illuſtrates this promiſe.

V. 7. Thou ſhalt not take, &c.] If we take the Lord for our God, among other acts of worſhip, we ſhall be led to make vows unto him, and to ſwear by his name; and we ſhall have frequent occaſion to mention him in our daily converſation. Theſe things this third commandment regulates: and the ſum of it is this, that we take not the name of the Lord our God in vain: that is needleſsly, irreverently, profanely, or hypocritically.—This commandment therefore prohibits all raſh and unlawful vows; and vows which relate to things impracticable or uncertain: whether the vow be made immediately unto God, or whether it be in the form of a promiſſory oath unto man: and the violation of all ſuch vows as we have ſolemnly formed, if the ſubject be lawful, though it be very prejudicial to us: (Pſalm xv. 4.) Perjury of every kind is the moſt atrocious violation of it; for this is an appeal to the omniſcience of God for the truth of what we ſay, when we know it or ſuſpect it to be falſe, or do not know it to be true;—which is one of the moſt inſolent provocations of God that can be even conceived, though common amongſt us to a degree unknown in former ages. This again is the effect in great meaſure of other inſtances of diſregard to this commandment: namely the unneceſſary multiplication of oaths in all our judicial tranſactions, even upon the moſt trivial occaſions: and the ſhocking diſregard even to the appearance of reverence, in the general adminiſtration of oaths. For inſtance, the God of heaven is called to witneſs ten thouſand times in the year, that the dead body of a man or woman is wrapt up for burial in ſheep's wool only, with what propriety or ſolemnity, let experience and common ſenſe determine. To exclude perjury, oaths ſhould never be enjoined but on important occaſions; and never adminiſtered but with all the ſolemnity of an act of religious worſhip: and all that is inconſiſtent with this, by whomſoever appointed or executed, is "taking God's name in vain." All ſwearing in common converſation, or appealing to God, with ſuch expreſſions, as "God knows," &c; when the matter is not true, or not important; all profane curſing or ſwearing; all uſe of the words, GOD, LORD, or other expreſſions which which import the object of religious worſhip, without neceſſity, ſeriouſneſs, and reverence; whether we are diſcourſing improperly upon religious ſubjects; or whether they be uſed as mere expletives to complete a ſentence, or adorn a period, as notes of admiration, approbation, or indignation, are evidently violations of this commandment. All other expreſſions, which are of the nature of an oath, or imprecation, though the name of God be not uſed, fall under its condemnation: yea, whatever is more than yea, yea, nay, nay, in ordinary converſation.—All profane jeſting with the Word of God, and with ſacred things: all irreverence in reſpect of God, or any thing which relates to him, expreſſed in word or deed; all hypocriſy and formality in worſhip, when we profeſs to glorify God, but are aiming at ſome ſelfiſh end, are likewiſe violations of it. And it implies a command to us, to remember habitually the infinite majeſty, purity, and excellency of the God of heaven; and to behave towards him in word and deed, with that care and reverence, with which ſuch mean and worthleſs creatures ſhould be impreſſed in his preſence, and under his inſpection.

Will not hold him guiltleſs, &c.] Man may not diſcover, or he may neglect to puniſh the violations of this commandment; and the ſinner's conſcience may ſcarcely trouble him about them: but let him know that God will moſt certainly detect, and moſt ſeverely puniſh the affronts thus put upon him. For the heinouſneſs of the offence is proportionable to the reaſonableneſs of the precept, and the eaſineſs of obedience: and many tranſgreſſions of this commandment have no plea even of temptation; for there is no profit, honour, or pleaſure attainable by them; except it be an honour daringly to affront the Almighty, or a pleaſure to diſobey our Creator.

V. 8, 9.] The form of this fourth commandment intimates, that it was not now firſt given, but was previouſly known by the people; though they were very prone to forget it, and therefore needed being put in remembrance to keep holy the ſabbath-day: and we want reminding of the ſame duty.—It is evident that the obſervation of the ſabbath is of moral obligation, from its being inſerted in the very heart of the moral law: and it doubtleſs has its foundation in the nature of God and man, in the relations that we ſtand in to him and to each other, and in the obligations which thence ariſe. Circumſtanced as we are in this world, the glory of God and the beſt good of man, perſonal and ſocial, temporal and ſpiritual, indiſpenſably require the ſeparation of a portion of our time from worldly concerns, and the conſecration of it to the immediate ſervice and worſhip of the Lord.—Indeed the exact proportion and the particular time are matters of ritual inſtitution: but one day in ſeven ſeems to have been appointed by the divine wiſdom from the beginning, and is by experience evinced to be ſalutary and beneficial. And if one day in ſeven be the appointed proportion, the day of the ſeven, which ſhall be obſerved, is no ways eſſential to the moral obligation of the command, but is capable of being changed by the authority of the lawgiver: and it will hereafter be ſhewn that it hath actually been changed. The ſabbath among the Jews was no doubt alſo ceremonial in many things, and as ſuch forms a part of their ritual law: nay it is alſo inſerted in the judicial law, and the tranſgreſſion of it was puniſhable by the magiſtrate.—But we here are to conſider it as of moral obligation, and binding upon the conſciences of all men, eſpecially where revelation makes known that obligation; a part of that law of God, which is holy, juſt, and good; to the ſinner the miniſtration of condemnation and of death, written and engraven upon ſtones; (2 Cor. iii. 7—9;) to the believer a rule of duty, and a means of grace. One day in ſeven ſhould be remembered, that it may be kept holy: ſix days are allotted to the diligent performance of our ſecular buſineſs; yet we ought not to neglect the ſervice of God, and the care of our ſouls even on thoſe days; for all wordly buſineſs muſt be ſo ſubordinated and regulated, that it may be a part of our duty to God. On theſe days we muſt "do all our work," and leave none to be done on the ſabbath-day.—Chriſt hath expreſsly excepted works of neceſſity, of charity, and of piety; "for the ſabbath was made for man, "and not man for the ſabbath:" but certainly all works of covetouſneſs, diſtruſt, luxury, vanity, and ſelf-indulgence in any form are probibited; and we ſhould ſedulouſly contrive all our affairs, that there may be as little as poſſible of a worldly nature to engroſs our time, thoughts, or converſation on the Lord's day, or to interrupt its ſacred exerciſes.—Trading, paying wages, ſettling accounts, writing letters on common ſubjects, ſecular ſtudies, and other avocations of this nature, interrupt the ſacred reſt: pleaſures, diſſipation, trifling viſits, journeys, excurſions, or converſation, which have no further object than amuſement and relaxation, conſiſt not with keeping a day holy to the Lord: ſloth and indolence may be a carnal, but not a ſacred reſt. To comply with the intent of the inſtitution, the Lord's ſabbath ſhould be a reſt from worldly labour, and a reſt in the ſervice of God: A day of ſerious ſelf-examination, careful peruſal of the Scriptures, communion with God in our cloſet, ſocial worſhip with our families, diligent inſtruction of our children and ſervants, conſtant attendance upon the public ordinances of God, meditation and pious converſation. Theſe duties ſhould be early entered upon, and interrupted only by works of real neceſſity, or of Chriſtian charity. All this ſeems to be obligatory upon the conſcience, when we are maſters of our own time: but we cannot ſuppoſe that the Chriſtian ſlaves of Heathen maſters could thus hallow the Lord's day: yet they were directed to abide in their ſtation and to accommodate themſelves to it. The caſe of ſervants, with us, may frequently be in ſome meaſure the ſame; and they cannot properly avoid the neceſſity of doing many things on the Lord's day, which are not neceſſary in themſelves; though they ſhould prefer liberty of this kind to ſecular advantages, and contrive to have as little to do as poſſible. Were our love of God, and valuation of our ſouls and of ſpiritual things, vigorous as they ought to be, ſuch a day would be our delight, we would reckon of its approach, honour it, and be thankful for it, as our higheſt privilege; (Iſaiah, lviii. 13;) for heaven will be an eternal ſabbath. And all the objections and excuſes, which men make to ſuch ſanctification of the Lord's day, ariſe from their diſreliſh of ſpiritual bleſſings, and their inordinate attachment to the things of time and ſenſe.—Whilſt the advantage which would accrue from ſuch an obſervation of this holy day, to the morals, health, liberty, and happineſs of the lower orders of mankind; and the effect which it would have in humanizing and civilizing them; as well as the opportunity thereby afforded, (by the ſuſpenſion of all ſecular employments), to all orders of men, of hearing the Word of God, and joining in his worſhip, of taking care of their own ſouls, and thoſe of their families; abundantly illuſtrate the reaſonableneſs, and excellency of the commandment, and the heinouſneſs of that almoſt univerſal violation of it, which marks the character of an irreligious age, and converts God's ordinance into an occaſion of ſtill increaſing licentiouſneſs.

V. 10. Thou, nor thy ſon, &c.] It is not enough, that we do not command our children and ſervants to perform needleſs worldly labour on the Lord's day; we ſhould not even allow them to do it; we muſt uſe our authority to reſtrain them from breaking the ſabbath; and not only give them time, but require them to employ it in the duties of the day.—And indeed attention to the ſpiritual benefit of families is one great deſign of the ſabbath and branch of hallowing it, with thoſe eſpecially, whoſe time is much engroſſed on other days by ſecular concerns.—The next reſtriction was added, that humanity to the brute creation might accompany piety to God and kindneſs to man; as well as more effectually to ſuſpend all kinds of labour.—Many things, generally practiſed among us, ſeem not to comport with this clauſe: but where to draw the line in a country, whoſe cuſtoms and habits of living are ſo vaſtly diſſimilar to thoſe of the Iſraelites, is a matter of extreme difficulty. The ſpirit and intention of the precept ſhould chiefly be conſidered; which are anſwered in the ſanctification of the ſabbath for the glory of God, the promotion of truth and righteouſneſs, and the real good of mankind; and this greatly conſiſts, in as general an attendance as may be of all ranks and orders of men on public worſhip. Whatever promotes theſe ends may be allowable: whatever interferes with it muſt be wrong: and ſtated needleſs travelling on the ſabbath ſhamefully interferes with it, as well as renders of none effect this humane clauſe. The labour of cattle, in huſbandry, manufactures, commerce, and journeys, ſeems, however, to be principally intended: and, when neceſſary, it may no more violate the command to uſe the ſlight labour of the cattle, in going to the place of worſhip, or to a work of charity, than the labour of walking thither: yet the true Chriſtian would wiſh to adhere to the letter of the prohibition, when it interfered not with the intention of it, though at the expence of parting with ſome ſelf-indulgence; but he would alſo be more diſpoſed to deny himſelf, than to preſcribe to, or cenſure others.—The ſtranger, though not of the ſame religion, was not only to be perſuaded and encouraged to hallow the ſabbath; but prohibited from externally violating its ſacred reſt, whilſt he reſided amongſt them; for this was the law of their land, as well as of religion. And though the government of Iſrael differed from that of other people: yet there ſeems a great propriety in nations profeſſing Chriſtianity making it a part of their law likewiſe.—But alas! it is grievous to ſay, that ſuch laws often loſe their energy, for want of being ſanctioned by the example of the legiſlators themſelves, and by that of thoſe whoſe office it is to put them into execution.

V. 11. For in ſix days, &c.] This was the original reaſon of the inſtitution of the ſabbath in honour of God our Creator: other reaſons are adduced elſewhere, which were peculiar to the Jews; and Chriſtians have ſtill higher and more cogent reaſons peculiar to themſelves, to be mentioned in due time.—Thus far is the firſt table of the law, which immediately relates to our duty to God: and theſe four commandments compriſe the whole of godlineſs ſtrictly ſpeaking; nor can any thing be conceived, external or internal, of thought, word, or deed, relating to the ſtate of our heart, and the regulation of our whole conduct, which falls not under one or other of theſe precepts.—They are evidently very extenſive and ſpiritual, and equally reaſonable and excellent: Yet they are the reverſe of the natural temper of our hearts, and of the general conduct of mankind; who are not diſpoſed thus to reverence, believe, love, truſt in, worſhip, obey, and ſubmit to the Lord; to delight in his ordinances, to reverence his name and word, and to hallow and take pleaſure in his ſabbaths. "Therefore, as many as are of the works of the law are "under a curſe:" Thus we all need mercy, forgiveneſs, and redemption; and muſt be born again, or we can never enter into the kingdom of heaven, where this holy law is perfectly obſerved in its grand import by every individual.—But we proceed to the ſecond table.

V. 12. Honour thy, &c.] According to the foregoing rules of interpretation, we conſider this commandment as the abſtract of relative duties. The relations of parents and children ſeem to be ſelected, as moſt reſembling the relation, in which we ſhould ſtand to our Creator.—If the father and mother be honoured; it is implied that they are required to do the duty of parents to their children: to take care of them; to provide for, and inſtruct them in both ſpiritual and temporal things; to ſet them a good example, and pray for them; to exerciſe authority over them, and kindneſs towards them; to adviſe, reſtrain, and correct them; and in ſhort to act honourably towards and before them, with ſuch wiſdom, gravity, and conſiſtency, as naturally to excite reverential affection towards their perſons and characters, in the breaſts of their children.—Not that a different conduct in the parents diſcharges the children from the obligation of honouring them: for it is a general rule, which admits of very few exceptions; that in relative life we ſhould perſevere in our duty as preſcribed by the Word of God, though the oppoſite relations totally fail of doing their duty to us. But the parents' duty is implied in this command to their children.——Theſe, deriving their very being under God from their parents, and having been from their entrance entrance into the world taken care of, when they could not take care of themselves, and with much tenderness, and at the expence of much labour, pain, and sorrow; and being by God put under the authority and tuition of such kind friends; are reasonably required to perform unreserved obedience in all things lawful, whilst under the age of maturity; and ever after in all things reasonable, though they should not be agreeable. They are commanded to love their persons, and respect their characters, counsels, and instructions; to consult their interest, ease, credit, and comfort; by every possible means to requite their kindness; to maintain them if in their power, and if needful; nay even to labour for their subsistence, when unable through old age to maintain themselves, as the parent laboured for the child, when incapable through youth; to conceal their infirmities, to bear with their tempers, to accommodate themselves to their humours, and in every thing to endeavour alleviating their sorrows, and rejoicing their hearts. In some cases, the observance of such rules may be productive of hardship to a few individuals: but the general effect would be so very good, that these partial inconveniences would be unspeakably overbalanced, and the command shewn to be holy, just, and good.—By parity of reason, they who have acted the parent's part, are entitled in proportion to a parent's honour and respect from the adopted child. Every superior relation has a duty incumbent upon it, somewhat similar to that of the parent, and is entitled to a deference and respect not unlike the filial. Old age requires a grave and respectable demeanour before, and towards, young people; and is entitled to honour from them.—Magistrates have their several duties, and subjects also; ministers and people, masters and servants, husbands and wives; the rich and the poor have their reciprocal duties to each other: the superior relation is called upon to act honourably, and is entitled to honour from the inferior, according to particular precepts, which may all be referred to this fifth commandment, but must be considered elsewhere.—The commandment expresly mentions both Father and Mother—It is not enough to honour one parent, in opposition to, or at the expence of, the other, or allowable to neglect either of them; but both should be honoured alike, as alike nearly related. It is therefore the duty of parents to set their children an example of impartiality; and that by not preferring one child to another, they may teach them all not to prefer one parent to another: and they ought also to avoid whatever may excite competition, or lessen the children's respect to either of them; and to be harmonious in their education of them.—The annexed promise may have a particular reference to, and we may be sure that it had a remarkable accomplishment under, the national covenant made with Israel. Yet the apostle Paul quotes it in inculcating the same duty upon Christians. (Eph. vi. 1). And indeed careful observers of mankind have noted a peculiar blessing in temporal things on obedient, and the reverse on disobedient, children.

V. 13. Thou shalt not kill.] This and the three next commandments comprise "the love of our neighbour as "ourselves," with reference to his person, his connexions his property, and his reputation. This relates to his person, and requires that we regard his life and safety as we do our own. It is certain that the prohibition admits of some restrictions: magistrates, as God's representatives, are in some cases commanded, and in others allowed, to take away the life of man; and many other persons, as witnesses, or executioners, may be accessory to it without sin. We may innocently take away a man's life in defence of our own; in some cases perhaps in defence of our property. Some wars are lawful, and the blood shed in them not murder, in those who shed it; though the guilt of murder must rest somewhere, and whoever be the unjust author, or cause, of war must be answerable to God for all the blood shed in it. The consent of the will is also requisite to constitute the crime here forbidden; and sometimes taking away life is a man's misfortune, not his sin: yet many actions denominated manslaughter by the laws of man, will be proved murder before a higher tribunal. The word of God no where extenuates the guilt of blood shed in furious passion excited by sudden provocation, or in intoxication: much more atrocious is the murder committed in duels, which is one of the most horrible effects of a haughty revengeful spirit. The duellist, in contempt of God's authority, and of his patience and readiness to forgive, will accept of no satisfaction for the most trivial offence, but the life of the offender; in seeking which he madly risks his own. All fighting, whether for wages, for renown, or out of anger and malice, are violations of this command, and the blood shed is murder.—Whatever doth take away, by force, or stratagem, or may take away, the life of man is prohibited: all the blood shed in persecutions and oppressions, whether under the colour, or in defiance of, law and justice, will be required: yea they, who should punish the murderer, but let him escape, must answer for it, whether they be individuals, or collective bodies. To assault, maim, or wound others, or assist those that do; to tempt men to such crimes as either destroy their constitutions, or expose their lives to danger, from the sword of justice, or the resentment of an injured party; nay, to persuade people with the prospect of a large recompence to such enterprises and labours, as are known in general to destroy their lives, are violations of this commandment. They who misbehave so grosly, as to break the hearts, and shorten the lives of parents, wives, or other relations, will not be held guiltless: nor they, who in revenge, or out of covetousness, wish for the death of others. The spiritual extent of this commandment reaches also to the prohibition of all envy, malice, hatred, or anger, without or above cauſe; all that reproachful, inſulting language, which provokes to anger, and murder; and all that pride, ambition, and covetouſneſs which prompt to it. He that hateth his brother is a murderer: and he will be adjudged to hate his brother, who ſeeing his life or health endangered by the want of food, medicine, raiment, or lodging, and having the ability of relieving him, ſo loves himſelf as to refuſe his aſſiſtance; (1 John, iii. 15—17). But if, whatever tends to the deſtruction of the temporal life be ſo heinous, what ſhall we ſay to the murder of the ſoul? This is done by ſeducing and enticing our neighbour to ſin, by ſetting evil examples, diſſeminating poiſonous principles, or terrifying men from God's ſervice by reproaches or threatenings; or by withholding thoſe inſtructions, warnings, and counſels, which we all owe to our neighbour in ſome caſes, but eſpecially parents to their children, and miniſters to their people. It is tremendous to reflect upon the multitudes, whoſe blood will in this ſenſe be required of their murderers.—But is the deſtruction of our own life excepted from this rule? By no means. We are no more the authors, or lords, of our own life, than of the life of others: nor may we any more leave our aſſigned poſt of ſervice, or ruſh uncalled into the preſence of our judge; than we may execute vengeance for ourſelves, and ſend a fellow creature to that awful tribunal. Self-murder is a complication of ingratitude and contempt of God's gift, even our life, and of defiance, impatience, pride, rebellion, and unbelief; perhaps it is the moſt malignant of all murders, and it can ſcarcely ever be repented of. Nor is it any thing like ſo commonly the effect of inſanity, as verdicts might perſuade us, (in which perjury is often thoughtleſsly committed out of falſe tenderneſs) except as all in ſome ſenſe may be ſaid to be inſane, who are hurried on by the inſtigation of Satan, that murderer from the beginning. He knows that our preſent life is an invaluable talent, which admits of precious improvement, and is eſpecially the ſeaſon allotted to ſeek the ſalvation of our ſouls: he is therefore aiming to ſhorten our period, both by tempting men to direct ſuicide, and by leading them to thoſe exceſſes which ruin the conſtitution, or to thoſe extravagances which render life miſerable; that he may the more advantageouſly deſtroy both body and ſoul at once. Theſe things therefore ought to be avoided; diſcontent and deſpondency repreſſed; and gratitude, patience, and hope cultivated, that we may defeat his malignant purpoſe. In fine, this commandment requires a ſpirit of enlarged benevolence to the bodies and ſouls of all men; a diſpoſition to bear and ſuffer long, and to be kind; to forgive, and do good againſt evil, and to endeavour to preſerve the life, to prolong the comforts, and to ſave the ſouls of every human being.

16 Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs againſt thy neighbour.

V. 14. Thou ſhalt not commit adultery.] This commandment is the regulation of our "love to our neigh-"bour as ourſelves," as it reſpects the purity and comfort of domeſtic life: and it requires the proper government of thoſe inclinations, which God hath implanted in our nature for the propagation of the human ſpecies; that we may neither debaſe and defile our own bodies and ſouls, nor injure others in their chaſtity or connexions: "But that we may poſſeſs our veſſel in ſanctifi-"cation and honour, not in the luſt of concupiſcence." Marriage "is honourable among all men, and the bed un-"defiled." But, the original inſtitution, with the intention, and ends of marriage, muſt be kept in view; if we would with preciſion aſcertain the extent of this prohibition. The original inſtitution was, one man and one woman, made one fleſh, inſeparably united to be helps meet for each other, to promote and ſhare in each other's comforts and ſatisfactions; to contribute by ſuitable ſociety and tender friendſhip to their mutual felicity; and with united attention to educate their common offſpring. The entrance of ſin and its fatal effects ſoon marred this felicity, made way for the diſſolution of this union, gave occaſion to a variety of evil paſſions and much miſconduct which embittered the relation, and introduced many abuſes. But theſe are not to be conſidered as any part of marriage: for they are the effects of ſin; and whether permitted, connived at, or prohibited in the word of God, would not otherwiſe have exiſted. Chriſt repeatedly refers to the original appointment of marriage, in anſwering queſtions on that ſubject; and by this we ſhould judge of it, according to the ſpiritual meaning of the moral law of God, and the pure nature of the Chriſtian religion. Yet the entrance of ſin has introduced ſome circumſtantial alterations; the force, which man's paſſions have acquired ſince the fall, has rendered the prevention of fornication one expreſs end of marriage: the imperfection of every human character has rendered mutual forbearance, and compliance in matters not always reaſonable, a neceſſary duty of the conjugal relation; whilſt the ſorrows and miſeries of life render it requiſite, that in the married ſtate, each party ſhould ſhare and ſoften the afflictions, as well as participate the comforts of the other. Conſidering marriage in this light, and keeping the intentions of this inſtitution in view, we ſhall be the better able to judge of this commandment under conſideration. We need not be exact in defining the term Adultery: according to the judicial law of Moſes, the commerce of any man with a married woman, or one betrothed, was called adultery, and puniſhable by the death of both parties; but the commerce of a married man with an unmarried woman was not viewed in the ſame light: yet under the New Teſtament this crime alſo is called by that name. (Matt. xix. 9. Mark x. 14). And certainly both the one and the other are violations of this ſpiritual commandment; both militate againſt the ends and intentions of marriage, are inconſiſtent with that union of hearts and intereſts which it implies, are breaches of the marriage compact, mar domeſtic peace, prevent the harmonious agreement in training up children, and form an alienation of that property, which both huſ-band band and wife have in the perſons and affections of the other, which is ſcarcely ever loſt without the bittereſt anguiſh, and the keeneſt reſentment. (1 Cor. vii. 1. 4). It is true, adultery on the woman's ſide is more generally chargeable with the injuſtice of introducing a ſpurious offspring to inherit the huſband's property: but his infidelity is not ſeldom productive of a ſimilar effect, when the huſband has the diſpoſal of that which was the property of the wife. And though jealouſy be eſpecially "the rage of man," and produces the moſt fatal effects; yet ſometimes female paſſions overpower female timidity, and dreadful conſequences enſue on that ſide alſo. So that in the impartial judgment even of reaſon the difference of the injury, and of its effects, in the two caſes is not very great.—Theſe are the more atrocious violations of this precept, and are inconceivably more pernicious to ſociety than theft: though that be puniſhed with death, and theſe eſcape almoſt without cenſure. All other commerce betwixt the ſexes, except in lawful and avowed marriage, are alſo prohibited by this commandment, under whatever names they may be diſtinguiſhed; from the temporary connexions which are formed and diſſolved at pleaſure, to the loweſt ſcenes of common proſtitution. There are different degrees of malignity in them; they may be more or leſs pernicious; and the diſtinction betwixt the TEMPTER and the TEMPTED will ever be important, and mark the ſeducer's character diabolical: but all claſs under the general words Whoredom, and Fornication, which are almoſt in every black catalogue in the Bible, in which the perſons are enumerated, who ſhall not enter into the kingdom of God. (1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. Gal. v. 19.—21. Eph. v. 3—6. Col. iii. 5. 6. Rev. xxii. 8. xxii. 15). And, however men may deceive themſelves and others by vain words; the horrible effects of theſe crimes upon the peace, comfort, morals, and health of mankind; the dreadful havock made by them among the human ſpecies, which is vaſtly beyond the conception of ſuch perſons as have not enquired into the ſubject; the connexion which they have with, and the introduction which they form to, all other vices, will ever illuſtrate not only the holineſs and juſtice, but alſo the goodneſs, of that law, which ſo peremptorily forbids them, and ſo awfully denounces the wrath of God againſt thoſe who are guilty of them.—Nor muſt we ſtop here: under one word, laſciviouſneſs, is comprehended a variety of ſhameful practiſes, which could not be enumerated without offence, and cannot be thought of without abhorrence. All theſe fall under the prohibition before us, as utterly inconſiſtent with reaſon, purity, the true dignity of the rational nature, and the intention of God in forming us as we are; and exceedingly prevent the increaſe of human ſpecies: Nay every thing, which comports not with the ends and intentions of marriage, though ſanctioned by that honourable name, will be found inconſiſtent with the ſpirituality of the commandment before us. All that converſation, by which the filthineſs of an impure heart is vented, and communicated to others; all polluted imaginations, ſpeculative wantonneſs, and lewd deſires are likewiſe prohibited; "ſo "that he who looketh upon a woman to luſt after her, hath "committed adultery with her already in his heart." Writing, publiſhing, vending, propagating, or reading obſcene books; forming, or expoſing to view, indecent pictures or ſtatues, or whatever elſe tends to pollute the imagination, or fire the paſſions, muſt fall under this prohibition. In all theſe caſes, not only the groſſer outrage againſt modeſty is ſinful; but that which is more covert, and inſinuating, which is perhaps of ſtill more fatal tendency. Nor will the wit, elegance, or ingenuity of the performance at all palliate the matter: it is poiſon, and at leaſt no better for being conveyed in an unſuſpected or agreeable vehicle, whether in the parlour, from the preſs, on the theatre, or at the muſeum. Whatever inſpires the wanton thought, or excites the dormant deſire after a forbidden object, violates the ſpirit of this command. Yea all the arts of dreſs, motion, converſation, or demeanour, which are not conſiſtent with the ſtricteſt rules of decency, but have a tendency to throw temptations in the way of heedleſs youth; all that ſoft inſinuation, and thoſe amorous looks, expreſſions, and dalliances, which ſubſerve the vile art of ſeduction, in either ſex; (for it is not excluſively the ſin of either;) and whatever in the moſt remote degree leads to the groſſer evil here forbidden, is in that degree a violation of the ſeventh commandment. For this requires the utmoſt purity of imagination, heart, converſation and behaviour, in ſecret as well as before the eyes of men; and the utmoſt ſuperiority of the rational ſoul to the animal appetite, not only reſtraining men from forbidden indulgences, but producing a holy indifference about, a moderation in, and a regard to expediency reſpecting, thoſe which are moſt honourable: and moreover the deſire and endeavour of preſerving the ſame diſpoſition and behaviour in all others, as far as we are connected with them; avoiding every expreſſion and action, which may counteract this deſign, and adopting ſuch language and behaviour as may promote it. And how much this would conduce to the true honour and felicity of the human ſpecies in this world, ſubſerve religion, and promote the ſalvation of the ſouls of men in another world, need not be ſaid. This is the law of God, imperfectly expounded: the tranſgreſſion of it is ſin, and the wages of ſin is death.

17 Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbour's houſe, thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his man-ſervant, nor his maid-ſervant, nor his ox, nor his aſs, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's.

V. 15. Thou ſhalt not ſteal.] This commandment is the law of love, as it reſpects our neighbour's property. The earth is given to the children of men: but the productions thereof are obtained, and fitted for uſe, by labour; labour gives property, and property deſcends to the children or heirs of the poſſeſſor. Hence ariſes that difference in circumſtances which prevails; and which ſhould be conſidered as the appointment of God, and ſubmitted to accordingly. The portion of worldly things allotted to us, as far as it is obtained in any honeſt way, "is the bread, "which God hath given us;" For that we ought to be thankful, with it contented, and, in the uſe of lawful means, to truſt Providence for the future. But unbelief, pride, 18 And all the people ſaw the thunderings and the lightnings, and the noiſe of the trumpet, and the mountain ſmoking: and when the people ſaw it, they removed, and ſtood afar off.

pride, covetouſneſs, and luxury cannot thus be ſatisfied; and ſloth refuſes to labour. Such diſpoſitions therefore prompt men to employ force or fraud, and all the arts of ingenious deceit, to obtain poſſeſſion of the property of others, without their conſent, fairly and honeſtly obtained. Theſe things however modified are the objects of this prohibition. Human laws forbid, and human tribunals puniſh, various tranſgreſſions of this commandment, which need not be enumerated: we may, however, obſerve that they will alſo, except repented of, be puniſhed in another way, as diſobedience to the law of God, whether the ſword of human juſtice reach them or not. But there are innumerable ways of evading the laws of man, or eſcaping human juſtice, whilſt the law of God is violated. Many fraudulent bargains, by which the ignorance, credulity, or neceſſity of others are impoſed upon; much abuſe of confidence, extortion, exorbitant gain, deceitful combinations to enhance the price of goods, or to lower the wages of the poor, will be condemned as traſgreſſions of God's law, though perhaps ſcarcely deemed cenſurable in ſociety. Many an overgrown plunderer of provinces and kingdoms, and oppreſſor of millions, who ſmiles defiance at human juſtice, will ſink under the ſentence of the Judge of the earth, in horror and deſpair. The plunder of the public, whether by oppreſſive rulers and exorbitant exactions, or by ſmuggling, evading taxes, and ſuch like methods of increaſing wealth, will one day be brought to account: as will the practice of contracting debts for the ſupport of vanity and luxury, or for any thing not abſolutely neceſſary, without a fair proſpect of paying them; and thoſe advantages which perſons, once inſolvent, take of humane ſtatutes, to evade paying juſt debts, when afterwards they become able to do it. Nay all extravagance, beyond the prudent allowance of our income, is robbery of our families; and ſlothfulneſs, or unneceſſary ſubſiſtence upon charity, is robbery of the public, or of its beſt members: and with-holding from real objects of compaſſion that relief, which they are entitled to, or ſqueezing the poor down ſo low in their wages, as ſcarcely to allow them to ſubſiſt, whilſt we live in affluence, muſt be allowed to violate its ſpiritual meaning. In ſhort the commandment excludes covetouſneſs, luxury, and the pride of life; and requires induſtry, frugality, ſobriety, temperance, ſubmiſſion to God's providence, and that indifference about worldly things, which produces content and thankfulneſs for the meaneſt proviſion; and a diſpoſition "to do to all others" in reſpect of worldly property, "as we would they ſhould do unto us." And how reaſonable this is in itſelf, as well as conducive to the felicity of man, is evident to every one.

V. 16. Thou ſhalt not, &c.] This commandment is the law of love, as it reſpects the reputation of our neighbour; though ſuch is the connexion of cauſes and effects in the actions of men, that the violation of it may alſo deſtroy his life or property, or ruin his relative comfort. Nay bearing falſe witneſs among us in a court of juſtice may be a complication of perjury, robbery, ſlander, and murder, if not of other crimes. In ſuch important concerns how careful ſhould we be, that we teſtify nothing, of which we are not certain! that we ſuffer not partially, prejudice, ſelf-intereſt, or any other human paſſion to warp our evidence, or give it a falſe colouring! How circumſpect and exact ſhould we be even to a word, if poſſible, in reporting what we know; and in ſpeaking the truth, the whole truth, and no more than the truth! Equal caution and circumſpection are requiſite in thoſe, who compoſe juries, and bring in the verdict; and in the judge, who ſums up the evidence and pronounces the ſentence. In all theſe caſes there is danger of breaking this commandment, in connexion with many others, and in the moſt atrocious manner.—Next to this we may rank the malicious invention and propagation of falſe reports, in order to injure the reputation, the intereſt, or the comfort of our neighbour: nor is it much leſs criminal when it is done in ſport, as the madman throws about arrows, firebrands, and death. Neither ought we to ſpread ſuch reports as have already been framed, if we know, or ſuſpect, them to be falſe or aggravated: nay, though we are ſure that they are ſtrictly true, if we have no good reaſon for circulating them, we ſhall contract guilt by ſo doing: nor is it eaſy to adduce a good reaſon for diſſeminating an injurious report, except the detection of a hypocrite be neceſſary, that others may not be deceived by him; or that of a maſked villain, that they may be upon their guard againſt him. Such caſes excepted, the practice of ſpreading diſadvantageous ſtories of others is the reſult of proud ſelf-preference, of malevolence, which takes pleaſure in diſgracing and torturing others; or of conceited affectation of wit, which diſregards all conſequences in ſeeking admiration. All calumnies, ſlanders, reproaches, ſevere cenſures, and pointed ſarcaſms, which hold up an individual to contempt and ridicule, however ingenious, and applauded, will be condemned as violations of this commandment: and ſo will the diſpoſition as to aſcribe, without evidence, an inoffenſive or good action to a corrupt motive, to put the worſt conſtruction upon a doubtful one, or to enhance the malignity of a bad one: and all the innuendos, and miſrepreſentation, whereby the baſe trade of back-biting is carried on; and by which anecdotes are picked up in one family to furniſh matter of converſation in another, which may gratify the malevolence or curioſity of ſuch perſons, as ſeem to confeſs themſelves incapable of more rational diſcourſe. Much tranſgreſſion of this commandment is found in books of religious controverſy; (as well as in other books, for a lie or a ſlander is much worſe, when printed and publiſhed, than when only ſpoken), and in converſation about religion: for the bigots of all ſects and parties are agreed in bearing falſe witneſs againſt their opponents; in miſſtating facts, miſreporting words, and miſquoting books. This is a moſt ſhameful offence, and cannot be too ſeverely reprobated and proteſted againſt by all friends to true religion, which is thus expoſed to the ſcorn of its enemies. All lies, however diſtinguiſhed or denominated, are 19 And they ſaid unto Moſes, Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God ſpeak with us, leſt we die.

20 And Moſes ſaid unto the people, Fear not: for God is come to prove you, and that his fear may be before your faces, that ye ſin not.

claſs amongſt the violations of this commandment: and are always an abuſe of the gift of ſpeech, an abuſe of the confidence of thoſe whom we addreſs, and generally one way or other injurious to our neighbours: they are therefore without diſtinction condemned in the word of God. Even injurious thoughts, groundleſs ſuſpicions, and ſecret prejudices, or envy of the praiſes and commendations which others receive, conſiſt not with the ſpirit of this precept: which implies a requiſition of ſincerity, truth, fidelity, candour, and caution, in our whole diſpoſition, converſation, and conduct; that we love our neighbour as ourſelves, and ſhew that love by honouring what is honourable, commending what is commendable, vindicating and excuſing what can be vindicated and excuſed, and concealing what may lawfully be concealed; and in every reſpect conſulting his reputation, and even rejoicing in his credit and renown, as we ſhould were it our own, and might reaſonably deſire he alſo ſhould. In our own caſe we all feel the excellency and reaſonableneſs of the precept in its ſtricteſt ſenſe; we value and are tender of our reputation; we expect to be treated with candour, reſpect, and ſincerity; and we are greatly pained and affronted, when we are impoſed upon, or held forth to ſcorn, ridicule, and cenſure, by the tongues or pens of others. But through the exorbitancy of ſelf-love, and the deficiency of our love to others, we are prone in an amazing degree to violate the ſame rules, in reſpect of our neighbour, without much remorſe, or ſenſe of guilt! Nor can words expreſs how much this reaſonable commandment is every day tranſgreſſed in almoſt every company, and amongſt perſons of all characters.

V. 17. Thou ſhalt not covet, &c]. This laſt commandment is intended to be the fence of all the reſt: that by attending to it we may be kept at a diſtance from the violation of the others; as the Iſraelites were kept at a diſtance from Mount Sinai by the boundaries, which were placed about it. The apoſtle quotes it as compriſing the utmoſt ſpirituality of the law; and as that requirement which eſpecially tends to ſhew the convinced ſinner the depravity of his heart, the inſufficiency of his obedience, and the deceitfulneſs of all his former hopes. (Rom. vii. 7, 8). Hence it may be inferred, that it was alſo annexed as a rule of explication to all the reſt; and Chriſt hath mentioned one ſpecies of concupiſcence, or coveting, as a violation of the ſeventh commandment. (Matt. v. 28). Indeed it has been the manner of men in all ages to reſt in the mere letter of the commandments, and, if not chargeable with the groſs wickedneſs prohibited by them, to think or ſay, "all theſe have I kept from my youth:" but the tenth commandment ſtands in the law itſelf as a direct confutation of ſuch explications, and as direct a ſanction of the more ſpiritual and extenſive expoſition.—Nor is it at all material which commandment our conduct tranſgreſſes, if it be evidently condemned by the law of God. Many things therefore, which have been adduced in the interpretation of the other commandments, might here again be mentioned: but the repetition would be needleſs. We muſt not covet any thing which the law of God forbids, or which the providence of God with-holds: the leaſt deſire of a forbidden object is coveting; the inordinate deſire of the object, which might lawfully be poſſeſſed, is the ſame.—The firſt motion of deſire, the moſt ſecret wiſh, for the wife of another man, is a violation of the precept; but the deſire of an union with an unmarried woman, who is not pre-engaged, is only forbidden when it becomes inordinate: becauſe the object of the former deſire is unlawful, that of the latter lawful in itſelf; though there may be circumſtances which render the deſire equally ſinful, becauſe it is evidently impracticable to indulge it by lawful means. That part of our neighbour's property, which he may with propriety part from, and expreſſes an intention to diſpoſe of, we may innocently deſire upon fair and equitable terms: but if he be averſe to part with his poſſeſſion, though for a valuable conſideration, we cannot continue to deſire it, without violation of this commandment. The deſire of obtaining a part of our neighbour's property in a way, which were the circumſtances reverſed, it would be fair and reaſonable for him to deſire a part of our ſubſtance, is not coveting. The moderate deſire of relief from the affluence of a rich man, in the breaſt of one really in want, is no tranſgreſſion of this commandment, though he propoſe no valuable conſideration in lieu of it.—By parity of reaſon, men, embarking in an equally hazardous enterprize, may agree to contribute certain proportions of their ſubſtance to relieve the diſtreſs, or compenſate the loſs, which any one of them in that undertaking may ſuſtain, without coveting the property of the others: becauſe this is ſimply an agreement to relieve mutually each other's diſtreſſes, ſhould the one be diſtreſſed and the other exempted, which is the law of love: and this will exculpate inſurance from the charge of violating this precept, if it be fairly and honeſtly tranſacted.—But ten perſons cannot ſtake a ſum of money each, to caſt lots for the whole, without coveting their neighbour's property, and ſeeking to poſſeſs it in a way contrary to the law of love: for each muſt deſire to enrich himſelf by impoveriſhing the others, and to obtain their property in a way, that he would not, without hopes of winning, riſk to part with his own. This will evidently conclude all gaming, public as well as private, to be a tranſgreſſion of this commandment.—It perfectly agrees with the law of love, to deſire and accept a proportion of our neighbour's abundance to make up our loſs, and to relieve our diſtreſs: but it is directly contrary to it to deſire, and ſeize upon his ſubſtance, to enrich ourſelves by impoveriſhing him. The former is the caſe of inſurances, the latter of gaming and lotteries: for that which is right or wrong when two or ten are concerned, is equally right or wrong when millions concur in it: and the extenſive miſchief, that follows from lotteries, evinces them to be the very worſt ſpecies of gaming. — In fine, diſtruſt, diſcontent, ambition, covetouſneſs, ſelf-love, love of the world, love of pleaſure, 21 And the people ſtood afar off, and Moſes drew near unto the thick darkneſs where God was.

22 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Thus thou ſhalt ſay unto the children of Iſrael, ye have ſeen that I have talked with you from heaven.

23 Ye ſhall not make with me gods of ſilver, neither ſhall ye make unto you gods of gold.

24 An altar of earth thou ſhalt make unto me, and ſhalt ſacrifice thereon thy burnt-offerings, and thy peace-offerings, thy ſheep and thine oxen: In all places where I record my name, I will come unto thee, and I will bleſs thee.

25 And if thou wilt make me an altar of ſtone, thou ſhalt not build it of hewn ſtone: for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou haſt polluted it.

envy, deſire of change, and the habit of wiſhing and inordinately ſeeking for any earthly object, or the indulgence of any paſſion in the human heart, are the evils againſt which this precept is directed: as indeed they are the great ſources of all the wickedneſs that fills the earth, which would be repreſſed were theſe ſubdued, and ceaſe were they extinguiſhed. And it requires that indifference about the ſucceſs of our worldly undertakings, and that moderation about worldly objects, which becomes men whoſe buſineſs it is to do the will of God, and whoſe happineſs it is to enjoy his favour, without looking any further.—This is right and reaſonable, fit for God to command, and profitable for man to obey, the very temper and felicity of heaven itſelf: but it is ſo contrary to the diſpoſition of our heart by nature, and ſo ſuperior to the actual attainment of the beſt chriſtians on earth; that it is hard to perſuade people in general, that God requires ſuch perfection; ſtill harder to ſatisfy them, that it not only conſiſts with, but is indiſpenſable, to the happineſs of the rational creature; and hardeſt of all to convince them, that every thing inconſiſtent with, or ſhort of, this is ſin, the wages of which is death. Yet this is the evident doctrine of the Bible; and conviction of it is the very preparation for underſtanding and valuing the Grace of the Goſpel of our ſalvation, in any meaſure ſuitable to its nature and precioufneſs.

Thy neighbour's houſe, &c.] The things here mentioned were thoſe, which were moſt commonly coveted amongſt the Iſraelites; and they imply all poſſible objects of concupiſcence.—Thus we cloſe the ſecond table of the law: and we find in it nothing injurious, defective, or redundant; nothing which could be altered, added, or retrenched, without marring the perfection of the whole, and allowing of thoſe things, which are inconſiſtent with perſonal, relative, and ſocial felicity.—'Lord have mercy upon us, (for-'giving all our paſt tranſgreſſions), and write all theſe 'thy Laws in our hearts we beſeech thee. Amen.'

V. 19. Speak thou, &c.] By this requeſt the people confeſſed that they wanted a Mediator, and that they could not in their own perſons ſtand before the holy God, according to this ſpiritual law: "for they could not endure "the things, which were ſpoken." But it was rather the language of their terrors and preſent feelings, than of their judgment. It however ſhews us our real condition; and in this whole tranſaction Moſes typified, that "Prophet "like unto himſelf" whom he predicted.

V. 20. Fear not, for God, &c.] Moſes encouraged the people not to fear immediate deſtruction: for theſe awful diſplays were intended for their conviction and humiliation, not for their condemnation; and in connexion with the Goſpel, to put them upon trial, and to evince who was and who was not diſpoſed to obey, when properly warned, encouraged, and inſtructed; and at the ſame time to impreſs them with reverential fear, which is connected with love and promotes obedience. This is totally different from that ſervile fear, which is connected with enmity, produces deſpondency, and leads to further ungodlineſs:—unleſs the juſtice and holineſs of God, and the ſeverity of his law, be viewed in connection with the Goſpel; and this terror be mitigated by hope, and this enmity ſupplanted by the love of God ſhed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghoſt.

V. 24. An altar of earth, &c.] That is of the meaneſt materials; as God reſpected principally the faith, humility, and holineſs of the offerer, next to Jeſus whom the ſacrifices typified. The Lord recorded his name in the tabernacle and temple, which were built according to his command, and dedicated to him. In like manner he records his name in all the ordinances, which he hath appointed as means of grace to us, and of honourable worſhip to himſelf.

V. 25. Liſt up a tool, &c.] Theſe reſtrictions were intended to keep the people at a diſtance from the idolatries and ſuperſtitions of the Heathens; and from attempting to pleaſe God by human inventions, or by external ſplendour in his worſhip. But the temple, altar, and ſacrifices repreſented Chriſt's atonement and righteouſneſs, to which as the meritorious ground of our acceptance we can attempt to add nothing, without offending God, and precluding our own juſtification, or at leaſt our comfortable ſenſe of it.—Theſe rules were given with reference to the occaſional altars, on which the people ſhould offer ſacrifice, till the ceremonial law were given, in which we find another kind of altar preſcribed.

V. 26. Leſt thy nakedneſs, &c.] The Heathen worſhip was attended by ſhameful indecencies, from which the Lord would keep his people at the utmoſt diſtance; and as they wore looſe garments, this precaution was very proper.

this holy law was given; nor yet hear the voice of God pronouncing theſe words: yet if we will attend to the things, which were then ſpoken, and in which we are equally concerned, we ſhall perceive, that we have as much occaſion to tremble for ourſelves, as ever Iſrael had before mount Sinai. This law, which is ſo extenſive that we cannot meaſure it, ſo ſpiritual that we cannot evade it, and ſo reaſonable that we cannot find fault with it, will be the rule of the future judgment of God, as it is of the preſent conduct of man. Nor would it conſiſt with the glory of the divine perfections, the honour of his government, the intereſts of his univerſal and everlaſting kingdom, or even with the felicity of any of his rational creatures, to reverſe, repeal, or relax one precept of it; for it is all perfectly "holy, juſt, "and good." Compared with its ſpiritual requirements, we ſee moſt evidently that man is a fallen ruined creature; for his character, diſpoſition, and conduct, ſo far from being conformable to it in full perfection, is the very contrary; "the carnal mind of man is enmity againſt God; for "it is not ſubject to the law of God, nor indeed can be." Examined by this rule our whole paſt lives appear to be a continued ſeries of tranſgreſſions; our beſt actions to be all defective in their principle, end, and meaſure, and defiled with ſin; and our judgment, will, and affections, the reverſe of what they ought to be: and while we behold ourſelves in this mirror, we cannot but uſe the language of the prophet "We are all as an unclean thing, and all "our righteouſneſſes are as filthy rags." (Iſaiah, lxiv. 6). Having thus obtained ſome acquaintance with the number of our tranſgreſſions, and with the ſinfulneſs of our fallen nature; we may further perceive our danger when we read ſuch words as theſe "curſed is every one, that conti-"nueth not in all things, which are written in the book "of the law to do them." (Gal. iii. 10.); which curſe Chriſt expounds, when he declares that he will ſay to thoſe on his left hand, "Depart from me, ye curſed, into "everlaſting fire, prepared for the Devil, and his angels:" and adds, "theſe ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſh-"ment." (Matt. xxv. 41—46). And when we have impartially conſidered the excellency of every commandment, we ſhall gradually be conſtrained to approve of the law, to allow of the evil of tranſgreſſion, and to perceive a little of the equity of that wrath of God, which is "revealed "from Heaven againſt all ungodlineſs, and unrighteouſneſs "of men." For if tranſgreſſion of human laws in any caſe juſtly merits the death of the body, which is the utmoſt puniſhment that man can inflict: tranſgreſſion of God's law, (conſidering who he is, and what are our obligations to him) may ſurely be allowed juſtly to merit the utmoſt effect of his power, who is able to deſtroy both body and ſoul in hell. Thus does the law, in the hand of the convincing Spirit of God, ſhow men their loſt eſtate, their guilt, danger, and miſery; and effectually demonſtrate to their conſciences, that their own righteouſneſs cannot juſtify, their own arm cannot ſave them. Further than this law cannot go; but muſt leave us under condemnation, and in deſpair, ſeparated from God, and neither allowed, able, nor willing in this world to approach unto his holy majeſty, with any acceptable ſervice; yet at laſt required to ſtand before his tribunal, in order to receive the recompence of our evil deeds. With this holy law, awful judgment, and eternal retributions before our eyes, who can deſpiſe the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt? An almighty Saviour, a vicarious atonement and righteouſneſs, juſtification by faith alone, acceſs unto God upon a mercy ſeat with acceptance through a Mediator; the renewal of our ſouls to holineſs by the ſanctification of the Spirit; and eternal life, as the free gift of a gracious God to loſt ſinners, can only appear contemptible to him, who knows not the extent, ſpirituality or excellency of the law of God; or hath never carefully compared his heart and life with it having the day of judgment placed before his eyes. In the perſon, undertaking, obedience, and death of Chriſt, this law was magnified and made honourable, and the juſtice of God was ſatisfied: ſo that his hatred of ſin now harmonizes with his love to ſinners. Here is "the knowledge "of ſalvation to his people by the remiſſion of their ſins;" "for Chriſt hath redeemed them from the curſe of the law, "being made a curſe for them." View the character of Chriſt; in human nature, in the midſt of temptations and ſufferings, and even unto the death upon the croſs, he was perfectly obedient to this law in its fulleſt extent: on this obedience his divine nature ſtamped infinite value. This, O ſelf-condemned ſinner, is the proviſion God hath made for thy juſtification! this righteouſneſs, being commenſurate with the largeſt demands of the divine law, and being the righteouſneſs of God himſelf, "is upon all, and "unto all, them that believe; for there is no difference;" (Rom. iii. 22. 2 Cor. v. 21); and through the atoning blood, and the interceſſion grounded on it, we have open acceſs to the throne of grace of a reconciled God, notwithſtanding our perſonal guilt and unworthineſs. But can it then be poſſible, if the law be ſo holy and excellent, and ſuch honour have been put upon it by the obedience and ſufferings of the incarnate Son of God, that any redeemed ſinner ſhould be allowed to diſobey it? it is abſurdity, impoſſibility, blaſphemy! The knowledge of the law ſhows our need of repentance; the knowledge of Chriſt crucified is introduced, attended, and followed with repentance itſelf. In every believer's heart ſin is dethroned and crucified, the law of God is written, and the image of God is renewed: Chriſt is made his ſanctification: the holy Spirit diſpoſes, inclines, and enables him

2 If thou buy an Hebrew ſervant, ſix years he ſhall ſerve: and in the ſeventh he ſhall go out free for nothing.

3 If he came in by himſelf, he ſhall go out by himſelf: if he were married, then his wife ſhall go out with him.

4 If his maſter have given him a wife, and ſhe have borne him ſons or daughters; the wife and her children ſhall be her maſter's, and he ſhall go out by himſelf.

5 And if the ſervant ſhall plainly ſay, I love my maſter, my wife, and my children, I will not go out free:

6 Then his maſter ſhall bring him unto the judges; he ſhall alſo bring him to the door, or unto the door-poſt: and his maſter ſhall bore his ear through with an awl; and he ſhall ſerve him for ever.

7 And if a man ſell his daughter to be a maid-him to hate and flee from ſin; to love, delight in, and keep this law in ſincerity and truth; and to copy daily his example who perfectly fulfilled it. Nor will the believer ever to ceaſe from the exerciſe of repentance, the purſuit of holineſs, or the earneſt application to Chriſt for increaſing ſanctification, till he become holy in heaven, as he who hath called him is holy. By theſe rules we may judge of our religion. May Chriſt be the end of the law for righteouſneſs to each of us; may the ſanctification of the Spirit unto obedience prove the reality of our juſtification; may we make the law of God the rule, and the example of Chriſt the pattern of, our daily walk; and may his ſtatutes be the delight and counſellors of all who read theſe obſervations. Then ſhall we daily more and more rejoice in, and glorify God, adorn the Goſpel, ſerve our generation, and ripen for the world of glory.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI.] V. 1. Judgments.] This word here means judicial laws, or rules of judgment, by which the magiſtrates and judges ſhould proceed in determining cauſes, and trying criminals.—Making proper allowances for the different circumſtances of the times, there is a ſpirit of equity in theſe laws, which is well worthy to be tranſfuſed into the laws of any ſtate.

V. 2. An Hebrew ſervant, &c.] The Iſraelites ſometimes ſold themſelves, or their children, through poverty; magiſtrates ſold ſome perſons for their crimes; and creditors were in certain caſes allowed to ſell their inſolvent debtors.—In theſe ways ſlavery was, or would be ſoon, introduced among them; even the ſlavery of their brethren, as well as that of ſtrangers: and God was pleaſed, in the judicial law not totally to prohibit this, and ſeveral other things, which do not accord to the law of love; but ſo to regulate them, as in great meaſure to prevent the bad conſequences of them.—The moral law is the ſtandard, by which every action is to be tried, whether it be right or wrong in itſelf: but in the government of nations, legiſlators muſt judge how far it is practicable, expedient, or tending to the grand ends of magiſtracy, to require all that is right, and forbid all that is wrong, under penal ſanctions. The nation of Iſrael, like other nations, was governed by, a judicial law, as to their outward conduct, for the well-being of ſociety; the violations of which were cognizable, and puniſhable by the civil magiſtrate with temporal puniſhments. This could not be the ſame law, with that, which eſpecially regarded the internal diſpoſitions of the heart, for the glory of God, known and puniſhable only by him, in a future ſtate, with eternal puniſhments.—As the lawgiver was the ſame, they would coincide, as far as his infinite wiſdom ſaw it proper, expedient, and conducive to the grand ends he had in view: but as they were intended for ſuch diſtinct purpoſes, they muſt in many things vary. The moral law commanded every thing ſpiritually good in its utmoſt perfection, and tolerated nothing wrong in the ſmalleſt degree: but the ſentence of it is reſerved "to that day, when God ſhall "judge the SECRETS of men by Jeſus Chriſt." The judicial law commanded nothing morally bad, forbad nothing morally good; but as ſentence according to it would be pronounced by the civil magiſtrate, it required not the ſame perfection: and, beſides that it enjoined nothing concerning the ſtate of the heart, it had reſpect unto the ſituation, character, and peculiar circumſtances of the nation to be governed; and ſuppoſed the exiſtence of ſome evils which could not be eradicated without a conſtant miracle; and provided againſt their effects."—This diſtinction, carefully attended to, will account for many things being ſeemingly tolerated in the Moſaic law, which are condemned in the New Teſtament; and not only there, but in the Ten Commandments, or moral law of "loving our neighbour "as ourſelves."—They are not ſanctioned, but merely ſuffered becauſe of the hardneſs of the people's hearts: or on ſome account to prevent worſe conſequences.—Slavery was almoſt univerſal in the world: and though, like wars, it always proceeded of evil, and was generally evil in itſelf; yet the wiſdom of God deemed it better to regulate, than to prohibit it: but we ſhould not judge of the practice itſelf by theſe judicial regulations but by the law of love. Slavery, like war, may in ſome caſes in the preſent ſtate of things, be lawful, even according to that perfect rule: for the crime which forfeits life, ſeems to forfeit liberty; and it does not appear inconſiſtent with even the moral law of God, for a criminal to be ſold and treated as a ſlave, during a term of time proportioned to his offence.—In moſt if not in all other caſes, it muſt be inconſiſtent with the law of love: and it may be inexpedient ever to inflict that puniſhment, becauſe it forms ſo undeſirable a precedent.

V. 4. If his maſter, &c.] Sometimes the perſons were married before they were reduced to ſlavery, and their wives, either by conſtraint or choice, attended them. But at other times their maſters gave them wives of their Hea- then ſlaves, (for it does not ſeem, that they could thus diſpoſe of a Hebrew female), and the iſſue of ſuch marriage as well as the wife, continued the maſter's property when the ſervant was diſcharged.

V. 7—11.] A Parent, induced by poverty, might ſome- time maid-ſervant, ſhe ſhall not go out as the men-ſervants do.

8 If ſhe pleaſe not her maſter, who hath betrothed her to himſelf, then ſhall he let her be redeemed: To ſell her unto a ſtrange nation he ſhall have no power, ſeeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her.

9 And if he have betrothed her unto his ſon, he ſhall deal with her after the manner of daughters.

10 If he take him another wife; her food, her raiment, and her duty of marriage ſhall he not diminiſh.

11 And if he do not theſe three unto her, then ſhall ſhe go out free without money.

12 He that ſmiteth a man, ſo that he die, ſhall be ſurely put to death.

13 And if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; then I will appoint thee a place whither he ſhall flee.

14 But if a man come preſumptuouſly upon his neighbour to ſlay him with guile; thou ſhalt take him from mine altar, that he may die.

15 And he that ſmiteth his father or his mother, ſhall be ſurely put to death.

16 And he that ſtealeth a man, and ſelleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he ſhall ſurely be put to death.

17 And he that curſeth his father, or his mother, ſhall ſurely be put to death.

18 And if men ſtrive together, and one ſmite another with a ſtone, or with his fiſt, and he die not, but keep his bed:

19 If he riſe again, and walk abroad upon his ſtaff, then ſhall he that ſmote him be quit: only he ſhall pay for the loſs of his time, and ſhall cauſe him to be thoroughly healed.

20 And if a man ſmite his ſervant, or his maid with a rod, and he die under his hand; he ſhall be ſurely puniſhed.

21 Notwithſtanding, if he continue a day or two, he ſhall not be puniſhed: for he is his money.

22 If men ſtrive and hurt a woman with child, ſo that her fruit depart from her, and yet no miſchief follow: he ſhall be ſurely puniſhed, according as the woman's huſband will lay upon him; and he ſhall pay as the judges determine.

23 And if any miſchief follow, then thou ſhalt give life for life.

times thus ſell his child in her youth, with engagement, or expectation, that ſhe ſhould become the concubine, or wife, of the perſon who bought her.—Therefore, if the perſon who bought her, afterwards changed his mind, and did not marry her, the parents or other friends were allowed the liberty of redeeming her at a reaſonable price; but if they did not do it, ſhe was by no means to be ſold as a ſlave, or even to become the concubine of any Heathen, where ſhe would be out of the way of recovering her liberty, and likely to forget her religion: but the perſon who bought her muſt either keep her himſelf, or diſpoſe of her amongſt the Iſraelites, that ſhe might enjoy the benefit of their religion and laws: for having already deceived her, he muſt not add one injury to another.—But if, after he had married her, he took another wife, and neglected her, ſhe was to go out free, as a recompence for the injury which ſhe had received.

V. 12—14. If a man ſmote another wilfully, whether out of previous reſentment, or ſudden anger, and the blow itſelf was given with the intention of doing hurt, it was deemed murder: But when it was merely by accident, as we term it, but which is here called "God's delivering "him into his hand," as by his providence he thus is pleaſed to take away the life he gave, the cities of refuge were appointed for him to flee to. Yet ſo far were they from being a ſecurity to the wilful, preſumptuous, deliberate murderer, that he was to be torn from the altar of God itſelf, and put to death.—The Heathen altars and temples were generally refuges for criminals: but God would not have his altar profaned by protecting thoſe who deſerved puniſhment; nor did he appoint any ſacrifice for murder.

V. 15. Smiteth his father, &c.] The offences of ſmiting (though no fatal conſequences followed), or curſing, and venting imprecations againſt, parents, conſtituted ſuch daring rebellion againſt the authority of God veſted in them, and were ſo ungrateful and unnatural in themſelves, that no provocation was to be pleaded in excuſe; but they who committed them were puniſhed with death. (17)

V. 20, 21.] The murder of a ſlave with a ſword or other ſuch fatal weapon was, it ſeems, always puniſhable with death: but when after correction he happened to die, the maſter was not to be thus puniſhed, except this conſequence immediately followed; becauſe it might be preſumed that he had no intention of killing him, and was already a ſufferer in the loſs of his property.

V. 22. No miſchief follow, &c.] In caſe a woman with child interpoſed in behalf of her huſband aſſaulted by another perſon, and was hurt by him ſo as to miſcarry; but no further miſchief enſued either to her, or her huſband; ſatisfaction was to be made to the latter.

V. 23—25.] Theſe were not allowances to private revenge; but laws to regulate the judge's determination in the adminiſtration of juſtice, who might proceed thus far, but no farther.

24 Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, 25 Burning for burning, wound for wound, ſtripe for ſtripe.

26 And if a man ſmite the eye of his ſervant, or the eye of his maid, that it periſh; he ſhall let him go free for his eye's ſake.

27 And if he ſmite out his man-ſervant's tooth, or his maid-ſervant's tooth; he ſhall let him go free for his tooth's ſake.

28 If an ox gore a man or a woman, that they die: then the ox ſhall be ſurely ſtoned, and his fleſh ſhall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox ſhall be quit.

29 But if the ox were wont to puſh with his horn in time paſt, and it hath been teſtified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox ſhall be ſtoned, and his owner alſo ſhall be put to death.

30 If there be laid on him a ſum of money, then he ſhall give for the ranſom of his life, whatſoever is laid upon him.

31 Whether he have gored a ſon or have gored a daughter, according to this judgment ſhall it be done unto him.

32 If the ox ſhall puſh a man-ſervant, or maid-ſervant; he ſhall give unto their maſter thirty ſhekels of ſilver, and the ox ſhall be ſtoned.

33 And if a man ſhall open a pit, or if a man ſhall dig a pit, and not cover it, and an ox or an aſs fall therein;

34 The owner of the pit ſhall make it good, and give money unto the owner of them; and the dead beaſt ſhall be his.

35 And if one man's ox hurt another's that he die, then they ſhall ſell the live ox, and divide the money of it, and the dead ox alſo they ſhall divide.

36 Or if it be known that the ox hath uſed to puſh in time paſt, and his owner hath not kept him in: he ſhall ſurely pay ox for ox, and the dead ſhall be his own.

CHAP.

V 30. If there be, &c.] The owner, who neglected to take care of a miſchievous ox, was anſwerable for the conſequences; and might be puniſhed by the magiſtrates as a murderer: but in caſe of alleviating circumſtances, they were empowered to change his ſentence into a fine, as a ranſom of his life.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The commandments of God's law, as well as the diſpenſations of his providence, not only relate to the grand outlines of his adminiſtration, but deſcend to the minuteſt matters, and the meaneſt objects; eſpecially when righteouſneſs, goodneſs, and truth, are concerned. With a condeſcending regard he particularly watches over thoſe who are moſt expoſed to oppreſſion, injuſtice, or damage; and has reſpect to all ranks, from the pooreſt beggar to the mightieſt monarch; and to all the ſtages of human exiſtence, from the newly-conceived embryo in the womb, to decrepit old age.—Though he no longer reigneth over any ſingle nation in that peculiar ſenſe, in which he reigned over Iſrael; yet is he King over all the earth, and will at his awful tribunal arraign and condemn thoſe violations of his law, which here eſcape notice, or elude the ſword of human juſtice.—Having his precepts and example before our eyes, and this judgment in our remembrance; with what equity, ſincerity, and humanity, ſhould we treat our ſervants, dependents, and inferiors! We ought ſo to behave towards our domeſtics, that, though free from other bonds, they may be attached to us by the ties of love, and count it their privilege to ſpend and cloſe their days in our ſervice.—We ſhould be cautious not to act deceitfully in the important concern of marriage: but ſtill more ought we to abhor the baſeneſs of conſigning to laſting diſgrace and miſery, for the ſake of a worthleſs gratification, an unhappy object, over whom we have by any means acquired an aſcendency: on the contrary, we ſhould learn habitually to ſacrifice perſonal advantage or indulgence to general benevolence.—If this were our diſpoſition, there would not need laws to reſtrain us from ſuch unnatural crimes as ſtealing our brethren, and ſo many methods to inſpire us with horror of the ſin of murder: for, ſo far from lying in wait to ſhed blood, or trading in the bodies of men, we ſhould watch for, and gladly embrace, the opportunity of preſerving the liberty or life of our enemy; ſtill repreſſing the riſing emotions of anger, pouring out our prayers, and attempting acts of kindneſs under the greateſt provocations: and inſtead of enforcing the law of retaliation, we ſhould ever be ambitious of overcoming evil with good.—Then ſhould we guard, though with trouble and loſs, againſt whatever could endanger the life or property of another: and whilſt we were ever ready in any way to make up any damage, which we had indiſcreetly, or even without our blame, occaſioned to others, to the utmoſt of our power, we ſhould be very backward in demanding ſuch ſatisfaction to ourſelves. But let children hear with trembling, the ſentence of God's word upon the ungrateful and diſobedient; and remember that God will certainly require it, if they have

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII.] V. 1. If a man, &c.] The property of the Israelites consisted principally in cattle, which were therefore particularly mentioned in these laws against theft. If the thief had proceeded so far to kill or sell what he had stolen, he was condemned to restore four-fold; and in case of oxen, which were useful also for their labour, five-fold: if they were found alive in his hand, he was required to return double: (4:) but if through remorse of conscience he restored what he had stolen, voluntarily, and previous to discovery, he was only directed to add a fifth part to it. (Lev. vi. 4, 5.) But in case he was not able to make the appointed restitution, he was sold for a slave; and probably the money was given to make up the loss of the injured party.—We should deem such laws inadequate to the security of property: but though circumstances are exceedingly altered since the times of Moses, human nature is the same; and we are not apt to consider the nation of Israel as better disposed than other people: yet God himself deemed these laws sufficient in their case. It is true, theft among us is very commonly connected with an avowed or apparent intention of murder, in case of resistance, which exceedingly enhances the crime: but it is worthy of consideration, whether equalling the punishment of theft to that of murder, by making both capital, do not contribute to confound the disparity of the crimes in the minds of unthinking men; as well as to remove that restraint from committing or threatening murder, which would arise from the dread of a severer punishment. However, where the intention of murder is out of the question, it seems not consistent with equity, or humanity, to punish theft as severely as that most atrocious of crimes: and it is evident from the increase of criminals, though such numbers are put to death, that it does not answer the intended purpose, but seems to meet with a frown in God's providence. This may be one reason of its ill success: humane persons are loth to take away the life of a fellow-creature for the loss of a small sum of money or other property, they do not therefore prosecute when they can help it; and in many other respects natural compassion opens a way for young criminals to escape; by which means they frequently remain unpunished till they have arrived at a great pitch of hardened wickedness, and have corrupted many others: and by the same means, whilst such numbers escape all punishment for so long a time, every one is encouraged to promise himself impunity. If, in case of lotteries, self-flattery induces every adventurer to hope for the capital prize, though so many chances are against him; much more will the thief flatter himself with the hopes of escaping, when so many chances appear for him: and it seems incontrovertible, that the sure prospect of a less punishment would operate more powerfully in preventing crimes, than the distant possibility of death; especially with men, whose headstrong passions, rushing upon present gratification, disregard all temporal future consequences in proportion to their distance, and are totally regardless of things eternal.

V. 2—4.] If any one attempted in the night to break into an house, it might be construed into an assault upon the lives as well as the property of the inhabitants, and be repelled with force; and if the assailant were slain, the person who slew him was not liable to punishment. But after his own field, and of the beſt of his own vineyard, ſhall he make reſtitution.

6 If fire break out, and catch in thorns, ſo that the ſtacks of corn, or the ſtanding-corn, or the field be conſumed therewith; he that kindled the fire ſhall ſurely make reſtitution.

7 If a man ſhall deliver unto his neighbour money or ſtuff to keep, and it be ſtolen out of the man's houſe; if the thief be found, let him pay double.

8 If the thief be not found, then the maſter of the houſe ſhall be brought unto the judges, to ſee whether he have put his hand unto his neighbour's goods.

9 For all manner of treſpaſs, whether it be for ox, for aſs, for ſheep, for raiment, or for any manner of loſt thing, which another challengeth to be his: the cauſe of both parties ſhall come before the judges; and whom the judges ſhall condemn, he ſhall pay double unto his neighbour.

10 If a man deliver unto his neighbour an aſs, or an ox, or a ſheep, or any beaſt to keep; and it die, or be hurt, or driven away, no man ſeeing it:

11 Then ſhall an oath of the LORD be between them both, that he hath not put his hand unto his neighbour's goods: and the owner of it ſhall accept thereof, and he ſhall not make it good.

12 And if it be ſtolen from him, he ſhall make reſtitution unto the owner thereof.

13 If it be torn in pieces then let him bring it for witneſs, and he ſhall not make good that which was torn.

14 And if a man borrow ought of his neighbour, and it be hurt, or die, the owner thereof being not with it; he ſhall ſurely make it good.

15 But if the owner thereof be with it, he ſhall make it good: if it be an hired thing, it came for his hire.

after the ſun was riſen, he might not be killed in defence merely of property; becauſe there was another way of ſecuring or recovering it.

V. 9. Whom the judges, &c.] In all theſe caſes a diſcretionary power was lodged with the magiſtrate, to ſettle the diſpute according to equity.

V. 16. If a man entice, &c.] Nothing can be more equitable than ſome regulation of this kind, if properly reſtricted to the caſe of real ſeduction by an unmarried man. But even in the preſent ſtate of things, it is matter of fact, capable of demonſtration, that in theſe licentious days many young women in inferior circumſtances, and even encouraged by their parents, (ſhocking as it may ſeem) employ their utmoſt addreſs to attract the attention of young men of better circumſtances; in order that, under the pretence of ſeduction, they may be married to greater advantage! In attempting to remedy the grievous evil of real ſeduction, this ſhould by no means be encouraged and increaſed. But it ſeems highly reaſonable, that every unmarried man, whatever his circumſtances are, who debauches a virgin with promiſes of marriage, or any engagements which have the ſame effect upon her mind, ſhould be obliged actually to marry her; and that, if a married man, profeſſing himſelf unmarried, thus ſeduce a virgin, he ſhould be obliged to maintain her whilſt ſhe continues unmarried. But a young woman, who ſuffers herſelf to be enticed by a man whom ſhe knows to be married, ſeems not entitled to the ſame compenſation, whatever puniſhment he merits. It is not at all to our purpoſe to enquire whether, by this law, the ſeducer, though previouſly married, was to take her, whom he had ſeduced, to wife alſo. Polygamy was an evil, which then actually exiſted; and many regulations were made, which ſuppoſed, though they did not ſanction, its exiſtence: "But in the beginning it was not ſo;" nor is it under the Chriſtian diſpenſation, or according to our municipal laws.

V. 17. If her father, &c.] Though neither the ſeducer nor the perſon ſeduced was allowed a negative, the father of the latter might prevent the marriage: which ſhows what regard ſhould be paid by young perſons to the judgment and authority of their parents in this important concern. It ſeems a ſum of money was paid to the father, whether he conſented to the marriage or not. (Deut xxii. 28, 29.)

V. 18. Thou ſhalt not, &c.] Witchcraft is generally underſtood to mean, 'a combination or compact with evil 'ſpirits, by whoſe agency and aſſiſtance, applied for by 'certain incantations, effects of various kinds may be pro- 'duced, by which malice, or covetouſneſs, or other cor- 'rupt paſſion, may be gratified.' A vaſt variety of practices with different degrees of aggravation, which will in ſuc ceſſion hereafter come in our way, agree in common wi witchcraft, in avowedly making "Satan the god "the world," and the god of thoſe who thus apply to hi for information or aſſiſtance. It is readily allowed that muc impoſture on the one hand, (which forms a very ſingul kind of hypocriſy!) and much ſuperſtition, folly, a cruelty on the other hand, have taken place, in reſpe of pretenſions to, and accuſations of, theſe practices.—But it ſeems one of the moſt flagrant abſurdities of modern Sadduceiſm, to ſuppoſe that God himſelf would repeatedly command the magiſtrates of his people, to puniſh with death a crime which never was committed! The exiſtence, ſagacity, malice, ambition, and power of evil ſpirits are ſufficiently declared in Scripture: there can be no doubt, but they are both capable and willing thus to interpoſe, if permitted; and that human nature is capable of ſuch wickedneſs as even knowingly to combine with them, can ſcarcely be denied: that witchcraft may be, that it hath been, and that it ſtill is, in ſome parts of the world, actually practiſed, ſeems capable of proof, were any collateral evidence neceſſary to confirm the truth of the divine teſtimony. But as, by certain degrees of cultivation, wild beaſts are baniſhed, or extirpated, ſo in ſome ſtages of civilization the practice of witchcraft is nearly excluded. The truth is; in ſuch circumſtances it no longer ſo well anſwers Satan's grand purpoſe of deception and deſtruction: he therefore ſhifts his ground, and varies his attack; nor is he any loſer, by exchanging the practice of witchcraft for the prevalence of ſcepticiſm.

V. 20. Shall, &c.] Idolatry was before by the moral law forbidden to all men: but every idolatrous Iſraelite is here commanded to be puniſhed with immediate death. We find afterwards that whole cities, involved in that guilt, were ordered to be utterly deſtroyed. (Deut. xiii. 12—17.) For this was a breach of the national covenant. (Deut. xvii. 2.) But ſo long as their judges thus puniſhed it, it would not be accounted a national forfeiture of the charter.

V. 21. Thou ſhalt, &c.] The Iſraelites were required to encourage ſtrangers to live among them, and to recommend the true religion to them by kind uſage: not forgetting how hard they thought their own treatment in Egypt.

V. 25. Thou ſhalt, &c.] Uſury ſeems to conſiſt in taking increaſe from the poor, on what they borrow for preſent ſubſiſtence; which tends to enrich the lender, by ſtill more impoveriſhing the borrower. This was frequently carried to ſuch a pitch among the ancients, and even the Iſraelites, that the creditors conſtrained their debtors to ſell themſelves, or their children, for ſlaves, which was an evident violation of the law of love. (Neh. v. 2—5.) The Iſraelites were but little engaged in commerce; and the law was not only calculated, but intended, to prevent them from being ſo, and to keep them from mingling by any means with other nations: their land alſo was divided by lot, and they were not allowed to alienate their inheritances: they were not therefore much in the way of lending or taking up money upon intereſt, to employ in trade or expend in eſtates; in which caſes, and in thoſe of the like nature, it appears not inconſiſtent with either equity or love, for the lender to receive a proportion of the profits from the borrower. However, every thing of the kind was prohibited to the Iſraelites in their dealings with their brethren, though allowed in their tranſactions with ſtrangers, whom yet they were forbidden to oppreſs. (Deut. xxiii. 19, 20.) So that, though for ſpecial reaſons the Lord would not allow Iſraelites to take intereſt of their brethren in any caſe yet the expreſs allowance to take it of ſtrangers, ſhews that it is not ſinful in all caſes of itſelf, but only ſo far as it violates the law of love, and is attended by oppreſſion.

V. 26, 27, &c.] How far the buſineſs of a pawnbroker, in the preſent ſtate of ſociety, conſiſts with the ſpirit of theſe precepts, is a queſtion which involves much difficulty. Some are of opinion, and ſeem to argue with conſiderable plauſibility, that the very buſineſs is radically injurious to ſociety, and inconſiſtent with Chriſtianity: and certainly, as it is frequently conducted, its tendency is ſo. But as all receiving increaſe is not abſolutely prohibited, it may be doubted whether the full concluſion can in all caſes be drawn from the premiſes. It is not however an employment, to which a real Chriſtian can be ſuppoſed ſo partial, as to chooſe it either for himſelf or his children, after he hath become acquainted with the truth, power, and ſpirit of the Goſpel. But ſhould the grace of God meet with a perſon already engaged in this buſineſs, as having been educated to it, or accuſtomed to get his livelihood by it; and ſhould he be formed indeed to uprightneſs, benevolence, and conſcientiouſneſs; it may be queſtioned whether, by rendering his employment leſs lucrative to himſelf, he might not render it beneficial, or at leaſt not oppreſſive, to others; ſo that he might in that buſineſs have the prayers of the poor for him, not their cries againſt him. In this caſe the employment may be lawful; but it may be doubted whether in any other. If ſuch a perſon ſhould, after ſerious examination and fervent prayers to God for direction, find himſelf at liberty to continue in his calling, he will endeavour to "abide therein with God;" he will conſider it as his croſs, and take it up as ſuch; and diſdaining the proſpect of heaping up wealth, by every profit which ment to pledge, thou ſhalt deliver it unto him by that the ſun goeth down:

27 For that is his covering only, it is his raiment for his ſkin: wherein ſhall he ſleep? And it ſhall come to paſs, when he crieth unto me, that I will hear; for I am gracious.

28 Thou ſhalt not revile the gods, nor curſe the ruler of thy people.

29 Thou ſhalt not delay to offer the firſt of thy ripe fruits and of thy liquors: the firſt-born of thy ſons ſhalt thou give unto me.

30 Likewiſe ſhalt thou do with thine oxen, and with thy ſheep: ſeven days it ſhall be with his dam; on the eighth day thou ſhalt give it me.

31 And ye ſhall be holy men unto me: neither ſhall ye eat any fleſh that is torn of beaſts in the field: ye ſhall caſt it to the dogs.

the laws of the land may connive at, he will carefully conſult the law of God, of equity, of humanity, and of love; and will only go ſo far in his employment, as he verily deemed conſiſtent with theſe rules. And if a man's heart be upright, the Lord will either ſatisfy him to proceed, or encourage him to caſt himſelf upon his providence in renouncing it.

V. 28. The gods, &c.] This is generally underſtood to mean the magiſtrates or rulers of God's people; who repreſented his authority amongſt them, and were entitled to honour on that account, though perhaps not perſonally. (Acts, xxiii. 5.) Theſe commandments from the twentieth verſe, having no puniſhment to be inflicted by the judge annexed to them, are rather to be conſidered as moral precepts, binding upon the conſcience in the ſight of God, than judicial laws. What follows is ceremonial, and will hereafter be ſpoken upon to more advantage.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

According to the ſpirit of theſe laws, the people of God ſhould ever be inclined to mildneſs and mercy; be tender of the lives and ſouls even of thieves and robbers; and not value their own property ſo highly, as to put it in competition with them. They ought never to be willingly acceſſary to the death of another, except in the defence of their own lives, or in the execution of public juſtice: they then ſhould go about it as a painful duty; with reluctancy, and ſorrow of heart; not urged on by reſentment or ſelf-intereſt, but by conſcience, to ſacrifice the life of an individual to the public good. We ſhould ever keep in mind, that we are anſwerable in the ſight of God, not only for the conſequences of what we do maliciouſly, but of what we do heedleſsly; and are chargeable with injuſtice, not only if we do thoſe things which expoſe us to the laſh of the law; but for various acts of ſelfiſhneſs, abuſe of confidence, ſecret—double dealing, and even careleſsneſs of things borrowed. And therefore, if we are conſcious of having thus injured our neighbour, and are truly penitent, we ſhall endeavour to make reſtitution to the utmoſt of our ability, though not compelled to it by the ſentence of the magiſtrate. The fear of God ruling within us, the law of God written in our hearts, an humble recollection of what we were in our loſt eſtate, and a thankful ſenſe of what the Lord hath done for us, will produce tenderneſs of conſcience; carefulneſs to avoid all appearance of evil, and all occaſions of injury; humanity to the fatherleſs and widow; kindneſs to the ſtranger, and to all the ſons and daughters of penury; the ſubjection of our appetites and paſſions to the will of God; a regard to the credit of our religion; and a diſpoſition "to honour the Lord "with our ſubſtance and with the firſt-fruits of all our "increaſe;" and to devote ourſelves to be an holy people unto the Lord. What a contraſt do ſuch characters form to thoſe, whoſe ſelfiſh and filthy hearts are capable of crimes more than brutal, and truly diabolical! who need to be held in with ſuch laws, and puniſhments as theſe, and all too little! who have the cries of the oppreſſed, the widow, the orphan, and the poor, and the wrath of God againſt them: and who muſt be cut off by the avenging ſword of human juſtice, to prevent further miſchief. This is human nature unchanged and unreſtrained: the other is true grace converting, and ruling in, the heart. "Turn thou us, O Lord, and ſo ſhall we be turned," that we may be "unto thee a peculiar people zealous of "good works," through Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII. V. 1. Raiſe, &c.] The margin reads it receive a falſe report; for he that willingly receives and propagates a ſlander, ſhares the guilt with him that raiſed it: and that is ſtill more heinous, when a falſe report is atteſted in a court of juſtice.

V. 2. Thou ſhalt not, &c.] This is a general rule of conduct, which allows of no exceptions: But here it is introduced with eſpecial reference to bearing falſe witneſs; being

2 Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil; neither shalt thou speak in a cause, to decline after many to wrest judgment.

3 Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause.

4 If thou meet thine enemy's ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again.

5 If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, and wouldst forbear to help him: thou shalt surely help with him.

6 Thou shalt not wrest the judgment of thy poor in his cause.

7 Keep thee far from a false matter: and the innocent and righteous slay thou not: for I will not justify the wicked.

8 And thou shalt take no gift: for the gift blindeth the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous.

9 Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger: for ye know the heart of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

10 And six years thou shalt sow thy land, and shalt gather in the fruits thereof.

11 But the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still; that the poor of thy people may eat: and what they leave, the beasts of the field shall eat. In like manner thou shalt deal with thy vineyard, and with thy oliveyard.

12 Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest: that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger may be refreshed.

13 And in all things that I have said unto you, be circumspect: and make no mention of the names of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth.

being influenced in giving evidence by common report or popular clamour. As Mr. Brown expresses it: 'Neither 'parties, friends, judges, witnesses, or vulgar opinions, 'must move us, to lessen great faults, aggravate small 'ones, vindicate offenders, accuse the innocent, or misre-'present any thing, to procure an unjust sentence.'

V. 7, 8.] These verses are especially addressed to the judges, by way of caution and warning to them. For if they knowingly, or incautiously, admitted the evidence of a false witness, and in consequence of it, or from any corrupt motive, gave false sentence, in a case of life and death; they would be considered in God's sight, as murderers of the righteous and innocent; and by parity of reason, in causes relating to property, of robbery or oppression; and if they were so wicked, as to condemn the innocent, God would never justify them, when they stood before his righteous judgment seat; for such conduct would prove them to be wicked, that is impenitent and unbelieving, and they must therefore continue under the wrath of God as long as they persisted in it. They must not therefore take any bribe, or any present from the persons whose cause they were to decide, though without an express condition annexed: for that would be a temptation, which would tend to warp the judgment, and pervert the sentence even of such as were otherwise wise and righteous.—It is recorded of Sir Matthew Hale, that upon his circuit as a judge, he refused to try the cause of a gentleman, who had sent him the customary present of venison, until he had paid him for it. It seems he well understood the spirit of these laws, which is by no means antiquated.

V. 11. But the seventh year, &c.] This law seems to have been intended to remind the Israelites that they were the Lord's tenants for their estates, and they must observe his rules in cultivating them, as well as in disposing of the product of them; otherwise they would incur a forfeiture of the lease: to teach them dependence on his providence, and observation of his faithfulness in sending them the larger increase, whilst they kept his appointments: to inculcate indifference about corruptible riches; and a spirit of liberality to the poor, who were to appropriate the spontaneous productions of the land, during this year. It would be a real advantage to the land to lie thus fallow from time to time: it was also typical of the heavenly rest, when all earthly labours, cares, and interests shall cease for ever: some have moreover supposed, that the seven-thousandth year of the world will have somewhat analogous to this sabbatical year.

V. 13. Make no mention, &c.] The Lord's people were forbidden to mention the names of idols, lest the familiar use of them should abate their abhorrence, and make way to the worship of them. It is worth while to enquire how far the familiar acquaintance with the heathen mythology, which accompanies a classical education, consists with this law; and whether it does not subserve the cause of scepticism and immorality, and prove of unfavourable consequence to genuine Christianity. The characters and anecdotes of Jupiter, Bacchus, Apollo, Mars, Venus, and other abominable idols, agreeably told in the fictions of the poets, lose their horror, and fill the youthful mind with delight and admiration: and an imagination furnished with abundance of such ideas, and a judgment perverted by such examples, promise nothing very desirable, either in respect of the chastity, sobriety, humility, faith, or piety of those who are thus educated. It were to be wished that such books as Ovid's Metamorphoses, and many others, were either totally kept out of the hands of inexperienced youth, or more cautiously entrusted in them. As to the chief places of public diversion, they subsist by accommodation to the more plausible passions

14 Three times ſhalt thou keep a feaſt unto me in the year.

15 Thou ſhalt keep the feaſt of unleavened bread: thou ſhalt eat unleavened bread ſeven days, as I commanded thee in the time appointed of the month Abib: for in it thou cameſt out from Egypt: and none ſhall appear before me empty:

16 And the feaſt of harveſt, the firſt-fruits of thy labours, which thou haſt ſown in the field: and the feaſt of in-gathering which is in the end of the year, when thou haſt gathered in thy labours out of the field.

17 Three times in the year all thy males ſhall appear before the LORD GOD.

18 Thou ſhalt not offer the blood of my ſacrifice with leavened bread, neither ſhall the fat of my ſacrifice remain until the morning.

19 The firſt of the firſt-fruits of thy land thou ſhalt bring into the houſe of the LORD thy God. Thou ſhalt not ſeethe a kid in his mother's milk.

20 Behold, I ſend an Angel before thee to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared.

21 Beware of him and obey his voice, provoke him not: for he will not pardon your tranſgreſſions: for my name is in him.

22 But if thou ſhalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I ſpeak; then I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and an adverſary unto thine adverſaries.

23 For mine Angel ſhall go before thee, and bring thee in unto the Amorites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hivites, and the Jebuſites: and I will cut them off.

24 Thou ſhalt not bow down to their gods, nor ſerve them, nor do after their works: but thou ſhalt utterly overthrow them, and quite break down their images.

25 And ye ſhall ſerve the LORD your God, and he ſhall bleſs thy bread, and thy water: and I will take ſickneſs away from the midſt of thee.

26 There ſhall nothing caſt their young nor be barren in thy land: the number of thy days I will fulfil.

27 I will ſend my fear before thee, and will deſtroy all the people to whom thou ſhalt come, and I will make all thine enemies turn their backs unto thee.

28 And I will ſend hornets before thee, which ſhall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite from before thee.

29 I will not drive them out from before thee in one year; leſt the land become deſolate, and the beaſt of the field multiply againſt thee.

30 By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increaſed, and inherit the land.

31 And I will ſet thy bounds from the Red ſea even unto the ſea of the Philiſtines, and from the deſert unto the river: for I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand; and thou ſhalt drive them out before thee.

paſſions of depraved human nature; and the Heatheniſm of them only forms an additional proof of their unfavourable aſpect on Chriſtianity; and an additional reaſon, why real Chriſtians ſhould keep themſelves and their children from them.

V. 14—17.] We ſhall hereafter meet with a more particular account of theſe feaſts, under the names of the Feaſt of Paſſover, of Weeks, and of Tabernacles, when once for all ſome obſervations will be made on them. (Notes, &c. Lev. xxiii. Deut. xvi.)

V. 19. Thou ſhalt not ſeethe, &c.] This ſingular practice, which is more than once prohibited, might be deemed to have ſome ſemblance of cruelty in it; or might be conſidered as an unnatural gratification of the appetite: but probably it was a ſuperſtition, or a ſort of incantation in uſe amongſt the idolaters, by which they thought to ſecure a plentiful harveſt.

V. 21. My name is in him.] When we recollect the many ſcriptures, which call an Angel, that appeared to the people of God, by the names, Jehovah, and Elohim that is God, we cannot miſtake the meaning of this expreſſion, or be in doubt, who this Angel was, who had power on earth to forgive, or not to forgive, ſins, and in whom was the name of Jehovah; which ſeems naturally to mean the participation of the divine perfections, as well as acting with divine authority; being one with the Father, the brightneſs or effulgency of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon. (Heb. i. 3.)

V. 28. Hornets, &c.] This promiſe was doubtleſs literally accompliſhed, after the manner of the plagues of Egypt, in ſome one, or in many, of their engagements with the Canaanites; though it be not any where recorded.

V. 31. River.] The river Euphrates, to which the territories of Iſrael extended in the days of David and Solomon; and were contracted afterwards only in puniſhment of their ſins.

32 Thou ſhalt make no covenant with them, nor with their gods.

33 They ſhall not dwell in thy land, leſt they make thee ſin againſt me: for if thou ſerve their gods, it will ſurely be a ſnare unto thee.

V. 33. A ſnare unto thee, &c.] As this conduct would involve the people in guilt, it would alſo aſſuredly entangle them in inextricable perplexities and complicated ſufferings. All the latter part of this chapter primarily relates to the national covenant, the ſolemn ratification of which is recorded in the next chapter; and only by way of accommodation to true believers, and to ſpiritual and eternal bleſſings.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

How manifold are the occaſions of, and temptations to, ſin in this evil world! He, who would keep a conſcience void of offence towards God and man, muſt not only watch againſt and ſubjugate his own covetouſneſs, pride, reſentment, envy, and ſenſuality, and reſiſt ſuch temptations as are directly addreſſed to them: but he muſt take heed that his judgment be not biaſſed, and his heart prejudiced, by the authority, example, or reaſonings of men, who are held in reputation for their wiſdom, learning, and virtue; by the influence of the rich and great; by gratitude to benefactors; by natural affection to relations; or by partiality to beloved friends; by fear of offending thoſe on whom he hath dependence, or from whom he hath expectations; by reverence to ſuperiors; by popular clamours; by a party ſpirit; by vulgar reports; by conformity to the maxims, cuſtoms, and faſhions of the world; or even by good nature, and compaſſion for the poor and afflicted. For there is no paſſion, or propenſity in the human heart, however amiable in its general exerciſe, which will not betray us into imprudence, injuſtice, and even impiety, unleſs it be regulated by divine Grace, and ſubordinated to the fear and love of God. Under the Moſaic diſpenſation the divine law not only required the ſame equity and truth, the ſame tenderneſs of men's reputation and comfort, as well as the ſame regard to their liberty and property; but even the ſame love to enemies, which are inculcated by the precepts of the Goſpel; and the ſame diſpoſition, however injured or exaſperated, to mortify malevolence, and to return good for evil: though the blind guides of the Jewiſh church were incapable of diſcerning it. This integrity, impartiality, and benevolence, united with a noble diſintereſtedneſs, great firmneſs and boldneſs, an habitual fear of God, and expectation of the great day of retribution, are peculiarly requiſite in all perſons who are concerned in the public adminiſtration of juſtice; as legiſlators, judges, magiſtrates, lawyers, juries, witneſſes, or proſecutors. For when human wiſdom has done its utmoſt, ſuch perſons will have manifold opportunities, and various ſtrong temptations to wreſt or miſlead judgment, to the great injury and oppreſſion of numbers, and even to the murder of the innocent and righteous. Such legal murders have in many ages and nations been extremely frequent: with conſiderable confidence and gratitude we may however aſſert, that they are well guarded againſt in this favoured nation: how deſirable is it that we could without heſitation add, 'and in all its diſtant 'provinces?' But wherever they are committed, they are the moſt malignant of all murders, and will be found ſo, at the day "when the earth ſhall diſcloſe her blood, "and no more cover her ſlain."—Even true Chriſtians have need not only to pray "lead us not into temptation," but to keep at a diſtance from all occaſions of it. For there is a magnetic ſympathy betwixt the evil which remains in our hearts, and that evil which is in the world; and when they come near together, they forcibly attract each other, until they come into contact: then the eyes of the wiſeſt are blinded; and the words and works of the righteous perverted. We ought therefore to be circumſpect in every thing; for without much diligence and attention we cannot ourſelves be ſaved, nor can we glorify God, and do good: but mere heedleſſneſs will ruin our ſouls, diſhonour God, and do miſchief. We ſhould then beware of covetouſneſs, ſtudy and pray for contentment with food and raiment, and learn to expect and ſeek our daily bread from God, in the way which he directs, and to truſt him for the morrow. Then ſhould we cheerfully render to God and to man their dues; devote with pleaſure to his ſervice that portion of our time which he requires; count his ſabbaths and ordinances feaſts to our ſouls; and willingly impart a proportion of our little to the relief of others ſtill poorer than ourſelves, though we had nothing to depend upon in future but his providence and promiſe. Thus, under the guidance and banner of the great Angel of the covenant, in whom is the name of Jehovah; obeying his voice, ſubmitting to his will, fearing nothing but his indignation and failing of his forgiveneſs, deſiring the comforts of his Spirit, depending on his arm, and expecting the fulfilment of his promiſes; we ſhall march forward towards the heavenly Canaan, through hoſts of oppoſing foes, whilſt he daily makes us more than conquerors. And though it is not his will to deſtroy our inward enemies all at once, but

2 And Moſes alone ſhall come near the LORD: but they ſhall not come nigh, neither ſhall the people go up with him.

3 And Moſes came and told the people all the words of the LORD, and all the judgments: and all the people anſwered with one voice, and ſaid, All the words which the LORD hath ſaid, we will do.

4 And Moſes wrote all the words of the LORD, and roſe up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars according to the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

5 And he ſent young men of the children of Iſrael, which offered burnt-offerings, and ſacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the LORD.

6 And Moſes took half of the blood, and put it in baſons; and half of the blood he ſprinkled on the altar.

7 And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they ſaid, All that the LORD hath ſaid, will we do, and be obedient.

8 And Moſes took the blood, and ſprinkled it on the people: and ſaid, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the LORD hath made with you concerning all theſe words.

9 Then went up Moſes and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and ſeventy of the elders of Iſrael.

10 And they ſaw the God of Iſrael: and there was under his feet, as it were a paved work by little and little, yet they ſhall finally be extirpated; and he will take occaſion, from their exiſtence and oppoſition, to diſplay his own glory, and to promote our good: ſo that the whole ſhall iſſue in deeper humility, in more admiring love, and ardent gratitude for ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV.] V. 1. He ſaid, &c.] Moſes had been receiving laws from God ever ſince "he drew near to the thick darkneſs, where God was;" (xx. 21;) though probably he had not aſcended to the ſummit of the mountain "into the midſt of the cloud," as we read he did at the cloſe of this chapter. But he was now ſent down to the people, with thoſe laws which he had already received, to ratify the covenant before ſpoken of.—The perſons here named were ordered to come up unto the Lord, that is, nearer than the people; yet they were not permitted to aſcend to the top of the mount as Moſes did, but to worſhip reverently at a diſtance.

V. 3. All the words—and all the judgments, &c.] That is, all thoſe judicial laws, moral precepts, cautions, and promiſes, which Moſes had received.

V. 4. Moſes wrote, &c.] The people having a ſecond time, after hearing the law, conſented to enter into covenant and be obedient, Moſes wrote, as it is probable, the four foregoing chapters in a book, as the terms and tenor of the national covenant, which was now to be ſolemnly ratified: for ſuch it muſt be; ſeeing that the covenant of works has nothing to do with altars, ſacrifices, and the ſprinkling of blood; and the covenant of Grace is not made with whole nations, or collective bodies of people of divers characters; but only repreſentatively with Chriſt as the Surety of the Elect, and perſonally with true believers. But whilſt this covenant was made with the nation of Iſrael in reſpect to their outward bleſſings, it was a "ſhadow of good things to come;" (Heb. x. 1;) and had many things in it, which accord to the ſituation of thoſe, who live under an outward diſpenſation of the Goſpel, and have God's ordinances and oracles among them.—The altar ſeems to have been intended to denote God's preſence as a party in this covenant, and the twelve pillars the twelve tribes of Iſrael as the other party; perhaps not without reference to the hardneſs of their ſtony hearts. Betwixt theſe two covenanting parties Moſes acted as a typical mediator.

V. 5. Young men, &c.] It does not appear whether theſe were the ſame perſons, who were before called prieſts, or not. (xix. 22.) But in this tranſaction they acted only as aſſiſtants to Moſes, who officiated as prieſt in this and ſeveral other inſtances.

V. 6—8. The blood was ſprinkled on the altar, on the book, and on the people; (ſome conjecture that it was ſprinkled on the pillars, which repreſented the people.) This implied, that the covenant was made with them only through the blood of the atoning ſacrifice; that neither their perſons, moral obedience, or religious ſervices, would meet acceptance with a holy God, except through the ſhedding and ſprinkling of blood; that in this way, being purged from ſin, they might be preſented unto and accepted of God; that the bleſſings, granted them even by their national covenant, were all of mercy; and that though they were only ſecured unto them during their obedience, yet that the Lord would deal with them in kindneſs, and not conſtrue every act of diſobedience into a forfeiture of the covenant. In this manner was the buſineſs tranſacted before all the people: and thus the ſinner, by faith in the blood of Chriſt, and through his mediation, enters into covenant with God, receives the law from his merciful hands as a rule of duty; and having his heart ſprinkled from an evil conſcience, and his perſon and all his ſervices preſented as ſprinkled with the atoning blood of Chriſt, devotes himſelf to God, and renders him willing and acceptable obedience; though he be a poor, guilty, polluted ſinner, approaching a God of infinite Majeſty, juſtice, and holineſs. (Heb. ix. 18—22.)

V. 10. And they ſaw, &c.] The ſtrong expreſſions here uſed work of a ſapphire-ſtone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearneſs.

11 And upon the nobles of the children of Iſrael he laid not his hand: alſo they ſaw God, and did eat and drink.

12 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Come up to me into the mount, and be there: and I will give thee tables of ſtone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayeſt teach them.

13 And Moſes roſe up, and his miniſter Joſhua: and Moſes went up into the mount of God.

14 And he ſaid unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you: And behold, Aaron and Hur are with you: if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them.

15 And Moſes went up into the mount, and a cloud covered the mount.

16 And the glory of the LORD abode upon mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it ſix days: and the ſeventh day he called unto Moſes out of the midſt of the cloud.

17 And the ſight of the glory of the LORD was like devouring fire on the top of the mount, in the eyes of the children of Iſrael.

18 And Moſes went into the midſt of the cloud, and gat him up into the mount: and Moſes was in the mount forty days, and forty nights.

uſed incline many commentators to underſtand this viſion, of an appearance of the Son of God in human form, anticipating his incarnation; as he certainly did appear to the patriarchs and others. And though the expreſſion, "Ye ſaw no manner of ſimilitude," (Deut. iv. 15,) ſeems to militate againſt this opinion: yet it may be anſwered, that this was ſpoken concerning the people in general, as receiving the law in an audible voice from the mount; but the words here uſed relate to a private audience of a few individuals ſome time after. It is ſaid of Moſes, "The ſimilitude of the Lord ſhall he behold."—(Num. xii. 8.) Chriſt is the image of the inviſible God; the effulgency of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon. The two appearances under conſideration are a direct contraſt: the former was that of the holy Lawgiver and Judge, in terrible majeſty delivering to ſinners the miniſtration of condemnation; the latter that of God our Saviour, through the ſacrifice and ſprinkling of blood, admitting believers into communion with himſelf. Now it is only in Chriſt that God manifeſts himſelf as reconciled to ſinners, or admits any one of them into communion with him. (2 Cor. iv. 3—6.) God in Chriſt was, and is, the God of Iſrael; of him this was a gracious diſcovery, but whether in a viſible human form or no, the reader muſt be left to determine for himſelf.—If any ſhould reject the opinion of a viſible appearance in human form, the words under his feet, &c. muſt be underſtood figuratively, of that which appeared beneath the viſible glory, of which no deſcription could be given. 'This was like a pavement of ſapphires, and like the azure ſky on a clear day.' (Ezek. i. 26—28.)

V. 11. He laid, &c.] Though theſe perſons had a far more diſtinct viſion of the glory of God, than at the delivery of the law, when they ſaw nothing but clouds, darkneſs, fire, and tempeſt; yet, through the ſacrifice and the ſprinkling of blood, the Mediator, and the covenant now ratified, this glory inſpired not terror but confidence; they received no hurt, but comfort, and feaſted upon the ſacrifices in the preſence of the Lord.—Thus the believer beholding in the face of Jeſus Chriſt far clearer diſcoveries of the glorious juſtice and holineſs of God, than ever he ſaw under his moſt terrifying convictions: yet feels no diſmay, as before, nor receives any harm; but with humble confidence, through the mediation of the Saviour, holds communion with a holy God, and is inſpired with ſweet comfort, peace, and joy.

V. 13. His miniſter Joſhua.] Joſhua was intended to be the ſucceſſor of Moſes, and was thus trained up under him to communion with God; and gradually had honour put upon him before the people.

V. 16. Six days, &c.] Moſes waited all this time without, before he was introduced into the Lord's more immediate preſence. Doubtleſs he and Joſhua ſpent the time in holy conference, and in fervent exerciſes of devotion. Theſe ſix days do not appear to have been a part of the forty days and forty nights afterwards mentioned, during which Moſes faſted: but we have reaſon to think that both Moſes and Joſhua had manna to eat at this time; and Joſhua during the forty days, which he appears to have waited here for Moſes' return, and which doubtleſs he ſpent in prayer and meditation.

V. 18. Moſes went up, &c.] Encouraged by the call of God and the inward comforts of his grace, Moſes entered with holy boldneſs into that cloud, which to Iſrael appeared as a devouring fire: there he continued forty days and forty nights, favoured with divine diſcoveries, and receiving further inſtructions for the people.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In the miniſtry of the Goſpel, and in the inſpired writings, we have not only all the words and judgments, which Moſes received from the Lord, but all the meſſage of love, which the only begotten of the Father brought to ſinners, laid before us and propoſed to us. Having therefore God's oracles and ordinances amongſt us, we are under a diſpenſation of mercy, and have outward ſigns and pledges of the good-will of God to ſinners. Numbers outwardly conſent to, and receive, the external ſeals of his covenant, eat and drink in his preſence, and hear him teach in their ſtreets, to whom the Judge at laſt will ſay, "I tell you, I know you not whence ye are, depart from "me all ye workers of iniquity." (Luke, xiii. 25—28.) And theſe will be a prey to a more terrible devouring fire, than that which afterwards conſumed Nadab and Abihu. We muſt therefore not only "ſee, that we refuſe not him "that ſpeaketh;" but, "whilſt we think we ſtand, we "muſt take heed leſt we fall;" and be very careful that we reſt not in outward privileges, forms, or notions; or in any thing ſhort of the experience of the efficacy of divine Grace upon the heart, and the ſeal of the Holy Spirit, which is the earneſt of our inheritance. The true Iſraelite hears the awful words of God's moſt holy law, and is filled with a conſciouſneſs of guilt and a fear of wrath, until he hears alſo the ſweet words of mercy and grace. But, receiving inſtruction concerning the ſacrifice of Chriſt, and the covenant made, through him with all believers, he by faith applies for his ſalvation, and accedes to this covenant; and by the ſprinkling of the Redeemer's blood has "his conſcience purged from dead "works to ſerve the living God:" then he receives from his reconciled Father's hands the book of the law, as it were ſprinkled alſo with blood, as the rule of his future delightful obedience; and with it the Spirit of adoption inclining and enabling him to obey. Thus the covenant is conſented to, and ratified; now he has acceſs to God upon a mercy-ſeat, ſees his glory in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, enjoys communion with him, and is encouraged to ſerve him in righteouſneſs and true holineſs. And though his future life be not all one continued feaſt upon divine conſolations: yet from time to time he is thus favoured; and has generally "the peace of God, which "paſſeth all underſtanding, keeping his heart and mind "through Chriſt Jeſus;" except when by ſin he grieves the Spirit, or brings down upon himſelf the chaſtening rod of his loving Father.

But let us not forget to obſerve, that they, who would draw near to God, muſt not only come at his call, but wait for him in faith and patience, and not be weary of ſo doing; that the comforts of communion with God will compenſate for the want of all other comforts; and that the power of divine Grace can raiſe a man above the cravings of thoſe inclinations which otherwiſe are moſt importunate; and whilſt a man is enabled to approach with boldneſs to the mercy-ſeat of a reconciled Father, and finds it good to be there, he will not quickly be willing to depart thence. Finally, they, who would be honoured of God in important ſervices, muſt be willing to begin low, muſt be faithful in a little, and muſt ſpend much time in ſolitude, prayer, and meditation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV.] V. 1. The Lord ſpake, &c.] Doubtleſs Moſes in the mount, like Paul in the third heaven, ſaw and heard very glorious, and wonderful things: but it was not lawful or poſſible to utter them; and he reported nothing to the people, but thoſe things that referred to their duty.

V. 2. Willingly with his heart.] Of the ſpoils of the Egyptians, every Iſraelite was expected to offer for the eſtabliſhment of religious worſhip among them, according as he was diſpoſed in heart; but this oblation was not extorted by compulſion, nor regulated by preſcription. The obedience of Chriſt derived its value from being entirely voluntary: and no ſervice, which we can render, is any further acceptable, than as it ſprings freely from a willing mind. (2 Cor. viii. 12. ix. 5—15.)

V. 4. Blue and purple, &c.] That is, wool, or other materials for working into cloths, dyed of theſe colours, which were highly valued. The Lord had ſo ordered it, that the Iſraelites had received of the Egyptians all theſe ſeveral particulars towards building the tabernacle; which not only intimated favour to the Gentiles, but repreſented the uſe which God often makes of the abilities and ſubſtance of ſtrangers in ſupporting and promoting true religion.

V. 8. A ſanctuary, &c.] The word ſanctuary denotes an holy habitation for the Lord's immediate reſidence. This was intended for a viſible pledge and token that he was preſent with his people to protect, inſtruct, guide, and govern them, to pardon their ſins, to accept their ſervices, and to ſupply their wants. The tabernacle was alſo a type of the human nature of Jeſus Chriſt, "in "whom " whom dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily;" (Col. i. 19. ii. 9. John, ii. 19—21;) of the Church of God, which as one with him is a ſpiritual houſe; of every true believer, who as a part of that great temple, is " an " habitation of God through the Spirit;" (Eph. ii. 22;) and of heaven, where the preſence of God is viſibly diſplayed, and he dwells among his holy angels and redeemed ſinners, as their everlaſting felicity, and accepts their holy worſhip.

V. 9. The tabernacle, &c.] In the wilderneſs, and for ſome time in Canaan, the ſanctuary was only a tent or moveable building; but afterwards a temple was built upon mount Zion, and theſe typical ordinances were confined to one place. This ſeems to mark the difference between the Church on earth, and the Church in heaven: wandering and journeying through this wilderneſs, we take our religion, and the ordinances of it, along with us all the way; but in heaven there is reſt for ever for the Church of God, and no more removals.

V. 10—22.] The ark was a cheſt made of wood not liable to rot, of ſomewhat more than four feet in length, and two feet and an half in breadth and in thickneſs, plated all over both within and without with plates of gold, with a border, or cornice, of gold round about; and covered with a covering all of maſſy gold, which was called, the propitiatory, or the mercy-ſeat. In this ark were put the two tables of ſtone, which contained the law of the ten commandments: it was placed in the holy of holies; before it the blood of the ſacrifice was ſprinkled, and the incenſe burnt, by the high prieſt, on the day of atonement; and above it appeared the viſible glory, which was the ſymbol of the divine preſence. This was an evident type of Chriſt, in his ſinleſs human nature, which ſaw no corruption, in perſonal union with his divine nature, magnifying the law and covering our tranſgreſſions of it, by " having it in his heart," obeying it in his life, and atoning for ſin againſt it by his death. Through the ſprinkling of his blood, and the interceſſion which, as our High Prieſt, he makes in the true holy of holies, God appears to ſinners with mild glory upon a mercy-ſeat; and accepts the perſons and ſervices of believers, dwelling among them and abundantly bleſſing them.—The Teſtimony, ſignifies the tables of the law, which teſtified God's authority over the Iſraelites, his regard for them, and his preſence with them: they alſo teſtified, that whilſt he was merciful to them, he required obedience from them: and they would teſtify againſt them, if they neglected, or forſook, his ſervice and worſhip. The two cherubims were emblematical repreſentations of the angels, " deſiring to look down" into the myſteries of redeeming love, (1 Pet. i. 12.:) therefore they were formed with their faces towards the mercy-ſeat, as poring upon it and the myſteries which it contained, " For they are all miniſtering ſpirits to the heirs of ſalva- " tion," and joint-worſhippers of the ſame God of grace; even of our Emmanuel, God dwelling in human nature. (Heb. i. 6—14. Rev. v. 9—12.)

23 Thou ſhalt alſo make a table of ſhittim-wood: two cubits ſhall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

24 And thou ſhalt overlay it with pure gold, and make thereto a crown of gold round about.

25 And thou ſhalt make unto it a border of an hand-breadth round about, and thou ſhalt make a golden crown to the border thereof round about.

26 And thou ſhalt make for it four rings of gold, and put the rings in the four corners that are on the four feet thereof.

27 Over againſt the border ſhall the rings be, for places of the ſtaves to bear the table.

28 And thou ſhalt make the ſtaves of ſhittim-wood, and overlay them with gold, that the table may be borne with them.

29 And thou ſhalt make the diſhes thereof, and ſpoons thereof, and covers thereof, and bowls thereof to cover withal: of pure gold ſhalt thou make them.

30 And thou ſhalt ſet upon the table, ſhew-bread before me alway.

31 And thou ſhalt make a candleſtick of pure gold, of beaten work ſhall the candleſtick be made: his ſhaft, and his branches, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers ſhall be of the ſame.

32 And ſix branches ſhall come out of the ſides of it; three branches of the candleſtick out of the one ſide, and three branches of the candleſtick out of the other ſide.

33 Three bowls made like unto almonds, with a knop and a flower in one branch; and three bowls made like almonds in the other branch, with a knop and a flower: ſo in the ſix branches that come out of the candleſtick.

34 And in the candleſtick ſhall be four bowls made like unto almonds, with their knops and their flowers.

35 And there ſhall be a knop under two branches of the ſame, and a knop under two branches of the ſame, and a knop under two branches of the ſame, according to the ſix branches that proceed out of the candleſtick.

36 Their knops and their branches ſhall be of the ſame: all it ſhall be one beaten work of pure gold.

37 And thou ſhalt make the ſeven lamps thereof: and they ſhall light the lamps thereof, that they may give light over againſt it.

38 And the tongs thereof, and the ſnuff-diſhes thereof, ſhall be of pure gold.

39 Of a talent of pure gold ſhall he make it, with all theſe veſſels.

40 And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was ſhewed thee in the mount.

V. 23—30.] This table, with its furniture and uſe, ſeems to typify the communion which in his ordinances the Lord holds with his redeemed people; the proviſions of his houſe, and the feaſts with which they are ſometimes favoured; the food for their ſouls which they always find when they hunger after it; and the delight which he takes in their perſon and ſervices, as preſented in Chriſt Jeſus before him. (Rev. iii. 20. Cant. v. 1.)

V. 31—39.] This candleſtick, with its furniture and uſe, repreſents the light of God's word and Spirit, in and through Chriſt Jeſus, afforded in this dark world to his believing people, to direct their worſhip and obedience, and adminiſter to their conſolations. The tabernacle had no other light but this; no more has the Church of God on earth: but in heaven "the Lord will be unto her "an everlaſting Light, and God himſelf her Glory." (Iſ. lx. 19. Rev. xxi. 23, xxii. 5.) Many things, here regulated concerning theſe ſacred utenſils, were either intended for the conveniency of removing them, or for ornament. Thus the religion of Chriſt is appointed to accompany us through life, and is fitted to be diffuſed through all nations: there is in him all beauty and glory; and he adorns his church with the graces of the Spirit and all the beauty of holineſs. They were all appointed to be m of pure and ſolid gold, the moſt precious of metals; Chriſt is moſt precious in himſelf, and in the eſtimation the Father, of his people, and of all the inhabitants heaven. His Church alſo conſiſts of the excellent of t earth; he requires us to conſecrate unto him the beſt moſt valuable of every thing, of our time, our ſubſtanc our abilities, and eſpecially our affections; and he will cept of nothing but that which is the very beſt of the ki

Uniformity in worſhip, as far as the tab nacle and temple ſervice was concerned, and ex conformity to a preſcribed rule, were evidently the Teſtament plan; (though it was very ſeldom adhe to;) for there is but one way of a ſinner's juſtificat and ſanctification: But the ſame exact uniformity am ourſelves, and conformity to a preſcribed rule in minute externals of worſhip, could never be inten under the new diſpenſation: the very diſputes, which this ſubject has ſo long occaſioned, are a complete demonſtration that no ſuch exact and explicit rule ſubſiſts; for if they did, the controverſy muſt ceaſe of courſe, or rather could never have been ſtarted. The old ritual is evidently antiquated, and nothing of the ſame kind is ſubſtituted in its place: therefore a latitude is allowed us by the Lord, and we have no right to cenſure, deſpiſe, or condemn others; or to impoſe our own ſentiments and practices on them: only we muſt remember, that we are accountable to God for the uſe which we make of this liberty; and take heed that we do not reject the truths or commandments of God to keep our own traditions; or lay any ſtreſs, or place any dependence, on things of this kind, further than a mere circumſtance, expedient in our judgment for our own more regular attendance on God's ordinances, profeſſion of his truths, and obedience to his commandments. (Note xx. 4).

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In all things the Lord is beforehand with us: we can preſent nothing to him, but what was previouſly his gift to us: and in the great concerns of ſalvation, his love ſuggeſted the gracious deſign, his wiſdom formed the wonderful plan; the Father loved the world, and gave his Son; the Son loved us, and gave himſelf a ſacrifice for our ſins; his word reveals this ſalvation; his providence by ſpecial deſignation hath ſent it to us; the ordinances, in which he will meet us, are of his appointment, and are rendered effectual by his bleſſing; and his preventing grace produces at firſt the willing mind to attend on them. But whilſt he reveals himſelf in Chriſt Jeſus, as a reconciled Father upon a mercy-ſeat, affords us the light of his word, and promiſes the teaching of his holy Spirit, to direct us to the Bread of life, and guide us into ſweet communion with him, that we may feaſt upon the plenteouſneſs of his holy temple: he reaſonably requires that we diligently attend on his ordinances, come to his mercy-ſeat, enquire his will, feed upon the Bread of life, ſeek and walk in the light of his word and Spirit; that we preſent our bodies, ſouls, ſubſtance, and all we are, to him, to be employed according to his commandment, and allowance; and that we, with a willing and liberal mind, according to the ability which he giveth us, do actually ſeparate to his ſervice, both for the ſupport of religion and communicating to the poor a proportion of our ſubſtance, to prove the ſincerity of our faith and love. If we have no heart ſo to do, we have no proof that we are his true people: if we have indeed a willing mind, and give the beſt we have in ſimplicity, we may take the comfort of this good evidence; but we muſt give God the glory of his grace beſtowed upon us; (2 Cor. viii. 1.) And though no exact proportion be preſcribed, yet the Lord ſaith, that "he which "ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall reap alſo ſparingly; and he which "ſoweth bountifully, ſhall reap alſo bountifully:" That is, in peace and aſſurance on earth, and in abundant glory in heaven. Finally, let us remember, that we are the temples of the Holy Ghoſt, have the law of God in our hearts, live a life of communion with God, feaſt on his ordinances, and are the light of the world; if indeed we be Chriſtians. God help us to try ourſelves by, and walk according to, this view of Chriſtianity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI.] V. 6. One tabernacle.] Theſe rich curtains are generally called the tabernacle; having been the moſt coſtly covering of the whole building. They were formed of the moſt valuable materials, and wrought with the moſt exquiſite ſkill; they were embroidered with the emblematical repreſentation of angels, as uniting in the worſhip of Iſrael's God. Being divided into two parts, five curtains were joined together in each part, for greater 7 And thou ſhalt make curtains of goats' hair to be a covering upon the tabernacle: eleven curtains ſhalt thou make.

8 The length of one curtain ſhall be thirty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and the eleven curtains ſhall be all of one meaſure.

9 And thou ſhalt couple five curtains by themſelves, and ſix curtains by themſelves, and ſhalt double the ſixth curtain in the fore-front of the tabernacle.

10 And thou ſhalt make fifty loops on the edge of the one curtain that is outmoſt in the coupling, and fifty loops in the edge of the curtain which coupleth the ſecond.

11 And thou ſhalt make fifty taches of braſs, and put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together, that it may be one.

12 And the remnant that remaineth of the curtains of the tent, the half-curtain that remaineth, ſhall hang over the back-ſide of the tabernacle.

13 And a cubit on the one ſide, and a cubit on the other ſide of that which remaineth in the length of the curtains of the tent, it ſhall hang over the ſides of the tabernacle, on this ſide, and on that ſide, to cover it.

14 And thou ſhalt make a covering for the tent, of rams' ſkins died red, and a covering above of badgers' ſkins.

15 And thou ſhalt make boards for the tabernacle, of ſhittim-wood, ſtanding up.

16 Ten cubits ſhall be the length of a board, and a cubit and an half ſhall be the breadth of one board.

17 Two tenons ſhall there be in one board, ſet in order one againſt another: thus ſhalt thou make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

18 And thou ſhalt make the boards for the tabernacle, twenty boards on the ſouth ſide, ſouthward.

19 And thou ſhalt make forty ſockets of ſilver, under the twenty boards: two ſockets under one board for his two tenons, and two ſockets under another board for his two tenons.

20 And for the ſecond ſide of the tabernacle on the north ſide, there ſhall be twenty boards,

21 And their forty ſockets of ſilver: two ſockets under one board, and two ſockets under another board.

22 And for the ſides of the tabernacle weſtward, thou ſhalt make ſix boards.

23 And two boards ſhalt thou make for the corners of the tabernacle in the two ſides.

24 And they ſhall be coupled together beneath, and they ſhall be coupled together above the head of it unto one ring: thus ſhall it be for them both; they ſhall be for the two corners.

25 And they ſhall be eight boards, and their ſockets of ſilver, ſixteen ſockets: two ſockets under one board, and two ſockets under another board.

26 And thou ſhalt make bars of ſhittim-wood: five for the boards of the one ſide of the tabernacle.

27 And five bars for the boards of the other ſide of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the ſide of the tabernacle for the two ſides weſtward.

greater conveniency in removing them: theſe five curtains were united together by taches, or buttons of gold, and loops; and thus were ſpread over the top of this moveable building as its roof, and hung down nearly to the ground on each ſide.

V. 7—14.] Theſe curtains of meaner materials, being made both longer and broader, were caſt over, and completely covered, the others, and were defended from the weather by a two-fold covering of ſkins. The whole repreſents the perſon and doctrine of Chriſt, the Church of true Chriſtians, and all heavenly things; which are outwardly, and to the carnal eye, mean, but are inwardly, and in the ſight of God, exceedingly glorious and precious. The ſecure protection which he prepares for thoſe who are inwardly precious in his ſight, may alſo be denoted: and the unity of the whole, formed of ſo many pieces and of ſuch different materials, into one covering of the ſanctuary, repreſents the ſpiritual temple formed of perſons of different nations, diſpoſitions, abilities, and attainments, compacted together into one church, by the uniting influence of the Spirit of love.

V. 15—29.] The ſockets of ſilver each weighing a talent, (xxxviii. 27,) that is about an hundred weight, were placed in rows upon the ground; forty on the ſouth, forty on the north, twelve on the weſt, and two at each of the corners on the weſt end. In every couple of theſe ſockets, and by two tenons fitted to the hollows of them, was fixed a ſubſtantial board of ſhittim-wood covered with plates of gold. The boards ſeem alſo to have been united together in a ſimilar manner. Thus a wall was formed on the two ſides, and on the weſt end of the ſanctuary; and this was further ſtrengthened by bars of wood covered with gold, that ran through rings of gold, and compacted the whole together ſo cloſely, that it could not be ſhaken much more eaſily than a ſtone building. Over this the curtains were ſpread. Though it was a moveable ſtructure, and eaſily taken down and put together again, its materials were very coſtly, and its ſtability very great; in all which it was a type of the Church of God, "built upon the foundation "of the apoſtles and prophets, Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being "the chief corner ſtone, in whom all the building fitly "framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the "Lord." (Eph. ii. 20, 21.)

V. 31—33.] This vail ſeparated the holy place, or what the apoſtle calls the firſt tabernacle, from the moſt holy place, (Heb. ix. 6), and it was hung upon pillars fixed in ſockets of ſilver, in the manner of the boards. Of theſe things we need at preſent ſpeak no more, than juſt to hint, that ſin had excluded man from the gracious preſence of God, ſo that nothing ſhort of the death of Chriſt could remove the obſtacle, rend the vail, and give him free acceſs with boldneſs to the mercy-ſeat.

V. 36, 37.] This hanging formed the eaſt end of the building, and the entrance into the ſanctuary. In veneration of the riſing ſun, many of the Heathens worſhipped towards the eaſt: but Iſrael was required to proteſt againſt that idolatry, by turning their backs upon the eaſt, in worſhipping God; for we muſt diſregard the moſt precious creatures, when they would divert our homage and affections from the Creator.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

With this typical deſcription of Chriſt and his Church before our eyes, let us aſk ourſelves what is our judgment of theſe matters? Do we ſee any glory in the perſon of Chriſt? any excellency in his character, or preciouſneſs in his ſalvation; or wiſdom in the doctrine of the croſs? Do we perceive any beauty in holineſs, or any amiableneſs in the character of Chriſtians? Theſe things are hid under external meanneſs from the carnal eye of the ſuperficial obſerver, but are diſcovered by the ſpiritual eye of every true believer, who ſees through the exterior covering the internal glory and hidden excellency which are in heavenly things. As our judgment, choice, and conſequent practice are, ſo is our ſtate towards God. "To you that believe, He is precious." Let us alſo examine ourſelves as to the ſtate of our own hearts; whether we poſſeſs an inward conſciouſneſs of dependence on, and love to, the Lord, hatred of ſin, and deſire after holineſs, and a purpoſe of heart through divine Grace to glorify him? Will our religion bear examination? and are we more careful to approve our hearts to God, than our characters to men? (1 Pet. iii. 4.) Notwithſtanding all our imperfections, this ſtate of mind is in the ſight of God of great price. The hypocrite is the reverſe of all this: he keeps up a ſpecious appearance before men, but he ſhrinks from examination; for "his inward part is "very wickedneſs," and God knows it.—Thus alſo the Chriſtian's comfort and his inheritance are not an outſide ſhew of mirth and proſperity, covering an aching heart, and a ſoul doomed to deſtruction, but an inward ſweetneſs and peace unobſerved of men, and a glorious inheritance reſerved within the vail. Nay, the mean appearance of the Church, and of the Chriſtian, is often a ſecurity from perſecution and temptation. As every part of this ſpiritual building of God, in ſubſerviency to his power and love, conduces to the ſtability of the whole, let us conſider how much it behoves us to endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace: and let us watch againſt diſcontent, envy, ambition, and contention; and each in his proper place ſtudy to ſerve the common intereſts of genuine Chriſtianity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII.] V. 1. An altar, &c.] The altar before mentioned ſeems to have only been intended for the preſent purpoſe, until further orders were given; and eſpecially for thoſe ſacrifices with which the national covenant was ratified. (xx. 24. xxiv.)

V. 2. Horns.] The horns were turrets, or pinnacles, on the four corners of the altar; to which at ſome times the animals about to be ſacrificed were bound. (Pſ. cxviii. 17.) The altar was entirely covered with thick plates of braſs, with a place to receive the fuel and lay the fleſh upon, very curiouſly formed, to prevent the wood being conſumed by the fire: as the human nature of Chriſt could not have ſupported the fire of the divine wrath for ſin, had it not been in union with his divinity.

V. 3. Baſons.] In theſe was received the blood of the ſacrifices, in order to its being ſprinkled.

V. 9—19.] The tabernacle, when ſet up, was incloſed in the ſervice thereof, and all the pins thereof, and all the pins of the court ſhall be of braſs.

20 And thou ſhalt command the children of Iſrael, that they bring the pure oil-olive beaten, for the light, to cauſe the lamp to burn always.

21 In the tabernacle of the congregation without the vail, which is before the teſtimony; Aaron and his ſons ſhall order it from evening to morning before the LORD: It ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto their generations, on the behalf of the children of Iſrael.

in a court, between fifty and ſixty yards long, and between twenty-five and thirty broad; formed by curtains hung upon brazen pillars, fixed in brazen ſockets after the manner of the boards of the ſanctuary: and having an entrance at the eaſt end, ſimilar to the entrance of that building. Within this incloſure the prieſts and Levites offered the ſacrifices, and hither the people were admitted: the prieſts had acceſs into the ſanctuary; but none, except the high prieſt, into the holy of holies, and that but one day in a year: yet was the whole people of Iſrael a kingdom of prieſts and an holy nation, compared with the Heathens. The whole is ſuited to teach us, how far ſin hath ſeparated betwixt us and a holy God; and what difficulties bar our re-union: the whole evinces the falſhood of that proud ſentiment, which repreſents man's poor ſervices, as in themſelves acceptable and meritorious before God; for even this kingdom of prieſts could not approach the very mercy-ſeat of God, in their own perſons, or with their own ſervices however coſtly; but only by their repreſentative, their typical mediator, with the ſprinkling of blood, and the burning of incenſe. Theſe diſtinctions alſo repreſented the difference betwixt the viſible nominal church, and the true ſpiritual church, which alone hath acceſs to, and communion with, God.

V. 20, 21.] The candleſtick with its ſeven lamps would afford no light, unleſs they were ſupplied with oil. The lamps were lighted and ordered by the prieſts, who probably tended them all night.—Even the word of God will not truly enlighten our hearts, without the unction of the Holy Ghoſt, (1 John, ii. 20. 27,) which is communicated to us through that great High Prieſt, whom Aaron and his ſons typified, and who walketh continually amidſt his golden candleſticks: (Rev. ii. 1.) But miniſters in opening and applying the word of God, and by their prayers for a bleſſing on it, as well as Chriſtians in their ſeveral ſituations, may be inſtrumental in diffuſing abroad the divine light in this dark world.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Of what vaſt importance in true religion muſt the perſon, the prieſthood, and the ſacrifice of the Son of God be, when they are forced upon our attention in ſuch a variety of types, and repreſentations!—It is true that he is our

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII.] V. 1. Take, &c.] Intimations had before been given of this deſignation; but this is the firſt expreſs appointment of Aaron and his ſons to the prieſthood. The heads of families had hitherto officiated as prieſts, and offered ſacrifices without any ſpecial appointment; but now this practice was reſtricted, and the ſacerdotal office confined to the family of Aaron only. Moſes not only gave a proof of his diſintereſtedneſs, in leaving his own poſterity in the rank of private Levites, whilſt he confirmed Aaron and his deſcendants in this important and honourable ſervice, but he made it manifeſt, that he acted entirely by divine directions; (Heb. v. 4, 5;) which is further evinced by the remarkable circumſtance of no proviſion being made about the ſucceſſion to the prieſthood, in caſe Aaron's family ſhould be extinct. This was according to human obſervation very probable, eſpecially after the death of Nadab and Abihu, and muſt have been miniſter unto me in the prieſts' office, even Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's ſons.

2 And thou ſhalt make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, for glory and for beauty.

3 And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto all that are wiſe-hearted, whom I have filled with the ſpirit of wiſdom, that they may make Aaron's garments to conſecrate him, that he may miniſter unto me in the prieſt's office.

4 And theſe are the garments which they ſhall make; a breaſt-plate, and an ephod, and a robe, and a broidered coat, a mitre, and a girdle: and they ſhall make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, and his ſons, that he may miniſter unto me in the prieſt's office.

5 And they ſhall take gold, and blue, and purple and ſcarlet, and fine linen.

6 And they ſhall make the ephod of gold, of blue, and of purple, of ſcarlet, and fine twined linen, with cunning work.

7 It ſhall have the two ſhoulder-pieces thereof joined at the two edges thereof; and and ſo it ſhall be joined together.

8 And the curious girdle of the ephod which is upon it, ſhall be of the ſame, according to the work thereof; even of gold, of blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 And thou ſhalt take two onyx-ſtones, and grave on them the names of the children of Iſrael.

10 Six of their names on one ſtone, and the other ſix names of the reſt on the other ſtone, according to their birth.

11 With the work of an engraver in ſtone, like the engravings of a ſignet, ſhalt thou engrave the two ſtones, with the names of the children of Iſrael: thou ſhalt make them to be ſet in ouches of gold.

12 And thou ſhalt put the two ſtones upon the ſhoulders of the ephod, for ſtones of memorial unto the children of Iſrael. And Aaron ſhall bear their names before the Lord, upon his two ſhoulders for a memorial.

13 And thou ſhalt make ouches of gold;

14 And two chains of pure gold at the ends: of wreathen work ſhalt thou make them, and faſten the wreathen chains to the ouches.

15 And

followed by the entire ſubverſion of the whole form of worſhip inſtituted by Moſes: for it was fundamental to it that no perſon in any age, or in any caſe, ſhould officiate as prieſt under the penalty of death, except he were of Aaron's family. Yet in entire confidence that God would provide for the continuance of the religion which he had appointed, and being conſcious that he acted by his authority, Moſes left the whole dependent on an apparent mere contingency; this human policy never would have done. But the providence of God took care of that, which was thus ſimply committed to him; and the prieſts of the family of Aaron increaſed, and continued as long as that diſpenſation continued, and until the new diſpenſation was introduced.

V. 2. Holy garments.] Whatever was ſeparated from common uſes, and conſecrated to the immediate ſervice of God, was called HOLY, whether it were perſon, or thing. Theſe garments were not only intended to diſtinguiſh the prieſts from the people, and to decorate them and render their perſons and miniſtrations reſpected by the people; but they were emblematical of that holy converſation and conduct, which ſhould ever be the "glory, " and beauty," the diſtinguiſhing mark of the miniſters of religion; without which they and the ſervices they perform will be had in contempt. They were alſo eſpecially typical of the glory of the divine majeſty, and the beauty of complete holineſs, which rendered Jeſus Chriſt ſuch an High Prieſt as became us, and ſtamped infinite value on his whole work.

V. 3. Wiſe-hearted, &c.] Whoever is endued with ſkill to perform the ſervice aſſigned to him in the Church of God, and does it uprightly and diligently, is "wiſe-" hearted," and will give God the glory of making him ſo. All natural wiſdom is the gift of God, but this ſeems to have been ſupernaturally beſtowed.

V. 6—14.] The ephod, or the prieſt's outer garment, was a ſhort coat without ſleeves. Ephods were worn by the inferior prieſts, and even by others on ſome occaſions, as by Samuel when a child, and by David when he danced before the ark: but they were made only of linen. This ephod of gold was formed of coſtly materials, and had much gold wrought up in it; it was girded on by a girdle curiouſly woven, or wrought, of the ſame materials, and was buttoned upon each ſhoulder with a precious ſtone ſet in gold; on theſe two ſtones were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Iſrael, which buttons were faſtened into chains of gold. Thus Chriſt appeared to John "girt " about the paps with a golden girdle:" "righteouſneſs " was the girdle of his loins;" "he was clad with zeal as " a cloak," and "the government was upon his ſhoul- " ders:" for he bears the names of his people before God as a memorial; and as their Repreſentative and Advocate with all his power acts in their behalf, and maintains their cauſe.

V. 15—29.

15 And thou ſhalt make the breaſt-plate of judgment with cunning work: after the work of the ephod thou ſhalt make it; of gold, of blue, and of purple, and of ſcarlet, and of fine twined linen ſhalt thou make it.

16 Four-ſquare it ſhall be being doubled; a ſpan ſhall be the length thereof, and a ſpan ſhall be the breadth thereof.

17 And thou ſhalt ſet in it ſettings of ſtones, even four rows of ſtones: the firſt row ſhall be a ſardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this ſhall be the firſt row.

18 And the ſecond row ſhall be an emerald, a ſapphire, and a diamond.

19 And the third row a ligure, an agate, and an amethyſt.

20 And the fourth row a beryl, and an onyx, and a jaſper: they ſhall be ſet in gold in their incloſings.

21 And the ſtones ſhall be with the names of the children of Iſrael, twelve, according to their names; like the engravings of a ſignet, every one with his name ſhall they be according to the twelve tribes.

22 And thou ſhalt make upon the breaſt-plate chains at the ends, of wreathen work, of pure gold.

23 And thou ſhalt make upon the breaſt-plate two rings of gold, and ſhalt put the two rings on the two ends of the breaſt-plate.

24 And thou ſhalt put the two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings which are on the ends of the breaſt-plate.

25 And the other two ends of the two wreathen chains, thou ſhalt faſten in the two ouches, and put them on the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod before it.

26 And thou ſhalt make two rings of gold, and thou ſhalt put them upon the two ends of the breaſt-plate, in the border thereof, which is in the ſide of the ephod inward.

27 And two other rings of gold thou ſhalt make, and ſhalt put them on the two ſides of the ephod, underneath towards the fore-part thereof, over againſt the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod.

28 And they ſhall bind the breaſt-plate, by the rings thereof unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it may be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breaſt-plate be not looſed from the ephod.

29 And Aaron ſhall bear the names of the children of Iſrael in the breaſt-plate of judgment, upon his heart, when he goeth in unto the holy place, for a memorial before the LORD continually.

30 And thou ſhalt put in the breaſt-plate of judgment the Urim and the Thummim; and they ſhall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the LORD: and Aaron ſhall bear the judgment of the children of Iſrael upon his heart, before the LORD continually.

V. 15—29.] The breaſt plate of judgment was a doubled piece of cloth, a ſpan ſquare, richly wrought, and faſtened with chains of gold, to the ephod of gold upon the breaſt of the high prieſt. In this breaſt-plate were fixed twelve precious ſtones of different kinds, (an emblem of the divers excellences which are found in the ſeveral members of the Church of Chriſt, who among them poſſeſs all that is truly valuable upon earth;) ſet in gold, each with the name of its tribe engraved upon it. It is not certain whether Ephraim and Manaſſeh had each a diſtinct ſtone, or whether they were accounted for one tribe in Joſeph: or whether Levi had any ſtone, or was accounted ſufficiently repreſented in the high prieſt himſelf, who was of that tribe. This breaſt-plate Aaron wore, when he went into the holy place, for a memorial before the Lord; not only that he might preſent the cauſe of Iſrael before him; but to remind him that he acted in a public character, and was to have the intereſt of all the tribes whom he repreſented, near his heart, without any prejudice or partiality. This was an evident type of Chriſt, who has the name even of every individual of his people engraven upon his heart; and within the vail will be ſure never to forget or neglect any of them, or of their concerns, however deſtitute or deſpicable they may be upon earth; but will care for them with his whole heart.

V. 30. Urim and Thummim.] It does not appear what the Urim and Thummim were; if indeed there was any thing put into the breaſt-plate called by theſe names. The paſſage may be rendered thus, "Thou ſhalt add to the "breaſt-plate of judgment illuminations and perfections," and it ſeems only to denote the uſe which was to be made of it. When the high prieſt, either before the vail or elſewhere, as Iſrael's repreſentative, put on this breaſt-plate of judgment with the Urim and Thummim, to enquire for them before the Lord what they were to do, he was 31 And thou shalt make the robe of the ephod all of blue.

32 And there shall be an hole in the top of it, in the midst thereof: it shall have a binding of woven work, round about the hole of it, as it were the hole of an habergeon, that it be not rent.

33 And beneath, upon the hem of it, thou shalt make pomegranates of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet round about the hem thereof; and bells of gold between them round about.

34 A golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, upon the hem of the robe round about.

35 And it shall be upon Aaron, to minister: and his sound shall be heard when he goeth in unto the holy place before the LORD, and when he cometh out; that he die not.

36 And thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it, like the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

37 And thou shalt put it on a blue lace, that it may be upon the mitre: upon the fore-front of the mitre it shall be.

38 And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may bear the iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts: and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the LORD.

39 And thou shalt embroider the coat of fine linen, and thou shalt make the mitre of fine linen, and thou shalt make the girdle of needle-work.

40 And for Aaron's sons thou shalt make coats, and thou shalt make for them girdles, and bonnets shalt thou make for them, for glory and for beauty.

41 And thou shalt put them upon Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him: and shalt anoint them, and consecrate them, and sanctify them, that they may minister unto me in the priests' office.

illuminated to form a right judgment and to give perfect counsel, in the most difficult matter; which was suggested to him either by a voice from heaven, or by an immediate prophetical impulse upon his mind. Thus Christ is our High Priest with Urim and Thummim, and imparts unto us, by his word and Spirit, wisdom, judgment, and grace, from the Father of lights and the giver of every good and perfect gift.

V. 31—35.] The robe of the ephod was the middle garment, which was worn under the ephod, and above the coat. (39.) It had a hole, through which the head passed when it was put on; and it seems to have been formed carefully of one piece, that it should not be rent. This reminds us of Christ's coat, which was without seam, woven from the top throughout, and was not rent but cast lots for by the soldiers; which was emblematical of his perfect uninterrupted obedience to the divine law, and of the unbroken harmony which should subsist in his Church.—Upon the hem of this robe were golden bells, and pomegranates round about; which may represent the sound of divine truth preached or professed, being joined with the precious fruits of holiness in the ministers of the Gospel and in true Christians: and it especially typified the glad tidings, which Christ is anointed to preach, and the fragrant fruits of his priesthood which he confers upon his Church. The bells were also intended to give notice to the people when the high priest entered into the most holy place, perhaps that they might join his burning the incense and sprinkling the blood, with their prayers, (Luke, i. 10.) It is added, "That he die not;" which he might expect to do, if he acted not according to the prescribed rules.

V. 36—38.] Upon the mitre, which was a sort of cap with a high crown made of linen, was affixed a golden plate, on which was inscribed HOLINESS TO THE LORD, that was to be worn on the high priest's forehead, when he officiated before the Lord. This might teach him to remember his sacred office and character, and to take care not to disgrace it, nor to be ashamed of it, or wish to conceal it: it might also remind the people to honour his person, and ministrations. But especially it represented our great High Priest, whose perfect holiness and voluntary dedication of himself in our behalf unto the Father, to fulfil his will and magnify his law, by his obedience unto death have prepared the way for his being made to us sanctification, by the supply of his holy Spirit: through the same he also bears the iniquity of our holy things, and by his prevailing intercession renders our sinful persons and imperfect services acceptable with an holy God.

V. 39. Coat of fine linen, &c.] This was the innermost garment, which had sleeves to the wrist, as it is supposed, and was bound on with a linen girdle.

V. 40, 41.] The garments of the inferior priests, though neither so costly as those of the high priest, nor so particularly described, are said to be for "glory, and for "beauty," as well as the others. They typified that holiness, which was glorious and beautiful in Christ; and which is for glory and beauty to all who are adorned with it.

42 And

42 And thou ſhalt make them linen breeches to cover their nakedneſs: from the loins even unto the thighs they ſhall reach.

43 And they ſhall be upon Aaron, and upon his ſons, when they come in unto the tabernacle of the congregation, or when they come near unto the altar to miniſter in the holy place; that they bear not iniquity, and die. It ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto him, and his ſeed after him.

For the conſecration of the altar, v. 36, 37. 3d. For the daily ſacrifice, with gracious promiſes, v. 38—46.

AND this is the thing that thou ſhalt do unto them to hallow them, to miniſter unto me in the prieſts' office: Take one young bullock, and two rams without blemiſh,

2 And unleavened bread, and cakes unleavened tempered with oil, and wafers unleavened anointed with oil: of wheaten flour ſhalt thou make them.

3 And thou ſhalt put them into one baſket, and bring them in the baſket, with the bullock and the two rams.

4 And Aaron and his ſons thou ſhalt bring unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and ſhalt waſh them with water.

5 And thou ſhalt take the garments, and put upon Aaron the coat, and the robe of the ephod, and the ephod, and the breaſtplate, and gird him with the curious girdle of the ephod.

6 And thou ſhalt put the mitre upon his head, and put the holy crown upon the mitre.

7 Then ſhalt thou take the anointing oil, and pour it upon his head, and anoint him.

8 And

V. 42. And thou, &c.] The prieſts were clothed in the moſt decent and modeſt manner. Our garments were firſt neceſſary to hide the ſhame of a ſinner's nakedneſs; and when we uſe them for oſtentation, we fooliſhly glory in our ſhame; they, who prefer ornament to modeſty, do ſtill worſe: but it is worſt of all to be guilty of this pride and indecency in the courts of the Lord's houſe.

V. 43. That they, &c.] All this was to impreſs the prieſts and people with a ſenſe of God's holineſs, and of their ſinfulneſs; and to teach us, that God will be had in reverence of all them that are round about him, and will not be approached by a ſinner but in the name of Jeſus Chriſt.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Bleſſed be God, that we have ſuch an High Prieſt, as is in this chapter typically delineated; one ſolemnly appointed of God and conſecrated to his work; furniſhed for his high office by the glory of his divine majeſty, and the beauty of perfect holineſs; who bears the names of all his people, on his ſhoulders and upon his heart, preſenting them, and all their ſeveral caſes, before the Father in heaven, and ever living by his continual interceſſion, to apply the ſalvation which his ſacrifice has purchaſed; in whom are illuminations and perfections, even inexhauſtible treaſures of wiſdom and grace, to be communicated to them; who, HOLINESS TO THE LORD himſelf, is made ſanctification to his people, that they might be holineſs unto the Lord alſo, in and through him, in their meaſure in this world, perfectly in that to come. Happy are we, if by the law ſpiritually underſtood we have ſo obtained the knowledge of ſin, as to ſee that ſuch an High Prieſt became us: that we can have no acceſs to or acceptance with an holy God, but by him: no light, no wiſdom, no perfection but from him; no glory or beauty, but in conformity to him. If this be our judgment, and experience, let us take encouragement from the power, love, and compaſſion of our High Prieſt to the meaneſt of his people, "to draw near with boldneſs to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." (Heb. iv. 14—16.) Yet "let us have grace to worſhip him with reverence and godly fear; for our God is a conſuming fire." (Heb. xii. 28, 29.) Let us make a bold profeſſion of his truth, accompanied with the fruits of righteouſneſs in our lives: and making him our counſellor, by whom we may enquire of the Lord, let us ſeek to profit by his illuminations and perfections, that we may be wiſe-hearted for every ſervice to which God ſhall appoint us. Daily meditating upon his word, let us endeavour, "with open face as in a glaſs, ſo to behold his glory, that we may be changed into the ſame image from glory to glory, by the Spirit of the Lord." (2 Cor. iii. 18.) Clothed in his righteouſneſs for glory and for beauty, who in his death hath borne the iniquity of our holy things, let us through him as his ſpiritual prieſts, offer unto God the ſacrifice of praiſe continually, giving thanks unto his name.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIX.] V. 6. Holy Crown, &c.] That is, the golden plate which was inſcribed HOLINESS TO THE LORD. This being called a crown may intimate, that the true High Prieſt ſhould alſo be a King.

V. 7. Anointing oil.] The compoſition of this oil is preſcribed in the next chapter. The preparation of Chriſt for his prieſtly work may here be typified: and 8 And thou shalt bring his sons, and put coats upon them.

9 And thou shalt gird them with girdles, (Aaron and his sons) and put the bonnets on them: and the priests' office shall be their's for a perpetual statute: and thou shalt consecrate Aaron and his sons.

10 And thou shalt cause a bullock to be brought before the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the bullock.

11 And thou shalt kill the bullock before the LORD, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

12 And thou shalt take of the blood of the bullock, and put it upon the horns of the altar with thy finger, and pour all the blood beside the bottom of the altar.

13 And thou shalt take all the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul that is above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and burn them upon the altar.

14 But the flesh of the bullock, and his skin, and his dung, shalt thou burn with fire without the camp: it is a sin-offering.

15 Thou shalt also take one ram, and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram.

16 And thou shalt slay the ram, and thou shalt take his blood, and sprinkle it round about upon the altar.

17 And thou shalt cut the ram in pieces, and wash the inwards of him, and his legs, and put them unto his pieces, and unto his head.

18 And thou shalt burn the whole ram upon the altar: it is a burnt-offering unto the LORD: it is a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

19 And thou shalt take the other ram, and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram.

20 Then shalt thou kill the ram, and take of his blood, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of Aaron, and upon the tip of the right ear of his sons, and upon the thumb of their right hand, and upon the great toe of their

we should not forget, that as the high priest was washed, as well as clothed with his robes, and anointed with holy oil; so Christ, though no sinner, yet being "made in "the likeness of sinful flesh," previous to his solemn entrance on his work, submitted to the baptism of John, which was an ordinance, that in its general use denoted the washing away of the pollution of sin; as this washing of the priests also did. He was likewise anointed with the Holy Ghost without measure, not for himself only, but for all his people, even the meanest; which was represented by the pouring the oil upon the head of Aaron, "that ran down to the skirts of his garments," Ps. cxxxiii. 2.)—But this whole consecration seems particularly to denote the admission of sinners into the spiritual priesthood, to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ. They must first be washed from all their filthiness in regeneration; they must be clothed in that righteousness, which is upon all them that believe; they must be anointed with the unction of the Holy Ghost, and have an interest in the one great sacrifice for sin; before they can glorify God as his holy Priesthood, or rejoice in their own precious privileges.

V. 9. Consecrate, &c.] The literal translation is, "Thou "shalt fill the hands of Aaron and his sons:" probably this was done by putting the sacrifice into their hands, to be waved before the Lord.—The ministers of God have their hands filled, when they enter upon their office, and will continue to have their hands full of work of one sort or other, if they duly seek for it and attend unto it: but more covet the emolument, or honour of the ministry, than seek to have their hands filled with its work.—And indeed the case is the same with all Christians, each has his hands filled with work, if he have but his heart disposed to do it, (Mark, xiii. 34).

V. 10. Put their hands, &c.] By laying their hands on the head of the sacrifice, the confession of their guilt was implied; which was thus typically transferred to the sacrifice, that it might be expiated by it: for the priests themselves were sinners; but not so our great High Priest, (Heb. vii. 26—28.)

V. 12. Upon the, &c.] The altar itself was first to be cleansed, made atonement for, and sanctified, by sacrifice and the application of blood, before it could sanctify the gift, (xxxvi. xxxvii). For every creature of God upon earth has been so abused and polluted by man's sin, that none is deemed meet to be set apart for his immediate service, till purged with blood: and all our ministrations are so defiled, that our best would condemn us, even our most solemn sacrifices, unless sprinkled with the blood of Christ. All this was evidently intended to teach the Israelites the holiness of God, the defiling nature of sin, their own sinfulness, and their need of the promised Saviour, who should take away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

V. 13. And, &c.] We shall have a more suitable opportunity of entering upon the consideration of the sacrificial laws, and shall therefore at present wave it.

V. 20, 21.] This implied that the priests could neither hear the Lord's command, do his work, or walk in his ways; but through the application of atoning blood; which is always their right foot, and ſprinkle the blood upon the altar round about.

21 And thou ſhalt take of the blood that is upon the altar, and of the anointing oil, and ſprinkle it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his ſons, and upon the garments of his ſons with him: and he ſhall be hallowed, and his garments, and his ſons, and his ſons' garments with him.

22 Alſo thou ſhalt take of the ram the fat and the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and the right ſhoulder; for it is a ram of conſecration:

23 And one loaf of bread, and one cake of oiled bread, and one wafer out of the baſket of the unleavened bread, that is before the LORD.

24 And thou ſhalt put all in the hands of Aaron, and in the hands of his ſons; and ſhalt wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

25 And thou ſhalt receive them of their hands, and burn them upon the altar for a burnt-offering, for a ſweet ſavour before the LORD: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

26 And thou ſhalt take the breaſt of the ram of Aaron's conſecration, and wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD: and it ſhall be thy part.

27 And thou ſhalt ſanctify the breaſt of the wave-offering, and the ſhoulder of the heave-offering, which is waved, and which is heaved up of the ram of the conſecration, even of that which is for Aaron, and of that which is for his ſons.

28 And it ſhall be Aaron's and his ſons' by a ſtatute for ever, from the children of Iſrael: for it is an heave-offering: and it ſhall be an heave-offering from the children of Iſrael of the ſacrifice of their peace-offerings, even their heave-offering unto the LORD.

29 And the holy garments of Aaron ſhall be his ſons' after him, to be anointed therein, and to be conſecrated in them.

30 And that ſon that is prieſt in his ſtead ſhall put them on ſeven days, when he cometh into the tabernacle of the congregation to miniſter in the holy place.

31 And thou ſhalt take the ram of the conſecration, and ſeethe his fleſh in the holy place.

32 And Aaron and his ſons ſhall eat the fleſh of the ram, and the bread that is in the baſket, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

33 And they ſhall eat thoſe things, wherewith the atonement was made, to conſecrate and to ſanctify them: but a ſtranger ſhall not eat thereof, becauſe they are holy.

34 And if ought of the fleſh of the conſecrations, or of the bread, remain unto the morning; then thou ſhalt burn the remainder with fire: it ſhall not be eaten, becauſe it is holy.

35 And thus ſhalt thou do unto Aaron, and to his ſons, according to all things which I have commanded thee: ſeven days ſhalt thou conſecrate them.

36 And thou ſhalt offer every day a bullock for a ſin-offering, for atonement: and thou ſhalt cleanſe the altar, when thou haſt made an atonement for it, and thou ſhalt anoint it to ſanctify it.

37 Seven days thou ſhalt make an atonement for the altar and ſanctify it: and it ſhall be an altar moſt holy: whatſoever toucheth the altar ſhall be holy.

38 Now this is that which thou ſhalt offer upon the altar; two lambs of the firſt year, day by day continually.

39 The always accompanied with the anointing of the Holy Spirit. The further particulars of this conſecration ſhall be ſpoken of, when we read of theſe orders being carried into execution.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Bleſſed be God our High Prieſt is not altogether like the high prieſts of the family of Aaron.—He indeed is ſolemnly ſet apart to his office, and has his hands filled; for he has the intereſts of all his people to maintain, and their cauſe to plead; and has all power in heaven and earth given unto him for that purpoſe: he is alſo clothed with majeſty and honour, and has not only the anointing, but the fulneſs, of the Spirit treaſured up in himſelf. But he needed not to offer any ſacrifices for himſelf; and by 39 The one lamb thou ſhalt offer in the morning, and the other lamb thou ſhalt offer at even.

40 And with the one lamb a tenth-deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil: and the fourth part of an hin of wine for a drink-offering.

41 And the other lamb thou ſhalt offer at even, and ſhalt do thereto according to the meat-offering of the morning, and according to the drink-offering thereof, for a ſweet ſavour, an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

42 This ſhall be a continual burnt-offering throughout your generations, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the LORD: where I will meet you, to ſpeak there unto thee.

43 And there I will meet with the children of Iſrael, and the tabernacle ſhall be ſanctified by my glory.

44 And I will ſanctify the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar: I will ſanctify alſo both Aaron and his ſons, to miniſter to me in the prieſts' office.

45 And I will dwell amongſt the children of Iſrael, and will be their God.

46 And they ſhall know that I am the LORD their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell amongſt them: I am the LORD their God.

one ſingle ſacrifice he hath fully atoned for all the ſins of all his people, and opened for them the gates of heavenly bliſs. But are we of that number? Do we waſh our ſinful ſouls "in the fountain, which he hath opened for ſin "and for uncleanneſs;" conſcious that in ourſelves we need ſuch waſhing? Do we preſent ourſelves before God day by day, arrayed in the prieſtly garments of his righteouſneſs, truſting only in his merits, and not at all in ourſelves or in our ſervices, for acceptance with God? Are we anointed with the unction of the Holy Spirit, purifying our hearts from the love of ſin, and ſhedding abroad in them the love of God? Do we, in confeſſion of ſins, and the exerciſe of faith, lay our hands upon the head of this great Sacrifice? And are our hearts and conſciences cleanſed by his blood from dead works to ſerve the living God; and our bodies preſented, not as a burnt-offering, but as a living ſacrifice, holy and acceptable to God; whilſt the members thereof, which once were inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin, are now made inſtruments of righteouſneſs unto him? Do we maintain daily communion with him, preſenting our morning and evening ſacrifice of ſecret and family worſhip, acceptable through the atoning ſacrifice of "the Lamb of God, who taketh away "the ſin of the world?" And are our hands filled with his work, and our time and talents offered to the Lord as a wave-offering, and improved to his glory? Is this the ſincere intention, and aim of our hearts, all the day long? —Alas! how little do the moſt of profeſſing Chriſtians know of this ſpiritual conſecration unto God through Chriſt Jeſus! yet all the reſt is but the name, and the form; this, and nothing ſhort of this, is the religion of the "royal "prieſthood, the holy nation, the peculiar people, whom "he hath called out of darkneſs into marvellous light, "to ſhew forth his praiſe." (1 Pet. ii. 5—9.) Let us not then reſt in any thing ſhort of it, but preſs forward to this mark: then will God ſpeak to us in his Word, meet us in his ordinances, make himſelf known to us as our God and Saviour, and fill our hearts with his holy conſolations.

CHAP. XXX.] V. 6. Before the vail, &c.] This altar, formed, like the ark, of incorruptible wood covered over with pure gold, repreſented the Son of God in human that is by the ark of the teſtimony; before the mercy-ſeat, that is over the teſtimony, where I will meet with thee.

7 And Aaron ſhall burn thereon ſweet incenſe every morning: when he dreſſeth the lamps he ſhall burn incenſe upon it.

8 And when Aaron lighteth the lamps at even, he ſhall burn incenſe upon it; a perpetual incenſe before the LORD, throughout your generations.

9 Ye ſhall offer no ſtrange incenſe thereon, nor burnt-ſacrifice, nor meat-offering; neither ſhall ye pour drink-offering thereon.

10 And Aaron ſhall make an atonement upon the horns of it once in a year, with the blood of the ſin-offering of atonements: once in the year ſhall he make atonement upon it, throughout your generations: it is moſt holy unto the LORD.

11 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

12 When thou takeſt the ſum of the children of Iſrael, after their number; then ſhall they give every man a ranſom for his ſoul unto the LORD, when thou numbereſt them: that there be no plague amongſt them, when thou numbereſt them.

13 This they ſhall give, every one that paſſeth among them that are numbered; half a ſhekel, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, (a ſhekel is twenty gerahs) an half-ſhekel ſhall be the offering of the LORD.

14 Every one that paſſeth among them that are numbered from twenty years old and above, ſhall give an offering unto the LORD.

15 The rich ſhall not give more, and the poor ſhall not give leſs than half a ſhekel, when they give an offering unto the LORD, to make an atonement for your ſouls.

16 And thou ſhalt take the atonement-money of the children of Iſrael, and ſhalt appoint it for the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation; that it may be a memorial unto the children of Iſrael before the LORD, to make an atonement for your ſouls.

17 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, 18 Thou in human nature: and the incenſe burnt on it typified his interceſſion, as the altar of burnt-offering and its oblations typified his ſacrifice. The former was therefore placed within the ſanctuary, the latter in the court without; for his ſacrifice was offered on earth, his interceſſion is in heaven. But it was not fixed in the moſt holy place; becauſe the continual interceſſion of Chriſt was repreſented by the daily burning of incenſe upon it morning and evening by the other prieſts, as well as the high prieſt: ſo that this ſituation would have interfered with the ſolemn inſtitution of the annual entrance of the high prieſt alone within the vail, on the day of atonement only, and at no other time; which had a very important ſignification. It was therefore placed on the outſide of the vail, yet over againſt the mercy-ſeat.

V. 7, 8.] The one ſacrifice of Chriſt's death was efficacious in behalf of believers every day from the beginning, and ſhall be the ſame to the end of the world; this was repreſented by the daily ſacrifice: his interceſſion is unremitting and perpetual, which was repreſented by the daily burning of incenſe.—The dreſſing and lighting the lamps prefigured the preaching of the word, which could only be rendered effectual by the interceſſion of Chriſt bringing down a bleſſing, in anſwer to the prayers with which it is accompanied.

V. 9, 10.] The application of the blood of atonement to the altar of incenſe denoted, that the interceſſion of Chriſt in heaven, derives all its efficacy from his ſufferings on earth: and therefore the prieſts muſt confine that altar to its preſcribed uſe; for we need no other ſacrifice or interceſſor but Chriſt alone.

V. 11—16.] This ſum, which was about fifteenpence a-piece of our money, was employed at this time in forming the ſilver ſockets and other parts of the ſanctuary: but was generally, as it is ſuppoſed, expended in purchaſing ſacrifices, wood, and other things, for the ſervice of the ſanctuary. Probably it was a tribute paid ever after, though now firſt raiſed, either annually, or as often as was neceſſary; and the ſame that was demanded of Chriſt. (Matt. xvii. 24—27.) Other contributions were voluntary, and in proportion to the ability or liberality of the offerer: but this was the ranſom of their ſouls, and was the ſame ſum for every man above twenty years of age, whether rich or poor; and if any refuſed to pay it, they could have no intereſt in the ſacrifices, and might expect to be viſited with the plague for their contempt. For the ſouls of all are of equal value, equally forfeited, and equally need a ranſom: Chriſt is equally propoſed to all who hear the Goſpel; and true believers have an equal intereſt in him: without which, we can have no benefit from his ſacrifice; but inſtead of ranſom for our ſouls, may expect additional vengeance, for neglecting and deſpiſing ſuch great ſalvation. And though we can add nothing to the all-ſufficient atonement of Chriſt, which is freely, without money and without price, given to periſhing ſinners who believe: yet we may, by our worldly ſubſtance, aſſiſt in maintaining the expences of religious ordinances, which are memorials to us of the atonement made for our ſouls.

V. 18—21.]

18 Thou ſhalt alſo make a laver of braſs, and his foot alſo of braſs, to waſh withal: and thou ſhalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou ſhalt put water therein.

19 For Aaron and his ſons ſhall waſh their hands and their feet thereat.

20 When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation, they ſhall waſh with water, that they die not: or when they come near to the altar to miniſter, to burn offering made by fire unto the LORD.

21 So they ſhall waſh their hands and their feet, that they die not; and it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever to them, even to him, and to his ſeed throughout their generations.

22 Moreover the LORD ſpake unto Moſes ſaying,

23 Take thou alſo unto thee principal ſpices, of pure myrrh five hundred ſhekels, and of ſweet cinnamon half ſo much, even two hundred and fifty ſhekels, and of ſweet calamus two hundred and fifty ſhekels,

24 And of caſſia five hundred ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, and of oil-olive an hin.

25 And thou ſhalt make it an oil of holy ointment, an ointment compound after the art of the apothecary: it ſhall be an holy anointing oil.

26 And thou ſhalt anoint the tabernacle of the congregation therewith, and the ark of the teſtimony.

27 And the table and all his veſſels, and the candleſtick and his veſſels, and the altar of incenſe, 28 And the altar of burnt-offering with all his veſſels, and the laver and his foot.

29 And thou ſhalt ſanctify them, that they may be moſt holy: whatſoever toucheth them, ſhall be holy.

30 And thou ſhalt anoint Aaron and his ſons, and conſecrate them, that they may miniſter unto me in the prieſts' office.

31 And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, This ſhall be an holy anointing oil unto me, throughout your generations.

32 Upon man's fleſh ſhall it not be poured, neither ſhall ye make any other like it, after the compoſition of it: it is holy, and it ſhall be holy unto you.

33 Whoſoever compoundeth any like it, or whoſoever putteth any of it upon a ſtranger, ſhall even be cut off from his people.

34 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Take unto thee ſweet ſpices, ſtacte, and onycha, and galbanum; theſe ſweet ſpices with pure frankincenſe: of each ſhall there be a like weight.

35 And thou ſhalt make it a perfume, a confection after the art of the apothecary, tempered together, pure and holy.

36 And thou ſhalt beat ſome of it very ſmall, and put of it before the teſtimony, in the tabernacle of the congregation, where I will meet with thee: it ſhall be unto you moſt holy.

37 And as for the perfume which thou ſhalt make, you ſhall not make to yourſelves according to the compoſition thereof: it ſhall be unto thee holy for the LORD.

38 Whoſoever ſhall make like unto that, to ſmell thereto, ſhall even be cut off from his people.

CHAP.

V. 18—21.] The laver of braſs was a large ciſtern, in which was continually kept a quantity of water; and perhaps the foot was a baſon, which received the water out of the ciſtern by a cock, or ſome other contrivance, for immediate uſe. For the prieſts, though waſhed at their conſecration, were commanded on pain of death to waſh their hands and feet every time they officiated, intimating the continual guilt, which they contracted in their daily employments, and converſe with the world. (John, xiii. 8—11.)

V. 22—33.] This ointment, compounded of the moſt valuable ingredients, with which the prieſts, the altar, and all the ſacred furniture were anointed, repreſented the ſanctifying influences of the Holy Ghoſt; without which, we cannot attend upon any ordinance, or officiate in any ſacred ſervice, acceptably or profitably. The compounding of any like it, or uſing it for ordinary purpoſes, denoted hypocriſy which counterfeits, and profaneneſs which ridicules, the operations of the Spirit, and brings down ſwift deſtruction on thoſe who are guilty of them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If men do not wilfully shut their eyes to the things which are written in the word of God, they cannot but see in these ceremonial institutions, compared with the New Testament, that Jesus Christ is the grand subject of the Scriptures; and the sum of all true religion, as "made "of God unto us, wisdom, righteousness, sanctifica-"tion, and redemption." To suppose that the New Testament language concerning his priesthood, oblation, entrance into the holiest, and intercession for his people, were accommodations to these Old Testament rites, is to suppose that, in building the spiritual temple, the all-wise Architect, without any intention, planned and formed a very intricate and unnecessary scaffolding, and then erected the building for the sake, and according to the pattern, of that scaffolding! But "known unto God are all his works from before the "foundation of the world." He first formed the model of the Gospel salvation in his own infinite mind, then shewed that model to Moses in the mount, according to the pattern of which this scaffolding was formed, for the sake of the intended building; which accordingly has since been erected, exactly answerable thereto.—From this chapter let us observe, that our duty, and our indigence, call upon us daily to approach our Creator and benefactor, with our thanksgivings and supplications: but that we are not worthy to draw nigh in our own name, or in any other way, than through the meritorious and prevailing intercession of the Son of God. Though we are without on earth, and he is ascended into heaven, and is out of our sight; let us by faith behold him, and realize him to our minds, as ever living to receive and present our worship, perfumed with the sweet incense of his intercession before the Father's mercy-seat for acceptance. Let us therefore not be slack, unfrequent, or doubtful in our supplications; but ask abundantly and constantly, and expect copious blessings in answer to our poor prayers, that our joy may be full and our God be glorified. Blessed be his name, the Priest, the sacrifice, the incense, and anointing oil, are all ready prepared to our hands, without any concurrence of ours: but if we know the value of this great salvation, we shall not grudge either time, labour, or expence, which the maintaining, or attending on, divine ordinances may require; and it is to be feared that we have no interest in the sacrifice, if we hesitate to contribute thereto. Nor should we forget that the poor are as welcome to Christ as the rich; and the rich as much in want of his ransom for their souls as the poor; for in this grand concern no external distinctions make any difference: and all are alike bound to express their valuation of Christ, and of his salvation. (Rom. iii. 22.) Even they, who are washed, in their first conversion, from the sins of their past lives, and from prevailing sin in their hearts, have occasion for renewed repentance, forgiveness, and grace, from day to day: and must still approach as sinners washed in the blood, anointed by the Spirit, and pleading the merits of Jesus. But let us beware of rendering a religious profession subservient to our secular interests; of treating heavenly things with irreverence or contempt; of counterfeiting or ridiculing the operations of the Spirit; or of gratifying our sinful inclinations under the pretence of Christian liberty: for these are most dangerous and fatal perversions of the Gospel of Christ.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXI. V. 3—5.] It could not be supposed that the Israelites, who had been employed as bond-slaves in Egypt, were qualified for such curious workmanship as had been prescribed; any more than that the apostles, taken from their fishing boats, and other low occupations, were capable of conversing in the languages of all nations, to whom they were commanded to preach: but, by the operation of the same Spirit which gave them utterance in divers tongues, these persons here appointed seem to have been miraculously endued with the requisite skill: though they might have acquired some knowledge in particular branches of these ingenious arts, which are thought to have been very successfully cultivated in Egypt at this early period. Neither Moses, nor Aaron, nor any of Aaron's sons were appointed to this service; the honour already conferred, must suffice for them; and if they attended to their proper work, they would find that also sufficient. Nor were Moses's sons appointed; for it was the Lord's will that his disinterestedness and divine legation should appear illustrious, in the obscurity of his posterity: and if Hur was (as some think) Miriam's husband, and in consequence Bezaleel a distant relation of Moses, the appointment of him was the Lord's doing; that there might be no occasion given for murmuring and envy.

6 And I, behold, I have given with him, Aholiab the ſon of Ahiſamach of the tribe of Dan; and in the hearts of all that are wiſe-hearted I have put wiſdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee:

7 The tabernacle of the congregation, and the ark of the teſtimony, and the mercy-ſeat that is thereupon, and all the furniture of the tabernacle,

8 And the table and his furniture, and the pure candleſtick with all his furniture, and the altar of incenſe,

9 And the altar of burnt-offering with all his furniture, and the laver and his foot,

10 And the clothes of ſervice, and the holy garments for Aaron the prieſt, and the garments of his ſons, to miniſter in the prieſts' office, 11 And the anointing oil, and ſweet incenſe for the holy place: according to all that I have commanded thee, ſhall they do.

12 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

13 Speak thou alſo unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, Verily my ſabbaths ye ſhall keep: for it is a ſign between me and you, throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the LORD, that doth ſanctify you.

14 Ye ſhall keep the ſabbath therefore: for it is holy unto you. Every one that defileth it ſhall ſurely be put to death: for whoſoever doeth any work therein, that ſoul ſhall be cut off from amongſt his people.

15 Six days may work be done, but in the ſeventh is the ſabbath of reſt, holy to the LORD: whoſoever doeth any work in the ſabbath-day, he ſhall ſurely be put to death.

16 Wherefore the children of Iſrael ſhall keep the ſabbath, to obſerve the ſabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant.

17 It is a ſign between me and the children of Iſrael for ever: for in ſix days the LORD made heaven and earth, and on the ſeventh day he reſted, and was refreſhed.

18 And he gave unto Moſes, when he had made an end of communing with him upon mount Sinai, two tables of teſtimony, tables of ſtone, written with the finger of God.

CHAP.

V. 13. Verily, &c.] The Iſraelites were forbidden to violate the ſabbath reſt, even when building the temple. That appointment was a token of God's eſpecial regard to them; and of their peculiar relation to him, as the worſhippers of that God, who created the world in ſix days and reſted on the ſeventh. Whilſt, at his command, for his honour, and in his worſhip, they ſanctified this day, it would both diſtinguiſh them from all other people as the covenant people of God, and be a means of promoting true godlineſs amongſt them.

V. 14, 15.] By this penal ſanction the obſervation of the ſabbath, which before was a part of the moral law, the rule of conſcience with reference to the judgment of God, now became alſo a judicial law, and a rule of the magiſtrate's duty in the execution of his office.

V. 17. Was refreſhed.] Such ſatisfaction did the Lord take in the manifeſtation of his glory in his works! and ſuch refreſhment ſhould we find in contemplating them, in giving him the praiſe, and in performing the duties of the holy ſabbath!

V. 18. And, &c.] Theſe tables of ſtone, both framed and engraved by God himſelf, denote the perpetual obligation of the moral law; not perhaps without reference to the ſtony heart of man, by which this law can never be ſpiritually underſtood, cordially approved, and delighted in, except God himſelf both prepare the heart, and write it there by his own Spirit. (xxiv. 12).

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord confers his unmerited favours on whom he pleaſes: but the honour, which cometh from him, is always attended with a work to be done: and indeed to be employed for God is the higheſt honour, and the nobleſt privilege: (Pſalm ciii. 20, 21.) Although men are not now called forth by name, as in the days of Moſes; yet the Lord generally marks out the perſons, whom he hath made choice of, endowing them with correſpondent diſpoſitions and qualifications by his Spirit, and opening the way to their work in his providence. We may indeed certainly know that we are not appointed to any ſervice, for which we continue utterly unqualified: yet there are caſes, in which men are unexpectedly and evidently called to ſituations, for which they feel themſelves conſciouſly inſufficient; but they may depend upon God to give them "the "Spirit of wiſdom, underſtanding, and knowledge" for it, even after they are engaged in it; if they ſimply ſeek his glory, do his will, and are employed by him. The Lord is pleaſed to confer differing gifts on different perſons, by which they may feel their need of each other, and receive mutual benefit, as the members in the human body: let then each perſon mind his proper work, and improve his own talent diligently; remembering that whatever wiſdom any man poſſeſſes, the Lord hath put it in his heart heart, to the end that he may do all his commandments. Let no one envy, deſpiſe, intermeddle with, or depreciate, the gift, or work of others: and let every one ſtudy to be quiet, and to do his own buſineſs; and to rejoice in the ſuperior endowments of others, without murmuring or diſputing, or by oſtentation provoking the envy or reſentment of others. Every work is beautiful in its ſeaſon; but the more immediate exerciſes of religion belong eſpecially to the ſanctification of the ſabbath: and as the appointment thereof is an external ſign of the Lord's good will to ſinful men; ſo our love to it, and delight in hallowing it, is a good internal evidence, that he hath begun and will continue to ſanctify our ſouls.—May the Lord therefore have mercy upon us, pardon all our tranſgreſſions, take away the heart of ſtone, and write this and all his laws in our inmoſt ſouls: then, though every ſweet ſeaſon of communication with God on earth muſt come to a cloſe, we ſhall at length be admitted into his preſence in heaven, where there is fulneſs of joy and pleaſures for evermore.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXII.] V. 1. And when, &c.] Juſt when Moſes, Iſrael's faithful repreſentative, had tranſacted all their great concerns upon the mount, and was coming down, fully inſtructed and authoriſed to erect the tabernacle and ſet up the worſhip of God among them; a ſad interruption took place, through Iſrael's ſhameful diſobedience.—The people ſeem to have been weary of waiting ſo long at Sinai; (though, had they properly applied their minds, they would have found the time ſhort enough for the proper digeſting of what they had heard:) and whilſt ſome of them in heart turned back into Egypt, (Acts, vii. 39, 40,) others were perhaps in great haſte for the corn and wine, the milk and honey of Canaan.—But the grand evil was, that their carnal minds did not reliſh the ſpiritual worſhip of an inviſible holy God.—They doubtleſs had witneſſed in Egypt religious feaſts ſuited to a ſenſual mind; and they expected the ſame in the feaſt, which they were to hold unto the Lord: but in this they were grievouſly diſappointed, and the whole was a very ſerious, diſreliſhing, painful buſineſs to them. Moſes therefore being out of the way, they formed the project of a religious feaſt more ſuited to their taſte, which when they had ſolemnized, they intended to leave Sinai, and to march either back into Egypt, or forward to Canaan—They, who duly conſider in what manner religious feſtivals are obſerved amongſt millions of profeſſing Chriſtians, will readily perceive how agreeable ſuch a religion muſt be to a ſenſual mind, as conſiſts "in ſitting down to eat and to drink, "and riſing up to play;" that is to dance, and ſing, and divert themſelves.—In forwarding this project they pretended that they "wot not what was become of this Moſes," of whom they ſpake with the utmoſt indifference: they would intimate, that the fire had conſumed him, or that he was periſhed with hunger, or perhaps was taken up into heaven.—Indeed they had no reaſon to doubt but he was ſafe, and faithfully employed for them, and that he would in due time return to them: but ſuppoſing he had been dead, ſurely a decent reſpect ſhould have been ſhewn to his memory: and had they then queſtioned whether Aaron and Hur ſhould ſucceed him, or ſome other perſons be appointed, there might have been an appearance of reaſon in it; but to propoſe making them gods, becauſe Moſes was gone, ſhewed them "mad upon their idols," and glad of any pretence to return to them.—Not much above forty days before they had heard God ſpeak unto them out of the midſt of the fire, whilſt they ſaw no ſimilitude; and he had expreſsly prohibited them to form any image of him: that fire, and the cloud attending it, were ſtill before their eyes, all the other wonders were freſh in their memories; they daily ate of the manna from the clouds, and drank of the water from the rock: "yet even in Horeb "they forgat God their Saviour," aſcribed their departure out of Egypt, firſt to the man Moſes, whom they neither knew any thing of or cared any thing about, and then to the

5 And when Aaron ſaw it, he built an altar before it, and Aaron made proclamation, and ſaid, To-morrow is a feaſt to the LORD.

6 And they roſe up early on the morrow, and offered burnt-offerings, and brought peace-offerings: and the people ſat down to eat and to drink, and roſe up to play.

7 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Go, get thee down: for thy people, which thou broughteſt out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themſelves.

8 They have turned aſide quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worſhipped it, and have ſacrificed thereunto, and ſaid, Theſe be thy gods, O Iſrael, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

9 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, I have ſeen this people, and behold, it is a ſtiff-necked people.

10 Now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot againſt them, and that I may conſume them: and I will make of thee a great nation.

11 And Moſes beſought the LORD his God, and ſaid, LORD, why doth thy wrath wax hot againſt thy people, which thou haſt brought forth out of the land of Egypt, with great power, and with a mighty hand?

the idol which they had formed! Such was this aſtoniſhing tranſaction! (Pſalm cvi. 19—21.)—They required Aaron to make them Gods; that is, a viſible repreſentation of the object of their worſhip; for even theſe idolaters were not ſtupid enough to think the image itſelf really was God. (4. 5.) It is the very ſame word in the original, which is every where uſed for the true God; (Note, Gen. i. 1,) though it is joined with a plural verb, which is not common in that uſe of it.

V. 4, 5.] If the conduct of Iſrael as a people be ſurpriſing, much more ſo was that of "Aaron, the ſaint "of the Lord!" Many conjectures have been made of his reaſons for acting in this manner; but his conduct ſeems to have been too unreaſonable to be either excuſed, or accounted for. He expreſſed no reluctancy: and though he could ſpeak well, he ſaid nothing againſt it, but entered into the project with apparent approbation and zeal.—Indeed we can only ſay that the Lord permitted it, that it might appear of what man is capable; and to ſhew that the prieſthood was given him of mere grace, when he might juſtly have been cut off for his tranſgreſſion; that he might wear his honours the more humbly ever after, (as Peter did after denying his Lord;) that when the ſin-offering of conſecration was offered, he might indeed feel his need of the atonement; and that it might appear we needed an High Prieſt of another ſort and of a nobler order. The Jews indeed have a tradition that Hur was killed for oppoſing the project, and that Aaron feared the ſame fate: but if ſo, Aaron would have had a better excuſe before Moſes. He might indeed be frighted, but he had not ſuch juſt cauſe. The demand of the golden ear-rings has been conſtrued into an attempt to put the people off from their purpoſe; and as there was much gold in their camp beſides this, it looks more like an heſitation, than any other circumſtance: but if ſo intended, it was a feeble project.—They readily parted with them, and he as readily, (I wonder where he obtained his ſkill!) melted, moulded them, and haſtily formed a rough reſemblance of a calf, which was one of the Egyptian deities: with this they were mightily well pleaſed; and though probably but a clumſy repreſentation of a beaſt, they ſtupidly conſidered it as a very proper ſimilitude of the God who brought them out of the land of Egypt! for it is evident that they intended to worſhip Jehovah by it. (Ezek. xx. 8. xxiii. 8.) Yet this was infinitely diſhonourable to his incomprehenſible majeſty, and no better than "turning their glory into the ſimilitude of an ox, that "eateth graſs." Our wonder, however, at Iſrael's and Aaron's conduct may be ſomewhat abated, when we conſider how great a part of the profeſſing Chriſtian Church hath for ages concurred in, pleaded for, and vindicated ſimilar practices, in as direct oppoſition to the written word of God, as this was to the law, which Iſrael had juſt heard from mount Sinai; and with no better excuſes than Aaron could have pleaded had not Moſes ſilenced him.—But when the word of God coincides not with our intereſts, inclinations, and prejudices, the chief diſcovery of man's ingenuity is manifeſted, in explaining it away.

V. 7. For thy people, &c.] As the people ſeemed to renounce their relation to God, by aſcribing their deliverance out of Egypt, firſt to Moſes, and then to the golden calf: God therefore ſeemed to renounce his relation to them, and called them the people of Moſes, whom he had brought out of Egypt.

V. 9. Stiff-necked.] That is, ſtubborn and untractable, like unruly bullocks, upon whoſe neck the yoke could not be put without great difficulty.

V. 10. Let me alone, &c.] Whilſt Moſes continued praying, the Lord was, as it were, rendered incapable of proceeding to extremities againſt the people, even though his righteous indignation prompted him to do ſo. This, which ſeemed to forbid, really encouraged, the prayer of Moſes, and he acted accordingly.—This propoſal of exceedingly multiplying his poſterity, that the promiſes made to the patriarchs, which Iſrael had forfeited, might be entailed on his family, was intended to prove the ſincerity of his love, and the extent of his diſintereſtedneſs.

V. 11—14.] In this prayer, Moſes, without either mentioning the propoſal which the Lord had made to him

12 Wherefore ſhould the Egyptians ſpeak and ſay, For miſchief did he bring them out, to ſlay them in the mountains, and to conſume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil againſt thy people.

13 Remember Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael, thy ſervants, to whom thou ſwareſt by thine own ſelf, and ſaidſt unto them, I will multiply your ſeed as the ſtars of heaven, and all this land that I have ſpoken of will I give unto your ſeed, and they ſhall inherit it for ever.

14 And the LORD repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people.

15 And Moſes turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the teſtimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their ſides; on the one ſide and on the other were they written.

16 And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God graven upon the tables.

17 And when Joſhua heard the noiſe of the people as they ſhouted, he ſaid unto Moſes, There is a noiſe of war in the camp.

18 And he ſaid, It is not the voice of them that ſhout for maſtery, neither is it the voice of them that cry for being overcome: but the noiſe of them that ſing do I hear.

19 And it came to paſs as ſoon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he ſaw the calf, and the dancing: and Moſes's anger waxed hot, and he caſt the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount.

20 And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and ſtrawed it upon the water, and made the children of Iſrael drink of it.

21 And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, What did this people unto thee, that thou haſt brought ſo great a ſin upon them?

22 And Aaron ſaid, Let not the anger of my Lord wax hot: thou knoweſt the people that they are ſet on miſchief.

23 For they ſaid unto me, Make us gods which ſhall go before us: for as for this Moſes, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

24 And I ſaid unto them, Whoſoever hath any gold, let them break it off: So they gave it me: then I caſt it into the fire, and there came out this calf.

or attempting to palliate the ſin of the people, pleads only in their behalf the glory of the divine perfections as concerned in the event: for if the Lord deſtroy Iſrael, (of whom he ſays "Thy people, whom thou haſt brought out,") the Egyptians will impeach his juſtice and goodneſs: nor could their deſtruction be apparently reconciled with his promiſe and oath to Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael: and whatever their ſin deſerved, it would not be for the glory of Jehovah, to give occaſion to ſuch injurious reflections being caſt upon his own great name. This regard to the divine honour was well-pleaſing to the Lord, who in anſwer to his prayers, intimated his purpoſe of ſparing them, as he had before ſeemed determined upon their deſtruction; which change of the external diſcovery of his purpoſe is called "repenting of the evil," &c. (Pſalm cvi. 19—23. Numb. xiv. 13—20.)

V. 17. Joſhua, &c.] Joſhua had waited patiently during all the forty days, in the place where Moſes had left him, below the ſummit of the mount, at a diſtance from the people, and out of the way of their ſin and temptation.

V. 19. Caſt the tables, &c.] Though Moſes's anger was hot, and he intended by this action to expreſs his abhorrence of Iſrael's crime: yet his breaking of the tables of the covenant was no raſh ſally of paſſion; but a ſignificant action, done probably by a divine ſuggeſtion, to denote that the covenant was now broken, and that they lay expoſed to, and were deſerving of, the ſevereſt vengeance of their offended God.

V. 20. Drink of it.] This intimated that the people muſt expect to experience the fatal effects of their ſin, as bringing a curſe upon all their comforts.

V. 22—24.] Never did a wiſe man make a more unmeaning and fooliſh excuſe, than this of Aaron. We ſhould never have ſuppoſed "that he could ſpeak well," were we to judge of his eloquence by this ſpecimen; for a child might have ſpoken better! If the people were bent upon miſchief, Aaron, the ſaint and ſervant of the Lord, who was entruſted with authority over Iſrael, ſhould have ventured and ſuffered all extremities, in oppoſing their mad deſign: but whilſt he was as pliant as they could wiſh, and very active in the buſineſs, he would charge all the blame on others, and ſpake as if the golden calf had been produced almoſt by accident, without his concurrence, and beyond his expectation, and ſeemed only intent to deprecate the anger of Moſes, not that of the Lord.—No wonder that the Lord was angry with him alſo to have deſtroyed him; but Moſes prayed for him too, (Deut. ix 20;) and we may be ſure that he was deeply humbled, and greatly aſhamed of his conduct ever after.

25 And when Moſes ſaw that the people were naked; (for Aaron had made them naked unto their ſhame, amongſt their enemies;)

26 Then Moſes ſtood in the gate of the camp, and ſaid, Who is on the LORD's ſide? let him come unto me. And all the ſons of Levi gathered themſelves together unto him.

27 And he ſaid unto them, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, Put every man his ſword by his ſide, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and ſlay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour.

28 And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moſes: and there fell of the people that day about three thouſand men.

29 For Moſes had ſaid, Conſecrate yourſelves to day to the LORD, even every man upon his ſon, and upon his brother; that he may beſtow upon you a bleſſing this day.

30 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that Moſes ſaid unto the people, Ye have ſinned a great ſin: and now I will go up unto the LORD; peradventure I ſhall make an atonement for your ſin.

31 And Moſes returned unto the LORD, and ſaid, Oh, this people have ſinned a great ſin, and have made them gods of gold.

32 Yet now, if thou wilt, forgive their ſin: and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou haſt written.

33 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Whoſoever hath ſinned againſt me, him will I blot out of my book.

34 Therefore now go, lead the people unto the place of which I have ſpoken unto thee: behold, mine Angel ſhall go before thee: Nevertheleſs, in the day when I viſit, I will viſit their ſin upon them.

35 And the LORD plagued the people, becauſe they made the calf, which Aaron made.

CHAP.

V. 25. The people, &c.] The ſin of the people had deſpoiled them of all claim to the Lord's protection from their enemies, and had left them expoſed without excuſe to his righteous vengeance, (Gen. iii. 7—11). They had ſtripped themſelves of part of their ornaments to make the golden calf; and they were ordered to lay aſide the reſt in a way of humiliation; which being on ſo ſhameful an occaſion may be alſo alluded to, (xxxiii. 5, 6.)

V. 27—29.] The Levites were commiſſioned to ſlay the ring-leaders in this wickedneſs, without reſpect of friendſhip, relation, or any other other ſocial tie; for idolatry was a crime to be puniſhed by their magiſtrates. Yet it ſeems none were executed, but thoſe who openly and boldly ſtood forth; whilſt thoſe who retired as aſhamed were ſpared. This commiſſion being faithfully executed brought a great bleſſing upon the tribe. (Deut. xxxiii. 9.) For it thus appeared, that it had been peculiarly exempt from the guilt of this national crime, and was valiant for God and his honour: and as the perſons employed were ſeconded by the divine power, which confounded and intimidated the tranſgreſſors, no oppoſition was made to the execution.

V. 32. Blot me out, &c.] Moſes in ſtrong affection for the people employed a very vehement expreſſion, ſimilar to that which St. Paul afterwards uſed upon a like occaſion;—the import of which hath much been diſputed, (Rom. ix. 3). We cannot ſuppoſe that Moſes declared his willingneſs finally to periſh for the people's ſake; for this would in one ſenſe exceed, and in another ſenſe be contrary to, the rule of duty, as we are required to love our neighbour as ourſelves, and not more than ourſelves.—But in this he was a type of Chriſt, and having that mind in him which was in Chriſt, he ſeems to have been willing to have laid down his life in the moſt painful manner, if by that he might preſerve his people from deſtruction.—This may be the meaning of the expreſſion, "Blot me out of thy book," which is an alluſion to the affairs of men, that we ſhall hereafter frequently meet with in different ſenſes, (Ezek. xiii. 9.) Probably, when Moſes ſaid "Peradventure I ſhall make an atonement for your ſin," he had reference to his intention of making this propoſal for reconciliation: however, he was ſo far from acceding to the propoſal of their being deſtroyed, and himſelf becoming a great people, that he had rather die for them, or even with them, than ſurvive them. When he was afterwards excluded from Canaan, as if in remembrance of this requeſt, he was blotted out of the Lord's book, which he had written of the heirs of that promiſed land.

V. 34, 35.] Thus the breach was in ſome meaſure made up. The Lord engaged that he would not immediately deſtroy the people; but declared that he would lay up this tranſgreſſion in ſtore againſt them, and remember it, when he ſhould afterwards viſit them for other ſins; and in the mean time he plagued them with his judgments. Moſes was not, however, ſatisfied about the angel that was to go before them, till he knew who that angel was: (xxii. 12:) nor ſhould it paſs unnoticed, that, though Aaron exculpated himſelf, yet the Lord deemed him a principal in the crime, (25,) though the people alſo were guilty.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is not in general adviſable for magiſtrates, miniſters, or heads of families to be long abſent from their reſpective tive charges; and if they have no good reaſon to give for ſuch abſence, they will in great meaſure be anſwerable for all the conſequences. They who are ſo ſoon weary of waiting upon God, as to be eager to return to their worldly intereſts and pleaſures, have evidently profited very little by all former inſtructions. And as the people ruſhed into wickedneſs, becauſe they expected not the return of Moſes; ſo unbelief reſpecting Chriſt's future coming to judge the world lies at the root of the ungodlineſs of multitudes: (2 Peter, iii. 4. Matt. xxiv. 48—50.) High affections, urgent terrors, confident profeſſions, and tranſient comforts, are not ſufficient evidences of true grace; for they frequently go off, and leave the heart more hard, and the conſcience more callous than before: nor can any external means, mercies, or judgments, change the heart, or, for any long time win or awe men even into exterior good behaviour.—The ſervants of God ſhould not expect much gratitude or reſpect from thoſe who are ungrateful to their Lord, rebellious againſt him, and deſpiſers of him: and after being favoured with much ſweet fellowſhip with him, they muſt return to witneſs, to mourn over, and to bear teſtimony againſt the wickedneſs which prevails on earth.—No unhumbled carnal heart can long endure the humbling truths, the holy precepts, and the ſpiritual worſhip of God: and as ſuch perſons inwardly hate his perfect character, ſo they muſt diſlike his image in his faithful people.—But a god, a prieſt, a worſhip, a doctrine, and a ſacrifice ſuited to their carnal mind, will ever meet with abundance of devotees: nay, the very Goſpel itſelf may be ſo ſophiſticated, as to ſuit their taſte; its hearers having offered their ſacrifice, "will ſit down "to eat and drink, and riſe up to play;" and whilſt they can render religion, and the ſpirit of ſelfiſhneſs, ſelf-gratification, and diſſipation conſiſtent, by their views of the Goſpel, they will cry them up as loudly and zealouſly, as Iſrael did the golden calf, and call the whole "a feaſt unto the Lord." Yea, their example, influence, perſuaſion, and diſcourſes will draw in ſome ill-judging compliant Aarons to ſanction, and give credit to this motley religion; though the whole be as contrary to the true Goſpel of Chriſt, as the works of the fleſh are contrary to the fruits of the Spirit. (Gal. v. 16—24.) We have the more need to be upon our guard againſt ſuch deluſions, when we conſider how deceitful, and how deſperately wicked, the human heart is; and how eaſily Satan can blind the underſtanding, pervert the judgment, and miſlead the conſcience of the beſt of men, if they are left to themſelves. Soon do we, when in this caſe, forget the terrors of mount Sinai, and the more affecting ſcenes which Gethſemane and Golgotha exhibit, yea, all our ſweet experience of the love of Chriſt: whilſt ſome golden or gilded idol uſurps his throne and his worſhip; and we are eaſily induced to diſgrace his Goſpel, and gratify his enemies.—Well is it for us, that the Prophet like unto Moſes, but infinitely more powerful and merciful, once veiled his majeſty, made atonement for our ſouls, and intereſted the glory of the Father in our ſalvation; and now effectually intercedes in our behalf: elſe we ſhould in a moment be conſumed by his hot diſpleaſure.—Let us rejoice in his interceſſion, and grace: and as the law is now written in the hearts of the true Iſrael of God, who are diſpoſed to love and obey its precepts, and deeply to repent whenever they break them; let us enquire whether we have this good evidence of our ſins being pardoned, and that the everlaſting covenant is ratified with us: for otherwiſe ſin hath made us naked to our ſhame, hath left us without protection in the hands of our enemies, yea expoſed us to the wrath of God himſelf: and however ſinners may now rejoice in iniquity, when Chriſt returns to judgment, the ſtouteſt heart will fail, and their mirth will then be turned into weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth.—Then every vain excuſe will be ſilenced, every one's ſin will find him out; conſent in wickedneſs will iſſue in mutual recriminations; and the tempters and tempted will be involved in one common, though not equal, condemnation.—Let us now therefore caſt ourſelves humbly upon the divine mercy, thankfully accept of the chaſtiſement of our ſins, and ſeek with all earneſtneſs deliverance from the wrath to come; and as a pledge of it, deliverance from the power and love of ſin in this world.—Of all the crimes which we have committed, none are ſo injurious to man, as thoſe which tempt or encourage others to ſin: and if we would ſhew ourſelves decidedly on the Lord's part in this rebellious world, we muſt not flinch from any ſervice, however difficult, dangerous, or contrary to our natural feelings: nor muſt we in that caſe know any man according to the fleſh. Yet have we cauſe for thankfulneſs, that our teſtimony againſt ſin, and our ſervice for God, are not now of that bloody nature, which were frequently required in former ages.—But though God's judgments are now more ſpiritual, let preſumptuous ſinners remember that they will at length be on that very account the more dreadful.—Our abhorrence of, and indignation againſt, ſin are never too ſtrong, if we are able, in the midſt

4 And when the people heard theſe evil tidings they mourned: and no man did put on him his ornaments.

5 For the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Say unto the children of Iſrael, Ye are a ſtiff-necked people: I will come up into the midſt of thee in a moment, and conſume thee: therefore now put off thy ornaments from thee, that I may know what to do unto thee.

6 And the children of Iſrael ſtript themſelves of their ornaments, by the mount Horeb.

7 And Moſes took the tabernacle, and pitched it without the camp, afar off from the camp, and called it the tabernacle of the congregation. And it came to paſs, that every one which ſought the LORD, went out unto the tabernacle of the congregation which was without the camp.

of our hot diſpleaſure, to pray earneſtly for ſinners, and labour diſintereſtedly to do them good: and if the glory of God may be pleaded with him as a good argument, why he ſhould not deſtroy his people; may it not be pleaded with them as a cogent argument, why they ſhould not ſin againſt him, and cauſe his holy name and religion to be blaſphemed?—God will ſurely honour thoſe, who are preſerved free from, and boldly proteſt againſt, prevailing ſins; and retirement and communion with God are happy means of keeping us out of the way of temptation.—But if we have been thus preſerved we muſt give God the glory; and become ſupplicants in behalf of others; for the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth ſometimes to the ſaving of a nation. But alas! the moſt zealous may often be aſhamed, when they compare the aſſiduity, liberality, and earneſtneſs of theſe idolatrous worſhippers, and of the idolatrous devotees of worldly intereſts, pleaſures, and preferments, with their own ſupineneſs, luke warmneſs, and want of generoſity in the ſervice of God.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIII.] V. 1. Depart, &c.] Moſes had pleaded the Lord's promiſe and oath to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; and intereſted his glory in the preſervation of Iſrael, and in putting them in poſſeſſion of Canaan: the Lord therefore commanded him to lead them directly thither, without any further mention of erecting the tabernacle, or eſtabliſhing the worſhip of God among them. As if he had ſaid, 'Let them have the land flowing with 'milk and honey; and an angel ſhall go before them, 'and put them in poſſeſſion of it: but let them have it 'without any bleſſing, without oracles, covenant, or ordi-'nances, to diſtinguiſh them from the idolatrous nations 'around them.'—It is obſervable that, when Moſes had ſeen their wickedneſs, he did not call them the Lord's people; but ſaid, "Oh, this people," for he could not but acknowledge that their idolatry was an entire infraction of the covenant, and that God might juſtly diſown thoſe who had ſo ſhamefully diſowned him. And in like manner the Lord calls them, "the people, whom thou haſt brought out of Egypt," as though he diſdained to have any more to do with them: but Moſes, having thus far prevailed by importunity, was encouraged ſtill further to urge his ſuit.

V. 3. For I will not, &c.] Such declarations rather expreſs what God juſtly might do, what it would become him to do, and what he would do were it not for ſome intervening conſideration, than his irreverſible purpoſe; and always imply a reſerved exception, in caſe the party offending were truly penitent: of this we ſhould find many inſtances, (Ez. iii. 4. 18—21 Jonah. iii. iv.) The Lord intimated, that he would not erect his tabernacle, or eſtabliſh his worſhip among them, for that would only increaſe their guilt, and provoke his jealouſy to their deſtruction: nor would he afford them the ſenſible tokens of his preſence, which they were diſpoſed to treat with ſuch inſufferable contempt.

V. 4—6.] The people had parted with ſome of their ornaments to make the golden calf: and being required to mourn for that wickedneſs; they were proved, whether they would as readily at God's command lay aſide the reſt. As they complied without heſitation, and ſeemed more grieved becauſe the Lord refuſed to go with them, than on account of the terrible execution recorded in the foregoing chapter, we are led to hope that ſeveral of them were truly humbled; the others, by an external humiliation, gave glory to God, which was a motive with him to avert the national judgment, (1 Kings xxii. 27—29.)

V. 7. Took, &c.] This tabernacle ſeems to have been a temporary building, erected for the ſolemn worſhip of the people, and as the ſymbol of the divine preſence, until that preſcribed in the mount was prepared; above which, perhaps, the pillar of fire and cloud reſted, where Moſes had hitherto enquired of the Lord, and at which he had adminiſtered juſtice to the people. The removal of this to a diſtance from the camp was another evidence of the Lord's heavy diſpleaſure, in that he refuſed any longer to dwell among them. It was the tabernacle of the congregation, where the "congregation of the Lord" aſſembled to worſhip; but the bulk of the nation were no longer worthy of that title: and if any individuals were deſirous of ſeeking, and humbling themſelves before the Lord; they were required to ſhew their abhorrence of Iſrael's idolatry, by ſeparating from among 8 And it came to pass when Moses went out unto the tabernacle, that all the people rose up, and stood every man at his tent-door, and looked after Moses, until he was gone into the tabernacle.

9 And it came to pass, as Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and the LORD talked with Moses.

10 And all the people saw the cloudy pillar stand at the tabernacle-door: and all the people rose up and worshipped, every man in his tent-door.

11 And the LORD spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend. And he turned again into the camp; but his servant Joshua, the son of Nun, a young man, departed not out of the tabernacle.

12 And Moses said unto the LORD, See, thou sayest unto me, Bring up this people: and thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight.

13 Now therefore, I pray thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, shew me now thy way, that I may know thee, that I may find grace in thy sight: and consider that this nation is thy people.

14 And he said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest.

15 And he said unto him, If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence.

16 For wherein shall it be known here, that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? Is it not in that thou goest with us? So shall we be separated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth.

17 And the LORD said unto Moses, I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken: for thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name.

18 And he said, I beseech thee, shew me thy glory.

19 And he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the LORD before thee; and will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will shew mercy on whom I will shew mercy.

20 And

among them, and following the tabernacle out of the camp.

V. 8—10.] Whilst the people were in expectation of the event, this signal discovery before their eyes of the Lord's favour to Moses, by leaving them, and meeting him at a distance from the camp, fully ratified all that he had done; and wrought such a conviction upon their consciences, as produced this general worship of the Lord, towards the symbol of his presence.

V. 11. Face to face, &c.] That is, in the most familiar manner, and with an audible voice. There does not seem sufficient ground to conclude, that there was any visible human appearance: the voice probably came out of the cloud, as in Christ's transfiguration.

V. 12. And thou, &c.] Moses feared, lest the people should be left under the conduct of a created angel the minister of God's providence; without his gracious presence as an object of accepted worship: as one therefore whom the Lord knew by name, (i. e. had specially chosen, and delegated to this service) he prayed to know who this angel was. (xxiii. 20, 21.)

V. 13. Shew me now thy way, &c.] Being "known of "the Lord," Moses desired to know more of the Lord, (Gal. iv. 9,) and to have increasing evidences of his grace; and therefore he prayed to be under his immediate guidance and instruction. He would also put the Lord in remembrance, that Israel was the only people upon earth, that professed themselves to be his worshippers. He especially deprecated the Lord's departure from them; and pleaded with him that he would, notwithstanding this breach, continue his presence, and establish his worship among them.

V. 14—17.] Thus in answer to Moses' intercession, and for his sake (who was in this a remarkable type of Christ,) the Lord consented to accompany the people, the breach was made up, and matters reverted to their old channel: accordingly in the following chapters we have an account of the tabernacle being erected, and those ordinances appointed, by which Israel was distinguished and separated from other nations. And though Moses never entered the rest of Canaan, he found rest to his soul in the Lord's ways, and in the comfort of his presence; and an entrance into the rest, which remaineth for the people of God.

V. 18. I beseech thee, &c.] Moses intreated a fuller discovery of the Lord's glory as a pledge of his special favour, and of the accomplishment of the promise which he had just given him.

V. 19. All my goodness, &c.] The goodness of God, in its manifold and unfathomable exercises towards sinners, and in its harmony with his justice and holiness through Jesus Christ, forms the grand display of his glory, and that which in this life we are most capable of beholding. How this was manifested to Moses will be seen in the ensuing chapter.

And will be gracious, &c.] As if the Lord had said,

30 And he ſaid, Thou canſt not ſee my face: for there ſhall no man ſee me, and live.

21 And the LORD ſaid, Behold, there is a place by me, and thou ſhalt ſtand upon a rock.

22 And it ſhall come to paſs, while my glory paſſeth by, that I will put thee in a clift of the rock; and will cover thee with my hand while I paſs by.

23 And I will take away mine hand, and thou ſhalt ſee my back-parts: but my face ſhall not be ſeen.

AND the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Hew thee two tables of ſtone like unto the firſt: and I will write upon theſe tables the words that were in the firſt tables which thou brakeſt.

'I will pardon what ſinners I pleaſe; nor ſhall any de-'gree of guilt bar this ſovereign exerciſe of my mercy,' Thus, whilſt ſome, whoſe crimes appear of inferior malignity, are left to hardneſs of heart, and ſuffer the deſerved puniſhment of their evil deeds; in other inſtances, "where ſin "has abounded, grace much more abounds." (Rom. ix. 15—18.)

V. 20—23.] The full diſplay of the divine glory would overwhelm the feeble frame of mortal ſinful man: that condeſcending diſplay of it in mild luſtre, which is made in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, is the only one that is tolerable to us: as the ſun, ſeen through a miſt, having his brightneſs ſoftened becomes more diſtinctly viſible to the human eye. This ſeems to be here repreſented. The rock, on which Moſes was to ſtand, and in the clift of which he was to be hid, might be the ſame rock from which the waters flowed; and we may ſafely ſay of it, "that rock was Chriſt." From thence he was to be favoured with ſuch a view, as he was able to bear. The Lord's face, the direct diſplay of his eſſential glory, he could not ſee and live; as this is reſerved for the beatific viſion: but his back parts he ſhould behold, that is, ſuch diſcoveries are made of his glory in his works, eſpecially in the work of redemption. Whether any external appearance attended this diſplay, or what it was, I cannot determine.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Outward proſperity is often conferred by an angry God, which men take as their portion, and look no further.—Though multitudes of profeſſing Iſraelites periſh in their apoſtacy; yet God can ſecure the honour of his faithfulneſs and love.—Whilſt the conſcience remains tender, the removal of God's ordinances, and being left to proſperous ungodlineſs, will be dreaded as the moſt heavy judgments.—Every commandment of God to ſinners implies ſome encouragement: and when he calls to weeping, and mourning, thoſe enjoyments and ornaments, which at another time are allowable, will be neglected by the broken-hearted penitent: and indeed it would be ſhameful for idolaters freely to give up their adornings for the ſake of their idols; and for Chriſtians to refuſe to part with their's, when decency, modeſty, charity, and perhaps juſtice, require it. When the Lord appears about to leave a degenerate church or people, we muſt be decided in proteſting againſt prevailing iniquities, in withdrawing from obſtinate offenders, and in following the word and ordinances of God whitherſoever they go, and let who will ſtay behind: and when young perſons love not only to go to, but abide in, the tabernacle of the Lord, it promiſes an uſeful and honourable old age. (Pſalm xcii. 12—14.) God will ſhew ſuch tokens of his favour to his approved ſervants, as ſhall be evident to all their oppoſers; and in communion with himſelf will make them rich amends for all their troubles.—Whatever intereſt we have at a throne of grace it ſhould be improved in behalf of others; remembering that the Lord delights in and honours importunity: and we ſhould take encouragement from our ſucceſs in prayer, to requeſt ſtill more and more. If we have any uſeful knowledge of God, it ſprings from our having been firſt noticed by him with diſtinguiſhing regard: and it will lead us to deſire to know more of him, of his ways, and of his ſpecial grace, day by day. We ſhall therefore in every undertaking, and in all our removals, urgently deſire to be under his guidance; earneſtly pray, "that unleſs his preſence go with us, he "will not carry us up thence:" and be careful that covetouſneſs or conveniency do not draw us from our proper place, or to a diſtance from his ordinances. Nor ſhall we forget, that as the Lord's people are diſtinguiſhed, and ſeparated by peculiar privileges from others; ſo they are called to ſeparate themſelves, that they may "be unto him a peculiar "people zealous of good works;" which is both the effect of divine teaching, the evidence of divine Grace, the preſent reſt of the ſoul, and the earneſt of everlaſting reſt.—They, who have been favoured with a glimpſe of the Lord's

3 And no man ſhall come up with thee, neither let any man be ſeen throughout all the mount: neither let the flocks nor herds feed before that mount.

4 And he hewed two tables of ſtone like unto the firſt; and Moſes roſe up early in the morning, and went up unto mount Sinai, as the LORD had commanded him, and took in his hand the two tables of ſtone.

5 And the LORD deſcended in the cloud, and ſtood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the LORD.

6 And the LORD paſſed by before him, and proclaimed, The LORD, The LORD God, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering, and abundant in goodneſs and truth,

7 Keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity and tranſgreſſion and ſin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; viſiting the iniquity

Lord's glory and a taſte of his goodneſs, will be athirſt for more full diſcoveries and communications: and as here "they ſee through a glaſs darkly," they will by that thirſt be rendered willing to depart hence, that they may "ſee him face to face." In the mean time they will thankfully, as ſheltered in the rock of ſalvation from the conſuming fire of his holineſs and juſtice, contemplate his footſteps, and the diſcoveries made of his glorious perfections, in all his works, but eſpecially in the work of redemption: and theſe views are peculiarly ſuited to humble them; to wean them from the world, and eclipſe all its vain ſplendour; and gradually to transform them into the image of him whom they thus contemplate by faith, and through the teaching of his holy Spirit. If then he cauſes all his goodneſs to paſs before us, and make us acquainted with his NAME, as a God of grace and mercy; whilſt we acknowledge our obligations to our heavenly Advocate, who by his prevailing interceſſion hath completely repaired the breach which ſin had made; we may well be willing to wait for further diſcoveries, till we depart hence to be with him. And finally, let not ſinners forget, that "he, who is gracious, to whom he will be "gracious, and has mercy, on whom he will have mercy," hath alſo aſſured us, that "him, who cometh unto him, "he will in no wiſe caſt out."

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIV.] V. 1. Hew thee, &c.] Moſes having prevailed by his interceſſion, the Lord gave orders for renewing the covenant, and for delivering to the people the moral law upon tables of ſtone: but to remind them of the ſin, through which the former tables had been broken, the Lord would not prepare theſe himſelf, but Moſes was ordered to hew them fit for the writing; which it ſeems was not a work of much labour or exactneſs, for it was ſpeedily performed. When God made man in his own image, the moral law was written in his heart without any external created concurrence: but ſince the covenant then made with him was broken, the miniſtry of men hath been uſed both in writing the law in the Scriptures, and in our hearts: and conviction of ſin, which is by the law, as the miniſtration of condemnation, forms a neceſſary preparation to faith in Chriſt and holy obedience. But though men are inſtrumental in this work, the whole writing is the Lord's: He alone can teach us to love and delight in obeying his holy law.

V. 3. No man, &c.] The people were tried forty days more, whether they would wait for Moſes' return, though they knew what was become of him: and the method uſed would tend alſo to impreſs them with an aweful ſenſe of the divine purity, their own unworthineſs, and the Lord's eſpecial regard for Moſes.

V. 6. And proclaimed, &c.] According to the promiſe made in the preceding chapter, the Lord met Moſes in a cloud, and thence proclaimed his NAME; that is, thoſe perfections, and that character, which are denoted by the name JEHOVAH. This was proclaimed in an audible voice, that Moſes, and by him Iſrael and all the earth, might know the God with whom they have to do; not only that there is a God, but what his moral perfections are; conſequently what he muſt require of them, and what they may expect from him. When the Lord made himſelf known to Moſes by the name, I AM, THAT I AM, he declared unto him, (as in this paſſage by the words, The LORD, the LORD GOD) his ſelf-exiſtence, unchangeableneſs, eternity, omnipotence, omniſcience, omnipreſence, with his authority, as everlaſting, abſolute, and univerſal ſovereign, lawgiver, and judge; who being the creator, upholder, and preſerver of, and provider for, the whole world, demands all love, worſhip, and obedience from all his rational creatures. But here the Lord eſpecially made known his moral perfections. In this proclamation of his name, he firſt, in a variety of expreſſions, declared his mercy and grace; with which ſinners in general are, and the Iſraelites in particular were, moſt concerned to be acquainted; that they may both be certified there is hope for them, and know from whence that hope ariſes. "The LORD "GOD is merciful and gracious," that is, condeſcending, compaſſionate, ready to forgive the ſinner, to relieve the indigent, and to reſcue the miſerable: he is long-ſuffering; that is, ſlow to anger, patiently bearing the multiplied provocations of his rebellious creatures, affording them ſpace for repentance, and not delighting in their miſery; but only puniſhing when the honour of his name and of his law, and the welfare of his univerſal and everlaſting kingdom require it. "He is abundant in goodneſs and truth;" that is, the riches of his liberality and bounty are infinite, the whole creation is replete with them, all creatures are ſupplied by them; even ſinners abundantly receive them, though they abuſe and are ungrateful for them: and all he reveals is infallible truth, all he propoſes is abſolute ſincerity, and all that he promiſes is in perfect faithfulneſs; whilſt he hath revealed, propoſed, and promiſed, even to us ſinners, ſuch abundant goodneſs, as can neither be expreſſed nor conceived.

V. 7. Keeping mercy, &c.] That is continually ſhewing mercy, in all its various exerciſes, to thouſands of ſinners iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation.

8 And Moſes made haſte, and bowed his head toward the earth, and worſhipped.

9 And he ſaid, If now I have found grace in thy ſight, O LORD, let my Lord, I pray thee, go amongſt us, (for it is a ſtiff-necked people:) and pardon our iniquity and our ſin, and take us for thine inheritance.

10 And he ſaid, Behold, I make a covenant: before all thy people I will do marvels, ſuch as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation: and all the people amongſt which thou art, ſhall ſee the work of the LORD: for it is a terrible thing that I will do with thee.

11 Obſerve thou that which I command thee this day: Behold, I drive out before thee the Amorite, and the Canaanite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Hivite, and the Jebuſite.

12 Take heed to thyſelf, leſt thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, whither thou goeſt, leſt it be for a ſnare in the midſt of thee.

13 But ye ſhall deſtroy their altars, break their images, and cut down their groves.

14 For thou ſhalt worſhip no other god: for the LORD, whoſe name is Jealous, is a jealous God:

15 Leſt thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, and they go a whoring after their gods, and do ſacrifice unto their gods, and one call thee, and thou eat of his ſacrifice,

16 And thou take of their daughters unto thy ſons, and their daughters go a whoring after their gods, and make thy ſons go a whoring after their gods.

17 Thou ſhalt make thee no molten gods.

18 The feaſt of unleavened bread ſhalt thou keep: Seven days ſhalt thou eat unleavened bread, as I commanded thee, in the time of the month Abib: for in the month Abib thou cameſt out from Egypt.

ners, and having inexhauſtible treaſures for thouſands more; yea for increaſing numbers till the end of time: doing all good to thoſe who truſt in his mercy at preſent, and reſerving good for them in future, yea to everlaſting: and not for them only, but for their children's children; "for his mercy endureth for ever."—"Forgiving iniquity, "and tranſgreſſion and Sin;" for all his mercy and goodneſs either make way for, conſiſt in, or reſult from the full, free, and everlaſting forgiveneſs of every kind and degree of ſin, which can be ſpecified.—"And that will by no "means clear the guilty:" For all this mercy and grace conſiſt with the moſt entire hatred of all moral evil, and the moſt abſolute determination to puniſh it: yea the holineſs and juſtice of God are a part of his goodneſs and love, conſidered in their excerciſe towards all his rational creatures, throughout univerſal ſpace and everlaſting duration. Mercy and forgiveneſs are never exerciſed by our holy and righteous God, but through the atonement of the death of Chriſt, and to thoſe who believe in his name; in whoſe ſufferings his holineſs and juſtice have their grand diſplay and the evil of ſin is moſt fully manifeſted. None are pardoned but they who repent, condemn themſelves, and forſake the allowed practice of every ſin: for God's forgiving mercy is always attended by his converting ſanctifying grace. Nay even they, for whoſe ſins the blood of Chriſt hath fully atoned, are ſeverely chaſtiſed in this world for thoſe failures, into which, through the remaining ſinfulneſs of the heart and the power of temptation, they are betrayed. But that ſinner, who remains guilty, having not in the exerciſe of true repentance and faith transferred his guilt to the great ſacrifice for ſin, ſhall by no means be acquitted or eſcape; nor any that abuſe, neglect, or deſpiſe ſuch great ſalvation, in impenitence and unbelief. The ſevereſt vengeance of God ſhall fall upon the heads of ſuch perſons; the very mercy, which they have abuſed into an encouragement to ſin, ſhall occaſion their deeper condemnation; and if Iſrael, or any other nation, dare to abuſe ſuch a proclamation of the name of a merciful God, national judgments upon them, and upon their poſterity, ſhall vindicate the honour of his inſulted juſtice and holineſs.

V. 8, 9.] This proclamation of the name of God had its proper effect upon Moſes, who immediately bowed down in reverential worſhip, ſeized the encouraging words from the mouth of the Lord, and pleaded the mercy of God, as an argument with him to forgive Iſrael, to continue his guidance, and to take them for his inheritance, "though a ſtiff-necked people." Or, if we preſerve our tranſlation, he makes even that circumſtance an additional reaſon; as they, being a ſtiff-necked people, needed the conduct of ſuch a merciful and gracious God, could no otherwiſe be done any good to, and would afford him an opportunity of glorifying his mercy and grace.

V. 10. I will do marvels.] If the people were obedient, theſe marvels would be wrought in their behalf; but if they were diſobedient, for their puniſhment.

V. 11—17.] The covenant made with Iſrael was a marriage covenant, idolatry was conſidered as adultery, and the name of God is JEALOUS; every approach therefore to and every firſtling among thy cattle, whether ox or ſheep, that is male.

20 But the firſtling of an aſs thou ſhalt redeem with a lamb: and if thou redeem him not, then ſhalt thou break his neck. All the firſt-born of thy ſons thou ſhalt redeem: and none ſhall appear before me empty.

21 Six days thou ſhalt work, but on the ſeventh day thou ſhalt reſt: in earing-time and in harveſt thou ſhalt reſt.

22 And thou ſhalt obſerve the feaſt of weeks, of the firſt-fruits of wheat-harveſt, and the feaſt of in-gathering at the year's end.

23 Thrice in the year ſhall all your men-children appear before the LORD GOD, the God of Iſrael.

24 For I will caſt out the nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders: neither ſhall any man deſire thy land, when thou ſhalt go up to appear before the LORD thy God, thrice in the year.

25 Thou ſhalt not offer the blood of my ſacrifice with leaven, neither ſhall the ſacrifice of the feaſt of paſſover be left unto the morning.

26 The firſt of the firſt-fruits of thy land thou ſhalt bring unto the houſe of the LORD thy God. Thou ſhalt not ſeethe a kid in his mother's milk.

27 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Write thou theſe words: for after the tenour of theſe words I have made a covenant with thee and with Iſrael.

28 And he was there with the LORD forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread, nor drink water: and he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments.

29 And it came to paſs when Moſes came down from Mount Sinai, (with the two tables of teſtimony in Moſes' hand, when he came down from the mount,) that Moſes wiſt not that the ſkin of his face ſhone, while he talked with him.

30 And when Aaron and all the children of Iſrael ſaw Moſes, behold the ſkin of his face ſhone, and they were afraid to come nigh him.

31 And Moſes called unto them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him: and Moſes talked with them.

32 And afterward all the children of Iſrael came nigh: and he gave them in commandment all that the LORD had ſpoken with him in mount Sinai.

33 And till Moſes had done ſpeaking with them, he put a vail on his face.

34 But when Moſes went in before the LORD to ſpeak with him, he took the vail off, until he came out. And he came out and ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, that which he was commanded.

35 And the children of Iſrael ſaw the face of Moſes, that the ſkin of Moſes' face ſhone: and to that ſin, would provoke him to jealouſy. They were commanded therefore to deſtroy every monument of idolatry, though curious and coſtly; to reject all treaties of alliance, friendſhip, or marriage, however advantageous, with idolaters; and to refuſe all invitations to idolatrous feaſts: and they were eſpecially reminded not to repeat their old crime of making a graven image of God.

V. 24. Neither ſhall any man, &c.] This remarkable promiſe would form, whilſt the people continued to obſerve their ſolemn feaſts, a full demonſtration of the divine original of their religion: three times in the year they would put this matter to a new proof. Nor we do we ever hear them complain through their whole hiſtory, that the land was invaded on theſe occaſions. No falſe prophet would have inſerted ſuch an engagement in his writings, by which his own impoſture would always have been liable to detection.

V. 29. Moſes wiſt, &c.] As the light of the ſun cauſes even opaque bodies, on which it ſhines, to appear luminous; thus long contemplation of the divine glory cauſed an irradiation of the ſoul of Moſes, which was repreſented to the people by this external brightneſs of his countenance: but he himſelf was not conſcious of it; for true holineſs is always clothed with humility.

V. 35. Moſes put the vail, &c.] This vail marked the obſcurity of this diſpenſation, compared with that of the New Teſtament: it was alſo an emblem of that natural vail, which pride and carnal mindedneſs have put upon the hearts of men reſpecting ſpiritual things; and it repreſented the vail, that was and is upon the minds of ſuch multitudes of the nation of Iſrael, reſpecting the true meaning of the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament; which can only be taken away by the Spirit of the Lord, ſhewing to them "Chriſt as the end of the law for righ-"teouſneſs to every one that believeth." (2 Cor. iii. 13—16. Rom. x. 4.) The conduct of Moſes ſhews us that eminent perſons ſhould avoid oſtentation, and rather conceal, than boaſt of their peculiar attainments and and Moſes put the vail upon his face again until he went in to ſpeak with him.

AND Moſes gathered all the congregation of the children of Iſrael together, and ſaid unto them, Theſe are the words which the LORD hath commanded that ye ſhould do them.

2 Six days ſhall work be done, but on the ſeventh day there ſhall be to you an holy-day, a ſabbath of reſt to the LORD: whoſoever doeth work therein, ſhall be put to death.

endowments. They ſhould accommodate themſelves to the capacities of their weaker brethren, and thus endeavour to abate envy by condeſcenſion; and to be content with that honour which cometh from God only. But before God every vail is laid aſide; and we appear in his preſence juſt as we are, whether better or worſe than our fellow creatures think of us.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The giving of the law to ſinful man, though ſalvation be not by it, is an indication that the Lord has purpoſes of mercy to him; and the writing of it in our hearts is the only ſure evidence, that our ſins are forgiven, that God hath taken us into covenant with himſelf, and that we are become his people: ſo that he, who can truly ſay, "I delight in the law of God after the inward man," notwithſtanding the infirmities, conflicts, and remaining ſinfulneſs, which cauſe him to groan being burdened, is certainly a true believer; for this hath God wrought, in conſequence and evidence of reconciliation through Jeſus Chriſt. When without delay and implicitly, we obey the Lord's commands, and reſort to thoſe places and ordinances which he hath appointed, he will certainly condeſcend to meet us, and fulfil his kindeſt promiſes. But the NAME of the Lord proclaimed unto Moſes, as a juſt God and a Saviour, can alone give relief to a burdened conſcience, or encourage the prayers of an humbled ſinner. Let no enquiring ſoul overlook this name of the Lord: much of the great myſtery of godlineſs is involved in it, or connected with it. Let no diſcouraged ſinner deſpond with ſuch words of grace and truth ſounding in his ears: yet let none abuſe ſuch mercy; for God knows how to puniſh as well as pardon; to puniſh conſiſtently with the glory of his mercy, as well as to pardon conſiſtently with his juſtice and holineſs; as thoſe guilty wretches will one day know, who "ſin on that grace may abound." A true diſcovery of the Lord's glory will unite filial confidence with profound reverence, and put life and vigour into fervent prayers and ſupplications; and every perfection of the name of God will furniſh an argument, in the mouth of an experienced believer, which he may plead with him, for the forgiveneſs of his ſins, the ſanctification of his heart, or the enlargement of the Redeemer's kingdom.—Whilſt we liſten to the promiſes of God's word we muſt obſerve alſo to do his commandments; elſe every external advantage will only ſerve to increaſe our condemnation: and in ſeeking aſſurance that the Lord hath made with us an everlaſting covenant of peace, we muſt break every convenant with ſin, renounce all needleſs connection with ſinners, ſhun every ſnare and temptation, avoid all appearance of evil, and not ſpare or covet any object which tends to it: for our God is jealous, and will endure no rival in our affections. Nor is any thing more enſnaring to ſouls, or more deſtructive to religion, than the marriages of God's people with thoſe of no religion, or of a falſe religion.—Such is our forgetfulneſs in the concerns of our ſouls, that we need not only to have the ſame things repeated in our ears, but to have them committed to writing, that we may have them ever before our eyes. (2 Pet. i. 12—15.)—Whilſt we devote ourſelves to the Lord's ſervice, and attend with delight on his worſhip, we may entruſt ourſelves and our poſſeſſions to his keeping, with confidence that none can do us any real hurt: and when a part of our time, and ſubſtance are conſecrated to him, we ſhall ſecure a ſanctified and comfortable enjoyment of the remainder. Who would not willingly forego all ſenſual pleaſures, to enjoy with Moſes the ſacred pleaſure of the holy mount? But though it is good to be there: yet alas! how backward are we to enter upon, and how apt to grow weary of, this ſweet employment! In heaven it ſhall be otherwiſe: no leiſure for, no thought of, no deſire after, ſuch things, as here occupy our time, and engroſs our hearts!—The more we now ſet our affections on things above, ſeek communion with the Lord, and enjoy the contemplation of his glory in the Goſpel by faith and ſerious meditation; the more ſhall we be "changed into his image from glory to glory by "the Spirit of the Lord:" (2 Cor. iii. 18;) and when we come forth from our devotion, we ſhall ſhine in our holy converſation before men, and ſhew by our good works that we have been with God in the mount. But it is well when others behold it, and glorify God on our behalf; and we are not ourſelves conſcious of it, being "clothed with humility." Indeed, whilſt we are in this world we muſt accommodate ourſelves to our ſituation, and to what thoſe around us are able to bear; and not only muſt humbly avoid oſtentation, in reſpect of our religious experiences, and the eſpecial favours which the Lord hath vouchſafed us; but muſt prudently avoid ſpeaking of them, leſt we throw our pearls before ſwine, which "may trample them under foot, and turn again and rent "us:" and be content to rejoice in them, and be thankful before God in ſecret; for it is "a joy, which a ſtranger "intermeddleth not with."

3 Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath-day.

4 And Moses spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the LORD commanded, saying,

5 Take ye from amongst you an offering unto the LORD: Whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the LORD; gold, and silver, and brass,

6 And blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair,

7 And rams' skins died red, and badgers' skins, and shittim wood,

8 And oil for the light, and spices for anointing oil, and for the sweet incense,

9 And onyx-stones, and stones to be set for the ephod, and for the breast-plate.

10 And every wise-hearted among you, shall come and make all that the LORD hath commanded;

11 The tabernacle, his tent, and his covering, his taches, and his boards, his bars, his pillars and his sockets,

12 The ark and the staves thereof, with the mercy-seat, and the vail of the covering,

13 The table and his staves, and all his vessels, and the shew-bread,

14 The candlestick also for the light, and his furniture, and his lamps, with the oil for the light,

15 And the incense-altar, and his staves, and the anointing oil and the sweet incense, and the hanging for the door at the entering in of the tabernacle,

16 The altar of burnt-offering with his brazen grate, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver and his foot,

17 The hangings of the court, his pillars, and their sockets, and the hanging for the door of the court,

18 The pins of the tabernacle, and the pins of the court, and their cords, 19 The clothes of service, to do service in the holy place, the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons to minister in the priests' office.

20 And all the congregation of the children of Israel departed from the presence of Moses.

21 And they came, every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the LORD's offering to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation, and for all his service, and for the holy garments.

22 And they came both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, and brought bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold: and every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the LORD.

23 And every man with whom was found blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair, and red skins of rams, and badgers' skins, brought them.

24 Every one that did offer an offering of silver and brass, brought the LORD's offering: and every man with whom was found shittim-wood for any work of the service, brought it.

25 And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands, and brought that which they had spun, both of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine linen.

26 And all the women whose heart stirred them up in wisdom, spun goats' hair,

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXV.] V. 3. Ye shall kindle, &c.] In those warm climates, this might not be attended which much inconvenience: but though we allow that the letter of this belongs to the strictness of the Jewish sabbath; yet the works of necessity, and of mercy, which Christ allows, do not imply a permission to "make provision for the flesh, "to fulfil the lust thereof." Many expositors, however, understand the prohibition to be merely of fires, as used in manufactories of different kinds, or by smiths, plumbers, and others; and not as relating to fires for common needful purposes.

V. 22. Were willing-hearted, &c.] Some it seems were not willing to part with their gold and silver, especially that of which their ornaments were made: but they, who were zealous for the worship of Jehovah, would not be outdone by those, who had given their ear-rings to make the golden calf; and were willing to lack their newly-acquired adorning, that the sanctuary of God might want no part of its beauty. A rare example!

27 And

27 And the rulers brought onyx-ſtones, and ſtones to be ſet for the ephod, and for the breaſt-plate:

28 And ſpice, and oil for the light, and for the anointing oil, and for the ſweet incenſe.

29 The children of Iſrael brought a willing offering unto the LORD, every man and woman whoſe heart made them willing to bring for all manner of work, which the LORD had commanded to be made, by the hand of Moſes.

30 And Moſes ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, See, the LORD hath called by name Bezaleel the ſon of Uri, the ſon of Hur, of the tribe of Judah:

31 And he hath filled him with the Spirit of God, in wiſdom, in underſtanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanſhip;

32 And to deviſe curious works, to work in gold, and in ſilver, and in braſs, 33 And in the cutting of ſtones to ſet them, and in carving of wood to make any manner of cunning work.

34 And he hath put in his heart that he may teach, both he and Aholiab the ſon of Ahiſamach of the tribe of Dan.

35 Them hath he filled with wiſdom of heart, to work all manner of work, of the engraver, and of the cunning workman, and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in ſcarlet, and in fine linen, and of the weaver, even of them that do any work, and of thoſe that deviſe cunning work.

THEN wrought Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wiſe-hearted man, in whom the LORD put wiſdom and underſtanding, to know how to work all manner of work for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, according to all that the LORD had commanded.

2 And Moſes called Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wiſe-hearted man, in whoſe heart the LORD had put wiſdom, even every one whoſe heart ſtirred him up to come unto the work to do it.

3 And they received of Moſes all the offering which the children of Iſrael had brought, for the work of the ſervice of the ſanctuary, to make it withal. And they brought

V. 30—35.] The ſupernatural qualifications of theſe two perſons proved their divine appointment: yet they had alſo an expreſs nomination to their work. Others who were ſkilful might aſſiſt them, but they were to direct and ſuperintend. Chriſt alone "builds the Temple "of the Lord, and bears the glory." (Zech. vi. 12, 13:) but miniſters and private Chriſtians, under his direction and by his grace, may be fellow-workers together with him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is enough to refer to the obſervations, which have been already made upon the typical meaning of thoſe things, which are mentioned in this and the following chapters: as they contain only an hiſtory of the execution of the directions before given to Moſes. But let us obſerve and imitate his faithfulneſs, in every thing entruſted to us; and through him look unto Jeſus, who was "faithful as a Son over his own houſe." (Heb. iii. 1—6.) Without a willing mind the moſt coſtly offerings would be abhorred, but with it the meaneſt will meet with a gracious acceptance; and then may our hearts be ſaid to be willing, when we chearfully contribute and aſſiſt, according to our ability, in promoting the cauſe of God and his truth: but as even this willingneſs is the gift and work of God, we ſhould beſeech him daily to increaſe in us a willing mind, to abound unto every good work. Such as in mean employments are diligent and humbly contented, are as acceptable to God, as thoſe who are engaged in more ſplendid ſervices. The women who ſpun the goats' hair were wiſe-hearted, as well as the perſons, who preſided over the work of the tabernacle, or as Aaron who burnt incenſe there; becauſe they did it heartily to the Lord: thus the labourer, mechanic, or menial ſervant, who conſcientiouſly attends to the work of his ſituation, in the faith and fear of God, may be as wiſe as the moſt uſeful miniſter; and will certainly meet with the divine acceptance, as well as he. In ſhort, our wiſdom and duty conſiſt in giving God the glory and uſe of our talents, be they more or leſs; neither abuſing nor burying them, but occupying therewith till our Lord come; being ſatisfied that it is better to be a door-keeper in his ſervice, than the moſt mighty and renowned of the ungodly.

brought yet unto him free offerings every morning.

4 And all the wiſe men that wrought all the work of the ſanctuary, came every man from his work which they made.

5 And they ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, The people bring much more than enough for the ſervice of the work, which the LORD commanded to make.

6 And Moſes gave commandment, and they cauſed it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, ſaying, Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the ſanctuary. So the people were reſtrained from bringing.

7 For the ſtuff they had was ſufficient for all the work to make it, and too much.

8 And every wiſe-hearted man, among them that wrought the work of the tabernacle, made ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and ſcarlet; with cherubims of cunning work made he them.

9 The length of one curtain was twenty and eight cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: the curtains were all of one ſize.

10 And he coupled the five curtains one unto another: and the other five curtains he coupled one unto another.

11 And he made loops of blue on the edge of one curtain, from the ſelvedge in the coupling: likewiſe he made in the uttermoſt ſide of another curtain, in the coupling of the ſecond.

12 Fifty loops made he in one curtain, and fifty loops made he in the edge of the curtain which was in the coupling of the ſecond: the loops held one curtain to another.

13 And he made fifty taches of gold, and coupled the curtains one unto another with the taches. So it became one tabernacle.

14 And he made curtains of goats' hair, for the tent over the tabernacle: eleven curtains he made them.

15 The length of one curtain was thirty cubits, and four cubits was the breadth of one curtain: the eleven curtains were of one ſize.

16 And he coupled five curtains by themſelves, and ſix curtains by themſelves.

17 And he made fifty loops upon the uttermoſt edge of the curtain in the coupling; and fifty loops made he upon the edge of the curtain, which coupleth the ſecond.

18 And he made fifty taches of braſs to couple the tent together, that it might be one.

19 And he made a covering for the tent, of rams' ſkins dyed red and a covering of badgers' ſkins above that.

20 And he made boards for the tabernacle, of ſhittim-wood, ſtanding up.

21 The length of a board was ten cubits, and the breadth of a board one cubit and a half.

22 One board had two tenons, equally diſtant one from another: thus did he make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

23 And he made boards for the tabernacle: twenty boards for the ſouth ſide ſouthward.

24 And forty ſockets of ſilver he made under the twenty boards: two ſockets under one board for his two tenons, and two ſockets under another board for his two tenons.

25 And for the other ſide of the tabernacle which is toward the north corner, he made twenty boards,

26 And their forty ſockets of ſilver: two ſockets under one board, and two ſockets under another board.

27 And for the ſides of the tabernacle weſtward, he made ſix boards.

28 And two boards made he for the corners of the tabernacle in the two ſides.

29 And they were coupled beneath, and coupled together at the head thereof, to one ring: thus he did to both of them in both the corners.

30 And there were eight boards, and their ſockets were ſixteen ſockets of ſilver, under every board two ſockets.

31 And he made bars of ſhittim-wood: five for the boards of the one ſide of the tabernacle,

32 And five bars for the boards of the other ſide of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the tabernacle for the ſides weſtward.

33 And he made the middle bar to ſhoot through the boards from the one end to the other.

34 And he overlaid the boards with gold, and made their rings of gold to be places for the bars, and overlaid the bars with gold.

35 And he made a vail of blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen: with cherubims made he it of cunning work.

36 And he made thereunto four pillars of ſhittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold: their hooks were of gold, and he caſt for them four ſockets of ſilver.

37 And he made an hanging for the tabernacle-door, of blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen, of needle-work, 38 And the five pillars of it with their hooks: and he overlaid their chapiters and their fillets with gold: but their five ſockets were of braſs.

AND Bezaleel made the ark of ſhittim-wood: two cubits and a half was the length of it, and a cubit and a half the breadth of it, and a cubit and a half the height of it.

2 And he overlaid it with pure gold within and without, and made a crown of gold to it round about.

3 And he caſt for it four rings of gold, to be ſet by the four corners of it: even two rings upon the one ſide of it, and two rings upon the other ſide of it.

4 And he made ſtaves of ſhittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold.

5 And he put the ſtaves into the rings, by the ſides of the ark, to bear the ark.

6 And he made the mercy-ſeat of pure gold: two cubits and a half was the length thereof, and one cubit and a half the breadth thereof.

8 One cherub on the end on this ſide, and another cherub on the other end on that ſide: out of the mercy-ſeat made he the cherubims on the two ends thereof.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

CHAP. XXXVI.] The promptitude and alacrity with which theſe builders ſet about their work, the exactneſs with which they performed it, and the diſintereſted fidelity with which they objected to the people's bringing any more contributions, are well worthy of our imitation. Thus ſhould we ſerve God, yea, and our earthly ſuperiors too for his ſake in all things lawful; and thus ſhould all who are employed in public truſts abhor filthy lucre, be ſuperior to covetouſneſs, and avoid all occaſions and temptations to it or appearances of it: for robbing the public is robbing many, which is worſe than private theft; as murdering a multitude is worſe than killing an individual. —Nor is the people's liberality leſs worthy of commendation: much more reputable for them, and much more honourable to God, was this proclamation to reſtrain their bounty, than one would have been, which had required an addition to their too ſcanty contributions. It ſhould, however, be carefully obſerved, that though the rich can never devote their ſubſtance too entirely to the ſervice of God, yet they may exceed in the particular application of it: and there have been ages of the church, (and there may ſtill be inſtances) in which an ill-judged liberality has introduced pride, indolence, and luxury, where there ſhould be bright examples of humility, diligence, and ſelf-denial. But this is not the general fault of the age in which we live: and though ſome few individuals may err on this hand, yet the circumſtances of too many, of every denomination, who labour in the word and doctrine, as well as the appearances of many places of public worſhip, evidently prove, that moſt men, in our days, are ſufficiently careful not thus to injure the cauſe of godlineſs. However, wiſdom is profitable to direct: and when God puts wiſdom and grace into the heart, the hands will be diligently employed in, or chearfully ſtretched out for, every good work.

26 And he overlaid it with pure gold, both the top of it, and the ſides thereof round about, and the horns of it: alſo he made unto it a crown of gold round about.

27 And he made two rings of gold for it under the crown thereof, by the two corners of it, upon the two ſides thereof, to be places for the ſtaves to bear it withal.

28 And he made the ſtaves of ſhittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold.

29 And he made the holy anointing oil, and the pure incenſe of ſweet ſpices, according to the work of the apothecary.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

CHAP. XXXVII.] After what hath been already ſpoken, we need only obſerve, that ſuch repetitions were uſeful to the Old Teſtament Church, as in theſe types they chiefly had their Goſpel, and the people were not permitted to ſee the things themſelves, as they were placed within the ſanctuary: thus in the New Teſtament we have the ſame things related in two or three places, with little variation; yet not without uſefulneſs. The exactneſs of the workmen to their rule is worthy of our imitation: and it is never unſeaſonable to obſerve, that through the great Antitype, the ſubſtance of all theſe ſhadows, our way being opened to the mercy-ſeat, we ſhould continually draw near in faith; feeding daily upon him and his fulneſs, as the nouriſhment of ſouls; walking through this dark world according to the light of his word; and ſeeking for renewed and enlarged anointings of his holy Spirit; that here we may rejoice in and glorify him, and at length be for ever with him.

3 And he made all the veſſels of the altar, the pots, and the ſhovels, and the baſons, and the fleſh-hooks, and the fire-pans: all the veſſels thereof made he of braſs.

4 And he made for the altar a brazen grate of net-work, under the compaſs thereof, beneath unto the midſt of it.

5 And he caſt four rings for the four ends of the grate of braſs, to be places for the ſtaves.

6 And he made the ſtaves of ſhittim-wood, and overlaid them with braſs.

7 And he put the ſtaves into the rings on the ſides of the altar, to bear it withal; he made the altar hollow with boards.

8 And he made the laver of braſs, and the foot of it of braſs, of the looking glaſſes of the women aſſembling, which aſſembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

9 And he made the court: on the ſouth-ſide ſouthward, the hangings of the court were of fine twined linen, an hundred cubits.

10 Their pillars were twenty, and their brazen ſockets twenty: the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets were of ſilver.

11 And for the north-ſide, the hangings were an hundred cubits, their pillars were twenty, and their ſockets of braſs twenty: the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets of ſilver.

12 And for the weſt ſide were hangings of fifty cubits, their pillars ten, and their ſockets ten: the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets of ſilver.

13 And for the eaſt ſide eaſtward fifty cubits.

14 The hangings of the one ſide of the gate were fifteen cubits, their pillars three, and their ſockets three.

15 And for the other ſide of the court-gate, on this hand and that hand, were hangings of fifteen cubits, their pillars three, and their ſockets three.

16 All the hangings of the court round about were of twined linen.

17 And the ſockets for the pillars were of braſs; the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets, of ſilver: and the overlaying of their chapiters of ſilver; and all the pillars of the court were filletted with ſilver.

18 And the hanging for the gate of the court was needle-work, of blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen: and twenty cubits was the length, and the height in the breadth was five cubits, anſwerable to the hangings of the court.

19 And their pillars were four, and their ſockets of braſs four, their hooks of ſilver, and the overlaying of their chapiters, and their fillets of ſilver.

20 And all the pins of the tabernacle, and of the court round about, were of braſs.

21 This is the ſum of the tabernacle, even of the tabernacle of teſtimony, as it was counted according to the commandment of Moſes, for the ſervice of the Levites, by the hand of Ithamar, ſon to Aaron the prieſt.

22 And Bezaleel the ſon of Uri, the ſon of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, made all that the LORD commanded Moſes.

23 And with him was Aholiab, ſon of Ahiſamach, of the tribe of Dan, an engraver, and a cunning workman, and an embroiderer in blue, and in purple, and in ſcarlet, and fine linen.

24 All the gold that was occupied for the work, in all the work of the holy place, even the gold of the offering, was twenty and nine talents, and ſeven hundred and thirty ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary.

25 And

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVIII.] V. 8. Of the looking-glaſſes, &c.] Theſe are ſuppoſed to have been plates of braſs highly poliſhed, which, before the invention of glaſs, ſerved for the purpoſe of mirrours. Some women peculiarly devoted to God, and zealous for the eſtabliſhment of his worſhip, (Note, 1 Sam. ii. 12,) at a time when much braſs was wanted, and perhaps no great quantity in the camp, expreſſed their zeal by parting with their mirrors: which are generally deemed neceſſary, and which muſt be allowed to be very convenient. Of theſe were formed the brazen laver; which circumſtance might be an inſtructive emblem to the prieſts in their ablutions; and may be the ſame to us: for in the glaſs of God's law we ſhould daily look, that we may know what manner of perſons we are; and ſo diſcover our need of daily repentance, and of waſhing in the blood of Chriſt. (James i. 23—25.)

25 And the ſilver of them that were numbered of the congregation, was an hundred talents, and a thouſand ſeven hundred and threeſcore and fifteen ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary.

26 A bekah for every man, that is half a ſhekel, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, for every one that went to be numbered, from twenty years old and upward, for ſix hundred thouſand and three thouſand and five hundred and fifty men.

27 And of the hundred talents of ſilver, were caſt the ſockets of the ſanctuary, and the ſockets of the vail; an hundred ſockets of the hundred talents, a talent for a ſocket.

28 And of the thouſand ſeven hundred ſeventy and five ſhekels, he made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters, and filleted them.

29 And the braſs of the offering was ſeventy talents, and two thouſand and four hundred ſhekels.

30 And therewith he made the ſockets to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the brazen altar, and the brazen grate for it, and all the veſſels of the altar,

31 And the ſockets of the court round about, and the ſockets of the court-gate, and all the pins of the tabernacle, and all the pins of the court round about.

AND of the blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, they made clothes of ſervice, to do ſervice in the holy place, and made the holy garments for Aaron; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

2 And he made the ephod of gold, blue and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen.

3 And they did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires; to work it in the blue, and in the purple, and in ſcarlet, and in the fine lining, with cunning work.

4 They made ſhoulder-pieces for it, to couple it together: by the two edges was it coupled together.

5 And the curious girdle of his ephod that was upon it was of the ſame, according to the work thereof: of gold, blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

6 And they wrought onyx-ſtones incloſed in ouches of gold, graven as ſignets are graven, with the names of the children of Iſrael.

7 And he put them on the ſhoulders of the ephod, that they ſhould be ſtones for a memorial to the children of Iſrael; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

8 And he made the breaſt-plate of cunning work, like the work of the ephod; of gold, blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 It was four-ſquare; they made the breaſt-plate double: a ſpan was the length thereof, and a ſpan the breadth thereof, being doubled.

V. 26. A Bekah, &c.] A ſhekel is generally allowed to be about half an ounce troy weight. At half a ſhekel each, 6000 perſons collected a talent of ſilver: conſequently a talent conſiſted of about 125 pound troy weight, or rather more than an hundred weight. This ſeems to have been nearly the general weight of a talent of whatever metal: and they who are diſpoſed, may eaſily compute, how much it would be worth of current coin. Exactneſs in a ſubject of more curioſity than uſe, would not anſwer the intention of this publication. This ſilver, called "the "ranſom of their ſouls," (xxx. 12.) was raiſed as a tax, which each muſt pay; all the reſt was voluntary.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In all ages of the Church there has been ſome perſons more devoted to God, more conſtant in their attendance upon his ordinances, and more willing to part with lawful things for his ſake, than others. Theſe are never cenſured, but always commended and honoured in God's word: for when relative duties and ſocial obligations are not neglected or violated, we cannot too much renounce the world, deny ourſelves, and devote our all to the Lord, and ſeek our whole happineſs from him. It may alſo be added, that the incloſure of this court, being only of curtains, might intimate that it ſhould in due time be removed: and ſo we may take occaſion to bleſs God for the enlargement of his Church, by the calling of us Gentiles into it; and to pray that all remaining boundaries may be removed, and the whole earth filled with the knowledge of God the Father, Son and Holy Spirit; to whom be glory for ever, Amen.

10 And they ſet in it four rows of ſtones: the firſt row was a ſardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this was the firſt row.

11 And the ſecond row, an emerald, a ſapphire, and a diamond.

12 And the third row, a ligure, an agate, and an amethyſt.

13 And the fourth row, a beryl, an onyx, and a jaſper: they were incloſed in ouches of gold in their incloſings.

14 And the ſtones were according to the names of the children of Iſrael, twelve according to their names, like the engravings of a ſignet, every one with his name, according to the twelve tribes.

15 And they made upon the breaſt-plate chains, at the ends of wreathen work of pure gold.

16 And they made two ouches of gold, and two gold rings: and put the two rings in the two ends of the breaſt-plate.

17 And they put the two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings on the ends of the breaſt-plate.

18 And the two ends of the two wreathen chains they faſtened in the two ouches, and put them on the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod, before it.

19 And they made two rings of gold, and put them on the two ends of the breaſt-plate upon the border of it, which was on the ſide of the ephod inward.

20 And they made two other golden rings, and put them on the two ſides of the ephod underneath, toward the fore-part of it, over againſt the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod.

21 And they did bind the breaſt-plate by his rings unto the rings of the ephod, with a lace of blue, that it might be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breaſt-plate might not be looſed from the ephod; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

22 And he made the robe of the ephod of woven work, all of blue.

23 And there was a hole in the midſt of the robe, as the hole of an habergeon, with a band round about the hole, that it ſhould not rent.

24 And they made upon the hems of the robe pomegranates of blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and twined linen.

25 And they made bells of pure gold, and put the bells between the pomegranates, upon the hem of the robe, round about between the pomegranates.

26 A bell and a pomegranate, a bell and a pomegranate, round about the hem of the robe to miniſter in; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

27 And they made coats of fine linen, of woven work, for Aaron and for his ſons, 28 And a mitre of fine linen, and goodly bonnets of fine linen, and linen breeches of fine twined linen.

29 And a girdle of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, of needle-work; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

30 And they made the plate of the holy crown, of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing, like to the engravings of a ſignet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

31 And they tied unto it a lace of blue, to faſten it on high upon the mitre; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

32 Thus was all the work of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation finiſhed: and the children of Iſrael did according to all that the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo did they.

33 And they brought the tabernacle unto Moſes, the tent, and all his furniture, his taches, his boards, his bars, and his pillars, and his ſockets.

34 And the covering of rams' ſkins dyed red, and the covering of badgers' ſkins, and the vail of the covering,

35 The ark of the teſtimony, and the ſtaves thereof, and the mercy-ſeat,

36 The table, and all the veſſels thereof, and the ſhew-bread,

37 The pure candleſtick, with the lamps thereof, even with the lamps to be ſet in order, and all the veſſels thereof, and the oil for light, 38 And the golden altar, and the anointing oil, and the ſweet incenſe, and the hanging for the tabernacle-door.

42 According to all that the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo the children of Iſrael made all the work.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

CHAP. XXXIX.] When unanimity, diligence, and zeal, animate the hearts of numbers in a good cauſe, much may be done in a ſhort time: and when the commandment of God is continually attended to, as the rule of working, all will be done well.—We ought indeed daily to prove our own work, to take the counſel and regard the judgment of others, to preſent all we do before the Lord, and beg to be taught how far he approves or diſapproves it: but the grand trial of our ſervices will be at the concluſion of them. We ought not therefore raſhly to judge others, or their works, before the time: nor be lifted up with man's applauſe, nor caſt down by man's reproach, which are often alike ignorant and unmerited: but we ſhould exerciſe ourſelves to keep a conſcience void of offence, be content with its teſtimony, and wait that day, "when the Lord ſhall come, and bring to light the hidden "things of darkneſs, and make manifeſt the counſels of "the hearts, and then ſhall every man have praiſe of "God." (1 Cor. iv. 5.) For though the glory of all the good we do belongs to him, and our beſt needs much forgiveneſs; yet, if by his grace our hearts are humbly upright and willing; and we work by his rule, for his glory, and in dependence on his teaching and aſſiſtance; he will graciouſly applaud us, and ſay, "Well done, "good and faithful ſervant:" and his bleſſing will then abundantly repay our labour, which indeed is even here its own reward. — After his example, therefore, as well as that of Moſes, parents, maſters, miniſters, magiſtrates, and others, ſhould learn not to be always finding fault; but to ſhew themſelves pleaſed with, and to commend, the honeſt endeavours of others to do well. —And they, who do good to the cauſe of true religion have a claim to our prayers for them, even as if they were our own benefactors.

NOTES.

CHAP. XL.] V. 2. On the firſt day, &c.] On the fifteenth day of the firſt month the Iſraelites came out of Egypt: on the fiftieth day after that event the law was given; and, with ſeveral intervening delays, Moſes ſpent at leaſt eighty days upon the mount: half of the year muſt therefore have been expired, or perhaps more, before they began to work upon the tabernacle; and in half a year, or ſomewhat leſs, the whole was completed.

burnt-offering, and all his veſſels, and ſanctify the altar: and it ſhall be an altar moſt holy:

11 And thou ſhalt anoint the laver and his foot, and ſanctify it.

12 And thou ſhalt bring Aaron and his ſons unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and waſh them with water.

13 And thou ſhalt put upon Aaron the holy garments, and anoint him, and ſanctify him; that he may miniſter unto me in the prieſts' office.

14 And thou ſhalt bring his ſons, and clothe them with coats:

15 And thou ſhalt anoint them, as thou didſt anoint their father, that they may miniſter unto me in the prieſts' office: for their anointing ſhall ſurely be an everlaſting prieſthood, throughout their generations.

16 Thus did Moſes: according to all that the LORD commanded him, ſo did he.

17 And it came to paſs, in the firſt month in the ſecond year, on the firſt day of the month, that the tabernacle was reared up.

18 And Moſes reared up the tabernacle, and faſtened his ſockets, and ſet up the boards thereof, and put in the bars thereof, and reared up his pillars.

19 And he ſpread abroad the tent over the tabernacle, and put the covering of the tent above upon it; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

20 And he took and put the teſtimony into the ark, and ſet the ſtaves on the ark, and put the mercy-ſeat above upon the ark.

21 And he brought the ark into the tabernacle, and ſet up the vail of the covering, and covered the ark of the teſtimony; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

22 And he put the table in the tent of the congregation, upon the ſide of the tabernacle northward without the vail.

23 And he ſet the bread in order upon it, before the LORD; as the LORD had commanded Moſes.

24 And he put the candleſtick in the tent of the congregation, over againſt the table, on the ſide of the tabernacle ſouthward.

25 And he lighted the lamps before the LORD, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

26 And he put the golden altar in the tent of the congregation, before the vail.

27 And he burnt ſweet incenſe thereon, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

28 And he ſet up the hanging at the door of the tabernacle.

29 And he put the altar of burnt-offering by the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation, and offered upon it the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

30 And he ſet the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and put water there, to waſh withal.

31 And Moſes, and Aaron and his ſons, waſhed their hands and their feet thereat.

32 When they went into the tent of the congregation, and when they came near unto the altar, they waſhed; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

33 And he reared up the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, and ſet up the hanging of the court-gate: ſo Moſes finiſhed the work.

34 Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

35 And Moſes was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, becauſe the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

36 And when the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the children of Iſrael went onward in all their journeys:

37 But

V. 15. Everlaſting prieſthood, &c.] It endured in the family of Aaron till Chriſt came; and in him, the ſubſtance of all theſe ſhadows, it reſts for ever.

V. 27. He burnt ſweet incenſe, &c.] Moſes acted as high prieſt, till the order of Aaron was fully appointed, that he might more entirely reſemble Him, who unites in himſelf the offices of Prophet, Prieſt, and King. (Deut. xviii. 15—19.)

V. 34, 35.] The Lord teſtified his acceptance of the ſervices of the people by his entire reconciliation to them as a nation, and his gracious reſidence amongſt them by the cloud the ſymbol of his ſpecial preſence. This reſted above the tabernacle; while a more reſplendent glory filled it, which Moſes himſelf could not enter for a time: but probably it afterwards was confined to the holy of holies, above the mercy-ſeat, between the cherubim.

V. 36.

37 But if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not, till the day that it was taken up.

38 For the cloud of the LORD was upon the tabernacle by day, and fire was upon it by night, in the ſight of all the houſe of Iſrael, throughout all their journeys.

V. 36—38.] (Notes, xiii. 21, 22. Iſaiah, iv. 5, 6.) In alluſion to this ſpecial guidance of Iſrael, many pious perſons make uſe of the expreſſion, "the moving of the cloud" as denoting the providential and gracious direction, which God now affords his people: and doubtleſs it is very allowable thus to accommodate and apply theſe typical paſſages to our own circumſtances; provided it be done with ſobriety, judgment, and caution. But we ſhould be careful not to introduce a new rule of duty, or give occaſion to uncertainty, error, or enthuſiaſm, by a vague and indeterminate uſe of ſuch alluſions. We are not under the ſame evident infallible guidance, that Iſrael was: the word of God ſoberly explained is our only, and our ſufficient, rule of duty; in underſtanding it, and in applying general precepts to particular circumſtances, good counſel, fervent prayer, and a careful obſervance of Providence ſhould be employed. Some things are always our duty, when we have opportunity and ability; and theſe need no other direction: other things are lawful in themſelves; but it may be doubtful, whether in our caſe and ſituation they are adviſeable; that is, whether they are likely, all things conſidered, to conduce to the glory of God and our own real good. When after mature conſultation and fervent prayer, ſuch matters ſtill remain doubtful; the events of Providence, yea perhaps a ſtrong inward impulſe, may be of weight in the deciſion. But when any undertaking is evidently wrong, or doubtfully right, or plainly inexpedient, or unadviſeable in the opinion of impartial judges; and yet the inclination leans that way: in this caſe, that which men call the "moving of the cloud," or the opening of Providence, is generally no more than a temptation of Satan; the ſuggeſtions of that enemy are often miſtaken for divine impreſſions; and men fancy they are following the Lord, when they are gratifying their own wayward inclinations. Upon the whole, in all doubtful matters, "to the law, and to the teſtimony," plain precepts and maxims of wiſdom are ſurer rules, than the moſt ingenious alluſions: and the book of Providence, as well as the ſuppoſed guidance of the Spirit, muſt be interpreted by, and brought to the teſt of, the plain rules of the written word, "which are the light of our feet and "the lantern of our paths."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ſeveral parts of divine revelation, the diſtinct offices of Jeſus Chriſt, and the various graces of the Chriſtian's character, are never ſeen in their glory and beauty, till they are viewed as united in one harmonious whole; which whole the believer values, deſires, and ſeeks to call his own.—The periodical return of the ſeaſons ſhould remind us of our work for God, and our ſouls: and we may hope for a good year, month, week, or day, when we begin them with ſerious attention to the worſhip of God, and ſolemn dedication of ourſelves to him. But when we remember that within this very year, which was entered upon ſo hopefully, the Lord was not well pleaſed with the moſt of theſe Iſraelites, and doomed "their carcaſes to fall "in the wilderneſs;" we may juſtly fear, leſt we ſhould amuſe and deceive ourſelves with a form of godlineſs: and the conſideration, how few of them entered Canaan, ſhould warn young people not to poſtpone the care of their ſouls, till they are ſettled in life, leſt that ſhould prove too late.—Happy they, who like Moſes receive repeated teſtimony from God, that they do his will and keep his commandments. But through him, let us look unto Jeſus Chriſt, who collects his people from all nations and ages; and according to the will of the Father, having waſhed them in his blood, and anointed them with the unction of his grace, forms them into one holy temple, an habitation of God through the Spirit, wherein he dwells to illuminate, to purify, to guide, and defend them through life; and in which he will dwell for ever. Being then led by the Spirit into imitation of, as well as dependence on, Chriſt; into a devout attendance on his ordinances, and obedience to his precepts, we ſhall be preſerved from loſing our way, and be "led in the midſt of the paths of judgment," unto the habitation of his holineſs in heaven.

THE THIRD BOOK OF MOSES,

CALLED

LEVITICUS.

This Book, which the Greek Tranſlators have called LEVITICUS, from its relation to the Levitical Prieſthood, tribe, and ceremonies, conſiſts almoſt entirely of Laws delivered to Moſes from above the Mercy-ſeat, during the firſt month after the Tabernacle was erected. It contains ſcarcely any hiſtory, except that of the Conſecration of Aaron and his Sons, with the aweful death of Nadab and Abihu which accompanied it. Though moral Precepts are in ſome places intermixed, and towards the cloſe are many gracious promiſes and terrible Threatenings; yet almoſt the whole Book conſiſts of ritual Appointments. Much of their Goſpel, under that inſtitution, was contained in theſe antiquated Laws; the particular and exact knowledge of which would be uſeful, nay neceſſary, to the Iſraelites. The enlightened Believer will ſee in them all the myſteries of redeeming Love, and the peculiarities of the Goſpel Revelation. But as they are not now obligatory as Precepts or Ordinances, and, bleſſed be God, we are favoured with clearer light in the New Teſtament: it will not be neceſſary to attend very minutely to the Expoſition of this part of Scripture; but we may confine ourſelves almoſt entirely to thoſe enquiries, which are more immediately connected with our Edification.

NOTES.

CHAP. I.] V. 2. An offering, &c.] The offering of ſacrifices was evidently an ordinance of true religion, from the fall of man until the coming of Chriſt; and from thence was by tradition derived into the ſeveral ſpecies of falſe religion which have prevailed: but until this period no very particular regulations ſeem to have been appointed. The ſacrifices were always offered of thoſe animals which were called clean; the blood was ſhed, the whole body or part of it was burnt with fire, and the reſt ſeems to have been regulated at the diſcretion of the ſacrificer; and in moſt caſes the head of a family, or the perſon who preſented the ſacrifice, officiated as prieſt in ſhedding its blood and burning its fleſh. But under the Moſaic diſpenſation very particular laws were given upon this ſubject; connected with the ſeparation of the tribe of Levi, and the appointment of Aaron's family excluſively to the prieſthood. The general intention of theſe laws is very evident: the exact meaning of every one in particular is often very obſcure to us: though it might be very plain and uſeful to the Iſraelites; eſpecially in diſtinguiſhing and ſeparating them from their heathen neighbours. In general we may obſerve, that the ſeveral ſacrifices not only in divers ways typified Chriſt, but alſo ſhadowed out the believer's duty, character, privilege, and communion with God. And indeed, if we except the divine Perſon, the miracles, and the meritorious mediation of the Lord Jeſus, there is ſcarcely any thing in the whole Scripture ſpoken of him, which is ſo appropriate to him, as not to have alſo a ſubordinate meaning

5 And he shall kill the bullock before the LORD: and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall bring the blood, and sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar, that is by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

11 And he shall kill it on the side of the meaning which respects his people. We should not therefore hesitate to apply the same types, both to Christ and to Christians, in different respects.—Having premised this, I would proceed with all possible brevity to comment on these various kinds of sacrifice; and in general, without endeavouring further to explain the RITUAL of them than the text does, (as it is not necessary we should understand the exact process of the priest in offering the sacrifice,) I would only point out what I can discern in them, which relates to Christ and Christians. Such animals only were offered in sacrifice, as are useful and valuable to man, which he is able to possess as property, and the increase of which he promotes. And not all those: but such only as are most domestic, harmless, patient, cleanly; and whose flesh is commonly used for food: not filthy swine, not devouring lions, not the warlike horse, not the subtle fox, not the voracious dog, nor any creature which subsists on animal food; nor yet the timorous hare or deer, who flee from the intercourse of of man. Such animals alone were sacrificed, as best represented what Christ was, and what his people ought to be: as the laborious patient ox; the gentle, harmless, and cleanly sheep; and the tender loving dove.

V. 3. A burnt sacrifice.] The burnt sacrifices were wholly consumed upon the altar; and typified Christ, in the intenseness of his sufferings, both of body and soul, when he gave himself a sacrifice for our sins, and when, at the same time that man shed his blood, "it pleased the LORD "to bruise him and to put him to grief." They also represented the perfection of that zeal and love, with which he voluntarily went through his sufferings for us: and denoted the believer's solemn dedication of himself without reserve, body and soul, to the service and glory of God; whether by doing or suffering his will, whether by life or death. (Rom. xii. 1. Phil. 1. 20.) A male without blemish was deemed the most complete of the kind. Thus Christ was without spot or blemish: thus his people must serve him with their best in every thing, and they are themselves the excellent of the earth. (Ps. xvi. 3.)—The general sacrifices of the congregation daily, weekly, monthly, and annually, as well as those for the great feasts, were prescribed by express laws; so were the sin and trespass-offerings, which were to be offered on particular occasions: but the burnt-offerings here spoken of were voluntary, and seem to have been intended as a voluntary confession of sin, when a man was consciously guilty before God, though nothing was chargeable upon him which could exclude him from the congregation; it was also a voluntary expression of repentance, faith, and devotedness to God. Thus Christ willingly offered himself for us, and we by his grace must freely confess our unworthiness, our dependence on him and obligations to him, and willingly devote ourselves to God through him.

V. 4. And he shall put, &c.] This implied an acknowledgement that he, who brought the sacrifice, was deserving of the wrath of God, and of that destruction of body and soul which is connected with it: but that he desired and hoped that the sacrifice, which he thus offered to the Lord, might be substituted in his stead; and that its death, and its being burnt upon the altar, might be accepted as a typical atonement for his sin. All this prefigured Christ bearing our sins in his own body on the tree; and the humble believing application of his atonement to the heart and conscience of the broken-hearted penitent, for his acceptance with God.

V. 5. And he, &c.] It is the general opinion, that the Priests or Levites alone were employed in slaying the sacrifices: but the scripture no where says it, and the language of this and other passages seem to denote the contrary. Aaron indeed was directed to slay his own ram of consecration, (Exod. xxix. 8, 16. Lev. ix. 8, 15, 18.) and those of the nation as their representative; and the Levites slew the sacrifices for such as were not clean, in Hezekiah's days. (2 Chron. xxx. 17.) But the law seems to appoint the offerer to slay the sacrifice, and the priest to sprinkle the blood and burn the flesh; which more aptly typified Christ slain by the hands of sinners, as well as for our sins. The sprinkling of the blood denoted that the efficacy of Christ's death renders all our religious services accepted, if we truly believe in him; which otherwise would not be deemed worthy of any favourable notice from a holy God, being all defiled with sin. This also shewed them that ordinarily sacrifices ought not to be offered any where but at the door of the tabernacle.

V. 9. His inwards, and his legs, &c.] This may denote the inward purity of heart, and outward holiness of life, which were perfect in Christ; and are in a measure to be found in his truly devoted disciples.

altar northward before the LORD: and the prieſts, Aarons's ſons, ſhall ſprinkle his blood round about upon the altar.

12 And he ſhall cut it into his pieces, with his head and his fat: and the prieſt ſhall lay them in order on the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar.

13 But he ſhall waſh the inwards and the legs with water: and the prieſt ſhall bring it all, and burn it upon the altar: it is a burnt-ſacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

14 And if the burnt-ſacrifice for his offering to the LORD be of fowls, then he ſhall bring his offering of turtle doves, or of young pigeons.

15 And the prieſt ſhall bring it unto the altar, and wring off his head, and burn it on the altar: and the blood thereof ſhall be wrung out at the ſide of the altar.

16 And he ſhall pluck away his crop with his feathers, and caſt it beſide the altar, on the eaſt part, by the place of the aſhes.

17 And he ſhall cleave it, with the wings thereof, but ſhall not divide it aſunder: and the prieſt ſhall burn it upon the altar, upon the wood that is upon the fire: it is a burnt-ſacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

V. 14—17.] This was the ſacrifice of the poor, and was as aptly typical of Chriſt's atonement, and would as fully expreſs the offerer's repentance, faith, and devotedneſs to God, as the more coſtly ſacrifices; provided poverty, not covetouſneſs, induced the offerer to bring it. The prieſts would need as much care in offering this ſacrifice, as any of the others; though it were neither ſo ſplendid in itſelf, nor attended with any perquiſites to them; which was to teach them, and us, that the ſouls of the poor are to be as carefully watched over, as thoſe of the wealthy; though in a ſecular ſenſe it may not be either ſo honourable, or ſo advantageous, to thoſe who have the overſight of them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It might have been ſaid of all theſe ſacrifices, "to what "purpoſe is this waſte?" (Matt. xxvi. 8.) All theſe bulls and goats might have been ſold for very much, and given to the poor; and would have ſupported very many indigent families: why then burn all this fleſh upon the altar? Yet were they appointed by God himſelf, and were "a ſweet ſavour" unto him; becauſe they both typified the ſatisfactory ſufferings of Chriſt, and were apt expreſſions of the humble faith and love of thoſe who preſented them. That can never be waſted which is ſpent acceptably to the Lord, and honourably to his name: be our obedience ever ſo expenſive, we can be no loſers in the event: and he can both ſupply our wants, repay our loſſes, and furniſh us with a ſufficiency to give to the poor alſo, whom we have always with us. But if an Iſraelite might not grudge the expence, labour, and inconvenience of his religion; how inexcuſable are we, if we ungratefully refuſe the eaſy, pleaſant, and reaſonable ſervice, which is required of us under the Chriſtian diſpenſation! Indeed the Lord always prevents us with his goodneſs; and we can no more offer the ſacrifice of a broken heart, or of praiſe and thankſgiving, than an Iſraelite could offer a bullock or a goat, except as he hath firſt given unto us. Of his own we preſent unto him; and the more we do in the Lord's ſervice, the greater are our obligations to him; both for the will, the ability, and the opportunity. Though the Lord in many things leaves us to preſcribe to ourſelves the proportion, which ſhall be immediately ſpent in his ſervice, whether of our time or of our ſubſtance; and though two doves, or two mites may in ſome caſes be more acceptable, than thouſands of bulls and goats, or of gold and ſilver, in others: yet where God's providence hath put more into a man's power, ſuch ſcanty oblations will not be accepted; becauſe no proper expreſſions of a willing mind. "But this I ſay, he which ſoweth ſparingly "ſhall reap alſo ſparingly; and he which ſoweth bounti-"fully ſhall reap alſo bountifully," &c. (2 Cor. ix. 6—8.) Whilſt we, in all theſe ſacrifices, have our own ſinfulneſs and Chriſt's ſufferings brought to our remembrance; we ſhould call upon ourſelves to renew our repentance; to exerciſe faith in and love to the Saviour; to reflect deeply upon the freeneſs and vaſtneſs of his love to us, and the immenſe price our ſalvation coſt him; that ſo we may deduce from them arguments and motives to increaſe our abhorrence of, and determination of heart againſt, all ſin; and our devotedneſs in body and ſoul to his ſervice, whatſoever he may call us to renounce, venture, do, or ſuffer for his ſake. Nor let us forget, that though our bodies are to be living ſacrifices unto God: yet the body of ſin muſt be deſtroyed, the fleſh with its luſts crucified, the deeds of the body mortified, and the ſoul baptized with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire, conſuming all its droſs and kindling all holy affections therein. Nay poſſibly we may not only be called to other ſuffering ſelf-denying ſervices, but even to lay down our lives for him, who was a ſacrifice for our ſins. In the mean time, in contemplating thoſe animals, which were appointed as emblems of the Saviour's purity, patience, meekneſs, and uſefulneſs; let us endeavour, and pray to be enabled to tranſcribe every amiable and heavenly line in his perfect character, into our own temper and converſation; that we may be conformed to his image, and walk in his ſteps, as an evidence that we are waſhed in his blood, and ſtand accepted in his righteouſneſs, "in whom the Father was well pleaſed."

NOTES.

CHAP. II.] V. 1. A meat-offering, &c.] Meat-offerings were appointed to be offered with other ſacrifices; (Numb. xv;) but theſe, which are regulated in this chapter, were offered alone as a voluntary oblation. They may typify Chriſt as preſented to God for us, and as being the bread of life to our ſouls: but they rather ſeem to denote that acknowledgment of our obligation to God for providential bleſſings, and thoſe good works, which are acceptable to God, when preſented and performed in the proper manner. Theſe meat-offerings therefore are mentioned after the burnt-offerings; for without an intereſt in the ſacrifice of Chriſt, and devotedneſs of heart to God, ſuch ſervices cannot be accepted. It was commanded that they ſhould conſiſt of fine flour, one of the moſt uſeful of the productions of the earth; and that oil ſhould be poured on it, which was uſed as butter is with us, and was therefore proper for an oblation which was food for the prieſts. It might alſo denote the neceſſity of the influences of the holy Spirit to render our works GOOD in the ſight of God: Frankincenſe likewiſe was added, which might repreſent the interceſſion of Chriſt that renders them accepted.

V. 2, 3.] All the frankincenſe, and part of the oil and flour, being burnt upon the altar of burnt-offering, might remind the people that their beſt ſervices muſt be offered through the atonement of the Saviour; that the whole muſt be preſented unto God through him, and done for his ſake; and that, as their good works would in this way be accepted of God, and come up as a memorial before him, ſo, in their own nature they were fitted to be ſerviceable to men, which was ſignified by the reſidue of the meat-offering being eaten by the prieſts. (Acts. x. 4. 31.)

V. 11. Leaven, &c.] Leaven is the emblem of pride, malice, and hypocriſy; honey of ſenſual pleaſure. The former are directly oppoſite to thoſe graces of humility, love, and ſincerity, which God approves; and the latter takes men off from the exerciſes of devotion, and the practice of good works. Probably both leaven and honey had been much uſed in idolatrous worſhip. Chriſt was in his character and ſacrifice perfectly free from the things denoted by leaven, and his ſuffering life and agonizing death were the very reverſe of that pleaſure, which the honey repreſented: and his people are called to follow him, and to be conformed to him.

V. 12. As for the oblation, &c.] As theſe firſt-fruits were not to be burnt upon the altar, but to be eaten by the prieſts; honey and leaven, being good for food as God's creatures, might be preſented with them.

V. 13. Salt of the covenant, &c.] Covenants were generally ratified at an amicable feaſt, at which ſalt was always uſed; hence it became an emblem of friendſhip.

shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering: with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt.

14 And if thou offer a meat-offering of thy first-fruits unto the LORD, thou shalt offer for the meat-offering of thy first-fruits, green ears of corn dried by the fire, even corn beaten out of full ears.

15 And thou shalt put oil upon it, and lay frankincense thereon: it is a meat-offering.

16 And the priest shall burn the memorial of it, part of the beaten corn thereof, and part of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

Many Scriptures represent the blessings of reconciliation to God through Christ and communion with him, as a feast which the Lord has prepared for us, to which he invites us, where he meets us, and at which he ratifies his covenant with us. Salt is an emblem of incorruption, and intimated the perpetuity, yea eternity, of the covenant which is made with true Christians: it also represented sincerity and true grace, without which we cannot have this covenant ratified with us, nor offer any acceptable services. This is an incorruptible seed, and ensures perseverance in the possessor; and it is instrumental to prevent the total corruption and destruction of the world, through the believer's example, influence, and prayers. (Matt. v. 13. Mark, 49, 50. Col. iv. 6.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

There is that excellency in Christ, and in his mediatory work, that no types and shadows, however varied and multiplied, can adequately represent: and our dependence on it is so entire, that we must never lose sight of it, in any thing we do, if we would be accepted of God, and glorify him. Even our sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving, our works of mercy, charity, and righteousness, yea every good work, must spring from his grace, and his love produced in our hearts; rise up, as it were, with his sacrifice from the altar of burnt-offering; and be presented through his intercession: that "whatsoever we do in word, and in "deed, we may do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, "giving thanks to God, and the Father by him." (Col. iii. 17.) Thus presented, our acknowledgments of common mercies, and our most ordinary actions of justice and benevolence to men, and especially of kindness to the poor and to his servants, will be "a sweet savour unto "the Lord." (Phil. iv. 18. Heb. xiii. 15, 16.) But let us take care, that we leaven not our works with pride and ostentation, hypocrisy or malice, or spoil them with indulging fleshly lusts which war against the soul: but instead thereof, that they be seasoned with the salt of true grace, that they may be persevering in themselves, comfortable to us, honourable to God, and instrumental to the good of others. In all this we must look unto Jesus and follow his example, devoting our first and best in every thing to the service of God through him.

NOTES.

CHAP. III.] V. 1. A sacrifice of peace-offering, &c.] The peace-offerings were voluntary oblations, in performance of a vow, in acknowledgement of favours received, in seeking some special blessing from God; or in expressing zeal and love for his worship, and a disposition to have social and pious fellowship with friends, with the priests and Levites, or with the poor Israelites.—They particularly represented the application of the purchased salvation of Christ to the heart and conscience; the communications of peace and comfort through him to the believer's soul; and the sweet communion which his reconciled people hold with him and with each other in his ordinances. This is, as it were, a feast upon a sacrifice; whilst "his flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink "indeed" to their souls; and whilst they are enabled to exercise faith, love, and gratitude to him, and love to each other for his sake, with enlarged hearts rejoicing in each other's comfort, and communicating to each other's necessities.—The peace-offerings also intimated, that all the blessings which sinners enjoy, must be sought, and acknowledged as coming through the sacrifice of Christ; that spiritual consolations are only to be found in communion with him; and that the greatest sweetness of temporal mercies arises from receiving and enjoying them, as the fruit of his atonement and as the pledges of his love; and from sharing them with his people, by which they are rendered pure and sanctified in the possession and enjoyment.

V. 2—5.] The appointment, that the offerer should lay his hand on the head of the peace-offering, shewed the necessity of repentance, confession of sin, and faith in a vicarious sacrifice; and the animal was thus devoted to God as a typical atonement, to suffer the punishment which the offerer had merited. The burning of the fat of the inwards might intimate, that we must be inward and hearty in the LORD; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards.

all our services, calling "upon our souls, and all that is within us" to exercise repentance, faith, love, and gratitude; and giving up our hearts unto the Lord.—Or it may imply that our inward lusts must be mortified and destroyed, if we would have peace and communion with God; especially, that the insensibility and obduracy of the heart and conscience must be removed; for fatness of heart is a scriptural representation of this insensibility, as the fat of a living animal is supposed to be destitute of feeling.—This was to be burnt upon the sacrifice of burnt-offering: for no self-denial, mortification of the flesh, or devotedness to God, however earnestly attempted, can either be successful, or meet acceptance, but through the sacrifice of Christ, and by the supply of his Spirit which, as fire, consumes our lusts and purifies our hearts.—When these appointments had been complied with, the priests had a portion of the peace-offering assigned them, (vii. 11—15;) and then the offerer and his friends religiously feasted upon the remainder.

V. 9. The whole rump, &c.] This was frequently very large and fat in those countries; and therefore in these smaller sacrifices it was joined to the inward fat to be burned upon the altar.

V. 11. It is the food, &c.] This was the part of the offering which fed the sacred fire that was emblematical of the divine justice. In this manner it typified the satisfaction for sin, which was actually made by the death of Christ.—What with the daily sacrifices, the occasional burnt-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings, the fire upon the altar would generally be thus supplied.

V. 17. That ye eat neither fat nor blood.] That is, neither the blood which is contained in the veins and arteries, nor the suet or the fat which is within the animal: for the blood which assumes the form of gravy, and the fat which is intermixed with the other flesh, might be eaten. This law not only related to the sacrifices, but to all the cattle they slaughtered for food; which might teach them self-denial.—But especially it taught them to observe the distinction between common and sacred things; it preserved them unInfected with the superstitions, and separate from the company, of idolaters; and tended to impress them more deeply with the idea of some important mystery, in the shedding of the blood and the burning of the fat of the solemn sacrifices.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Penitent confessions, and a believing dependence on Christ must accompany all our thanksgivings, praises, and prayers; and even all our undertakings or enjoyments, if we would prosper and be comfortable.—This Prince of Peace,

The ſin-offering ſeems to have been appointed for ſuch ſins alone when ignorantly committed, as when done preſumptuouſly were puniſhable with death.

V. 3. If the prieſt that is anointed, &c.] This is generally underſtood of the high prieſt, who was moſt ſolemnly anointed: but as there is no mention of the ordinary prieſts ſeparately in the law of the ſin-offering, who were equally liable to ſin with the high prieſt; they too ſeem to have been included with him in this firſt regulation. (Ex. xl. 13.)

V. 6, 7.] Theſe ceremonies implied that the ſin of the prieſt, though it were committed ignorantly, had polluted all his ſervices; nor could any thing which he did be any more profitable to himſelf or the people, except that were expiated by the blood of the ſin-offering.

forth without the camp, unto a clean place, where the ashes are poured out, and burn him on the wood with fire: where the ashes are poured out, shall he be burnt.

13 And if the whole congregation of Israel sin through ignorance, and the thing be hid from the eyes of the assembly, and they have done somewhat against any of the commandments of the LORD, concerning things which should not be done, and are guilty:

14 When the sin which they have sinned against it is known, then the congregation shall offer a young bullock for the sin, and bring him before the tabernacle of the congregation.

15 And the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands upon the head of the bullock before the LORD: and the bullock shall be killed before the LORD.

16 And the priest that is anointed, shall bring of the bullock's blood to the tabernacle of the congregation.

17 And the priest shall dip his finger in some of the blood, and sprinkle it seven times before the LORD, even before the vail.

18 And he shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar, which is before the LORD, that is in the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall pour out all the blood at the bottom of the altar of the burnt-offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

19 And he shall take all his fat from him, and burn it upon the altar.

20 And he shall do with the bullock as he did with the bullock for a sin-offering, so shall he do with this: and the priest shall make an atonement for them, and it shall be forgiven them.

21 And he shall carry forth the bullock without the camp, and burn him as he burned the first bullock: it is a sin-offering for the congregation.

22 When a ruler hath sinned, and done somewhat through ignorance against any of the commandments of the LORD his God, concerning things which should not be done, and is guilty;

23 Or if his sin, wherein he hath sinned, come to his knowledge; he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a male without blemish.

24 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, and kill it in the place where they kill the burnt-offering before the LORD: it is a sin-offering.

25 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out his blood at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering.

26 And he shall burn all his fat upon the altar, as the fat of the sacrifice of peace-offerings: and the priest shall make an atonement for him as concerning his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

27 And if any one of the common people sin through ignorance, while he doeth somewhat against any of the commandments of the LORD, concerning things which ought not to be done, and be guilty;

28 Or if his sin, which he hath sinned, come to his knowledge: then he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a female without blemish, for his sin which he hath sinned.

29 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, and slay the sin-offering in the place of the burnt-offering.

30 And the priest shall take of the blood thereof with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar.

31 And he shall take away all the fat thereof, as the fat is taken away from off the sacrifice of peace-offerings; and the priest shall

V. 12. Without the camp, &c.] Thus the guilt was typically conveyed clean away from the whole congregation, who were otherwise liable to suffer for it.—Christ, who was made sin, or a sin-offering, for us, suffered without the gate of Jerusalem, as bearing away the sin of his people, that when it is sought for it might no where be found. This was also expressive of the nature of true repentance, which turns sin as it were out of doors, out of the camp; and refuses to have any thing more to do with it.

32 And if he bring a lamb for a ſin-offering, he ſhall bring it a female without blemiſh.

33 And he ſhall lay his hand upon the head of the ſin-offering, and ſlay it for a ſin-offering, in the place where they kill the burnt-offering.

34 And the prieſt ſhall take of the blood of the ſin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and ſhall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar.

35 And he ſhall take away all the fat thereof, as the fat of the lamb is taken away from the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings: and the prieſt ſhall burn them upon the altar, according to the offerings made by fire unto the LORD: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for his ſin that he hath committed, and it ſhall be forgiven him.

2 Or if a ſoul touch any unclean thing, whether it be a carcaſe of an unclean beaſt, or a carcaſe of unclean cattle, or the carcaſe of unclean creeping things, and if it be hidden from him; he alſo ſhall be unclean, and guilty.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is evident that God hath never had any infallible vicegerent in his Church on earth: for even the high prieſt appointed by himſelf with Urim and Thummim, who had acceſs to his oracle in the holy place to enquire of him; and the whole Church of God under that diſpenſation, were ſuppoſed liable to fall into ſins of ignorance; and to ſanction by their authority, example, and general uſage, ſuch practices as were directly contrary to the commandments of God. All pretenſions therefore to infallibility, whether in an individual, or in a multitude, are preſumptuous uſurpations, claims of arrogance, and ſure marks of Antichriſt. However, though we are all liable to err, and ignorance is an alleviation of our guilt, it is not a ſufficient excuſe: with the Bible in our hands, it is generally the effect of pride, ſloth, and inattention, and would be avoided, were we duly anxious to know the truth and will of God; and our conſequent tranſgreſſions ariſe from want of circumſpection. We have need therefore to uſe frequent ſelf-examination, joined with ſerious peruſal of the Scriptures, and earneſt prayers for the convincing influences of the Spirit of God, that we may detect our ſins of ignorance; in order that we may be humbled for them, confeſs, repent of, and forſake them, and ſo obtain forgiveneſs through the blood of Jeſus Chriſt.—But let us beware of preſumptuous ſins: for though they alſo may be forgiven through his all-ſufficient ſacrifice; yet when they gain the dominion, they often provoke God to leave a poor wretch to final impenitence and unbelief.—They, who ſuſtain public characters, much more diſhonour God and injure others by their ſins, than more obſcure individuals: they have therefore double need for circumſpection, watchfulneſs, and earneſt prayer for the divine teaching and aſſiſtance; and have alſo a peculiar right to expect a place in the prayers of others, who are all intereſted in their conduct. This is eſpecially the caſe of miniſters of the Goſpel, in whom ignorance of God's commandments is peculiarly ſhameful; to whoſe ſacred character every ſin is a direct contradiction; and whoſe evil examples will operate as a fatal and ſwift-ſpreading infection.—In all caſes public ſcandals require public acknowledgements, however contrary they may be to the pride of our hearts.—Nations, in their political capacity by their rulers, have need to prevent, to puniſh, and to purge out national ſins, if they would eſcape national calamities.—None are ſo highly advanced in rank, or ſo ſacred by their office, as to be excuſed from exerciſing repentance and humiliation before God; or as to have no occaſion for, or no benefit from, the atonement of Chriſt: and none are ſo low and inconſiderable, as either to be exempted from the ſame duties, or excluded from the ſame advantages. Let us then learn, in the exerciſe of daily ſelf-examination, repentance, and faith, to put away both the guilt and the love and practice of ſin: and let us pray with David, that the Lord would "cleanſe us from our ſecret ſins; "and keep us from preſumptuous ſins, leſt they get the domi-"nion over us; and that the words of our mouths, and the "meditation of our hearts, may be always acceptable in the "ſight of the Lord, our Strength and our Redeemer." NOTES.

CHAP. V.] V. 1. Hear the voice of ſwearing, &c.] That is, if a man were adjured, and required upon oath to bear teſtimony in a court of juſtice, and did not declare the whole; though he did not bear poſitive falſe witneſs, yet he ſhould conſider himſelf as burdened with the guilt of a great ſin.

V. 2. If it be hidden, &c.] When a man had contracted ceremonial uncleanneſs, and had, without the appointed purification, inadvertently or ignorantly attended upon ſacred things, he by his careleſſneſs contracted guilt before God.

3 Or if he touch the uncleanneſs of a man, whatſoever uncleanneſs it be that a man ſhall be defiled withal, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he ſhall be guilty.

4 Or if a ſoul ſwear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatſoever it be that a man ſhall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he ſhall be guilty in one of theſe.

5 And it ſhall be when he ſhall be guilty in one of theſe things, that he ſhall confeſs that he hath ſinned in that thing.

6 And he ſhall bring his treſpaſs-offering unto the LORD for his ſin which he hath ſinned, a female from the flock, a lamb or a kid of the goats, for a ſin-offering: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him concerning his ſin.

7 And if he be not able to bring a lamb, then he ſhall bring, for his treſpaſs which he hath committed, two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, unto the LORD; one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering.

8 And he ſhall bring them unto the prieſt, who ſhall offer that which is for the ſin-offering firſt, and wring off his head from his neck, but ſhall not divide it aſunder.

9 And he ſhall ſprinkle of the blood of the ſin-offering upon the ſide of the altar; and the reſt of the blood ſhall be wrung out at the bottom of the altar: it is a ſin-offering.

10 And he ſhall offer the ſecond for a burnt-offering, according to the manner: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, for his ſin which he hath ſinned, and it ſhall be forgiven him.

11 But if he be not able to bring two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons; then he that ſinned, ſhall bring for his offering the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a ſin-offering: he ſhall put no oil upon it, neither ſhall he put any frankincenſe thereon: for it is a ſin-offering.

12 Then ſhall he bring it to the prieſt, and the prieſt ſhall take his handful of it, even a memorial thereof, and burn it on the altar, according to the offerings made by fire unto the LORD: it is a ſin-offering.

13 And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, as touching his ſin that he hath ſinned in one of theſe, and it ſhall be forgiven him, and the remnant ſhall be the prieſt's, as a meat-offering.

14 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

15 If a ſoul commit a treſpaſs, and ſin through ignorance, in the holy things of the LORD; then he ſhall bring for his treſpaſs unto the LORD, a ram without blemiſh out of the flocks, with thy eſtimation by ſhekels of ſilver, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, for a treſpaſs-offering.

16 And he ſhall make amends for the harm that he hath done in the holy thing, and ſhall add the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the prieſt: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him with the ram of the treſpaſs-offering, and it ſhall be forgiven him.

17 And if a ſoul ſin, and commit any of theſe things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the LORD; though he wiſt it not, yet is he guilty, and ſhall bear his iniquity.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The law of God is ſo exceedingly broad, the occaſions of ſin in this wicked world are ſo numerous, and we are ſo propenſe to evil, that we have need to fear always, and to pray always that we may be preſerved; to look before us every ſtep in ſuch a perilous path; and to keep a guard on all our ſenſes, members, and faculties, eſpecially on our tongues, which are ſo unruly and miſchievous, and the occaſions of ſo much iniquity. With a tender conſcience, and "the heart of fleſh," we ſhall ſeldom ſo tranſact buſineſs, form engagements, ſpend time in company, or even alone, or in God's ordinances, without finding ſomewhat upon recollection which will grieve and humble us: and the true Chriſtian is daily pleading guilty before God, and ſeeking forgiveneſs through the blood of Chriſt, on the account of much better ſervices, than others boaſt of and truſt in as meritorious.—In infinite condeſcenſion the Goſpel ſalvation is ſo free, that the pooreſt penitent is not excluded; and ſo full, that the moſt burdened conſcience finds complete relief from it: yet therein is the evil of ſin ſo diſplayed, as to fill every pardoned ſinner with abhorrence and dread of it; ſeeing that not the leaſt tranſgreſſion can be forgiven, but through the agonizing death of the great Emmanuel. Such perſons will therefore walk circumſpectly, and be frequently examining their hearts and lives; and when they but ſuſpect evil, they will have recourſe to the one great atonement. They will be careful to bear no falſe witneſs, nor withhold any required information; to avoid raſh oaths, and careleſſneſs in performance; and to render to God, to the King, and to every one, their due: and ſhould they after all diſcover that they have failed, they will ſcrupulouſly make ample reſtitution to their utmoſt ability, acknowledge their fault without extenuation, and ſeek forgiveneſs both of God and of the injured party.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI.] V. 2—7.] This law relates to ſuch perſons, as had been guilty of diſhoneſty, and had not been detected, but were impelled by their own conſciences to acknowledge their guilt, to make reſtitution, and to ſeek forgiveneſs from God and from the injured party. In this caſe the prieſt was directed to eſtimate the amount of the injury, and to proportion the reſtitution accordingly: and beſides the reparation to man, a treſpaſs-offering was to be offered to the Lord; to teach the people that the malignity even of thoſe crimes, which are injurious to man, chiefly conſiſts in the rebellion againſt God contained in them; and that repentance and works meet for repentance, though needful in order to forgiveneſs, could not atone for ſin, which can only be expiated by the blood of Chriſt, and pardoned through faith in his name.

garment,

garment, and his linen breeches ſhall he put upon his fleſh, and take up the aſhes which the fire hath conſumed, with the burnt-offering on the altar, and he ſhall put them beſide the altar.

11 And he ſhall put off his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the aſhes without the camp unto a clean place.

12 And the fire upon the altar ſhall be burning in it, it ſhall not be put out: and the prieſt ſhall burn wood on it every morning, and lay the burnt-offering in order upon it, and he ſhall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offerings.

13 The fire ſhall ever be burning upon the altar: it ſhall never go out.

14 And this is the law of the meat-offering: the ſons of Aaron ſhall offer it before the LORD, before the altar.

15 And he ſhall take of it his handful, of the flour of the meat-offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincenſe which is upon the meat-offering, and ſhall burn it upon the altar, for a ſweet ſavour, even the memorial of it unto the LORD.

16 And the remainder thereof ſhall Aaron and his ſons eat: with unleavened bread ſhall it be eaten in the holy place: in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they ſhall eat it.

17 It ſhall not be baken with leaven: I have given it unto them for their portion of my offerings made by fire; it is moſt holy, as is the ſin-offering, and as the treſpaſs offering.

18 All the males among the children of Aaron ſhall eat of it: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in your generations concerning the offerings of the LORD made by fire: Every one that toucheth them ſhall be holy.

19 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

20 This is the offering of Aaron, and of his ſons, which they ſhall offer unto the LORD, in the day when he is anointed: the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat-offering perpetual, half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night.

21 In a pan it ſhall be made with oil, and when it is baken, thou ſhalt bring it in: and the baken pieces of the meat-offering ſhalt thou offer for a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

22 And the prieſt of his ſons, that is anointed in his ſtead, ſhall offer it: It is a ſtatute for ever unto the LORD, it ſhall be wholly burnt.

23 For every meat-offering for the prieſt ſhall be wholly burnt: it ſhall not be eaten.

24 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

25 Speak unto Aaron and to his ſons, ſaying, This is the law of the ſin-offering: in the place where the burnt-offering is killed, ſhall the ſin-offering be killed before the LORD: it is moſt holy.

26 The prieſt that offereth it for ſin, ſhall eat it: in the holy place ſhall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

27 What-

V. 19—23.] The high-prieſt was required to offer this meat-offering every morning and evening perpetually; the whole of which was burnt upon the altar of burnt-offering, and none of it eaten by him, or by any of the other prieſts. The prieſts were all types of Chriſt: and it is generally ſuppoſed that their eating of the ſin-offering referred to this typical character, and denoted their bearing and expiating the ſins of the people: but they could only do this typically; and therefore, in reſpect of their own ſacrifices and ſome others, they were to eat none of them, but to burn all; which was a tranſlation of the whole guilt of themſelves and of the people to Chriſt and his ſacrifice, who actually bore and expiated the whole. This meat-offering might alſo repreſent, that the beſt duties and ſervices, even of the high-prieſt himſelf, could only be accepted through the ſacrifice of Chriſt; ſo far would they be from actually taking away the ſins of others: and that he and his brethren muſt nevertheleſs daily abound in good works, and in perſonal religion in the moſt devoted and diſintereſted manner.

V. 25—30.] The moſt holy oblations were entirely ſeparated from common uſes, and devoted to God as a typical ſatisfaction for ſin. All theſe regulations were calculated to expreſs the polluting nature of ſin, and the tranſlation of guilt from the ſinner to the ſacrifice, yet ſo, that it was not actually taken away, but in ſome ſenſe adhered to them: and they denoted that ſomewhat more effectual was repreſented by them.—They might alſo intimate, that none muſt pretend to any ſhare with Chriſt in atoning for ſin; that none but the ſpiritual prieſthood, which is ſeparated from the world and ſin, and truly devoted to God, have any real benefit from the ſacrifice of 29 All the males among the priests shall eat thereof; it is most holy.

30 And no sin-offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withal in the holy place, shall be eaten: it shall be burnt in the fire.

Christ, or truly feed upon him in their hearts; but that his atonement becomes to many others an occasion of additional guilt and deeper condemnation, through their contempt, neglect, or abuse of it.—The most holy things were required to be eaten in the court of the tabernacle, by the priests, or their sons, who by birth were heirs to the priesthood, though, being under age, or through some infirmity, they were debarred from officiating: for the youngest Christian, or the most infirm believer, is as much interested in the sacrifice of Christ, and as certainly has the benefit of it, as the oldest and strongest; though he may not be honoured with such usefulness. The other oblations were a provision for the families of the priests in their own houses. (Notes, &c. IV.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is almost impossible to enumerate the various methods, by which covetousness hath contrived to violate the law of love in respect of our neighbour's property. Human laws must indeed discriminate in their punishments with reference to the welfare of the community: but all these methods of injustice are alike a violation of the divine law, (not excepting the case of keeping what is found, when the owner can be ascertained;) and they are generally accompanied with lies, and frequently with perjury.—Would the offender, therefore, escape the vengeance of God (though he be not exposed to punishment from man), he must both make ample restitution, if in his power, and seek forgiveness by faith in that one offering which taketh away the sin of the world.—Confession of sin makes no satisfaction to justice; and our municipal laws, therefore, do not require the offender to plead guilty, or to criminate himself, nor will it avail for the mitigation of his sentence.—But before the mercy-seat of God the case is somewhat different: he, who ingenuously confesses his sin, who pleads guilty and condemns himself, is the only person who obtains the benefit of Christ's satisfaction, the free forgiveness of all sin, and the full comfort of it. Our God approves of such a disposition and conduct as right and reasonable in a sinner: and no one, who is unfeignedly of this contrite spirit, will either abuse free mercy, or depend on any thing else for forgiveness, but, the blood of the great Sacrifice for sin; nor will any such person wilfully continue in sin, or fail to bring forth the fruits meet for repentance.

The efficacy of the priesthood and mediation of Christ is perpetual, and we can never approach to God in his name, by day or by night, unseasonably: thus should the fire of our holy affections, the exercise of our faith and love, of prayer and praise, be constant, and without ceasing also; and we should be watchful and unwearied in well-doing.—Especially should the true ministers of Christ ever have the fire of their zeal burning, and their spiritual sacrifices ascending; being instant in season, and out of season, in their important work; without sloth, weariness, or dissipation; with all reverence, and exactness, and not deeming the meanest service beneath them, or admitting of a careless performance.—Such ministers, though they can do nothing to atone for the sin of the people, nay, need continual forgiveness themselves, yet as instruments will be very useful to the bringing men to repent, to seek and find forgiveness, and to become zealous of good works; and they only have a well-grounded claim to be maintained from the sanctuary. But they will also be the last persons to be peremptory in their demands of this nature, to be discontented with their provision, or attentive to their own interest or indulgence.—Rather will they make it their study to convince the people that they seek not theirs but them; that they had rather promote their sanctification, than profit by their sins; and that they desire themselves to be examples to the flock, in practising what they preach, in foregoing their just claims, and in seeking the glory of God and the good of souls, even when their diligence meets with no recompence or a very ungrateful return from man.—Above all they will teach the people, both by word and deed, to shun the defilement of sin, to treat sacred things with serious regard, to reverence the atoning blood of Christ, and, in an holy manner, to apply its benefits, not thence taking encouragement to sin, but deducing powerful motives for devoted obedience unto God. May the Lord send forth many such labourers into his harvest, for the honour of Jesus, the great Head of the Church. Amen.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII.] V. 1—10.] In the case of the sin-offering, and of the trespass-offering, the whole sacrifice was divided betwixt the altar and the priest; and the offerer had no share in it, as he had in the peace-offerings.

The

offering, ſhall they kill the treſpaſs-offering: and the blood thereof ſhall he ſprinkle round about upon the altar.

3 And he ſhall offer of it, all the fat thereof; the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards,

4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul that is above the liver, with the kidneys, it ſhall he take away.

5 And the prieſt ſhall burn them upon the altar, for an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a treſpaſs-offering.

6 Every male among the prieſts ſhall eat thereof: it ſhall be eaten in the holy place: it is moſt holy.

7 As the ſin-offering is, ſo is the treſpaſs-offering: there is one law for them: the prieſt that maketh atonement therewith ſhall have it.

8 And the prieſt that offereth any man's burnt-offering, even the prieſt ſhall have to himſelf the ſkin of the burnt-offering which he hath offered.

9 And all the meat-offering that is baken in the oven, and all that is dreſſed in the frying-pan, and in the pan, ſhall be the prieſt's that offereth it.

10 And every meat-offering mingled with oil, and dry, ſhall all the ſons of Aaron have, one as much as another.

11 And this is the law of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings, which he ſhall offer unto the LORD.

12 If he offer it for a thankſgiving, then he ſhall offer with the ſacrifice of thankſgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and cakes mingled with oil, of fine flour, fryed.

13 Beſides the cakes, he ſhall offer for his offering leavened bread, with the ſacrifice of thankſgiving of his peace-offerings.

14 And of it he ſhall offer one out of the whole oblation, for an heave-offering unto the LORD, and it ſhall be the prieſt's that ſprinkleth the blood of the peace-offerings.

15 And the fleſh of the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings for thankſgiving ſhall be eaten the ſame day that it is offered: he ſhall not leave any of it until the morning.

16 But if the ſacrifice of his offering be a vow or a voluntary offering, it ſhall be eaten the ſame day that he offereth his ſacrifice: and on the morrow alſo the remainder of it ſhall be eaten:

17 But the remainder of the fleſh of the ſacrifice, on the third day, ſhall be burnt with fire.

18 And if any of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of his peace-offering be eaten at all on the third day, it ſhall not be accepted, neither ſhall it be imputed unto him that offereth it: it ſhall be an abomination, and the ſoul that eateth of it ſhall bear his iniquity.

19 And the fleſh that toucheth any unclean thing, ſhall not be eaten, it ſhall be burnt with fire: and as for the fleſh, all that be clean ſhall eat thereof.

The former was an expreſſion of repentance and ſorrow for ſin, and was therefore more properly accompanied by faſting, than by feaſting; which yet was very ſuitable to the occaſions of the peace-offerings, that denoted communion with a reconciled God in Chriſt, the joy and gratitude of a pardoned ſinner, and the privileges and chearful ſervices of a believer. Nor is the remembrance of ſin ever pleaſant to a true Chriſtian, though the remembrance of God's former kindneſs, and the expectation of, and application for, future benefits, always are. The prieſt, who offered the ſacrifice, in ſome caſes had all that was not burnt for his own perquiſite, which would encourage and recompenſe a conſtant attendance. In other caſes all the prieſts ſhared alike, which might forward friendly intercourſe and fellowſhip with each other. The ſkin belonged to the prieſt who offered the ſacrifice; 'that is,' ſay the Jewiſh writers with conſiderable probability, 'the ſkins of ſacrifices brought 'by individuals; whilſt thoſe of the public ſacrifices were 'ſold, to defray the expences of repairing the taber-'nacle.'

V. 15—18.] In the prohibition of any part of the ſacrifice being kept unto the third day, when it would begin to putrify, there may be a reference to Chriſt, who roſe again in about the ſame time and ſaw no corruption. But more evidently the Iſraelites were hereby cautioned againſt procraſtination in rendering thanks, in paying their vows, or in ſeeking ſpiritual bleſſings; againſt ſuperſtition; and againſt diſtruſt and covetouſneſs. And they were taught to uſe hoſpitality to their friends, and to the poor without grudging: for if they ſpared, they only ſpared for the fire; except they would by diſobedience prevent the acceptance of their ſacrifice, and render it an abomination.

20 But

20 But the ſoul that eateth of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings that pertain unto the Lord, having his uncleanneſs upon him, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people.

21 Moreover, the ſoul that ſhall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanneſs of man, or any unclean beaſt, or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings which pertain unto the LORD, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people.

22 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes ſaying,

23 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, Ye ſhall eat no manner of fat, of ox, or of ſheep, or of goat.

24 And the fat of the beaſt that dieth of itſelf, and the fat of that which is torn with beaſts, may be uſed in any other uſe: but ye ſhall in no wiſe eat of it.

25 For whoſoever eateth the fat of the beaſt, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, even the ſoul that eateth it ſhall be cut off from his people.

26 Moreover, ye ſhall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beaſt, in any of your dwellings.

27 Whatſoever ſoul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people.

28 And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

29 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, He that offereth the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings unto the LORD, ſhall bring his oblation unto the Lord of the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings.

30 His own hands ſhall bring the offerings of the LORD made by fire, the fat with the breaſt, it ſhall he bring, that the breaſt may be waved for a wave-offering before the LORD.

31 And the prieſt ſhall burn the fat upon the altar: but the breaſt ſhall be Aaron's and his ſons.

32 And the right ſhoulder ſhall ye give unto the prieſt for an heave-offering, of the ſacrifices of your peace-offerings.

33 He among the ſons of Aaron, that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings and the fat, ſhall have the right ſhoulder for his part.

34 For the wave-breaſt and the heave-ſhoulder have I taken of the children of Iſrael, from off the ſacrifices of their peace-offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the prieſt, and unto his ſons, by a ſtatute for ever, from among the children of Iſrael.

35 This is the portion of the anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his ſons, out of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, in the day when he preſented them to miniſter unto the LORD in the prieſt's office;

36 Which the LORD commanded to be given them of the children of Iſrael, in the day that he anointed them, by a ſtatute for ever, throughout their generations.

37 This is the law of the burnt-offering, of the meat-offering, and of the ſin-offering, and of the treſpaſs-offering, and of the conſecrations, and of the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings;

38 Which the LORD commanded Moſes in mount Sinai, in the day that he commanded the children of Iſrael to offer their oblations unto the LORD, in the wilderneſs of Sinai.

CHAP.

V. 20. Cut off from his people.] We do not find any rule or example, which may induce us to ſuppoſe that this was a law which the prieſt or the civil magiſtrate were empowered to execute, either by ſolemn excommunication, or by death. It ſeems rather to have been an aweful denunciation of divine vengeance: ſuch perſons would deſerve, and might expect, to be cut off by ſome immediate judgment of God.

V. 30—34.] The offerer was required with his own hands to bring theſe parts of the ſacrifice to the prieſt, that the oblation of them might appear his own voluntary action. The wave-breaſt and heave-ſhoulder were ſolemnly preſented, lifted up, and waved before the altar, and then given to the prieſt as his portion; which might intimate, that as Chriſt, with his whole heart and all his power, ſerves the intereſt of his Church, ſo ought the prieſt to ſerve God and the congregation.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As it hath been obſerved, that true miniſters will readily forego their own intereſt or indulgence, for the glory of God and the good of ſouls: ſo it muſt now be noticed, what what ample provision God himself made for them; and that in proportion to their diligent attendance upon his courts. Nor have we any reason to judge from the New Testament, that he would now have them doomed to indigence; or that those persons do their duty, who themselves live in plenty, and permit them to continue in perplexing straits: and the more willing any minister is "to "suffer all things, lest he should hinder the Gospel of "Christ," the more inexcusable they are, who allow him to be a loser by such disinterestedness. (1 Cor. ix. 11—15.)

Every thing is beautiful in it's season: there is a time, when the Lord calls to weeping and fasting, and a time when thankful joy admits of festivity: indeed godly sorrow for sin, and believing meditation upon the Saviour's bitter sufferings, prepare for feasting upon his spiritual provisions, and rejoicing in his holy comfort. The infinite sufficiency, which is in Christ, furnishes a plenteous feast for all, even the vilest sinners, who accept of his gracious invitations: therefore the true believer longs for all around him, yea for all the world to share with him in his felicity. And the same principle, counteracting his natural selfishness, covetousness, and distrust; and inspiring gratitude and confidence in God, as well as good-will to man, will enlarge his heart to liberality in temporal things, and render him willing to communicate and ready to distribute. Nor is any one a loser by so doing: rather they are losers indeed, who are of a contrary spirit; as they lose the blessing of God upon their substance and the comfortable enjoyment of it; together with the acceptance and benefit of their religious services: for, whatever professions may be made of repentance, faith, love, or holy joy; if the heart be leavened with allowed covetousness or malice, or absorbed in selfishness, every religious performance will be deemed an abomination; and the self-deceived wretch, who thus presents it, will be exposed to the aweful woe of bearing his own iniquity.—Delays often cause good purposes and holy affections to evaporate without effect; and we frequently lose the benefit of divine ordinances, by improperly conducting ourselves after them. To approach the throne of grace, or the Lord's table, unclean through unrepented sin; or in proud contempt and careless neglect of the cleansing blood of Christ, and the sanctifying influences of his Spirit, is an aweful presumption, and will be terribly punished, except it be repented of: yet on such services do multitudes depend to atone for their sins, and to merit everlasting life! And indeed any presumptuous sin, till deeply repented of, must exclude a man from every well-grounded expectation of divine favour, and expose him to aweful vengeance. "Let us therefore have grace, whereby we may serve God "acceptably with reverence and godly fear, for our God is a "consuming fire." (Heb. xii. 28, 29.)—For the honour of God, and for an example to others, we should in some cases be as explicit as possible in our profession of faith, and in dedicating ourselves, and all we have to the Lord: and we ought at all times to do his will, seek his glory, and serve his people, after the example of Christ, with our whole heart and soul. Thus performing the work that he assigns us, we may thankfully receive the portion which he allots us; and be satisfied that, whatever treatment we meet with from man, he will both graciously supply our wants, and accept of our endeavours; and we may with joyful hope look forward to the period, when he will "present us faultless before the presence of his glory, "with exceeding joy."

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII.] V. 1. And, &c.] This consecration of Aaron and his sons was prescribed sometime before, but had been delayed until the tabernacle had been prepared, and the laws of the several sacrifices given. For many things, which are here not commented on, the reader may refer to the notes on Exod. xxix.

did he put the golden plate, the holy crown; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

10 And Moſes took the anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle and all that was therein, and ſanctified them.

11 And he ſprinkled thereof upon the altar ſeven times, and anointed the altar, and all his veſſels, both the laver and his foot, to ſanctify them.

12 And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him to ſanctify him.

13 And Moſes brought Aaron's ſons, and put coats upon them, and girded them with girdles, and put bonnets upon them; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

14 And he brought the bullock for the ſin-offering: and Aaron and his ſons laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the ſin-offering.

15 And he ſlew it, and Moſes took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger, and purified the altar; and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and ſanctified it, to make reconciliation upon it.

16 And he took all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moſes burnt it upon the altar.

17 But the bullock and his hide, his fleſh and his dung, he burnt with fire without the camp; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

18 And he brought the ram for the burnt-offering: and Aaron and his ſons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

19 And he killed it, and Moſes ſprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

20 And he cut the ram into pieces, and Moſes burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat.

21 And he waſhed the inwards and the legs in water; and Moſes burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt-ſacrifice for a ſweet ſavour, and an offering made by fire unto the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

22 And he brought the other ram, the ram of conſecration: and Aaron and his ſons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

23 And he ſlew it, and Moſes took of the blood of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

24 And he brought Aaron's ſons, and Moſes put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet: and Moſes ſprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

25 And he took the fat, and the rump, and all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and the right ſhoulder.

26 And out of the baſket of unleavened bread, that was before the LORD, he took one unleavened cake, and a cake of oiled bread and one wafer, and put them on the fat, and upon the right ſhoulder.

27 And he put all upon Aaron's hands, and upon his ſons' hands, and waved them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

V. 22. The ram of conſecration.] The ſin-offering ſhewed that Aaron and his ſons deſerved to have their blood ſhed, and after death to have their ſouls baniſhed from the gracious preſence of the Lord, and to be made a ſacrifice to his offended juſtice; inſtead of being able to bear in their perſons, or atone by their ſacred ſervices for, the ſins of the people; and inſtead of being honoured as typical repreſentatives of the Lord to the people, and interceſſors for the people with him; and that they could only be pardoned and accepted through him, who in due time was without the camp to be made a ſin-offering for the people.—The burnt-offering denoted, that through the atonement of Chriſt, they willingly and thankfully dedicated themſelves without reſerve, to be conſecrated unto God for this ſacred miniſtry. The ram of conſecration was their peace-offering; and repreſented that, being now reconciled unto God, they had fellowſhip with him, and delighted in his ſervice, and in being wholly employed therein; that God would now accept, and honour their ſervices and miniſtrations; that they were thankful for paſt and preſent benefits; and confided in, and ſought to him for future ſufficiency and acceptance. Accordingly the ſeveral laws preſcribed in the foregoing chapters were obſerved by Moſes, the officiating prieſt; with only ſuch additions, as had a peculiar reference to their entire ſeparation to God for the work of the prieſthood.

28 And

28 And Moſes took them from off their hands, and burnt them on the altar, upon the burnt-offering: they were conſecrations for a ſweet ſavour: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

29 And Moſes took the breaſt, and waved it for a wave-offering before the LORD: for of the ram of conſecration it was Moſes' part; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

30 And Moſes took of the anointing oil, and of the blood which was upon the altar, and ſprinkled it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his ſons, and upon his ſons' garments with him: and ſanctified Aaron and his garments, and his ſons, and his ſons' garments with him.

31 And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, and to his ſons, Boil the fleſh at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and there eat it with the bread that is in the baſket of conſecrations, as I commanded, ſaying, Aaron and his ſons ſhall eat it.

32 And that which remaineth of the fleſh and of the bread, ſhall ye burn with fire.

33 And ye ſhall not go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in ſeven days, until the days of your conſecration be at an end: for ſeven days ſhall he conſecrate you.

34 As he hath done this day, ſo the LORD hath commanded to do, to make an atonement for you.

35 Therefore ſhall ye abide at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation day and night ſeven days, and keep the charge of the LORD, that ye die not: for ſo I am commanded.

36 So Aaron and his ſons did all things which the LORD commanded by the hand of Moſes.

CHAP.

V. 29—32.] Moſes as the prieſt had the breaſt and ſhoulder, and Aaron and his ſons the remainder: and what they did not eat was burnt with fire according to the law of the peace-offerings.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In theſe types we ſee our great High-Prieſt, as ſolemnly appointed, anointed, and inveſted in his ſacred office; and by his own blood, and the influences of his holy Spirit, ſanctifying the ordinances of religion to the benefit of his people, and to the honour of God the Father; who accepts for his ſake of our worſhip, though we are ſinners, and it is polluted with ſin. We may alſo rejoice that, though free from ſin himſelf, yet having ſuffered being tempted, he is a merciful and faithful High-Prieſt, full of tender compaſſion to the feeble-minded and tempeſt-toſſed ſoul; and that having finiſhed his conſecration and ſacrifices upon earth, as our perfected High-Prieſt, he for ever appears in the preſence of God for us. But when theſe heavenly things were ſhadowed forth in the perſons and prieſthood of men; what care was taken to ſhew that they were not appointed for any worthineſs of ſuch an honour, or capacity for ſuch a ſervice in themſelves! how evidently doth all this manifeſt that they could neither actually benefit the people, nor ſave themſelves! that they could not eſcape the wrath of God, be accepted of him, or appear before him, except through the ſhedding of the blood, and the burning of the bodies, of ſo many innocent, uſeful animals! through repeated waſhings, ſprinklings, and anointings, together with change of garments; and every obſervance, which could mark them in themſelves to be guilty and polluted in the ſight of God, and ſhew that they defiled all they touched! Surely all this was intended to lead the people to expect a nobler prieſthood, better ſacrifices, and a more effectual atonement and interceſſion: and we muſt be blind indeed, yea willingly ignorant, if we do not ſee that it teaches us, that nothing can atone for ſin, or render a ſinner accepted of God, but the righteouſneſs, blood and interceſſion of the holy Jeſus, our great High-Prieſt; which are always accompanied with his ſanctifying grace poured into every believer's heart. Doubtleſs when Aaron offered his ſin-offering, he would remember, with mixed humiliation, admiration, and gratitude, his recent tranſgreſſion in making the golden calf, and the Lord's forgiveneſs of it; and would acknowledge that he deſerved himſelf to have been made a ſacrifice to offended juſtice with thoſe who periſhed, inſtead of being appointed to ſuch an honour. This would teach him lowlineſs of mind, and compaſſion and tenderneſs to other poor ſinners, ſeeing he himſelf was ſo compaſſed with infirmity; and effectually prevent his fancying there was any excellency in him for which he was thus diſtinguiſhed, or any merit in his ſervices, or any ground of preferring of himſelf to others. Thus was boaſting excluded, the whole glory given to God, and a preparation made for Aaron's properly bearing the honour, and performing the duties, of the prieſthood. In like manner doth God prepare his true miniſters for their office: he teaches them the knowledge of him and of themſelves; he convinces them of their guilt and ſinfulneſs, and brings them to a ſimple dependence on Chriſt for every thing needful for their own ſalvation. Thus they learn to conſider themſelves as no better than the vileſt ſinners; except as the Lord hath made them to differ, by intereſting them in the Redeemer's ſacrifice, waſhing them in his blood, arraying their ſouls in his righteouſneſs, and anointing them with his grace. Whilſt they feed upon his ſpiritual proviſion, and are happy in communion with him; and whilſt their hearts are fraught with love to Chriſt, and compaſſion for poor ſinners, they are prepared, when properly called in his providence, and qualified

AND it came to pass on the eighth day, that Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel.

2 And he said unto Aaron, Take thee a young calf for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, without blemish, and offer them before the LORD.

3 And unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak, saying, Take ye a kid of the goats for a sin-offering; and a calf, and a lamb, both of the first year, without blemish, for a burnt-offering;

4 Also a bullock and a ram for peace-offerings, to sacrifice before the LORD; and a meat-offering mingled with oil: for to-day the LORD will appear unto you.

5 And they brought that which Moses commanded, before the tabernacle of the congregation: and all the congregation drew near and stood before the LORD.

6 And Moses said, This is the thing which the LORD commanded that ye should do: and the glory of the LORD shall appear unto you.

7 And Moses said unto Aaron, Go unto the altar, and offer thy sin-offering, and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for thyself, and for the people, and offer the offering of the people, and make an atonement for them; as the LORD commanded.

8 Aaron therefore went unto the altar, and slew the calf of the sin-offering, which was for himself.

9 And the sons of Aaron brought the blood unto him: and he dipped his finger in the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the blood at the bottom of the altar.

10 But the fat, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver of the sin-offering he burnt upon the altar; as the LORD commanded Moses.

11 And the flesh and the hide he burnt with fire, without the camp.

12 And he slew the burnt-offering; and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled round about upon the altar.

13 And they presented the burnt-offering unto him, with the pieces thereof, and the head: and he burnt them upon the altar.

14 And he did wash the inwards and the legs, and burnt them upon the burnt-offering on the altar.

15 And he brought the people's offering, and took the goat which was the sin-offering for the people, and slew it, and offered it for sin, as the first.

16 And he brought the burnt-offering, and offered it according to the manner.

fied for the work, to give themselves wholly thereunto; and to be constant, persevering, tender, and affectionate therein: and they are made willing to forego all personal considerations, that they may point out the Saviour to perishing sinners, assist the spiritual sacrifices of believers, and be their helpers, to the glory of God and to the salvation of souls.—But indeed all true Christians are consecrated to be spiritual priests: and we should seriously ask ourselves, whether we are conscious of such a solemn consecration, as "bought with a price to glorify God, in "body and spirit which are his?" whether we are partakers of this washing, anointing, and arraying in the robes of righteousness and salvation? whether in our daily walk we study to maintain the honour of the priestly character? and whether we abound in spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ? If so, we know that boasting is excluded: let us then not despise, or disdain, despair of, or be harsh towards, our fellow-sinners; but remembering what we have done, and how we are saved, let us seek and pray for their salvation too. Yet at last our whole life, after our conversion, is only a week of consecration as God's priests to offer up spiritual sacrifices in his courts above, throughout an eternal sabbath. Let us then improve our present opportunity, wait with patience and perseverance, and chearfully expect this high and everlasting honour.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX.] V. 2—5.] Thus Aaron, after his consecration must "offer first for his own sins, and afterwards "for those of his people." (Heb. vii. 27.) But, as no particular transgression required expiation, and the defilement which cleaves to man's best performances was alone to be remembered, a kid, and not a bullock, was appointed to be the sin-offering.

17 And

17 And he brought the meat-offering, and took an handful thereof, and burnt it upon the altar, beſide the burnt ſacrifice of the morning.

18 He ſlew alſo the bullock and the ram, for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings which was for the people: and Aaron's ſons preſented unto him the blood, (which he ſprinkled upon the altar round about,)

19 And the fat of the bullock, and of the ram the rump, and that which covereth the inwards, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver.

20 And they put the fat upon the breaſts, and he burnt the fat upon the altar:

21 And the breaſts and the right ſhoulder Aaron waved for a wave-offering, before the LORD; as Moſes commanded.

22 And Aaron lifted up his hand towards the people, and bleſſed them; and came down from offering of the ſin-offering, and the burnt-offering, and peace-offerings.

23 And Moſes and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the congregation, and came out and bleſſed the people: and the glory of the LORD appeared unto all the people.

24 And there came a fire out from before the LORD, and conſumed upon the altar the burnt-offering, and the fat: which when all the people ſaw, they ſhouted, and fell on their faces.

V. 23. Went into the tabernacle, &c.] Probably Moſes on this occaſion gave Aaron directions about officiating within, as before he had without, the tabernacle.—After this they both ſeem to have bleſſed the people, as Aaron had done before: that is, they prayed for them, aſſured them of the divine acceptance of their ſervices, and pronounced a bleſſing upon them from God.

V. 24. There came a fire, &c.] This fire came forth from the viſible glory before-mentioned. Probably the former ſacrifices had been conſumed with common fire, and theſe had been placed upon the altar; and whilſt the fire was kindling under them, fire from before the Lord rapidly conſumed the whole. This fire was afterwards long preſerved upon the altar, as it is generally ſuppoſed. —By this token the Lord ſignified his acceptance of the vicarious atonement; as the fire, which repreſented his righteous vengeance, conſumed the ſacrifice and ſpared the ſinners. Thus our ſins being laid upon Chriſt, and divine juſtice having been ſatisfied by his atonement, God's mercy is extended to every true believer.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

After the example of Aaron and his ſons, and of him whom Aaron typified, the miniſters of Chriſt muſt conſider their ordination as "the filling of their hands;" and without delay muſt enter upon their important buſineſs; for he that properly deſires that office, deſires not honour, profit, eaſe, or pleaſure, but "A GOOD WORK:" ſo that, without waiting to receive even the congratulations of his friends, he ſhould ſet about it; and not deem any thing which is honourable to God, or uſeful to the Church, or to one individual, too laborious, too mean, or too diſguſting. Such a miniſter muſt alſo firſt take heed to himſelf; and take care that his public miniſtrations do not interrupt his perſonal religion, and the care of his own ſoul.—And all perſons ſhould remember, that the exerciſe of repentance, of faith, of devotedneſs to God, and communion with him in his ordinances, is not merely the work of a few days, at the commencement of a religious profeſſion, but the daily buſineſs of the believer's whole life.—Words can never expreſs the energy, with which theſe multiplied ſacrifices, all at once ſuperſeded by the death of Chriſt, mark the inſufficiency of all other atonements, and the efficacy of his own offering of himſelf; and teach us that our beſt ſervices need waſhing in his blood; and that the guilt of our beſt ſacrifices needs expiating by one more pure and noble than they. Let us then be thankful that we have ſuch an High Prieſt over the houſe of God, who hath no ſin of his own to atone for, and who, by his own oblation of himſelf once offered, hath fully atoned for the ſins of all his people. Having offered his ſacrifice, and being taken down from the croſs, and riſen from the dead, he bleſſed his church before he entered the holy place, to appear in the preſence of God, to make interceſſion for us: and he will ſhortly come again, and with the full conſent of prophets, apoſtles, ſaints, and angels, will make good his benediction in the everlaſting felicity of every true Iſraelite. In the mean time, he will manifeſt himſelf, and ſhew the glory of the Father, to thoſe who wait upon him, though not to the world. —Let us however remember with holy awe, that the ſame agonies of the beloved ſon of God, which aſſure the humble penitent of exemption from the deſerved fiery vengeance of divine juſtice, loudly proclaim and put fire therein, and put incenſe thereon, and offered ſtrange fire before the LORD, which he commanded them not.

2 And there went out fire from the LORD and devoured them, and they died before the LORD.

3 Then Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, This is it that the LORD ſpake, ſaying, I will be ſanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified. And Aaron held his peace.

4 And Moſes called Miſhael and Elzaphan, the ſons of Uzziel the uncle of Aaron, and ſaid unto them, Come near, carry your brethren from before the ſanctuary out of the camp.

5 So they went near, and carried them in their coats out of the camp, as Moſes had ſaid.

6 And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar, and unto Ithamar his ſons, Uncover not your heads, neither rend your clothes; leſt you die, and leſt wrath come upon all the people: but let your brethren, the whole houſe of Iſrael, bewail the burning which the Lord hath kindled.

the danger, and inevitable deſtruction of ſuch as proudly and impenitently neglect, or hypocritically abuſe, ſo great ſalvation: he, who in awful juſtice ſpared not his own Son, will not ſpare them. Finally, let us attend on the means of grace; and, as it were, lay the wood in order, and prepare the ſacrifice, and wait and pray 'till the baptiſm of the Holy Ghoſt and of fire burn up our corrupt affections, kindle the flame of true devotion, and enable us to offer ſpiritual ſacrifices, acceptable to God through Jeſus Chriſt.

NOTES.

CHAP. X.] V. 1, 2. And Nadab and Abihu, &c.] The golden calf had occaſioned a ſad delay in erecting the tabernacle: and now the ſin of Nadab and Abihu cauſed an awful interruption in the opening of it's ſervice. Next to Moſes and Aaron none ſtood higher, or were more likely to be honourable in Iſrael, than theſe two young men. There is reaſon to think that they were elated with this diſtinction, and under the influence of pride and oſtentation: they had alſo, it is probable, heated themſelves with wine. Being fully conſecrated, and conſidering the burning of incenſe as the moſt honourable part of their office, they were impatient to enter upon it; and at the ſeaſon when the people were proſtrate before the Lord, adoring his manifeſted preſence and glory, they raſhly and preſumptuouſly, without any orders, both at once which was irregular, and with fire taken, not from the altar, but probably from under the peace-offerings, ruſhed into the tabernacle to burn incenſe before the Lord. This evidenced great irreverence and diſobedience, and might have been a very bad precedent to their brethren and ſucceſſors; to prevent which, the Lord was pleaſed to make them an example to the Old Teſtament Church at its firſt forming, by cauſing the fire from his preſence to ſlay them ſuddenly, without conſuming their bodies, or their clothes; as Ananias and Sapphira were ſtruck dead at the firſt eſtabliſhment of the New Teſtament Church.

V. 3. I will be ſanctified, &c.] This was the general tenor of all the divine revelations to Iſrael, and might be deduced from them. The way of a ſinner's acceptance, though full of encouragement, and though it be an eſpecial manifeſtation of the mercy and love of God; yet clearly reveals his awful juſtice and holineſs, and ſolemnly and loudly proclaims that he will be approached with reverence in this only way, and in ſincere hatred and abhorrence of all ſin. Yet even under the clearer light of the New Teſtament diſpenſation, but few in compariſon properly underſtand, or are influenced by, theſe things. The Lord hath therefore ſeen good under both diſpenſations to warn men from abuſing his mercy, by terrible threatenings, and awful judgments; and we have reaſon to think, that the death of Nadab and Abihu had a very ſalutary and durable effect, eſpecially upon Aaron and his ſons and their ſucceſſors; for of them eſpecially would the Lord be glorified, and had in honour before the people, that their example might duly influence the reſt.—Though Aaron's heart muſt have been filled with anguiſh and diſmay, yet with ſilent ſubmiſſion he revered the juſtice of the ſtroke. Without doubt this would recall his ſin concerning the golden calf to his remembrance, both for his humiliation, and to excite admiration of the Lord's patience with him.

V. 4, 5.] In carrying the dead bodies out of the camp, the bearers muſt paſs through the midſt of the tents of the people; and would preſent before their eyes an affecting and inſtructive ſpectacle: whilſt they beheld thoſe now ſtruck dead by the juſtice of God for their contempt, whom before they had known to be ſo peculiarly honoured of him; and they muſt conſider it as a ſolemn warning to them all.

V. 6. Uncover not, &c.] Aaron and his ſurviving ſons were not allowed to expreſs their inward grief by any cuſtomary external tokens: not only leſt they ſhould ſeem to reflect upon the juſtice and goodneſs of God, and to teach them to aſſert authority over their ſtrongeſt paſſions; but becauſe, in compariſon of God, or where the love of him and zeal for his glory are concerned, the neareſt relations muſt be even deſpiſed, and as it were hated. Nor were they, who had been ſo ſolemnly anointed to this high office, on any perſonal or relative conſideration, to permit their important ſervices to be interrupted; with which the honour of God, and the ſafety of the people were ſo intimately you die: for the anointing oil of the LORD is upon you. And they did according to the word of Moſes.

8 And the LORD ſpake unto Aaron, ſaying,

9 Do not drink wine nor ſtrong drink, thou, nor thy ſons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation; leſt ye die: It ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout your generations:

10 And that ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean:

11 And that ye may teach the children of Iſrael all the ſtatutes which the LORD hath ſpoken unto them by the hand of Moſes.

12 And Moſes ſpake unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar, and unto Ithamar, his ſons that were left, Take the meat-offering that remaineth of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and eat it without leaven beſide the altar: for it is moſt holy.

13 And ye ſhall eat it in the holy place, becauſe it is thy due and thy ſons' due of the ſacrifices of the LORD made by fire: for ſo I am commanded.

14 And the wave-breaſt and heave-ſhoulder ſhall ye eat in a clean place; thou, and thy ſons, and thy daughters with thee: for they be thy due, and thy ſons' due, which are given out of the ſacrifices of peace-offerings of the children of Iſrael.

15 The heave-ſhoulder, and the wave-breaſt ſhall they bring, with the offerings made by fire of the fat, to wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD, and it ſhall be thine, and thy ſons' with thee, by a ſtatute for ever; as the LORD hath commanded.

16 And Moſes diligently ſought the goat of the ſin-offering, and behold, it was burnt: and he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the ſons of Aaron which were left alive, ſaying, 17 Wherefore have ye not eaten the ſin-offering in the holy place, ſeeing it is moſt holy, and God hath given it you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the LORD?

18 Behold, the blood of it was not brought in, within the holy place: ye ſhould indeed have eaten it in the holy place, as I commanded.

19 And Aaron ſaid unto Moſes, Behold, this day have they offered their ſin-offering, and their burnt-offering before the LORD; and ſuch things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the ſin-offering to-day, ſhould it have been accepted in the ſight of the LORD?

20 And when Moſes heard that, he was content.

intimately connected. Had they alſo by diſobedience provoked the Lord to ſlay them, the people would have been left without prieſt or ſacrifice; which is repreſented as equivalent to being left expoſed without remedy to the juſt wrath of God: yet neither on this occaſion, nor at any time afterwards, was another family appointed to ſucceed, in caſe that of Aaron ſhould be extinct!

V. 8—10.] This command ſeems immediately to have been given to Aaron, without the intervention of Moſes, to encourage him by ſuch a token of regard: and becauſe the Lord would have it appear as if Moſes inſulted over his affliction, or inſinuated that he had been guilty of intemperance.

V. 16—18.] Though this ſacrifice was a ſin-offering for the congregation; yet as it was a goat and not a bullock, by ſpecial direction as it is probable, the blood was not carried into the ſanctuary, to be put upon the altar of incenſe, or ſprinkled before the mercy-ſeat before the vail: and therefore the fleſh ought not to have been burnt without the camp, or upon the altar; but when they had done eating to have been conſumed in the ſame manner as the fleſh of the ſacrifices was which remained. Whether this was done by inadvertency, or becauſe Aaron drew a wrong concluſion from the ſtate of his mind, does not appear. (iv. 14. Note vi. 19—23.) Sinners are ſaid "to eat of the fruit of their own ways, and to be filled with "their own devices," when they ſuffer the puniſhments which their ſins deſerve. (Prov. i, 31). Thus the prieſts, by eating the ſin-offering of the people were repreſented as bearing their iniquity for them; but by burning without the camp the bodies of the ſacrifices, their own ſin-offerings, and thoſe, the blood of which was carried into the ſanctuary, it was ſhewn, that they were only types, and that both their own iniquity, and that of the people, muſt be finally transferred to, and fully expiated by, the great Antitype.

V. 19. Should it have been accepted, &c.?] Aaron intimated, that he could not have eaten this ſacred feaſt with proper calmneſs and chearfulneſs, as his mind was agitated with ſuch conflicting paſſions: or that he was ſo unworthy that he could not have hoped for the divine acceptance, had he attempted to have done it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ritual law, though a "ſhadow of good things "to come," "made nothing perfect;" (Heb. vii. 19;) and to caution people not to miſtake the ſhadow for the ſubſtance, theſe manifeſt and repeated evidences of its inſufficiency to take away ſin, or avert the wrath of God, were permitted: let us then look unto Jeſus, who hath indeed borne our iniquity, and fully ſatisfied the juſtice of our offended God for the ſins of all his believing people.—Such is the heart of man, that all honours and diſtinctions are dangerous to the perſons diſtinguiſhed; becauſe they naturally enkindle pride and oſtentation: and ſuch is the holineſs of God, that he cannot endure diſobedience in any, and leaſt of all in thoſe who approach the neareſt unto him. We ſhould then ſtand in awe, that we ſin not; and guard againſt hypocriſy, preſumption, and irreverent raſhneſs in the ſervice and worſhip of God: and not only ſhould we fear that unquenchable fire, which is reſerved for the everlaſting puniſhment of his enemies; but thoſe awful rebukes, with which he corrects the contemptuous careleſſneſs of his own people, and which ſometimes follow them even to the grave. But, though all ſhould read this example with ſolemn awe; the Miniſters of God ſhould eſpecially take heed to themſelves, and keep cloſe both to their work and their inſtructions; and ſhould not only fear the doom of the wicked and ſlothful ſervant, but that of theſe prieſts "who offered "ſtrange fire before the Lord;" if they ſeek their own honour or intereſt, follow the imaginations of their own hearts, are influenced by an angry and perſecuting ſpirit, or treat ſacred things with careleſs indifference: for though they eſcape puniſhment in this world, they will not, thus living and dying, eſcape the fire which is never quenched.—Above all men, they ſhould "take "heed, that their hearts be not overcharged with ſurfeiting "and drunkenneſs:" they eſpecially need clear heads and ſound judgments, as well as upright hearts; not only that "they themſelves die not;" but that they may "put a "difference between holy and unholy," "and teach the "people all that the Lord hath ſpoken." They are peculiarly required to watch and be ſober, and even to be ſuperior to their very natural affections; that they may not be overcome by any paſſion, but may be examples to others of that ſupreme love of God, which ſubordinates all other regards; and the important work of their miniſtry muſt not be interrupted, leſt wrath alſo come upon the people. Indeed we all ſhould learn to mourn and rejoice, as though we mourned and rejoiced not: for we may be aſſured, that all our comforts muſt be counterbalanced with trials, and all our honours with ſome thorn in the fleſh to humble us: and the remembrance of former ſins may well ſtop our mouths, and produce ſilent ſubmiſſion under our bittereſt ſorrows: "for it is of the Lord's "mercy we are not conſumed;" we have ſtill many unmerited comforts remaining, and encouraging proſpects before us: and even if our inward anguiſh be great, we ſhould learn to ſtifle the riſing murmur, to keep our mouth as with a bridle, and to be careful that we do not reflect upon God. As the Lord will be ſanctified and honoured by all who approach him; we ſhould be careful to profit by theſe examples of his ſeverity, that we ourſelves may not be made examples to others; and the good effect of ſuch awful judgments, both at the time and in after ages, diſcovers not only the wiſdom but the goodneſs of God in them.—But though our improper attendance on religious ordinances may expoſe us to wrath, yet we muſt not therefore neglect them: we may well ſay, "who is "able to ſtand before this holy Lord God?" yet this muſt teach us more carefully to come according to his appointment, and explicitly in the name of our great Advocate. Thus, though ſome perſons, by unworthily receiving the Lord's ſupper, 'have provoked the Lord to plague them 'with divers diſeaſes, and with ſundry kinds of death;' yet we muſt not, on this account, 'neglect that our 'bounden duty, and ſervice:' "but let a man examine "himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that bread, and drink of "that cup." Nor need a humble communicant, who comes 'not truſting in his own righteouſneſs, but in 'the Lord's mercy,' be diſcouraged; for he knows how to diſtinguiſh between preſumptuous raſhneſs or contemptuous diſobedience, and the involuntary infirmities or unallowed miſtakes of the conſcientious. After his example alſo, though the Miniſters of Chriſt muſt be careful that all be done in the preſcribed manner, and muſt notice whatever is done amiſs; and on ſome occaſions muſt expreſs an holy indignation, and rebuke with all authority: yet they muſt be careful not to confound inadvertencies with intended diſobedience, or to grieve thoſe whom the Lord has wounded:

cud, but divideth not the hoof: he is unclean unto you.

6 And the hare, becauſe he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof: he is unclean unto you.

10 And all that have not fins nor ſcales in the ſeas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing, which is in the waters; they ſhall be an abomination unto you.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI.] V. 2. Theſe are the beaſts, &c.] The diſtinction betwixt clean and unclean animals was known before the flood; though probably it only related to ſacrifices: but at this time very particular laws were enacted reſpecting the people's diet, and the ceremonial uncleanneſſes contracted by touching the carcaſes of the unclean animals. Theſe laws ſeem to have been intended, 1ſt, As a teſt of the people's obedience, like the prohibition to Adam of the tree of knowledge; and to teach them habits of ſelf-denial, and the government of their appetites. 2d. To keep the Iſraelites diſtinct from other nations, both by throwing hindrances in the way of their ſocial intercourſe with them; and by teaching them the diſtinction betwixt clean and unclean, which was applicable to perſons as well as things: and when this diſtinction between Iſrael and other nations was no longer to be obſerved, Peter was inſtructed by a viſion, which had relation to the diſtinction of meats, not to call any man common or unclean. Many alſo of theſe forbidden animals were occaſions of ſuperſtition and idolatry to the Heathens. 3d. They were likewiſe thus taught to make diſtinctions between holy and unholy, in the choice of their companions, and in forming intimate connections. Some ſuggeſt that in theſe laws, and in the propenſities of theſe animals, they were taught what manner of perſons they themſelves ought to be: and indeed, if the pure, uſeful, gentle, patient diſpoſitions of the animals appointed for ſacrifice, were emblematical of the Saviour's character, it is natural to conclude that the preſcription of ſome animals for the diet of the Lord's people, to the excluſion of others, was ſignificant of ſomewhat ſimilar reſpecting their character. Some have even thought that the allowance of the ſlaughter of innocent animals for the food of ſinful man, forms a continued type of the purchaſe and application of the ſalvation of Chriſt, and of our transformation into his image, who is the food of our ſouls. But in all theſe remote alluſions we muſt be ſparing, when we would deſcend to particulars; and I ſhall content myſelf with pointing out a few of the moſt obvious and certain of them.

V. 3. Whatſoever, &c.] "Parting the hoof" may denote ſeparation from ſin and the world; "chewing the cud" aptly repreſents ſerious, pleaſant, habitual meditation upon the truths and precepts of the word of God. Theſe are united in the experience, and character of the true Chriſtian, (Pſalm i. 1, 2:) but hypocrites ſhow that they do neither in ſincerity, by evidently attempting to ſeparate between profeſſion and practice; therefore they are as unclean as the avowed infidel or profligate.—The fox, the dog, the lion, the wolf, and ſeveral other quadrupeds, neither chew the cud, nor divide the hoof; the ſwine, the hare, the rabbit, do only the one; therefore they too are unclean. The former are apt emblems of the crafty, the covetous, the cruel, and fierce; the latter of the lewd, the ſenſual, the fearful, and the carnal-minded profeſſor who ſtill burrows in the earth: whilſt the ſheep and ox, and other animals which unite the two, aptly teach us what perſons we ought to be, and with whom we ſhould aſſociate.

V. 9—12.] Such animals as eels and frogs, thoſe called amphibious, and many ſea-monſters were prohibited; but the emblem, if there be any, is very obſcure: ſome of them may repreſent ſuch perſons, as attempt to reconcile in their conduct the ſervice of God and mammon.

V. 13—20.] Here the critics have abundance of work; and if this law were now in force, it would be neceſſary

18 And the ſwan, and the pelican, and the gier-eagle, 19 And the ſtork, the heron after her kind, and the lapwing, and the bat.

20 All fowls that creep, going upon all four, ſhall be an abomination unto you.

21 Yet theſe may ye eat of every flying creeping thing that goeth upon all four, which have legs above their feet, to leap withal upon the earth:

22 Even theſe of them ye may eat: the locuſt after his kind, and the bald locuſt after his kind, and the beetle after his kind, and the graſhopper after his kind.

23 But all other flying creeping things, which have four feet, ſhall be an abomination unto you.

24 And for theſe ye ſhall be unclean: whoſoever toucheth the carcaſe of them, ſhall be unclean until the even.

25 And whoſoever beareth ought of the carcaſe of them, ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

26 The carcaſes of every beaſt which divideth the hoof, and is not cloven-footed, nor cheweth the cud, are unclean unto you: every one that toucheth them ſhall be unclean.

27 And whatſoever goeth upon his paws, among all manner of beaſts, that goeth on all four, thoſe are unclean unto you: whoſo toucheth their carcaſe, ſhall be unclean until the even.

28 And he that beareth the carcaſe of them ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the even: they are unclean unto you.

29 Theſe alſo ſhall be unclean unto you among the creeping things that creep upon the earth; the weaſel, and the mouſe, and the tortoiſe after his kind,

30 And the ferret, and the chamelion, and the lizard, and the ſnail, and the mole.

31 Theſe are unclean to you among all that creep: whoſoever doth touch them, when they be dead, ſhall be unclean until the even.

32 And upon whatſoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it ſhall be unclean; whether it be any veſſel of wood, or raiment, or ſkin, or ſack, whatſoever veſſel it be, wherein any work is done, it muſt be put into water, and it ſhall be unclean until the even.

33 And every earthen veſſel whereinto any of them falleth, whatſoever is in it ſhall be unclean; and ye ſhall break it.

34 Of all meat which may be eaten, that on which ſuch water cometh, ſhall be unclean: and all drink that may be drunk in every ſuch veſſel, ſhall be unclean.

35 And every thing whereupon any part of their carcaſe falleth, ſhall be unclean; whether it be oven, or ranges for pots, they ſhall be broken down: for they are unclean, and ſhall be unclean unto you.

36 Nevertheleſs, a fountain or pit, wherein there is plenty of water, ſhall be clean: but that which toucheth their carcaſe ſhall be unclean.

37 And if any part of their carcaſe fall upon any ſowing-ſeed which is to be ſown; it ſhall be clean.

38 But if any water be put upon the ſeed, and any part of their carcaſe fall thereon; it ſhall be unclean unto you.

39 And if any beaſt of which ye may eat, to decide upon the meaning of theſe obſcure appellatives: but as it is antiquated it is not ſo much as uſeful. Many of theſe were birds of prey, and others fed very groſsly: ſuch were unclean. Whilſt the harmleſs loving dove, and ſuch as were of a cleanly nature, were allowed for food. The emblem is eaſily applied.

V. 31. When—dead, &c.] This is ſuppoſed to have been the general rule: The unclean animals did not render a perſon unclean, who touched them when alive; for many of them were beaſts of burden, as the horſe, aſs, and camel; and numbers of them muſt be touched in order to be deſtroyed. Yet even with this limitation the law would be to us extremely burdenſome: for inſtance, a dead mouſe, or other vermin, falling upon earthen veſſels, ovens, or ranges, would render it neceſſary to deſtroy them. The uncleanneſs contracted was only ceremonial; yet it would often exclude perſons from public ordinances, and occaſion much circumſpection in properly purifying themſelves and their furniture; and a conſtant care and watchfulneſs to avoid contracting pollution. All this repreſented the neceſſity of the "ſanctification of the Spirit unto obe-"dience;" the daily purſuit of true holineſs, in the exerciſe of "repentance towards God, and faith towards our "Lord Jeſus Chriſt;" and habitual watchfulneſs and ſelf-examination.

V. 39. Ye may eat, &c.] When unclean animals were killed in any way, their carcaſes rendered thoſe unclean who touched them: but the carcaſes of the clean animals polluted only when they died of themſelves.

die; he that toucheth the careaſe thereof, ſhall be unclean until the even.

40 And he that eateth of the carcaſe of it, ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the even: he alſo that beareth the carcaſe of it, ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

41 And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth ſhall be an abomination: it ſhall not be eaten.

42 Whatſoever goeth upon the belly, and whatſoever goeth upon all four, or whatſoever hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth; them ſhall ye not eat, for they are an abomination.

43 Ye ſhall not make yourſelves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither ſhall ye make yourſelves unclean with them, that ye ſhould be defiled thereby.

44 For I am the LORD your God: ye ſhall therefore ſanctify yourſelves, and ye ſhall be holy; for I am holy: neither ſhall ye defile yourſelves with any manner of creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

45 For I am the LORD that bringeth you up out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: ye ſhall therefore be holy, for I am holy.

46 This is the law of the beaſts, and of the fowl, and of every living creature that moveth in the waters, and of every creature that creepeth upon the earth:

47 To make a difference between the unclean and the clean, and between the beaſt that may be eaten, and the beaſt that may not be eaten.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilſt we enjoy our Chriſtian liberty, and are exempted from burdenſome obſervances, and allowed the uſe of ſo many kinds of wholeſome and palatable food, from which Iſrael was reſtricted; let us not forget to be thankful for ſuch indulgence; and let us conſider that we are bound to ſerve God with joyfulneſs of heart for this abundance of all things: but we muſt be careful not to abuſe our liberty, as an occaſion to the fleſh. Even to this day, "to the unbelieving all things are unclean;" and only clean to thoſe, who receive them with thankſgiving, and to whom they are ſanctified by the word of God and prayer. Such perſons will not be ſlaves to their appetites; but, both in the quality and quantity of what they eat and drink, will conſider what fits them for God's ſervice; and what ſuits their circumſtances, and conſiſts with temperance, juſtice, and charity, that they may do all to the glory of God.—The Lord hath redeemed and called his people, that they may be holy even as he is holy: we muſt therefore come out, and be ſeparate from the world; we muſt renounce the company of the ungodly, and all intimate and needleſs connections with thoſe who are dead in ſin; we muſt be a peculiar people zealous of good works, devoted to, and followers of, God as dear children; conformed to the image of his Son, and aſſociating with his people: and if we would not commit wickedneſs, we muſt watch and pray againſt temptation. Let us alſo remember that in this ſinful world we are contracting, not ceremonial, but moral pollution every day; and except we are continually waſhing in the fountain opened for ſin and for uncleanneſs, we can have no fellowſhip with an holy God on earth, or admiſſion into an holy heaven: and that this will be the caſe till the evening of death, when all, who have been thus waſhed ſhall be clean for ever; but they that are found filthy ſhall be filthy ſtill, even to eternity. We ſhould therefore ſpare no pains, nor think much of any expence or ſelf-denial, which we may be called to in the purſuit of holineſs: we ſhould walk very circumſpectly, uſe much ſelf-examination, and be far more careful to diſcover, or to avoid and waſh away, the pollution of ſin, than the Iſraelite would be about his ceremonial uncleanneſs; and we ſhould wait with glad expectation our diſmiſſion from this ſinful world. For though death, being the wages of ſin, be in itſelf pollution, and iſſue in corruption: yet to the believer its ſting is not only removed, but its uncleanneſs deſtroyed; and as a deſirable meſſenger it conveys the child of God home to his Father's holy and bliſsful habitation.

6 And when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a son, or for a daughter; she shall bring a lamb of the first year for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon, or a turtle-dove for a sin-offering, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the priest;

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron saying,

2 When a man shall have in the skin of his all who touched them unclean also: during the remainder of the terms here prescribed, the mother was secluded from eating the passover, peace-offerings, and holy things, and from going to the sanctuary; but communicated no such pollution to others. The time appointed for the female child was double; for by that sex sin first entered: but in Christ this stigma is removed. When the seven days were expired, and the touch of the mother no longer caused pollution, the male child was to be circumcised.—The whole marked the sinfulness of both root and branch: for "who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? "Not one."

V. 6—8.] For the reasons above mentioned, the sacrifices, appointed on this occasion, were not peace-offerings as betokening gratitude and joy, but a burnt-offering and a sin-offering to make atonement, and to bring sin to remembrance, that it might be repented of and expiated.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

What could the infinitely wise God intend by all these institutions, but to bring a charge of guilt and pollution against the whole human species? Doubtless this charge is well grounded: and the Lord knowing how prone men are to deny, or forget, their real character and situation, did thus devise to hold up the memorial of them continually before their eyes; and "by line upon line, and pre-"cept upon precept," to teach them this salutary lesson; that man, from his conception in the womb to his grave is an unclean creature; that he contracts guilt, through this defilement, even in the most lawful and necessary actions; and that he propagates the same depraved nature to his offspring: insomuch that, except as the atonement of Christ, and the sanctification of the Spirit prevent, the original blessing, "increase and multiply," is become to the fallen race a direful curse, and only the communication of sin and misery.—This may teach us habitual humiliation before God, and to rejoice in our domestic comforts with trembling; to walk watchfully; to search out the evil that cleaves to our ordinary actions; and to value, and give diligence to secure, the salvation of the Gospel.—As we are so unworthy of every good, we have the greater reason to be thankful for all our mercies, and to unite the exercise of repentance and faith, with all our sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving. When, according to the promise, (1 Tim. ii. 15.) those women who profess godliness have been preserved in child-birth; though they are exempted from these burdensome ceremonies, they should deem themselves doubly bound to take the earliest proper opportunity of rendering public unfeigned thanks to God for such a mercy: they should acknowledge the justice of God in all the pains and perils which through sin have come upon the sex; and join all with penitent confessions of guilt, renewed application to the blood of Christ for forgiveness, and dedication of themselves unto God through him.—And whilst these sacrifices of praise, for mercies in some sense common to both parents, are offered with united hearts by both: conscious that their infant offspring hath from them derived a depraved nature, and is come into an evil world, how proper it is that with harmonious consent they devote their child unto the Lord; and take comfort from the assurance, that "the covenant is made with them, for their "good, and the good of their children after them!" for in Christ Jesus there is neither male, nor female. Finally, let us bless God, that the Saviour "was made of a wo-"man, made under the law, that he might redeem them "that were under the law, that we might receive the "adoption of sons:" and that also "for our sakes he "became poor, that we through his poverty might be "made rich." (Luke i. ii. 21—24. 2 Cor. viii. 9. Gal. iv. 4, 5.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII.] V. 2—44.] Many things at least respecting this disease were peculiar to the Israelites. The plague his flesh, a rising, a scab, or bright spot, and it be in the skin of his flesh like the plague of leprosy; then he shall be brought unto Aaron the priest, or unto one of his sons the priests.

3 And the priest shall look on the plague in the skin of the flesh: and when the hair in the plague is turned white, and the plague in sight be deeper than the skin of his flesh; it is a plague of leprosy: and the priest shall look on him and pronounce him unclean.

4 If the bright spot be white in the skin of his flesh, and in sight be not deeper than the skin, and the hair thereof be not turned white; then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague seven days.

5 And the priest shall look on him the seventh day: and behold, if the plague in his sight be at a stay, and the plague spread not in the skin; then the priest shall shut him up seven days more.

6 And the priest shall look on him again the seventh day: and behold, if the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin; the priest shall pronounce him clean: it is but a scab: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

7 But if the scab spread much abroad in the skin, after that he hath been seen of the priest for his cleansing; he shall be seen of the priest again.

8 And if the priest see, that behold, the scab spreadeth in the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a leprosy.

9 When the plague of leprosy is in a man, then he shall be brought unto the priest:

10 And the priest shall see him: and behold, if the rising be white in the skin, and it have turned the hair white, and there be quick raw flesh in the rising;

11 It is an old leprosy in the skin of his flesh, and the priest shall pronounce him unclean, and shall not shut him up: for he is unclean.

12 And if a leprosy break out abroad in the skin, and the leprosy cover all the skin of him that hath the plague, from his head even to his foot, wheresoever the priest looketh:

13 Then the priest shall consider: and behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: it is all turned white: he is clean.

14 But when raw flesh appeareth in him, he shall be unclean.

15 And the priest shall see the raw flesh, and pronounce him to be unclean: for the raw flesh is unclean: it is a leprosy.

liar to the Israelites. The plague of leprosy was frequently inflicted by judgment from God (Numb. xii. 10. 2 Kings v. 27. 2 Chron. xxvi. 19—21.;) and it was always a token of his displeasure: nor do we read of any cure for it, but by miracle, or by an immediate interposition of God. The priests were employed to judge when a man had it, and when he was cleansed from it; and great care was required, and much exactness employed, in distinguishing between this plague and ordinary diseases. They who were unclean through it were excluded from the society of the people, as well as from the courts, of the Lord: and when the leprosy was cleansed, the leper was not re-admitted, till after sacrifices and purifications. All this seems to represent the state of a sinner, whose heart is entirely unsanctified, and in whom sin has dominion: whatever his profession may be, he has yet no benefit from the sacrifice for sin, nor is he meet for communion with God, or his people on earth, much less in heaven, until or unless he be cleansed. Much care must be taken by the Ministers of Christ to distinguish betwixt this person's case, and that of those who though upright in heart have many infirmities: and we shall perceive many other things admitting of an apt accommodation, as we proceed.—We cannot fully understand these particular rules, and shall not dwell upon them. In general it has been observed that the hair turned white in the plague, which was one token of leprosy, may denote the case of such persons as are grown hoary in sin, and still continue in it: the plague deeper than the skin, (another token, and opposed to a superficial appearance,) may denote the difference betwixt sins of surprise, and those, which appear to spring from the habitual state of the heart and affections: the spreading of the plague after inspection, describes the case of such as grow worse in sin after convictions and reproofs: the quick raw flesh, or proud flesh, may denote the disposition to self-justification; or boasting of and glorying in sin: the total eruption, which proved that there was no leprosy, may signify, on the other hand, that consciousness of guilt, which produces ingenuous unreserved confession, and is a good evidence that its power is dethroned: and the plague breaking out, after the cure of an old sore, may represent the return of a professor back again to the habitual practice of his old iniquities: whilst the utter uncleanness of those, who were leprous in their heads, might shadow forth the dangerous state of those persons, whose ungodly lives are the result of infidel or heretical principles. But it is enough to have hinted these things, without entering into any further discussion of them; as we have plainer rules to direct us than these antiquated laws.

16 Or if the raw fleſh turn again, and be changed into white; he ſhall come unto the prieſt:

17 And the prieſt ſhall ſee him: and behold if the plague be turned into white; then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: he is clean.

18 The fleſh alſo, in which, even in the ſkin thereof, was a boil, and is healed,

19 And in the place of the boil there be a white riſing, or a bright ſpot white, and ſomewhat reddiſh, and it be ſhewed to the prieſt;

20 And if when the prieſt ſeeth it, behold, it be in ſight lower than the ſkin, and the hair thereof be turned white; the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague of leproſy broken out of the boil.

21 But if the prieſt look on it, and behold, there be no white hairs therein, and if it be not lower than the ſkin, but be ſomewhat dark; then the prieſt ſhall ſhut him up ſeven days.

22 And if it ſpread much abroad in the ſkin, then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean; it is a plague.

23 But if the bright ſpot ſtay in his place, and ſpread not, it is a burning boil; and the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean.

24 Or if there be any fleſh, in the ſkin whereof there is a hot burning, and the quick fleſh that burneth have a white bright ſpot, ſomewhat reddiſh or white;

25 Then the prieſt ſhall look upon it: and behold, if the hair in the bright ſpot be turned white, and it be in ſight deeper than the ſkin; it is a leproſy broken out of the burning: wherefore the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leproſy.

26 But if the prieſt look on it, and behold, there be no white hair on the bright ſpot, and it be no lower than the other ſkin, but be ſomewhat dark; then the prieſt ſhall ſhut him up ſeven days.

27 And the prieſt ſhall look upon him the ſeventh day; and if it be ſpread much abroad in the ſkin, then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leproſy.

28 And if the bright ſpot ſtay in his place, and ſpread not in the ſkin, but it be ſomewhat dark; it is a riſing of the burning, and the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean; for it is an inflammation of the burning.

29 If a man or woman hath a plague upon the head or the beard;

30 Then the prieſt ſhall ſee the plague: and behold, it it be in ſight deeper than the ſkin, and there be in it a yellow thin hair; then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean: it is a dry ſcall, even a leproſy upon the head or beard.

31 And if the prieſt look on the plague of the ſcall, and behold, it be not in ſight deeper than the ſkin, and that there is no black hair in it; then the prieſt ſhall ſhut up him that hath the plague of the ſcall, ſeven days.

32 And in the ſeventh day the prieſt ſhall look on the plague: and behold, if the ſcall ſpread not, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the ſcall be not in ſight deeper than the ſkin;

33 He ſhall be ſhaven, but the ſcall ſhall he not ſhave: and the prieſt ſhall ſhut up him that hath the ſcall ſeven days more.

34 And the ſeventh day the prieſt ſhall look on the ſcall: and behold, if the ſcall be not ſpread in the ſkin, nor be in ſight deeper than the ſkin; then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean: and he ſhall waſh his clothes, and be clean.

35 But if the ſcall ſpread much in the ſkin after his cleanſing;

36 Then the prieſt ſhall look on him: and behold, if the ſcall be ſpread in the ſkin, the prieſt ſhall not ſeek for yellow hair; he is unclean.

37 But if the ſcall be in his ſight at a ſtay, and that there is black hair grown up therein; the ſcall is healed, he is clean: and the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean.

38 If a man alſo, or a woman have in the ſkin of their fleſh, bright ſpots, even white bright ſpots;

39 Then the prieſt ſhall look: and behold, if the bright ſpots in the ſkin of their fleſh be darkiſh white; it is a freckled ſpot that groweth in the ſkin; he is clean.

40 And

40 And the man whoſe hair is fallen off his head, he is bald: yet is he clean.

41 And he that hath his hair fallen off from the part of his head toward his face, he is forehead-bald: yet is he clean.

42 And if there be in the bald head, or bald forehead, a white reddiſh ſore; it is a leproſy ſprung up in his bald head, or his bald forehead.

43 Then the prieſt ſhall look upon it: and behold, if the riſing of the ſore be white reddiſh in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the leproſy appeareth in the ſkin of the fleſh;

44 He is a leprous man, he is unclean: the prieſt ſhall pronounce him utterly unclean, his plague is in his head.

45 And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes ſhall be rent, and his head bare, and he ſhall put a covering upon his upper lip, and ſhall cry, Unclean, unclean.

46 All the days wherein the plague ſhall be in him, he ſhall be defiled; he is unclean: he ſhall dwell alone, without the camp ſhall his habitation be.

47 The garment alſo that the plague of leproſy is in, whether it be a woollen garment, or a linen garment,

48 Whether it be in the warp, or woof, of linen or of woollen, whether in a ſkin, or in any thing made of ſkin:

49 And if the plague be greeniſh or reddiſh in the garment, or in the ſkin, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of ſkin; it is a plague of leproſy, and ſhall be ſhewed unto the prieſt.

50 And the prieſt ſhall look upon the plague, and ſhut up it that hath the plague, ſeven days.

51 And he ſhall look on the plague on the ſeventh day: if the plague be ſpread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in a ſkin, or in any work that is made of ſkin; the plague is a fretting leproſy; it is unclean.

52 He ſhall therefore burn that garment, whether warp, or woof, in woollen or in linen, or in any thing of ſkin, wherein the plague is: for it is a fretting leproſy; it ſhall be burnt in the fire.

53 And if the prieſt ſhall look, and behold, the plague be not ſpread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of ſkin;

54 Then the prieſt ſhall command that they waſh the thing wherein the plague is, and he ſhall ſhut it up ſeven days more.

55 And the prieſt ſhall look on the plague after that it is waſhed: and behold, if the plague have not changed his colour, and the plague be not ſpread; it is unclean, thou ſhalt burn it in the fire; it is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without.

56 And if the prieſt look, and behold, the plague be ſomewhat dark after the waſhing of it; then he ſhall rend it out of the garment, or out of the ſkin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof.

57 And if it appear ſtill in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of ſkin; it is a ſpreading plague: thou ſhalt burn that wherein the plague is, with fire.

58 And the garment, either warp or woof, or whatſoever thing of ſkin it be, which thou ſhalt waſh, if the plague be departed from them, then it ſhall be waſhed the ſecond time, and ſhall be clean.

V. 45, 46.] The leproſy would thus be a reproach to a man's character, incapacitate him for buſineſs, ſeclude him from the ſociety even of his neareſt friends, and that of all others, except of lepers like himſelf; and would ſhut him out from God's ſanctuary. Yet under this great affliction he muſt abide by the deciſion of the prieſt, and humble himſelf under the divine rebuke; proclaim his own ſhame, and ſhew peculiar indications of ſelf-abaſement and ſubmiſſion to the righteouſneſs of God.—Thus when the word of God condemns a man as an unconverted ſinner, his only wiſe courſe is to condemn himſelf, and renouncing every plea humbly to caſt himſelf upon the mercy of God. For thoſe who cover or conceal their ſins, or harden their hearts againſt convictions, will have their mouths ſtopped, and their excuſes ſilenced by the ſentence of the Judge himſelf at laſt.

V. 47—59.] This ſingular effect of the leproſy, which muſt have been ſupernatural, might be intended to denote the the malignity and defiling nature of ſin, and the neceſſity there is of parting with all occaſions of tranſgreſſion, hating even "the garment ſpotted with the fleſh." Such ſpotted garments are they, however rich and beautiful, which are the incentives of pride and luſt.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is a queſtion of the utmoſt importance, whether ſin be in dominion in our hearts or not? for if it be, we have no intereſt in Chriſt, no ſhare with God's people, no acceptance in God's ordinances, no real communion with him, no inheritance in his kingdom, no meetneſs for that holy habitation: but if ſin be dethroned, though it dwell within, and cauſe much conflict and diſquietude, and even produce many defilements in our conduct and in our beſt ſervices, which call for and produce humiliation before God; yet we are his children, accepted in the Beloved, and have the ſeal of his Spirit in our hearts. We ſhould therefore be willing to give this important matter a fair trial, according to the word of God, uſing the aſſiſtance of his miniſters and other experienced Chriſtians; but above all opening the caſe to our heart-ſearching compaſſionate High Prieſt above. Though we ſhould be jealous of ourſelves, and ſuſpect the worſt; yet we ſhould not deem every infirmity, or occaſional miſconduct an evidence of hypocriſy or unconverſion; but ſhould judge as impartially as we can of ourſelves: duly conſidering on the one hand the imperfect ſtate of Chriſtians in this world; and on the other, duly adverting to the numbers, who think themſelves ſomething, when they are nothing.—But miniſters have need of much knowledge of the Scriptures, and experimental acquaintance with the nature and effects of divine Grace, as well as much caution, attention, and tenderneſs, who are called upon to deal thus with men's conſciences in doubtful caſes; that they may neither deceive ſome, nor diſtreſs others: and they muſt be ſure to do nothing raſhly, or without mature examination. Nor ſhould they, who would know the ſtate of their own ſouls, come haſtily to a deciſion: week after week they ſhould wait upon the Lord, and on the miniſtry of the word; and if they be much ſeparated from the world, and engaged in ſecret inveſtigation of the Scriptures, and prayer, and ſelf-examination, it will greatly conduce to a ſatisfactory ſolution. Even if this queſtion be reſolved, and we are humbly ſatisfied that we are real Chriſtians, we muſt remember that "in many things we "offend all;" and that we have occaſion for continual waſhing in the blood of Chriſt. But when it is plain on ſcriptural grounds that a profeſſor of religion is unconverted and unclean; it is right he ſhould know it, and that others ſhould be warned to withdraw from his polluting ſociety. And how dreadful is the caſe of thoſe whom the deciſions of faithful miniſters, the conduct of true believers, and the expreſs teſtimonies of God's word, concur in declaring unmeet to partake of God's ordinances, and conſequently inadmiſſible into the kingdom of heaven, if they live and die in this ſtate! Even on earth all their poſſeſſions, comforts, and performances are defiled; if they do not contaminate the principles, and conduct of others. Yet ſtill there is hope in this caſe; for by the Goſpel that leproſy is cleanſed, which the law could but diſcover. If then ſuch perſons do at length ſee their guilt and danger, let them come to Chriſt, as he did of old, ſaying, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me "clean." But would they hear him ſay, "I will, be thou "clean," they muſt renounce every ſelf-excuſing plea, be willing to part with every ſin, and every occaſion of ſin, ſubmit to his rebukes, attend upon his directions, and give him all the praiſe. Finally, If we have in ſome meaſure experienced his cleanſing power, we ſhall gradually become willing to put off this leprous garment of the body, and leave it to be refined in the grave, that we may be for ever with the Lord.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV.] V. 1—3.] As the prieſts could not cleanſe the lepers, no law is given about it: but when the Lord was pleaſed to remove the plague, the following rules were to be obſerved, in re-admitting them to the ordinances of God, and the ſociety of his people. And they very aptly repreſent many of the duties and exerciſes of truly repenting ſinners, as well as the duties of miniſters reſpecting them. It ſeems the prieſts might viſit and even touch the leper, without contracting uncleanneſs: and the ſeaſonable inſtruction they might give them, as well as the aſſiſtance they might afford them in their devotions, would render this a great mercy, and comfort to them under their affliction.

V. 4—7.] The two birds may either ſignify Chriſt ſhedding his blood for ſinners, and then riſing and aſcending into heaven, there to appear in the preſence of God for us: or the bird, that was ſlain may repreſent and clean, and cedar-wood, and ſcarlet, and byſſop.

5 And the prieſt ſhall command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen veſſel over running water.

6 As for the living bird, he ſhall take it, and the cedar-wood, and the ſcarlet, and the hyſſop, and ſhall dip them and the living bird, in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water.

7 And he ſhall ſprinkle upon him that is to be cleanſed from the leproſy, ſeven times, and ſhall pronounce him clean, and ſhall let the living bird looſe into the open field.

8 And he that is to be cleanſed ſhall waſh his clothes, and ſhave off all his hair, and waſh himſelf in water, that he may be clean: and after that he ſhall come into the camp, and ſhall tarry abroad out of his tent ſeven days.

9 But it ſhall be on the ſeventh day, that he ſhall ſhave all his hair off his head, and his beard, and his eye-brows, even all his hair he ſhall ſhave off: and he ſhall waſh his clothes, alſo he ſhall waſh his fleſh in water, and he ſhall be clean.

10 And on the eighth day he ſhall take two he-lambs without blemiſh, and one ewe-lamb of the firſt year, without blemiſh, and three-tenth deals of fine flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil.

11 And the prieſt that maketh him clean, ſhall preſent the man that is to be made clean, and thoſe things before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

12 And the prieſt ſhall take one he-lamb, and offer him for a treſpaſs-offering, and the log of oil, and wave them for a wave-offering, before the LORD.

13 And he ſhall ſlay the lamb in the place where he ſhall kill the ſin-offering, and the burnt-offering, in the holy place: for as the ſin-offering is the prieſt's, ſo is the treſpaſs-offering: it is moſt holy.

14 And the prieſt ſhall take ſome of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering, and the prieſt ſhall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

15 And the prieſt ſhall take ſome of the log of oil, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand:

16 And the prieſt ſhall dip his right finger in the oil that is in his left hand, and ſhall ſprinkle of the oil with his finger, ſeven times before the LORD.

17 And of the reſt of the oil that is in his hand, ſhall the prieſt put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of the treſpaſs-offering.

repreſent the Saviour dying for our ſins; and the living bird, the ſinner preſerved and liberated, by being waſhed in his atoning blood, and the purifying grace of his Spirit; and in conſequence of being thus delivered from the wrath of God and the bondage of Satan, "ſeeking thoſe things "which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth on the right hand "of God." The cedar-wood, an emblem of the ſoundneſs of the cleanſed leper's fleſh, may denote the ſincerity of the true convert's heart, and the incorruptible nature of true grace: the ſcarlet, which was oppoſed to the ſnowy whiteneſs of the leproſy, and implied that the man was recovered to his former ruddy complexion, might repreſent the true penitent as come to himſelf, and to his right mind: the byſſop, an inſignificant ſhrub commonly uſed in the legal ſprinklings, might ſignify faith, of ſmall eſtimation among men, but of great efficacy in applying the ſalvation of Chriſt to the ſoul; or that mean inſtruments may be uſeful in directing ſinners to Chriſt. (Pſalm li. 7.) All theſe were to be dipped in the blood and water: for all our ſincerity, repentance, and faith, are derived from that living purifying water, the Holy Ghoſt; and are only acceptable through the blood of the Saviour.

V. 8, 9.] Thus the true penitent, having in private conference with the miniſters of Chriſt, and in the ſecret exerciſes of faith and prayer, got ſome comfortable hope of acceptance in the beloved, proceeds to put away all the remainder of his ſins, and ſeriouſly to prepare himſelf for a more ſolemn profeſſion of his faith, in the public ordinances of the Goſpel: for all this was done by the leper "without the camp."

V. 10—18.] The preparation being made, the cleanſed leper before the congregation in the court of the tabernacle, by the appointed ſacrifices, made profeſſion of his repentance, faith, and devotedneſs to God; and thus both 18 And the remnant of the oil that is in the prieſt's hand, he ſhall pour upon the head of him that is to be cleanſed: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him before the LORD.

19 And the prieſt ſhall offer the ſin-offering and make an atonement for him that is to be cleanſed from his uncleanneſs, and afterward he ſhall kill the burnt-offering.

20 And the prieſt ſhall offer the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering, upon the altar: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, and he ſhall be clean.

21 And if he be poor, and cannot get ſo much; then he ſhall take one lamb for a treſpaſs-offering, to be waved, to make an atonement for him, and one-tenth deal of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering, and a log of oil:

22 And two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, ſuch as he is able to get; and the one ſhall be a ſin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering.

23 And he ſhall bring them on the eighth day, for his cleanſing, unto the prieſt, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the LORD.

24 And the prieſt ſhall take the lamb of the treſpaſs-offering, and the log of oil, and the prieſt ſhall wave them for a wave offering, before the LORD.

25 And he ſhall kill the lamb of the treſpaſs-offering, and the prieſt ſhall take ſome of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

26 And the prieſt ſhall pour of the oil into the palm of his own left hand.

27 And the prieſt ſhall ſprinkle with his right finger ſome of the oil that is in his left hand, ſeven times before the LORD.

28 And the prieſt ſhall put of the oil that is in his hand, upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the place of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering.

29 And the reſt of the oil that is in the prieſt's hand, he ſhall put upon the head of him that is to be cleanſed, to make an atonement for him before the LORD.

30 And he ſhall offer the one of the turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, ſuch as he can get;

31 Even ſuch as he is able to get, the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, with the meat-offering. And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him that is to be cleanſed, before the LORD.

32 This is the law of him in whom is the plague of leproſy, whoſe hand is not able to get that which pertaineth to his cleanſing.

33 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, ſaying, both expreſſed his gratitude, and joined himſelf to the Lord's people. In like manner, our profeſſion at the Lord's table ſhould be the counterpart of what has ſecretly paſſed between God and our ſouls; and the private exerciſe of repentance and faith ſhould always be followed by this public and appointed profeſſion; in preparing for which, the counſel and approbation of the pious and experienced miniſters of Chriſt may be very uſeful.—Several of theſe ceremonies were the ſame as thoſe uſed in the conſecration of a prieſt, which might teach them a ſalutary but humiliating leſſon, (viii. 23, 24.) The purification of a cleanſed leper was like the conſecration of a prieſt; the conſecration of a prieſt as the purification of a leper.—Every truly penitent believer is a ſpiritual prieſt; and no prieſt, the Saviour alone excepted, was ever more or better than an unclean ſinner, waſhed in the blood of Chriſt and ſanctified by his Spirit.—Thus ſin being waſhed away from the powers of the ſoul, and the members of the body, the whole man becomes devoted to the ſervice of God.

V. 32. Whoſe hand is not able, &c.] Poverty would excuſe from expenſive ſacrifices, but not from ſuch as the poor man could procure. The Goſpel is graciouſly accommodated to our loſt condition; but excuſes not impenitence, unbelief, ſloth, or careleſſneſs.

V. 34—53.] This extraordinary plague was entirely a viſitation from God; repreſenting the prevalence of ſin in families, churches, and nations: and it very aptly deſcribes the ſtate of Iſrael, when the leproſy of idolatry had ſo infected the whole nation, that as unclean it muſt be demoliſhed, and carried captive to Babylon.—The rules and I put the plague of leproſy in a houſe of the land of your poſſeſſion,

35 And he that owneth the houſe ſhall come and tell the prieſt, ſaying, it ſeemeth to me there is as it were a plague in the houſe:

36 Then the prieſt ſhall command that they empty the houſe, before the prieſt go into it to ſee the plague, that all that is in the houſe be not made unclean: and afterward the prieſt ſhall go in to ſee the houſe.

37 And he ſhall look on the plague, and behold, if the plague be in the walls of the houſe, with hollow ſtrakes, greeniſh or reddiſh, which in ſight are lower than the wall;

38 Then the prieſt ſhall go out of the houſe to the door of the houſe, and ſhut up the houſe ſeven days.

39 And the prieſt ſhall come again the ſeventh day, and ſhall look: and behold if the plague be ſpread in the walls of the houſe:

40 Then the prieſt ſhall command that they take away the ſtones, in which the plague is, and they ſhall caſt them into an unclean place without the city.

41 And he ſhall cauſe the houſe to be ſcraped within round about, and they ſhall pour out the duſt that they ſcrape off without the city, into an unclean place.

42 And they ſhall take other ſtones, and put them in the place of thoſe ſtones: and he ſhall take other morter, and ſhall plaiſter the houſe.

43 And if the plague come again, and break out in the houſe, after that he hath taken away the ſtones, and after he hath ſcraped the houſe, and after it is plaiſtered;

44 Then the prieſt ſhall come and look, and behold, if the plague be ſpread in the houſe, it is a fretting leproſy in the houſe: it is unclean.

45 And he ſhall break down the houſe, the ſtones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the morter of the houſe: and he ſhall carry them forth out of the city into an unclean place.

46 Moreover, he that goeth into the houſe all the while that it is ſhut up, ſhall be unclean until the even.

47 And he that lieth in the houſe, ſhall waſh his clothes: and he that eateth in the houſe, ſhall waſh his clothes.

48 And if the prieſt ſhall come in, and look upon it, and behold, the plague hath not ſpread in the houſe, after the houſe was plaiſtered: then the prieſt ſhall pronounce the houſe clean, becauſe the plague is healed.

49 And he ſhall take to cleanſe the houſe two birds, and cedar-wood, and ſcarlet, and hyſſop.

50 And he ſhall kill the one of the birds in an earthen veſſel, over running water.

51 And he ſhall take the cedar-wood, and the hyſſop, and the ſcarlet, and the living bird, and dip them in the blood of the ſlain bird, and in the running water, and ſprinkle the houſe ſeven times.

52 And he ſhall cleanſe the houſe with the blood of the bird, and with the running water, and with the living bird, and with the cedar-wood, and with the hyſſop, and with the ſcarlet.

53 But he ſhall let go the living bird out of the city into the open fields, and make an atonement for the houſe: and it ſhall be clean.

54 This is the law for all manner of plague of leproſy and ſcall, rules, preſcribed concerning the leproſy in houſes, imply the care, with which they who fear God ſhould proteſt againſt, and ſeparate from, prevailing iniquities; and the attention and pains, which magiſtrates, miniſters, and maſters of families ſhould employ in ſearching out, checking and reſtraining, cenſuring and puniſhing ſin, in preventing its progreſs, and in promoting reformation; as well as the methods, which the Lord takes with nations and churches, before he proceeds to extremities; and the certain, ſhameful, and miſerable deſtruction, which awaits them, when theſe methods prove unſucceſsful; (Ezek. xxiv. 13,) and it intimates that the Lord frequently gives men up to that filthineſs, in which they have delighted.—Thus alſo ſin is ſo interwoven with the fabric of the human body, that it muſt be taken down by death: but if previouſly the leproſy of reigning ſin be cleanſed from the ſoul, it will be received into the holy manſions of the bleſſed, and the body alſo will be raiſed incorruptible: otherwiſe both ſoul and body muſt at laſt be carried forth out of the city of God, to that unclean place, prepared for the devil and his angels.

55 And

55 And for the leproſy of a garment, and of an houſe,

56 And for a riſing, and for a ſcab, and for a bright ſpot:

57 To teach when it is unclean, and when it is clean: this is the law of leproſy.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When "that God, who is rich in mercy, for his great "love, wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead "in ſins, hath quickened us" by his grace, (Eph. ii. 4, 5,) we ſhall evidence the change by ſincerely repenting of, and forſaking all our former ſins; we ſhall diſcover a right judgment, and diſpoſition of heart, and in uprightneſs become the ſervants of the Lord; but eſpecially we ſhall be led by the miniſtry of the word to ſee the ſuitableneſs and precioufneſs of the atoning blood, and the ſanctifying grace of Jeſus Chriſt; and gladly waſhing in "this foun-"tain opened for ſin and for uncleanneſs," ſhall in heart and affection aſcend, whither the riſen Saviour is gone before. They, who are thus delivered from the prevailing power of ſin, will daily be cleanſing themſelves more and more from all remaining "filthineſs of fleſh, and ſpirit, "and perfecting holineſs in the fear of God:" and without needleſs delay they will deem it their duty and privilege, after previous examination and ſerious preparation, to ſeek admiſſion to the communion of the ſaints; that with them, they may publicly profeſs their faith in, and love to, the Saviour, in the ordinances of his appointment. From thenceforth, conſidering themſelves as bought with a price, they will deſire to do all in the name of Chriſt; and through him to glorify God with body and ſpirit, which are his.—This is the true cleanſing of a leper, and his admiſſion into the courts of the Lord's houſe: or the conſecration of an unclean ſinner to the ſpiritual prieſthood. Have we then the inward conſciouſneſs of ſuch a change? and have we thus joined ourſelves to the Lord and to his people? If ſo, let us give God the praiſe, let us humbly remember what we were, let us abound in ſpiritual ſacrifices, according to our ability and opportunity; let us follow more after holineſs; and let us compaſſionate other poor lepers, and deſire, ſeek, and pray for their cleanſing alſo.—All theſe things remind us of the odiouſneſs of ſin, and the abſolute neceſſity of the blood of Chriſt, to render our ſincereſt repentance, and the beſt of our fruits meet for repentance, acceptable before a holy God. They ſhew likewiſe, that all, who are intereſted in the blood, partake of the Spirit, and are devoted to the ſervice, of the Redeemer. They all remind us to watch and pray; to look well to our hearts, and to our houſeholds, and to the Church of God: that in our places we may ſearch, and purge out iniquity, and ſo prevent its prevalency to the deſtruction of thoſe with whom we are connected. Nor is the readineſs of God to pardon the true believer more manifeſt, than his determination to deſtroy impenitent ſinners.—Let us all then take warning, and cry earneſtly to him to cleanſe our ſouls before we die; that we may never come into the place where unclean ſpirits are tormented; but that "when this earthly houſe "of our tabernacle ſhall be diſſolved, we may have a "building of God, a houſe not made with hands, eternal "in the heavens." (2 Cor. v. 1.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XV.] V. 2—18.] We need not enter particularly into the conſideration of theſe laws, the reaſons of which may in ſome degree appear from the "practical obſervations." Some of the caſes mentioned were diſeaſes contracted by licentiouſneſs; others might be the reſult of ſuch things as it is a ſhame to ſpeak of, though done of men in ſecret. Others though natural and healthful, yet occaſioned a ceremonial uncleanneſs and ſeparation, which is throughout the Old Teſtament made the emblem of that ſpiritual pollution which ſeparates ſinners from a holy God: and finally, the diſeaſes, which were only an affliction, and had no immediate connection with perſonal and actual ſin, were all originally the conſequence of the ſinful ſtate of human nature; and therefore they not only excluded the diſeaſed perſons from the ſanctuary, but rendered thoſe unclean who touched them, and were to be followed by ſacrifices and purifications not entirely diſſimilar to thoſe of the cleanſed leper.

and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

8 And if he that hath the iſſue ſpit upon him that is clean; then he ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

9 And what ſaddle ſoever he rideth upon, that hath the iſſue, ſhall be unclean.

10 And whoſoever toucheth any thing that was under him, ſhall be unclean until the even: and he that beareth any of thoſe things, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

11 And whomſoever he toucheth that hath the iſſue, (and hath not rinſed his hands in water,) he ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

12 And the veſſel of earth, that he toucheth which hath the iſſue, ſhall be broken: and every veſſel of wood ſhall be rinſed in water.

13 And when he that hath an iſſue is cleanſed of his iſſue; then he ſhall number to himſelf ſeven days for his cleanſing, and waſh his clothes, and bathe his fleſh in running water, and ſhall be clean.

14 And on the eighth day he ſhall take to him two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, and come before the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and give them unto the prieſt.

15 And the prieſt ſhall offer them, the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him before the LORD, for his iſſue.

16 And if any man's ſeed of copulation go out from him, then he ſhall waſh all his fleſh in water, and be unclean until the even.

17 And every garment, and every ſkin whereon is the ſeed of copulation, ſhall be waſhed with water, and be unclean until the even.

18 The woman alſo with whom man ſhall lie with ſeed of copulation, they ſhall both bathe themſelves in water, and be unclean until the even.

19 And if a woman have an iſſue, and her iſſue in her fleſh be blood, ſhe ſhall be put apart ſeven days: and whoſoever toucheth her, ſhall be unclean until the even.

20 And every thing that ſhe lieth upon in her ſeparation, ſhall be unclean: every thing alſo that ſhe ſitteth upon, ſhall be unclean.

21 And whoſoever toucheth her bed, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

22 And whoſoever toucheth any thing that ſhe ſat upon, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

23 And if it be on her bed, or on any thing whereon ſhe ſitteth, when he toucheth it; he ſhall be unclean until the even.

24 And if any man lie with her at all, and her flowers be upon him, he ſhall be unclean ſeven days: and all the bed whereon he lieth ſhall be unclean.

25 And if a woman have an iſſue of her blood many days out of the time of her ſeparation, or if it run beyond the time of her ſeparation; all the days of the iſſue of her uncleanneſs ſhall be as the days of her ſeparation: ſhe ſhall be unclean.

26 Every bed whereon ſhe lieth all the days of her iſſue, ſhall be unto her as the bed of her ſeparation: and whatſoever ſhe ſitteth upon ſhall be unclean, as the uncleanneſs of her ſeparation.

27 And whoſoever toucheth thoſe things ſhall be unclean, and ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and be unclean until the even.

28 But if ſhe be cleanſed of her iſſue, then ſhe ſhall number to herſelf ſeven days, and after that ſhe ſhall be clean.

29 And on the eighth day ſhe ſhall take unto her two turtles, or two young pigeons, and bring them unto the prieſt, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

V. 24. And if, &c.] When this was done in preſumption, it was either to be puniſhed with death, or the offenders might expect to be cut off by the judgment of God: when inadvertently, this purification was to be obſerved. This muſt not be conſidered as a mere ceremonial reſtriction; the nature of the caſe ſhews the contrary: and the violation of this precept muſt be allowed to be one of thoſe abuſes, that pollute the marriage-bed, though otherwiſe undefiled.

30 And the prieſt ſhall offer the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for her before the LORD, for the iſſue of her uncleanneſs.

31 Thus ſhall ye ſeparate the children of Iſrael from their uncleanneſs; that they die not in their uncleanneſs, when they defile my tabernacle that is among them.

32 This is the law of him that hath an iſſue, and of him whoſe ſeed goeth from him, and is defiled therewith:

33 And of her that is ſick of her flowers, and of him that hath an iſſue, of the man and of the woman, and of him that lieth with her which is unclean.

2 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that he come not at all times into the holy place within the vail, before the mercy-ſeat, which is upon the ark; that he die not: for I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy-ſeat.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We have cauſe to be thankful that we now need fear no defilement, but that of ſin; nor have occaſion for any of theſe ceremonial and burdenſome purifications. Yet when we conſider how nearly we are beſet with occaſions of moral uncleanneſs by day and by night, alone and in company, nay ſleeping as well as awake, we may well ſay with David, "who can underſtand his errors? "cleanſe thou me from my ſecret ſins." And theſe laws may remind us that God ſees all thoſe things, which are totally concealed from human eyes, and eſcape the cenſure of mortal men. Being ſuch unholy creatures, and having to do with ſuch an holy God, we muſt for ever have been baniſhed from his preſence, had he not promiſed, "from all their filthineſs will I cleanſe them;" and both provided the fountain for our purification, and appointed the means. In the daily exercife of ſelf-examination, repentance, and faith in the one ſin-offering which Chriſt hath offered; and by daily prayer for his ſanctifying grace, we ſeek and find this purification, and this purity of heart, with which we ſhall be admitted "to ſee God."—Whilſt we obſerve the rule of God's word, and aim at his glory through Jeſus Chriſt, all things become pure to us: but every thing is an occaſion of increaſing and communicating defilement to the impenitent and unbelieving. With ſerious recollection and humble reverence ſhould we approach our holy heart-ſearching God in his ordinances: and in our daily walk be careful to "poſſeſs our veſſels "in ſanctification and honour;" conſulting expediency and avoiding exceſs in things moſt lawful, and being careful not to be brought under the power of any. Many of our diſeaſes may remind us of our perſonal tranſgreſſions; all our infirmities evince that we are ſinners: thence we ſhould learn patience, and take occaſion to humble ourſelves before God; the more earneſtly to ſeek forgiveneſs; and to wait with chearful expectation for the coming of him, "who ſhall change our vile body, that it may "be faſhioned like unto his glorious body, according to "the working, whereby he is able even to ſubdue all "things to himſelf." (Phil. iii. 20, 21.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI.] V. 1. After the death, &c.] The appointment of this annual expiation of his own ſins, with thoſe of his family and nation, would encourage Aaron by the aſſurance of acceptance and continuation in the prieſthood; and inſtruct him and his ſons to avoid Nadab and Abihu's ſin and puniſhment: for they would be perfectly ſafe whilſt they adhered to the rule, and they might by that example be rendered very attentive to it.

V. 2. That he, &c.] The ordinary prieſts went into the ſanctuary, where the golden candleſtick and the table of ſhew-bread were placed; and there, without the vail before the mercy-ſeat, burnt inceaſe upon the golden altar one at a time: but they went no further. The high prieſt alone went within the vail into the holy of holies, where the ark of the covenant was; and that only on one day in the year; (Heb. i. ix. 6—8); and it was at the peril of his life, if at any other time, or in any other manner, he ventured into the preſence of the Lord, of which the cloud of glory above the mercy-ſeat was the ſymbol. The Old Teſtament worſhip was intimately connected with ſenſible objects, which are leſs revered when rendered familiar: but the New Teſtament worſhip is more ſimple, and maintained entirely by faith; and the objects of it will be admired and adored in proportion to the frequency and intenſeneſs, with which we meditate upon them: therefore they were commanded to keep their diſtance, we are invited to draw near.

3 Thus shall Aaron come into the holy place: with a young bullock for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering.

4 He shall put on the holy linen coat, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with the linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall he be attired: these are holy garments; therefore shall he wash his flesh in water, and so put them on.

5 And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel, two kids of the goats for a sin-offering, and one ram for a burnt-offering.

6 And Aaron shall offer his bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and make an atonement for himself, and for his house.

7 And he shall take the two goats, and present them before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the LORD, and the other lot for the scape-goat.

9 And Aaron shall bring the goat upon which the LORD's lot fell, and offer him for a sin-offering.

10 But the goat on which the lot fell to be the scape-goat, shall be presented alive before the LORD, to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a scape-goat into the wilderness.

11 And Aaron shall bring the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself.

12 And he shall take a censer-full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the LORD, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the vail.

13 And he shall put the incense upon the fire

V. 3. Thus shall Aaron, &c.] We find that a burnt-offering, in addition to those here prescribed, and to the daily sacrifices, was offered; both of which are supposed to have preceded the solemnities appointed in this chapter. (Numb. xxix. 7—11.)

V. 4. He shall wash, &c.] The high priest's repeated washings might typify Christ's perfect purity; but they were more evidently intended to remind him of his own sinfulness, who needed such repeated ablutions. He performed the services of this day in the clean but mean garments of the ordinary priests, not in his own rich robes: for Christ performed his whole atoning work in his holy human nature; having laid aside his robes of majesty when he assumed the form of a servant.

V. 6. Shall offer, &c.] The word offer seems in this verse to mean no more than to present the bullock before the Lord, with confession of sins, and earnest prayer that it might be accepted as an expiatory sacrifice. Afterwards (11) all requisite preparations being made, the high priest slew the sin-offering for himself and family; and having thus made ready the blood for the ensuing solemnity, he probably left the other priests, to prepare the fat and the flesh to be burnt, according to the law of the sin-offering (Notes iv).

V. 8—10.] The language here used, especially the word rendered the scape-goat, has occasioned some employment for the critics: but it does not appear, that they have thrown much useful light upon the subject. Probably our translation, though it may have some difficulty in it, is as expressive of the evident meaning of the type, as any other for which it could be changed. The dying goat represented Christ suffering for our sins; the scape-goat, Christ rising to effectuate the purposes of his death, in the actual forgiveness and justification of his believing people. A goat was an animal clean by the law, yet not cleanly as the sheep in the opinion of man; nay, it is the emblem of a wicked man in the representation of the day of judgment. (Matt. xxv. 31, 32.) Thus Christ seemed to men a sinner, but was in God's account sinless: and when numbered among transgressors, he died by man's sentence as a malefactor, in God's as a sacrifice.—Two kids of the goats having been provided equally fit for a sin-offering, it was decided by lot, which should be slain, and which escape. A lot is a solemn appeal to God in a doubtful matter relative to practice; as an oath is in testimonies and engagements: and each of them ought to be the last resource, when other methods of decision fail; each should be used as a solemn act of religion, or not at all. And it stands as an unanswerable objection to all lotteries, and games of chance, that they are a profanation of a religious ordinance, which is every where spoken of in Scripture, as having been used with the utmost reverence. They are an appeal to God's decision (for "The lot is "cast into the lap, but the whole disposal of it is of the "Lord,") in a matter of covetousness, or of diversion; and form a species of "taking his name in vain," not much unlike rash and profane swearing in trifling conversation, or when men are striking bargains.

V. 12—14.] The high priest, having carried the censer and the incense within the vail, and caused the smoke to ascend before the mercy-seat, (without which he must not appear there on pain of death;) seems to have gone forth and fetched the blood of his own sin-offering, and to have sprinkled it as prescribed; then to have gone forth again, and to have killed the people's sin-offerings, and with the blood thereof to have entered the third time: and, as the Jewish writers say, to have left the censer, till he had applied the blood to the altar; and then to have entered the fourth time to fetch it away. But all that the Jewish writers advance, can only shew how they fire before the LORD, that the cloud of the incenſe may cover the mercy-ſeat that is upon the teſtimony, that he die not.

14 And he ſhall take of the blood of the bullock, and ſprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-ſeat eaſtward: and before the mercy-ſeat ſhall he ſprinkle of the blood with his finger ſeven times.

15 Then ſhall he kill the goat of the ſin-offering that is for the people, and bring his blood within the vail, and do with that blood, as he did with the blood of the bullock, and ſprinkle it upon the mercy-ſeat, and before the mercy-ſeat.

16 And he ſhall make an atonement for the holy place, becauſe of the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael, and becauſe of their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins: and ſo ſhall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation that remaineth among them, in the midſt of their uncleanneſs.

17 And there ſhall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himſelf, and for his houſehold, and for all the congregation of Iſrael.

18 And he ſhall go out unto the altar that is before the LORD, and make an atonement for it; and ſhall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about.

19 And he ſhall ſprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger ſeven times, and cleanſe it, and hallow it from the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael.

20 And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he ſhall bring the live goat:

21 And Aaron ſhall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confeſs over him all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael, and all their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and ſhall ſend him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderneſs.

22 And the goat ſhall bear upon him all their iniquities, unto a land not inhabited: and he ſhall let go the goat in the wilderneſs.

23 And Aaron ſhall come into the tabernacle of the congregation, and ſhall put off the linen garments, which he put on when he went into the holy place, and ſhall leave them there.

24 And he ſhall waſh his fleſh with water in the holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering, and the burnt-offering of the people, and make an atonement for himſelf, and for his people.

25 And the fat of the ſin-offering ſhall he burn upon the altar.

26 And he that let go the goat for the ſcape-goat, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe his fleſh in water, and afterward come into the camp.

27 And the bullock for the ſin-offering, and the goat for the ſin-offering, whoſe blood was brought in to make atonement in the holy place, ſhall one carry forth without the camp, and they ſhall burn in the fire their ſkins, and their fleſh, and their dung.

28 And he that burneth them, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe his fleſh in water, and afterward he ſhall come into the camp.

they underſtood the Scriptures, which relate to the ſubject; and in ſome caſes what variations, and additions to the divine appointments they made, which contribute little to our edification.

V. 16. An atonement, &c.] The uncleanneſs of the people, and all their manifold tranſgreſſions, contaminated even the tabernacle that was amongſt them, and all its furniture; ſo that they needed an atonement. Thus the ſinfulneſs of man's heart defiles all his ſervices, the beſt of which need the blood of Chriſt to render them acceptable.

V. 21. And, &c.] The high prieſt transferred all the tranſgreſſions of Iſrael, with all their aggravations, unto the ſcape-goat, by confeſſing them over its head, to be with it ſent away into the wilderneſs, never more to be heard of. In the latter days of the Jewiſh Church the high prieſt had his form of confeſſion; but God preſcribed none. An attentive obſervance of God's law, and of the people's conduct, with ſuitable previous conſideration, would enable him to do it much more profitably without one.

V. 26. Shall waſh his clothes, &c.] To ſhew the defiling nature of ſin, and the inſufficiency of theſe typical expiations, he who led away the ſcape-goat, and he who burnt the ſin-offering, contracted defilement and needed purification.

29 And

29 And this shall be a statute for ever unto you: that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger that sojourneth among you.

30 For on that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the LORD.

31 It shall be a sabbath of rest unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls by a statute for ever.

32 And the priest whom he shall anoint, and whom he shall consecrate to minister in the priest's office in his father's stead, shall make the atonement, and shall put on the linen clothes, even the holy garments.

33 And he shall make an atonement for the holy sanctuary, and he shall make an atonement for the tabernacle of the congregation, and for the altar: and he shall make an atonement for the priests, and for all the people of the congregation.

34 And this shall be an everlasting statute unto you, to make an atonement for the children of Israel, for all their sins, once a year. And he did as the LORD commanded Moses.

V. 29—31.] The Israelites all over the camp at that time, and all over the land when put in possession of Canaan, were required to spend this day in solemn humiliation before God for their sins, in godly sorrow, in penitent confessions, and in devotional exercises, either in secret, or in their families and assemblies: and for this purpose all other business was laid aside. Fasting is not expressly mentioned, though generally supposed to have been implied.

V. 34. Once a year. &c.] Whilst this solemnity was properly attended to, the annual expiation of national guilt would prevent the forfeiture of the national covenant; though the sacrifices offered on the occasion could not take away sin, as pertaining to the conscience; except as in them by faith the great antitype was discerned (Heb. ix. 8—14.) But in idolatrous times it was either utterly neglected, or very carelessly attended to; and when the substance came, all these shadows lost their use and efficacy.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

These varied shadows of good things to come lead us into undesigned, and almost unavoidable, repetitions: for it must surely be inexcusable to shut our eyes that we may not see, or seeing to refrain from noting, though repeatedly, these manifold remembrances of sin, as chargeable upon the best of men in their most holy actions; as polluting all things that the sinner touches; and to be atoned for only with blood, yet with nobler blood than that of bulls and goats. Doubtless these are so many demonstrations, that we rightly understand what the New Testament teaches of Christ, when we consider him as the Substance of all these shadows; and his Church the building for which all these scaffoldings were prepared. Here, in a type, we view our great High Priest, our Sacrifice, our Advocate, our Saviour from sin. Thus he vailed his glory:—"because the children were partakers "of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part "of the same," (Heb. ii. 14,) and appeared in human nature yet free from sin; though he had richer robes of glory and beauty, when angels saw and adored him "in the "form of God," as their Creator and Lord. By the one sacrifice of himself he made an actual atonement for sin on earth; and with the same human nature, and with his own blood, he ascended into heaven, to appear before the Father's mercy-seat, with the incense of his prevailing intercession for his people. In this work none of them (though under him priests unto God) may come near, as if they would pretend to join in his meritorious intercession. Thence with his spiritual presence he meets his assembled disciples, and renders his ordinances sanctifying to them, and acceptable to God; and at the end of the world he will come in his own glory, and in the glory of his Father, to complete the grand design.—As in another glass, we see the Saviour in the sin-offering of the goat. In the likeness of sinful flesh, he suffered without the camp, when by the disposal of God he was taken and slain by the hands of wicked men, and when his soul endured intense agonies from the fiery justice of a righteous God: yet in the scape-goat we see him rising, and bearing the sins of all true believers into the land of forgetfulness; (Rom. viii. 33, 34.) But in how many things do these shadows fail of truly representing the substance? It was very evident "that the way into the holiest was not made ma-"nifest," when the high priest himself must enter so seldom, and so circumspectly, on pain of death. Jesus needed not to offer sacrifice for his own sin; for he was without sin. Though "the Lord caused to meet on him the ini-"quities of us all," yet he thence contracted no pollution, nor needed any purification, having perfectly expiated the whole: and that without such multiplied sacrifices, repeated every year by a succession of priests, which could never take away sins, (Heb. x. 11, 12;) for his sacrifice of infinite value sufficed at once. And feebly indeed do the holy places made with hands shadow forth the Heaven of Heavens; or the smoke of fragrant gums for a few hours in a year, his continued and meritorious advocacy. Nor are the benefits which Israel as a nation derived from this annual atonement, or the external privileges thus continued to them, at all comparable to "the "access with boldness to the throne of Grace," the mercy, the peace, the spiritual and everlasting blessings and consolations, which true believers in all ages enjoy through the atonement of the Son of God. Yet let it be fire before the LORD, that the cloud of the incenſe may cover the mercy-ſeat that is upon the teſtimony, that he die not.

14 And he ſhall take of the blood of the bullock, and ſprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-ſeat eaſtward: and before the mercy-ſeat ſhall he ſprinkle of the blood with his finger ſeven times.

15 Then ſhall he kill the goat of the ſin-offering that is for the people, and bring his blood within the vail, and do with that blood, as he did with the blood of the bullock, and ſprinkle it upon the mercy-ſeat, and before the mercy-ſeat.

16 And he ſhall make an atonement for the holy place, becauſe of the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael, and becauſe of their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins: and ſo ſhall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation that remaineth among them, in the midſt of their uncleanneſs.

17 And there ſhall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himſelf, and for his houſehold, and for all the congregation of Iſrael.

18 And he ſhall go out unto the altar that is before the LORD, and make an atonement for it; and ſhall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about.

19 And he ſhall ſprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger ſeven times, and cleanſe it, and hallow it from the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael.

20 And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he ſhall bring the live goat:

21 And Aaron ſhall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confeſs over him all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael, and all their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and ſhall ſend him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderneſs.

22 And the goat ſhall bear upon him all their iniquities, unto a land not inhabited: and he ſhall let go the goat in the wilderneſs.

23 And Aaron ſhall come into the tabernacle of the congregation, and ſhall put off the linen garments, which he put on when he went into the holy place, and ſhall leave them there.

24 And he ſhall waſh his fleſh with water in the holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering, and the burnt-offering of the people, and make an atonement for himſelf, and for his people.

25 And the fat of the ſin-offering ſhall he burn upon the altar.

26 And he that let go the goat for the ſcape-goat, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe his fleſh in water, and afterward come into the camp.

27 And the bullock for the ſin-offering, and the goat for the ſin-offering, whoſe blood was brought in to make atonement in the holy place, ſhall one carry forth without the camp, and they ſhall burn in the fire their ſkins, and their fleſh, and their dung.

28 And he that burneth them, ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe his fleſh in water, and afterward he ſhall come into the camp.

they underſtood the Scriptures, which relate to the ſubject; and in ſome caſes what variations, and additions to the divine appointments they made, which contribute little to our edification.

V. 16. An atonement, &c.] The uncleanneſs of the people, and all their manifold tranſgreſſions, contaminated even the tabernacle that was amongſt them, and all its furniture; ſo that they needed an atonement. Thus the ſinfulneſs of man's heart defiles all his ſervices, the beſt of which need the blood of Chriſt to render them acceptable.

V. 21. And, &c.] The high prieſt transferred all the tranſgreſſions of Iſrael, with all their aggravations, unto the ſcape-goat, by confeſſing them over its head, to be with it ſent away into the wilderneſs, never more to be heard of. In the latter days of the Jewiſh Church the high prieſt had his form of confeſſion; but God preſcribed none. An attentive obſervance of God's law, and of the people's conduct, with ſuitable previous conſideration, would enable him to do it much more profitably without one.

V. 26. Shall waſh his clothes, &c.] To ſhew the defiling nature of ſin, and the inſufficiency of theſe typical expiations, he who led away the ſcape-goat, and he who burnt the ſin-offering, contracted defilement and needed purification.

Doubtleſs theſe are ſo many demonſtrations, that we rightly underſtand what the New Teſtament teaches of Chriſt, when we conſider him as the Subſtance of all theſe ſhadows; and his Church the building for which all theſe ſcaffoldings were prepared. Here, in a type, we view our great High Prieſt, our Sacrifice, our Advocate, our Saviour from ſin. remembered that none but humbled souls, who mourn for, confess, forsake, and mortify their sins; who repent and bring forth fruits meet for repentance, can derive true comfort from these privileges. The proud, the carnal, the impenitent and unbelieving, have but the shadow still; a shadow of their own devising, not of God's appointing. And though Christ needed but once to suffer; yet we need constantly to look to him: and besides our daily exercise of repentance; seasons set apart from time to time to afflict our souls, to humble ourselves before God, and to mortify our sinful desires, are very profitable, and have in all ages met with the approbation of God, and been sanctioned by the example of holy men. Nor will this mar, but purify, our holy joy, and endear the Saviour, and the throne of Grace, and greatly assist us, in so looking unto Jesus, that we may not be weary or faint in our minds, either in doing his will or suffering for his sake.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII.] V. 3—9.] This rule extended to all the cattle, which were slaughtered, whilst the Israelites were in the wilderness. All of these must be presented before the door of the tabernacle, and offered as peace-offerings; and the blood must be sprinkled, and the fat burned on the altar, by the priest, with the accustomed ceremonies. But when they entered Canaan, it was only continued in respect of the sacrifices, and they might slaughter cattle for food any where. (Deut. xii. 15.) By this law honour was put upon God's appointments; and upon the person, priesthood, and sacrifice of Christ: and the idolatry was prevented, which it still seems was practised secretly, in violation of the national covenant, by means of the custom of sacrificing in all parts of the camp. This is called sacrificing to devils; for all false worship is a kind of defying those ambitious spirits, as all wickedness is rendering them service; and by both Satan aspires at being the god and prince of this world. Probably the original word translated devils, and which is supposed to be derived from the roughness of a goat, referred to the images of the false gods, which were often made in that shape. Indeed sacrificing elsewhere than at God's altar was itself a species of idolatry; and a substitution of another object of worship, besides Jehovah, who chose to be distinguished by dwelling (in the symbol of the visible glory) between the cherubims, above the mercy-seat, in the tabernacle.—The whole kingdom of Israel from the days of Jeroboam habitually violated this law: and through the reigns of most of David's successors, the kingdom of Judah was in great measure guilty of the same, "whilst the people still sacrificed upon the high places." In some cases the Lord dispensed with the letter of it, by accepting sacrifices from his prophets, which were offered elsewhere: for the typical import formed the grand intention of the ceremonial law. The worship of God at the tabernacle represented the sinner's approach to God in Christ, and through his mediation: but offering sacrifice elsewhere, was the emblem of a proud contemptuous neglect of that great salvation: (Heb. ii. 3. x. 29.) With reference therefore to that signification, this prohibition and sanction were annexed; the disregard to which would be imputed to a man, as if he had shed blood, or committed murder. If the magistrate did not punish him with death, the LORD; even that man shall be cut off from among his people.

10 And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood; I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people.

11 For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul.

12 Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you, eat blood.

13 And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, which hunteth and catcheth any beast or fowl that may be eaten, he shall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust.

14 For it is the life of all flesh, the blood of it is for the life thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh: for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof: whosoever eateth it, shall be cut off.

15 And every soul that eateth that which died of itself, or that which was torn with beasts (whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger) he shall both wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even: then shall he be clean.

16 But if he wash them not, nor bathe his flesh, then he shall bear his iniquity.

God would himself cut him off by his vengeance. Nor was the practice to be tolerated even in strangers.

V. 13. Cover it, &c.] This was to teach the people that some great mystery was implied in the atonement of blood; and to create a reverence of it: for the same reason they were forbidden to eat the animals, which died of themselves; because the blood was in them, (15, 16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should greatly reverence and value all the Lord's appointments, and it is at their peril if men contemn or change them: but the greatest danger lies in neglecting the salvation, which is in Jesus Christ. "In him dwel-"leth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily:" "He, "that honoureth not him, honoureth not the Father that "sent him:" "And he that gathereth not with him "scattereth." If then his human nature be the true temple, in which God dwells and will be worshipped: "if "his name be Emmanuel:" "if this be the true God, "and eternal life," (1 John, v. 20, 21;) may we not add, "Little children keep yourselves from idols?" Surely all, who value their own souls, should look to themselves in an age and nation, where men, called Christians, spend their lives in degrading him, whom prophets and apostles shed their blood to glorify, and "whom all the angels of God worship." For though we may offer our spiritual sacrifices in every place, yet unless we come by Christ as our Way, trust in him as our all-sufficient atonement and almighty Saviour, and worship God in him, our services will be found an abomination, and our hope a delusion. From such temptations of the enemy we should keep at the utmost distance, by a close adherence to the word of God, a constant attendance on his ordinances, and dependence on his grace; who will then preserve us from the snares of our crafty and malicious enemy. — Faith in Christ, and love to him and our brethren, will sanctify even our ordinary meals, and convert them into spiritual sacrifices.—From the latter of these prohibitions, we may learn to adore the mystery of atoning blood with deeper veneration; to use our liberty without cruelty or sensuality; and to renounce the company of those, who are yet dead in sin and the practice of dead works; to watch against the expectation of happiness from dying creatures; to rejoice in the Lord as our portion; and to glorify him as the God of our salvation. But let presumptuous careless sinners tremble; for if God "set his face against them," (10.) he will at length cut them off with terrible vengeance.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII.] V. 5. Which if a man do, &c.] By an upright obedience to the moral precepts, and a believing attendance on the appointed ordinances, of God's law, his favour and eternal life might be expected; though not as a merited recompence. But probably the Lord intended to warn the Iſraelites of the danger, not only of incurring condemnation by neglecting theſe commandments; but of reſting in their imperfect obedience, inſtead of looking through them "to Chriſt, as the end "of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that be-"lieveth." Aſſuredly Paul twice quotes this text as deſcriptive of the righteouſneſs of the law, in contradiſtinction to the righteouſneſs of faith: (Rom. x. 5. Gal. iii. 12.)

V. 6—17.] As theſe laws forbad marriage betwixt near relations; they alſo prohibited all unchaſtity betwixt them, and every approach to it. The marriage of parents and children, or grand-children, &c. in all the variations here ſpoken of, has ſomething in it at firſt glance unnatural; and would be deſtructive of all that authority and ſubordination, which are of ſuch importance to ſociety. In the marriages of nephews with aunts, ſomewhat of the ſame kind may be perceived: and it is obſervable that the marriage of uncles with their nieces is not prohibited; though from the ſuppoſed parity of the caſe, it be included in our laws. The only collateral relations, which are forbidden to marry, are brothers and ſiſters, by whole or half blood, or affinity. The caſe is different here: the firſt marriages of Adam's poſterity muſt have been of brothers and ſiſters; and therefore we cannot pronounce them immoral in themſelves. But as human nature now is, it is very expedient that thoſe, who are ſo much together in youth, ſhould by ſuch a reſtriction be taught to look upon all intercourſe as prohibited and inceſtuous; which muſt aſſiſt in keeping out temptations to evil. It is moreover deſirable, that by intermarriages relationſhip and its endearments, and benevolences ſhould be diffuſed; and an unſocial ſeparation of families prevented; which is the tendency of theſe laws. They are therefore to be conſidered either as moral in themſelves, or ſo nearly connected with other moral obligations, as to be proper to be obſerved by all mankind; and in general the wiſer Heathens have deemed ſuch marriages unlawful, and abſtained from them. (1 Cor. v. 1.)

V. 16. Of thy brother's wife, &c.] Except in the caſe of the brother dying without iſſue. As this was peculiar to the Jewiſh laws, the reſtriction is general to us.

V. 18. A wife to her ſiſter, &c.] This is variouſly interpreted: ſome conſider it as a prohibition of polygamy: others argue that it implies an allowance of it; and only prohibits 22 Thou ſhalt not lie with mankind, as with womankind: it is abomination.

23 Neither ſhalt thou lie with any beaſt to defile thyſelf therewith: neither ſhall any woman ſtand before a beaſt to lie down thereto: it is confuſion.

24 Defile not you yourſelves in any of theſe things: for in all theſe the nations are defiled which I caſt out before you.

25 And the land is defiled: therefore I do viſit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land itſelf vomiteth out her inhabitants.

28 That the land ſpue not you out alſo, when ye defile it, as it ſpued out the nations that were before you.

29 For whoſoever ſhall commit any of theſe abominations, even the ſouls that commit them, ſhall be cut off from among their people.

prohibits a man from marrying two ſiſters, as Jacob had done, to the diſquiet of himſelf and his family: and again, others ſuppoſe that it prohibits the marrying of the ſiſter of a former wife, even after her death. But as the argument againſt polygamy, under the Chriſtian diſpenſation, is not affected by its exiſtence being ſuppoſed in the Old Teſtament laws: and as it is generally determined, with propriety enough, that a man ſhould not marry the ſiſter of his deceaſed wife, any more than a woman the brother of her deceaſed huſband: ſo the ſolution ſeems to be of more difficulty than importance. Other reſtrictions of marriage, which pride, covetouſneſs, or falſe policy have deviſed, have not proved for the benefit of mankind.

V. 21. Paſs through the fire to Molech.] By this cruel ordinance, which will hereafter be ſpoken of, the worſhippers dedicated their offspring to this pretended deity, and ſuppoſed that they placed the whole family under his protection.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If we would obey God's commands, we muſt break off old cuſtoms, and renounce conformity to the world: for wherever we go, we ſhall find its maxims and obſervances in many things directly oppoſite to the divine law: yet are they enforced with an authority which rivals his; and are diſobeyed with great difficulty, and at the expence of enduring much contempt and reproach. But the broad, ſmooth, frequented paths of the world lead to deſtruction; the ways of God to life eternal: every one of his commandments are alſo good in themſelves, and conducive to the peace, comfort, and true honour of the human ſpecies; and he is as kind in what he prohibits, as in what he allows. He formed mankind for ſocial life, created them male and female, inſtituted marriage, and bleſſed it; he hath formed the regulations of it in wiſdom and love for the good of individuals, of families, and of ſociety; of the preſent, and of the ſucceeding generations. Where his laws are obſerved, the moſt important advantages ariſe from the intercourſe of the ſexes: where they are diſregarded, diſgrace, diſeaſe, and every evil thing enſue. But what a ſink of iniquity is the human heart, that it ſhould be neceſſary to prohibit ſuch deteſtable, filthy, and cruel practices, as are here mentioned! That ever it ſhould enter into the mind of rational creatures to ſerve the devil and their own luſts, with ſuch degradation, far beneath the brutes themſelves! From this polluted fountain the earth hath been filled with abominable crimes in all ages, and the very creation groans under the burden of man's iniquity: and though one land after another vomiteth out its inhabitants, as unable any longer to endure their wickedneſs; though one generation is ſwept away after another into the grave; yet ſtill the 2 Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, Ye ſhall be holy: for I the LORD your God am holy.

3 Ye ſhall fear every man his mother and his father, and keep my ſabbaths: I am the LORD your God.

4 Turn ye not to idols, nor make to yourſelves molten gods: I am the LORD your God.

5 And if ye offer a ſacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD; ye ſhall offer it, at your own will.

6 It ſhall be eaten the ſame day ye offer it, and on the morrow: and if ought remain until the third day, it ſhall be burnt in the fire.

7 And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is abominable; it ſhall not be accepted.

8 Therefore every one that eateth it ſhall bear his iniquity, becauſe he hath profaned the hallowed thing of the LORD: and that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among his people.

9 And when ye reap the harveſt of your land, thou ſhalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither ſhalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harveſt.

10 And thou ſhalt not glean thy vineyard, neither ſhalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou ſhalt leave them for the poor and ſtranger: I am the LORD your God.

11 Ye ſhall not ſteal, neither deal falſely, neither lie one to another.

12 And ye ſhall not ſwear by my name falſely, neither ſhalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD.

13 Thou ſhalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him: the wages of him that is hired, ſhall not abide with thee all night until the morning.

14 Thou ſhalt not curſe the deaf, nor put a ſtumbling-block before the blind, but ſhalt fear thy God: I am the LORD.

15 Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment; thou ſhalt not reſpect the perſon of the poor, nor honour the perſon of the mighty: but in righteouſneſs ſhalt thou judge thy neighbour.

earth is filled with ſin. Ere long it ſhall be burnt up with all its works; and "new heavens, and a new earth, in "which dwelleth righteouſneſs," ſhall ſucceed. But without we are previouſly cleanſed in the fountain of the Redeemer's blood, and have "a new heart given us, and a "new ſpirit put within us," we ſhall never find entrance there. Let us then profit by the aweful examples of vengeance recorded, and fear the threatenings denounced, in God's word: let us mortify the deeds of the body, and learn ſelf-denial: and above all, being aware of the deceitfulneſs and wickedneſs of the human heart, let us walk watchfully, and humbly dependent upon the grace of God, ſought in earneſt prayer. Then we ſhall eſcape the condemnation of the wicked, and the Lord himſelf will be our God, and our portion for ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX.] V. 2. Ye ſhall be holy, &c.] Holineſs conſiſts in ſeparation from ſin, devotedneſs to God, and conformity to his moral excellencies, which are alſo tranſcribed in his holy law. Without holineſs we cannot walk with God, or have fellowſhip with him: and though an external purity was under the law expreſſed by being holy to the Lord; yet this was but an emblem of that purity of heart, which was eſpecially intended. (Note 1 Peter, i. 13—16.)

V. 3. Ye ſhall fear, &c.] Moſt of theſe precepts rather require an attentive mind and an obedient heart in the reader, than the labour of an expoſitor. "Every man," whatever his age, wiſdom, or wealth may be, is commanded to "fear his mother," (here placed firſt) "and "his father." That is, to treat them with reſpect and tenderneſs, fearing to grieve or offend them, and reverencing their authority and commands. Children are apt to love the mother moſt, and fear the father moſt: and, when grown up, men are apt to treat the authority of their mothers with neglect, though they may be kind to them. To obviate this propenſity the precept ſeems intentionally to be thus worded, and thus connected, as equally indiſpenſable with keeping God's ſabbaths.

V. 5—8.] Many reaſons for theſe repetitions, of ſome laws more than others, might ariſe from the conduct or cuſtoms of the people, or of the ſurrounding nations.

V. 13. The wages, &c.] That is, if the perſon concerned want, or require them.

V. 14. Thou ſhalt not, &c.] The ſpirit of this law forbids ſpeaking to the diſadvantage of the abſent; reproaching and inſulting the meek; impoſing upon or giving bad counſel to the ignorant; and reviling or ridiculing men's bodily infirmities.

V. 16. A tale-bearer, &c.] The original word ſeems to imply a cheating pedlar, who trades in ſcandal, and goes from place to place bartering one ſlander for another, to the injury of all parties concerned. This infamous though common practice is connected with conſpiring, or procuring, the death of another, as if of equal malignity.

17 Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thine heart: thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour, and not ſuffer ſin upon him.

18 Thou ſhalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge againſt the children of thy people, but thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf: I am the LORD.

19 Ye ſhall keep my ſtatutes: Thou ſhalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverſe kind: Thou ſhalt not ſow thy field with mingled ſeed: neither ſhall a garment mingled of linen and woollen come upon thee.

20 And whoſoever lieth carnally with a woman that is a bondmaid betrothed to an huſband, and not at all redeemed, nor freedom given her; ſhe ſhall be ſcourged: they ſhall not be put to death, becauſe ſhe was not free.

21 And he ſhall bring his treſpaſs-offering unto the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, even a ram for a treſpaſs-offering.

22 And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him with the ram of the treſpaſs-offering before the LORD, for his ſin which he hath done, and the ſin which he hath done ſhall be forgiven him.

23 And when ye ſhall come into the land, and ſhall have planted all manner of trees for food, then ye ſhall count the fruit thereof as uncircumciſed: three years ſhall it be as uncircumciſed unto you: it ſhall not be eaten of.

24 But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof ſhall be holy, to praiſe the LORD withal.

25 And in the fifth year ſhall ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you the increaſe thereof: I am the LORD your God.

26 Ye ſhall not eat any thing with the blood: neither ſhall ye uſe inchantment, nor obſerve times.

V. 17. Thou ſhalt not hate, &c.] If any one have injured us, inſtead of harbouring reſentment, venting reproaches, or contriving revenge, we ſhould calmly and fairly reaſon the matter with him: not only that, being convinced of his fault, he may make proper acknowledgments and reparation to us; but that he may repent, and obtain forgiveneſs of God. (Notes, &c. Matt. xviii. 15—18). This ſeems the literal import of this remarkable precept: but the reaſon of it extends much further; and ſhews that it evinces a want of love to others, and may be conſtrued into hatred of them, if we ſee them commit and continue in ſin, with indifference, and without attempting in a proper manner to bring them to repent and forſake their evil courſes: and that a mild, plain, and ſeaſonable reproof is one of the beſt expreſſions of love to our brother, of which we are capable; though it be very difficult and generally unwelcome. (Pſalm cxli. 5.) It is like ſeizing a ſerpent, which is about to ſting a man to death, at the hazard of being ſtung ourſelves.

V. 18. Thou ſhalt love, &c.] This law ſeems here limited to their brethren of the houſe of Iſrael; for as they lived among the devoted Canaanites, and were required to extirpate them, they could not extend to them this law of love. This gave riſe to the narrow interpretation, which the Scribes put upon it; (Matt. v. 43.) though by looking to the 33d and 34th verſes, they might have ſeen that all other ſtrangers were included in it. The whole law, as "it relates to our duty to man," is briefly comprehended in this ſaying, (Rom. xiii. 8, 9. Gal. v. 14,) which is ſo often quoted in the New Teſtament, and ſo highly commended.—It evidently requires that we ſhould be as unwilling to injure, and as deſirous to benefit, any human being, as we are unwilling to hurt, and deſirous to do good to ourſelves: and this in relation to body, ſoul, property, character, eaſe, peace, and connections; and that we ſhould honour what is honourable, love what is lovely, commend what is commendable, excuſe what is excuſable, and compaſſionate what calls for pity, &c.; even as we would have done in our own caſe. This one rule properly obſerved would fill the world with peace and happineſs; even as full as it now is of diſcord and miſery.

V. 19. Thou, &c.] Theſe practices might be conſidered as an attempt to alter the original conſtitution of God in creation: and this prohibition ſeems to imply a commandment of ſincerity and godly ſimplicity in all we do: ſingleneſs of dependence on Chriſt; ſingleneſs of eye to the glory of God, and his acceptance and approbation; and ſingleneſs of expectation from him as our portion. To endeavour to reconcile the ſervice of God and mammon; or the pleaſures of the world and thoſe of religion: to unite works and grace in the matter of juſtification; and many other ſuch heterogeneous and unnatural commixtures may here be covertly prohibited.

V. 23—25.] This commandment might be intended to teach the people to wait patiently the Lord's time for every deſirable good, and not to yield to the eagerneſs of their natural appetites and inclinations. Thus he alſo waits for the maturity of our fruits of righteouſneſs; though our firſt attempts to glorify him may be unmeet for that purpoſe, as the fruits of theſe young trees whilſt they were to be accounted uncircumciſed.

V. 26. Uſe enchantment, &c.] Aſtrological calculations, or other attempts at prediction, or fortune-telling; the uſe of ſpells and charms for the cure of diſeaſes, &c.; with many other practices too frequent among profeſſing Chriſtians, are attempts to revive this worſhip of Satan, and ſhould be abhorred as his very ordinances; being means uſed to get help and information elſewhere, inſtead of depending on God, ſubmitting to him, and waiting for all needful good from him, in the uſe of lawful means, (31.)

27 Ye

27 Ye ſhall not round the corners of your heads, neither ſhalt thou mar the corners of thy beard.

28 Ye ſhall not make any cuttings in your fleſh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you: I am the LORD.

29 Do not proſtitute thy daughter, to cauſe her to be a whore; leſt the land fall to whoredom, and the land become full of wickedneſs.

30 Ye ſhall keep my ſabbaths, and reverence my ſanctuary: I am the LORD.

31 Regard not them that have familiar ſpirits, neither ſeek after wizards to be defiled by them: I am the LORD your God.

32 Thou ſhalt riſe up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God: I am the LORD.

33 And if a ſtranger ſojourn with thee in your land, ye ſhall not vex him.

34 But the ſtranger that dwelleth with you ſhall be unto you as one born amongſt you, and thou ſhalt love him as thyſelf; for ye were ſtrangers in the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

35 Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment, in mete-yard, in weight, or in meaſure.

36 Juſt balances, juſt weights, a juſt ephah, and a juſt hin ſhall ye have: I am the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt.

37 Therefore ſhall ye obſerve all my ſtatutes, and all my judgments, and do them: I am the LORD.

CHAP.

V. 27, 28.] Theſe were doubtleſs ſuperſtitious practices of the Heathens; and perhaps the prohibition of the next verſe has alſo relation to the very common practices of many idolaters in honour of their infamous deities.

V. 34. The, &c.] The Iſraelites were commanded to encourage ſtrangers to reſide among them, that they might learn the knowledge of God, and of his truth, law, and worſhip. Remembering the kind uſage which their fathers at firſt met with in Egypt, and how reaſonable it appeared to them, they were required to imitate it: and remembering how cruel and hard they deemed their after-treatment, they were cautioned to avoid copying ſo bad an example.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Though the Lord be rich in mercy and goodneſs, yet his perfect holineſs renders it impoſſible that we ſhould be happy in him, or that he ſhould delight in us, without we be made holy alſo: thoſe, therefore, whom he ſpecially loves, he effectually ſanctifies. To underſtand the nature of this holineſs, let us meditate on theſe moral precepts: there we ſhall learn, that it conſiſts in reverencing the majeſty and authority of God, in loving his excellency, in gratefully remembering his mercies, in delighting in his worſhip and ſervice, in ſubmitting to his will, and confiding in his power and love: and that it includes in it truth, integrity, equity, and benevolence, love to our brethren, compaſſion for the miſerable, liberality to the poor, kindneſs to ſtrangers and to enemies, and to all men, with a ſuitable regard to all relative duties; and alſo purity, chaſtity, ſobriety, and an habitual government of the appetites and paſſions, according to the commandments, and in the faith, fear, and love of God. Would we know in what manner this holineſs is to be attained, we muſt conſider the intention and meaning of the poſitive inſtitutions of the word of God; that by a believing attendance on thoſe which the New Teſtament enjoins, we may through them receive from the Redeemer's fulneſs, the ſanctifying influences of divine Grace: remembering alſo that the vanities of the world, and the ſuperſtitions of falſe religion are as much the means of ſin, as the ordinances of God are means of grace; and therefore we muſt withdraw from them to the utmoſt diſtance, if we would be the holy people of a holy God. In his holineſs he is peculiarly attentive to the poor, and if we are his people we ſhall be ſo to; and "while he gives us "all things richly to enjoy," we muſt not think that our indigent brother is to be always put off with the bareſt neceſſaries, but ſhould enable him at ſome times to taſte with us the comforts of life alſo; not deeming that waſted which he receives. This, and all other relative duties muſt ſpring from a regard to God, who both avenges the injuries done, and recompenſes the kindneſſes ſhewn to thoſe who cannot avenge or recompenſe for themſelves; and eſpecially bleſſes thoſe who reſpect their parents, and give honour to whom honour is due.—The attention of God not only reaches to groſs and ſcandalous inſtances of injuſtice, but to the petty diſhoneſty of falſe weights and meaſures: and our conſcience ought to be no leſs ſcrupulous and minute.—How prone to iniquity muſt man's heart be, when parents are capable of proſtituting their own daughters; and when ſuch vile practices, inſtead of exciting abhorrence, are readily imitated, 'till they overſpread whole nations! But though ſome crimes are more enormous than others, none can be expiated but by the blood of Chriſt, or forgiven without repentance: nor are any of God's precepts to be accounted ſmall; but we muſt ſhew our ſincerity and ſimplicity in his ſervice, by obſerving them all, by giving every part of religion its due place and proportion; and by doing all things for thoſe ends and purpoſes which he hath appointed, without neglecting, or perverting any.—If ſin be the greateſt of all evils, what need have we to be thankful to thoſe who tell us plainly of our faults, and will not ſuffer ſin upon us! But all men ſhould deteſt the conduct of thoſe who backbite and ſlander others, and rob them of their characters, when they have no power to defend themſelves.—Finally, the nearer our lives and tempers are to the precepts of God's law, the happier ſhall we be, and the happier shall we render all around us, and the better we shall adorn the gospel: let us then daily and earnestly pray, 'Lord have mercy upon us, and write all thy laws in our 'hearts we beseech thee.'

NOTES.

CHAP. XX.] V. 2—5.] Molech is supposed to have been an idol worshipped by the Ammonites and neighbouring nations, to whom they sometimes offered their children as sacrifices, according to some authors in the following manner. An image of an enormous size was made of hollow iron, which they heated with great fires beneath; and when it was sufficiently hot, they put the children into it's arms, where they were burnt to death: mean time their cries were drowned in the noise of trumpets, and of other musical instruments in abundance which were played on for that purpose. At other times the children only passed through a fire, or between two fires, and were thus devoted to this demon.—Nothing can be conceived more horrible than such practices. Nothing can more demonstrate the madness and desperate wickedness of man's heart, and the power of Satan over wicked people, than the occasion which there was of enacting such laws as this, and prohibiting parents from such cruelty to their own offspring on pain of death: except it be that, notwithstanding these laws and sanctions, numbers of Israelites were, from age to age, so infatuated as to persist in this barbarity. Committed by them, it was the highest imaginable contempt of the Name, sanctuary, and worship of Jehovah; and a shameful violation of their national covenant: if therefore, by any means, the criminal escaped the sword of the magistrate, God declared his determination to execute vengeance on him, on his family, and on all who aided and abetted this spiritual whoredom.

V. 6. Go a whoring, &c.] By this expression our former conclusion is corroborated, (Note, xix. 26.) that consulting with men or women, practising or pretending to witchcraft in any of it's forms, is a real act of idolatry, and of worshipping the devil.

V. 9. His blood shall be upon him.] They who put the offender to death would contract no guilt; he deserved his doom, and had none to blame but himself.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When neither the fear and love of God, nor regard to the state of future and eternal recompence, nor any committed an abomination; they ſhall ſurely be put to death: their blood ſhall be upon them.

14 And if a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedneſs: they ſhall be burnt with fire, both he and they; that there be no wickedneſs among you.

15 And if a man lie with a beaſt, he ſhall ſurely be put to death: and ye ſhall ſlay the beaſt.

16 And if a woman approach unto any beaſt, and lie down thereto, thou ſhalt kill the woman and the beaſt: they ſhall ſurely be put to death; their blood ſhall be upon them.

17 And if a man ſhall take his ſiſter, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, and ſee her nakedneſs, and ſhe ſee his nakedneſs, it is a wicked thing; and they ſhall be cut off in the ſight of their people: he hath uncovered his ſiſter's nakedneſs; he ſhall bear his iniquity.

18 And if a man ſhall lie with a woman having her ſickneſs, and ſhall uncover her nakedneſs, he hath diſcovered her fountain, and ſhe hath uncovered the fountain of her blood: and both of them ſhall be cut off from among their people.

19 And thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy mother's ſiſter, nor of thy father's ſiſter; for he uncovereth his near kin: they ſhall bear their iniquity.

20 And if a man ſhall lie with his uncle's wife, he hath uncovered his uncle's nakedneſs: they ſhall bear their ſin; they ſhall die childleſs.

21 And if a man ſhall take his brother's wife, it is an unclean thing: he hath uncovered his brother's nakedneſs, they ſhall be childleſs.

22 Ye ſhall therefore keep all my ſtatutes, and all my judgments, and do them; that the land whither I bring you to dwell therein ſpue you not out.

23 And ye ſhall not walk in the manners of the nations which I caſt out before you: for they committed all theſe things, and therefore I abhorred them.

24 But I have ſaid unto you, ye ſhall inherit their land, and I will give it unto you to poſſeſs it, a land that floweth with milk and honey: I am the Lord your God, which have ſeparated you from other people.

25 Ye ſhall therefore put difference between clean beaſts and unclean, and between unclean fowls and clean; and ye ſhall not make motives of reaſon, truth, decency, and the welfare of ſociety, can deter men from enormous crimes, it is needful for the magiſtrate to uſe his ſword, and by cutting off a mortified limb to prevent further miſchief to the body politic. Such examples of ſeverity when not needleſsly multiplied, are wholeſome leſſons; and the lives of individuals thus taken away prevent the ſpread of wickedneſs, and the accumulation of national guilt.—But if magiſtrates neglect their duty, and criminals evade human laws, God will ſet his face againſt them; and how then can they eſcape?—Are we ſhocked at the unnatural cruelty of theſe ancient idolaters, in thus ſacrificing their children to the devil in the form of an idol? Indeed we juſtly may. Yet alas! there are vaſt multitudes of parents in the world, who, by their pernicious inſtructions and wicked examples, and by the myſteries of iniquity into which they early initiate their children, effectually devote them to Satan's ſervice, and blindly forward their everlaſting deſtruction, in a manner not a whit leſs, if not ſtill more, to be lamented. But what an account muſt ſuch parents render to God, and what a meeting will they have with their children at the day of judgment? On the other hand let children remember, that he who curſed father or mother was ſurely put to death, with his blood upon his own head. Let adulterers hear the judgment of God reſpecting their crimes, and remember that their rejoicing in the ſlackneſs of human juſtice, and in the impunity which now emboldens them in ſin, is an expiring joy, and will probably occaſion their ſtill deeper guilt and condemnation. The ſecret and unnatural crimes, of which many are conſcious who conceal them from men, will ſoon be brought to light, and into judgment before a holy God; and criminal indulgences will ſurely iſſue in dreadful lamentations hereafter; if not mourned for with godly ſorrow and bitter remorſe in this world.—As ſuch crimes cauſed God to abhor the Canaanites, he will much more abhor them in his profeſſing people. By his word and ordinances he hath ſevered us from others, and is known by the Name of the Lord that ſanctifieth us. Let us then ſeparate ourſelves from the company and practices of the ungodly; let us attend on his ordinances, plead his promiſes, and ſeek his ſalvation, that we may be holy in reality, as well as in profeſſion; that we may learn and obſerve the difference between clean and unclean in every thing; and that the Lord may indeed be our God and portion, and we his people, in time and to eternity.

NOTES.

make your ſouls abominable by beaſt or by fowl, or by any manner of living thing that creepeth on the ground, which I have ſeparated from you as unclean.

26 And ye ſhall be holy unto me: for I the LORD am holy, and have ſevered you from other people, that ye ſhould be mine.

27 A man alſo or woman that hath a familiar ſpirit, or that is a wizard, ſhall ſurely be put to death: they ſhall ſtone them with ſtones; their blood ſhall be upon them.

CHAP. XXI.] V. 1—4.] Any perſon was rendered unclean for ſeven days by entering into the tent, where the dead body lay, (Num. xix. 14.) The prieſts therefore muſt not attend on any funeral, except on thoſe of their neareſt relations; no not that of a chief man among the people, ſo the expreſſion may be interpreted, (4.) By this reſtriction, and the prohibition of expreſſing their grief by any extravagant or ſuperſtitious tokens, they were taught to moderate their natural paſſions; and perhaps to intimate their belief of a future ſtate. (Note, 1 Theſſ. iv. 13—15.)

V. 6. Profane the name, &c.] The office of the prieſts in offering their ſacrifices, (here called the bread of their God, the proviſions of God's houſe and altar, where he, as it were, came and feaſted with his people,) would be placed in a conſpicuous light, and many would note their conduct: it behoved them therefore to be very circumſpect, leſt God and his worſhip ſhould be diſregarded through their miſconduct even in little things.

V. 7. They, &c.] The prieſts muſt not marry one who had been an harlot, though penitent; nor a woman of ſuſpicious character or ungodly; nor one who had been divorced; for it might be preſumed, that it was for ſome miſconduct. Their male children were all prieſts by birth, 'and,' ſays Mr. Henry, 'he that would ſeek a godly ſeed, 'muſt firſt ſeek a godly wife.'

V. 8. Thou ſhalt ſanctify, &c.] This ſeems addreſſed to Moſes, as a command to give proper inſtructions, and to exerciſe his authority and influence, that the prieſts might be thus preſerved from unhallowed marriages, and from every other thing inconſiſtent with their ſacred character.

V. 9. And, &c.] Such conduct in a prieſt's daughter would be highly diſgraceful to religion, and a reflection upon the parent's care of his family. This dreadful puniſhment denounced of God would not only be a reſtraint upon the children; but likewiſe a leſſon to the parents, to watch over them, to keep them out of the way of temptation, and to give them a proper education.

V. 10—15.] The eldeſt ſon of the high prieſt is ſuppoſed to have been anointed in his father's life time, if he came to a proper age, and to have acted as his deputy in caſe of ſickneſs or ceremonial uncleanneſs. Upon his death therefore the office immediately devolved upon him, and he muſt not incapacitate himſelf for performing it, either then or on any future occaſion, on any account whatever. As the immediate type of Chriſt he muſt ſhew greater ſuperiority over his natural affections, and be more on the garments, ſhall not uncover his head, nor rent his clothes:

11 Neither ſhall he go in to any dead body, nor defile himſelf for his father, or for his mother:

12 Neither ſhall he go out of the ſanctuary, nor profane the ſanctuary of his God; for the crown of the anointing oil of his God is upon him: I am the LORD.

13 And he ſhall take a wife in her virginity.

14 A widow, or a divorced woman, or profane, or an harlot, theſe ſhall he not take: but he ſhall take a virgin of his own people to wife.

15 Neither ſhall he profane his ſeed among his people: for I the LORD do ſanctify him.

16 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

17 Speak unto Aaron, ſaying, Whoſoever he be of thy ſeed in their generations, that hath any blemiſh, let him not approach to offer the bread of his God:

18 For whatſoever man he be that hath a blemiſh, he ſhall not approach: a blind man, or a lame, or he that hath a flat noſe, or any thing ſuperfluous,

19 Or a man that is broken-footed, or broken-handed;

20 Or crook-backed, or a dwarf, or that hath a blemiſh in his eye, or be ſcurvy, or ſcabbed, or hath his ſtones broken:

21 No man that hath a blemiſh of the ſeed of Aaron the prieſt, ſhall come nigh to offer the offerings of the LORD made by fire; he hath a blemiſh, he ſhall not come nigh to offer the bread of his God.

22 He ſhall eat the bread of his God, both of the moſt holy, and of the holy;

23 Only he ſhall not go in unto the vail, nor come nigh unto the altar, becauſe he hath a blemiſh; that he profane not my ſanctuaries: for I the LORD do ſanctify them.

24 And Moſes told it unto Aaron, and to his ſons, and unto all the children of Iſrael.

more circumſpect in his conduct, than the other prieſts. He muſt marry therefore a virgin, and none elſe; (Ez. xlv. 22. Rev. xiv. 4. 2 Cor. xi. 2;) and muſt not leave any ſtain on his poſterity either by his own improper marriage, or by allowing them to marry improperly.

V. 17—24.] Theſe corporal blemiſhes, though they rendered the prieſts unfit for ſome of their work, yet did not exclude them from their maintenance, or from ſubordinate ſervices, not even from inſtructing the people. They were external ſigns of the ſcandals and reproach of ſin, reſting on a man's character, (1 Tim. iii. 7,) which render even the true penitent unfit for the work of the miniſtry, until they be done away by a continued courſe of good behaviour.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As theſe prieſts were types of Chriſt, ſo all miniſters eſpecially muſt be followers of him: that their example may elucidate and corroborate their inſtructions, and teach the people in imitating them to imitate the Saviour. He was perfectly ſuperior to all natural affections; and in the buſineſs of his heavenly Father, would not be interrupted, or biaſſed even by his regard to his earthly parent. Abſolutely dead to the world, and filled with zeal for the glory of the Father and compaſſion to the ſouls of men, he was unwearied in his labours, and perſevering in his ſufferings, 'till he could ſay "It is finiſhed." Without blemiſh and ſeparate from ſinners he executed his prieſtly office on earth: and, being aſcended into heaven, he is preparing his church of redeemed ſinners, that "not having ſpot, or blemiſh, or "any ſuch thing," he may eſpouſe it as a chaſte virgin unto himſelf for ever: and he requires all his family to remember the relation in which they ſtand unto him, and to act conſiſtently. What manner of perſons then ſhould his miniſters be? Surely their characters ſhould be free from ſcandal; and their hearts from the dominion of ſin, and from the love of filthy lucre, worldly honour, and ſenſual indulgence. They ſhould be unwearied in, undiverted from, and chearful about, their work, "giving themſelves wholly "thereto." They ſhould be patient in tribulations, ſuperior to the power of their paſſions, circumſpect in their walk, cautious in their connections, and exemplary in the government of their families, (1 Tim. iii. 4—5.) Nothing is of more importance to the intereſts of religion than the unblemiſhed character, and the ſober, decent, and reſpectable conduct and demeanor of the wives and children of miniſters, (1 Tim. iii. 11. Titus i. 6.) For the people will always think themſelves authoriſed to go ſome ſteps further in conformity to the world, in compliance with its vain faſhions and cuſtoms, and in purſuit of its intereſts and pleaſures, than the miniſter and his family do; and will interpret his preaching, by their practiſing; ſuppoſing him accountable for their miſconduct, or as giving it the ſanction of his approbation.—Our God is now as holy, as when he commanded the offending daughter of a prieſt to be burnt: how then ſhould the children of miniſters tremble leſt they diſgrace their parent's character, prevent the effects of his miniſtry, and expoſe themſelves to the fierce wrath of God! Equally careful ſhould this render miniſters of their children; not giving them what is called a good education, which is commonly a worldly education,

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,
2 Speak unto Aaron, and to his ſons, that they ſeparate themſelves from the holy things of the children of Iſrael, and that they profane not my holy name in thoſe things which they hallow unto me: I am the LORD.
3 Say unto them, Whoſoever he be of all your ſeed among your generations, that goeth unto the holy things, which the children of Iſrael hallow unto the LORD, having his uncleanneſs upon him, that ſoul ſhall be cut off from my preſence: I am the LORD.
4 What man ſoever of the ſeed of Aaron is a leper, or hath a running iſſue; he ſhall not eat of the holy things, until he be clean. And whoſo toucheth any thing that is unclean by the dead, or a man whoſe ſeed goeth from him;
5 Or whoſoever toucheth any creeping thing, whereby he may be made unclean, or a man of whom he may take uncleanneſs, whatſoever uncleanneſs he hath;
6 The ſoul which hath touched any ſuch ſhall be unclean until even, and ſhall not eat of the holy things, unleſs he waſh his fleſh with water.
7 And when the ſun is down, he ſhall be clean, and ſhall afterward eat of the holy things; becauſe it is his food.
8 That which dieth of itſelf, or is torn with beaſts, he ſhall not eat to defile himſelf therewith: I am the LORD.
9 They ſhall therefore keep mine ordinance, leſt they bear ſin for it, and die therefore, if they profane it: I the LORD do ſanctify them.
10 There ſhall no ſtranger eat of the holy thing: a ſojourner of the prieſt, or an hired ſervant, ſhall not eat of the holy thing.
11 But if the prieſt buy any ſoul with his money, he ſhall eat of it, and he that is born in his houſe: they ſhall eat of his meat.
12 If the prieſt's daughter alſo be married unto a ſtranger, ſhe may not eat of an offering of the holy things.
13 But if the prieſt's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and is returned unto her father's houſe, as in her youth, ſhe ſhall eat of her father's meat: but there ſhall no ſtranger eat thereof.
14 And if a man eat of the holy thing unwittingly, then he ſhall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and ſhall give it unto the prieſt, with the holy thing.
15 And they ſhall not profane the holy things of the children of Iſrael which they offer unto the LORD; education, but training them up in ſobriety, frugality, and induſtry, at a diſtance from the diſſipations and temptations of the world, and in the knowledge and fear of God; reſtraining and correcting every evil propenſity, ſetting them a good example, and offering continual prayers for them: for the child's wickedneſs will be conſidered as the parent's reproach, as well as affliction; and frequently it is ſo, though not always.—But we are all, if Chriſtians, ſpiritual prieſts: and the miniſter is called to ſet a good example, in order that the people may imitate it. They too muſt be dead to the world and ſeparated from it; not ſorrowing, or rejoicing, deſiring, purſuing, or poſſeſſing worldly things in the ſame manner as others do; but taking the Lord for their portion, rejoicing in him continually, delighting in his ſervice, and uſing all to his glory.—Our bodily infirmities, bleſſed be God, cannot now exclude us from his heavenly glory. And they, who on many accounts may be diſqualified for the work of the miniſtry, may ſerve God with comfort in other ſituations in his church. Finally they, who without their own fault are incapable of further ſervice, muſt neither be deſpiſed nor deprived of ſuitable maintenance.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII.] V. 2. Holy things.] Theſe were the parts of the ſacrifices which were given to the prieſts, the ſhewbread, and whatever was more immediately preſented to the Lord. Some were moſt holy, to be eaten only by the prieſts in the ſanctuary: others were holy, to be eaten by them and their families in their own houſes. But the tythes, and many other perquiſites, might be diſpoſed of at their will.

V. 3. Cut off from my preſence, &c.] Some interpret this of the offender being excluded from any more officiating as a prieſt; others, of his being cut off by ſome immediate ſtroke from God.

V. 16. Or ſuffer, &c.] To eat the holy things, was either treſpaſs, when they eat their holy things; for I the LORD do ſanctify them.

17 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

18 Speak unto Aaron, and to his ſons, and unto all the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, Whoſoever he be of the houſe of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers in Iſrael, that will offer his oblation for all his vows, and for all his free-will offerings, which they will offer unto the LORD for a burnt-offering;

19 Ye ſhall offer at your own will a male without blemiſh of the beeves, of the ſheep, or of the goats.

20 But whatſoever hath a blemiſh, that ſhall ye not offer: for it ſhall not be acceptable for you.

21 And whoſoever offereth a ſacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, to accompliſh his vow, or a free-will offering in beeves, or ſheep, it ſhall be perfect to be accepted; there ſhall be no blemiſh therein.

22 Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or ſcurvy, or ſcabbed, ye ſhall not offer theſe unto the LORD, nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto the LORD.

23 Either a bullock, or a lamb, that hath any thing ſuperfluous or lacking in his parts, that mayeſt thou offer for a free-will offering; but for a vow it ſhall not be accepted.

24 Ye ſhall not offer unto the LORD that which is bruiſed, or cruſhed, or broken, or cut; neither ſhall ye make any offering thereof in your land.

25 Neither from a ſtranger's hand ſhall ye offer the bread of your God of any of theſe; becauſe their corruption is in them, and blemiſhes be in them: they ſhall not be accepted for you.

26 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

27 When a bullock, or a ſheep, or a goat, is brought forth, then it ſhall be ſeven days under the dam; and from the eighth day, and thenceforth, it ſhall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And whether it be cow or ewe, ye ſhall not kill it and her young both in one day.

29 And when ye will offer a ſacrifice of thankſgiving unto the LORD, offer it at your own will.

30 On the ſame day it ſhall be eaten up; ye ſhall leave none of it until the morrow: I am the LORD.

31 Therefore ſhall ye keep my commandments, and do them: I am the LORD.

32 Neither ſhall ye profane my holy name; but I will be hallowed among the children of Iſrael: I am the LORD which hallow you, either a preſumptuous or an unwary attempt to expiate their own guilt, inſtead of transferring it to the prieſts, as types of Chriſt.

V. 21—24.] The burnt-offerings typified Chriſt's unblemiſhed ſacrifice, and denoted the offerer's entire devotedneſs to God; the peace-offering of a vow repreſented his indiſpenſable duty: in theſe caſes the beſt alone would be accepted. But the blemiſhed animal might be offered for a free-will offering; when love for the courts and altar of God, and for his brethren, diſpoſed a man, without any previous obligations, to offer a ſacrifice and make a ſacred feaſt for his friends, for the prieſts, and for the poor.

V. 25. Neither, &c.] As an intimation of the Lord's purpoſes of kindneſs to the Gentiles, they were encouraged to offer ſacrifices to his name; but theſe were not allowed of, unleſs they were free from blemiſh.

V. 27. When, &c.] From the ſame time that the male children were dedicated to the Lord by circumciſion, the cattle were deemed meet for ſacrifice: that is, ſay the Jewiſh writers, when one ſabbath, which ſanctifies all things, muſt have paſſed over them. (Note, xii. 1—5.)

V. 28. Whether, &c.] The reaſon of this reſtriction is not very plain: it might ſeem cruel and unfeeling, yet to ſlay cattle in this manner for food ſeems not forbidden; nor thus in general to ſlaughter other creatures. But the Lord has many reaſons for his conduct, and for his commandments, of which we are not informed. The practice might be a ſuperſtitious heathen cuſtom.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilſt with gratitude we recollect that our great High-Prieſt is not liable to any incapacitating impediments to the diſcharge of his office, either habitual or incidental, but is ſuch a perfectly holy and glorious High-Prieſt, as became us; and that his one unblemiſhed ſacrifice is of perpetual and general efficacy for all who come to God through him: let us alſo remember, that the Lord requires that we reverence his Name, his truths, his ordinances, and his commandments. The man, who enters into the miniſtry, and who handles the word of God, or adminiſters his ſacraments out of covetouſneſs or ambition, whilſt he indulges in known, allowed, and habitual ſin, either openly or in ſecret; and thoſe profeſſed Chriſtians, who make religion their pretence, but gain their object; or who approach the Lord's table merely as a ſtep towards preferment, or with a heart full of allowed covetouſneſs, malice, or luſt; ſuch perſons, I ſay, preſume to eat of the holy things with their uncleanneſs upon them, and muſt anſwer for it to God. Let us then beware of hypocriſy; and both examine ourſelves and ſeek to be purified from our ſinful defilements, in the blood of Chriſt, and by his ſanctifying Spirit; that we may not profane the Name of God in theſe hallowed things; but uſe them with acceptance to his glory, and to our own benefit and comfort. And when, as his prieſts, we have feaſted at his table, let us never more defile ourſelves with the baſe pleaſures of ſin and of the world.—It is very proper that we ſhould carefully diſtinguiſh betwixt thoſe who ought, and thoſe who ought not, to eat of theſe holy things: and we ſhall find, if we carefully conſult the Scriptures, that he who attempts to expiate his own ſin, or approaches in the pride of ſelf-righteouſneſs, puts as great an affront on Chriſt, whoſe bleeding love to ſinners he profeſſes to commemorate, as he who comes to the Lord's table from the gratification of ſinful luſts. This is a ſin, which is often committed unwittingly; but muſt be repented of, if men would not bear their own iniquities, which 'is a burden too heavy 'for them' to ſupport. Nor can the miniſter, who loves the ſouls of the people, ſuffer them to continue in this dangerous deluſion; but muſt call upon them, not only to repent and forſake all their ſins; but to put their whole truſt in the atonement of Chriſt, by faith in his Name, for pardon and acceptance with God: for thus, and thus only, will the Lord ſanctify them for his peculiar people.—We muſt ſerve the Lord with the beſt of all we have, and are: yet if there be a willing mind, and an upright, humble, thankful heart, with a ſimple dependence on the unblemiſhed ſacrifice of Chriſt; our imperfect oblations will not be rejected of God, and will be uſeful to our fellow-creatures.—It is very deſirable that ſtrangers ſhould be brought acquainted with the Saviour: but we ſhould be careful, that our zeal for multiplying converts do not lead us to encourage hypocrites whoſe corruption is in them, and who will be a ſcandal to the cauſe. Even when the reaſon of the Lord's appointments doth not appear, or when we meet with many repetitions in his word; we may profitably be reminded to exerciſe humility, faith in his wiſdom, and ſubmiſſion to his authority, who deſerves from us the moſt unreſerved obedience in every thing.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII.] V. 2. The feaſts, &c.] Or the ſolemnities of the Lord, as the word is elſewhere tranſlated, (Iſaiah xxxiii. 20.) The day of atonement was a great ſolemnity, but it was a faſt.

V. 4. Ye ſhall proclaim, &c.] The prieſts were directed to give notice of the ſolemnities, and to call together the holy convocation by ſound of trumpet. (Num. x. 7—10.) —It would alſo devolve upon them to calculate the ſeaſons of the annual feaſts: and, in order that the computation by moons might coincide, as nearly as might be, with the revolutions of the ſun, proper intercalations muſt be made from time to time. For twelve revolutions of the moon want between five and ſix days of one revolution of the ſun: in the ſpace therefore of five or ſix years a whole moon muſt be added, to keep the feaſts any thing near the ſame ſeaſon of the year; as the offering of the firſt-fruits, 11 And he ſhall wave the ſheaf before the LORD, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the ſabbath the prieſt ſhall wave it.

12 And ye ſhall offer that day when ye wave the ſheaf an he-lamb without blemiſh of the firſt year for a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

13 And the meat-offering thereof ſhall be two tenth-deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the LORD for a ſweet ſavour: and the drink-offering thereof ſhall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin.

14 And ye ſhall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the ſelf-ſame day that ye have brought an offering unto your God: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout your generations, in all your dwellings.

15 And ye ſhall count unto you from the morrow after the ſabbath, from the day that ye brought the ſheaf of the wave-offering; ſeven ſabbaths ſhall be complete:

16 Even unto the morrow after the ſeventh ſabbath ſhall ye number fifty days, and ye ſhall offer a new meat-offering unto the LORD.

17 Ye ſhall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves of two tenth-deals: they ſhall be of fine flour; they ſhall be baken with leaven; they are the firſt-fruits unto the LORD.

18 And ye ſhall offer with the bread ſeven lambs without blemiſh, of the firſt year, and one young bullock, and two rams: they ſhall be for a burnt-offering unto the LORD, with their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire, of ſweet ſavour unto the LORD.

19 Then ye ſhall ſacrifice one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering, and two lambs of the firſt year for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings.

20 And the prieſt ſhall wave them with the bread of the firſt-fruits for a wave-offering before the LORD, with the two lambs: they ſhall be holy to the LORD for the prieſt.

21 And ye ſhall proclaim on the ſelf-ſame day, that it may be an holy convocation unto you: ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations.

fruits, and many other circumſtances, would require them to be. When the people were ſettled in Canaan, proclamation muſt, by one means or other, be ſent into all their tribes, that there might be no error or diſunion amongſt them.

V. 11. After the Sabbath, &c.] The ſabbath here mentioned was the day of holy convocation, or the firſt day of unleavened bread, which might or might not be the weekly ſabbath. When Chriſt was crucified, this day of holy convocation fell upon the ſabbath-day, which was therefore an high day: on the day after, that is on the day of offering the firſt-fruits, Chriſt aroſe the firſt-fruits from the dead. This at leaſt is the ſentiment of many learned men; though there is conſiderable difficulty, and ſome difference of opinion, reſpecting it. The firſt fruits, preſented to God with a ſacrifice, implied that their title to the fruits of the earth was grounded upon the gift of a reconciled God, through the ſacrifice of the Saviour who was to come; and the comfortable and ſanctified uſe of them aroſe from their devoting themſelves, and their ſubſtance, to the ſervice and glory of God through him. They alſo prefigured Chriſt, not only as the firſt-fruits from the dead, and the earneſt of the great harveſt of the reſurrection to life; but as the firſt-fruits of all the race of fallen Adam, who in human nature having ſanctified himſelf, or ſet himſelf apart, to be perfectly obedient to the precept, and to endure the penalty of the broken law of God, preſented himſelf unto the Father as the earneſt of an innumerable multitude of his brethren, who ſhould be accepted and conſecrated to God, through him. For Chriſtians alſo themſelves are a kind of firſt-fruits of God's creatures here below, (James i. 18:) and whilſt they partake of the ſanctifying influences of the Spirit as the firſt-fruits of glory, their feeble worſhip and adoration are the firſt-fruits of their eternal hallelujahs.

V. 16—21.] By the time of the feaſt of weeks, or the Pentecoſt, the barley harveſt, which was eared at the feaſt of the paſſover, would be gathered in; and the wheat harveſt ripe, and in part reaped. Of this latter the people muſt make another acknowledgment out of their habitations, as the firſt-fruits were from the field; in fine flour leavened, for food, not for ſacrifice. This was to be accompanied with burnt-offerings, a ſin-offering, and peace-offerings; all denoting their unworthineſs in themſelves, their acceptance through Chriſt, devotedneſs to God, conſequent comfortable uſe of their ſubſtance, and communion with God, and with their brethren. This feaſt is alſo ſuppoſed to have been held in remembrance of the giving of the law, fifty days after the departure of the people out of Egypt: and to have looked forward to the pouring out of the Holy Ghoſt fifty days after Chriſt's reſurrection; who having finiſhed and preſented his perfect obedience and acceptable ſacrifice, as the firſt-fruits unto the Father, through the gift of the Holy Ghoſt to the apoſtles, and by the converſion of three thouſand ſouls at once, preſented the other firſt-fruits of the Chriſtian church, as an earneſt of that harveſt of innumerable multitudes, which hath been gathering, and ſhall yet be gathered, in all ages and nations to the end of time.

V. 24.

22 And when ye reap the harveſt of your land, thou ſhalt not make clean riddance of the corners of thy field when thou reapeſt, neither ſhalt thou gather any gleaning of thy harveſt: thou ſhalt leave them unto the poor, and to the ſtranger: I am the LORD your God.

23 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

24 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, In the ſeventh month, in the firſt day of the month, ſhall ye have a ſabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation.

25 Ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein: but ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

26 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

27 Alſo on the tenth day of this ſeventh month there ſhall be a day of atonement, it ſhall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye ſhall afflict your ſouls, and offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And ye ſhall do no work in that ſame day: for it is a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before the LORD your God.

29 For whatſoever ſoul it be that ſhall not be afflicted in that ſame day, he ſhall be cut off from among his people.

30 And whatſoever ſoul it be that doeth any work in that ſame day, the ſame ſoul will I deſtroy from among his people.

31 Ye ſhall do no manner of work: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

32 It ſhall be unto you a ſabbath of reſt, and ye ſhall afflict your ſouls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, ſhall ye celebrate your ſabbath.

33 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

34 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, The fifteenth day of this ſeventh month ſhall be the feaſt of tabernacles for ſeven days unto the LORD.

35 On the firſt day ſhall be an holy convocation: ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein.

36 Seven days ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: on the eighth day ſhall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a ſolemn aſſembly, and ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein.

37 Theſe are the feaſts of the LORD, which ye ſhall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, a burnt offering, and a meat offering, a ſacrifice, and drink offerings, every thing upon his day:

38 Beſide the ſabbaths of the LORD, and beſide your gifts, and beſide all your vows, and beſide all your free-will offerings, which ye give unto the LORD.

39 Alſo in the fifteenth day of the ſeventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye ſhall keep a feaſt unto the LORD ſeven days: on the firſt day ſhall be a ſabbath, and on the eighth day ſhall be a ſabbath.

40 And ye ſhall take you on the firſt day the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye ſhall rejoice before the LORD your God ſeven days.

41 And ye ſhall keep it a feaſt unto the LORD ſeven days in the year: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in your generations; ye ſhall celebrate it in the ſeventh month.

42 Ye ſhall dwell in booths ſeven days; all that are Iſraelites born ſhall dwell in booths:

V. 24. Blowing of trumpets, &c.] (Num. x.) This feaſt ſeems to have been inſtituted on the firſt day of the ſeventh month, both becauſe the civil new year began at that time; and becauſe of the other ſolemnities obſerved in that month, which were thus announced.—The blowing of trumpets eſpecially repreſented the preaching of the goſpel; by which men are called to repent of ſin and accept of the ſalvation of Chriſt, which was ſignified by the day of atonement; and to rejoice in God, and become ſtrangers and pilgrims upon earth, which was denoted by the feaſt of tabernacles; both obſerved in this month.

V. 26—32. (Notes, &c. xvi.) The day of atonement was but five days before the feaſt of tabernacles: and though the Iſraelites were not then required to attend at the tabernacle or temple, as on the three great feaſts; yet it might be expected that many of them would come in time to be preſent at that ſolemnity alſo. All theſe meetings would tend to increaſe their acquaintance and affectionate intercourſe with each other.

V. 42. Dwell in booths, &c.] This appointment was a commemoration of Iſrael's dwelling in tents in the wilderneſs, as well as of their fathers' dwelling in tents in Canaan: to remind the nation both of the meanneſs of their origin, and the greatneſs of their deliverance. Chriſt tabernacling in human nature might alſo be prefigured: but eſpecially the believer's life on earth, as a joyful ſtranger and pilgrim, whoſe home is in heaven, whither he is daily tending, is very aptly repreſented.—I ſee no certainty, nor preciſion, in the accommodation of theſe feaſts to different periods of the church.

V. 44. The feaſts of the Lord, &c.] All of them, except that of the new moon, are here enumerated.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We ſhould not overlook the admonition of obſerving the ſabbath of the Lord, not only in public ordinances, "but in all our dwellings;" both ourſelves, and in our families: allowing our domeſtics all ceſſation from labour; and teaching them, by precept and example, to improve their leiſure; in order that their ſouls may now find reſt in Chriſt, and at length enjoy the reſt reſerved for the people of God.—We ſhould alſo learn to conſider the time employed in God's ſervice as profitably ſpent; and to eſteem his ordinances as holy feaſts, reliſhed more by the heaven-born ſoul than all other pleaſures, which it willingly renounces for the ſake of them. A day thus ſet apart for the buſineſs of religion will have ſo much and ſo important a work belonging to it, that other buſineſs muſt be poſtponed to make way for it.—Let us never forget "to honour the Lord with our ſubſtance, "and with the firſt-fruits of all our increaſe; ſo ſhall our "barns be filled with plenty, and our preſſes burſt out "with new wine." (Prov. iii. 9, 10.) And "when we "give alms of ſuch things, as we have, behold all things "are clean unto us." (Luke xi. 41.) Nor will the huſbandman ever have cauſe to complain, that he has leſs profit or comfort from his crop; becauſe, by leaving good gleanings, he hath made a little harveſt for the poor widow, or the labouring man with a large family, who have no lands or crop of their own.—In all theſe ſolemnities we ſhould look unto Jeſus, as the great ſacrifice for ſin, the true Paſchal Lamb, (Notes, Exod. xii;) the firſt-fruits unto God, our forerunner to glory; the proviſion for our ſouls; the fountain of grace, from whoſe fulneſs the Holy Spirit flows to all his people; the ſource of our joy, our heavenly hope, and our victory over the world.—But eſpecially, we have here an abſtract of the life of faith, and the walk with God.—Being called from the ſervice of Satan, and from a worldly ſenſual life, the true penitent begins his courſe with the ſprinkling of the Saviour's blood, by the exerciſe and profeſſion of faith in him.—In godly ſorrow, ſelf-denial, and bearing the croſs, whilſt he purges out the old leaven of malice and wickedneſs, he feaſts upon the paſſover before God, with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth; he taſtes the firſt-fruits of heavenly joy, and offers the firſt-fruits of heavenly adoration; yea preſents himſelf and all he has, to be as the firſt-fruits unto God, conſecrated to his glory. That law, which was given from mount Sinai, written on tables of ſtone, and lodged in the ark of the covenant (as an emblem of its being honoured in the Saviour's life and death,) he now deſires to have written in his heart, by that Spirit which was given to the apoſtles and firſt Chriſtians on the day of Pentecoſt; and he has his deſire granted, and his prayer anſwered. Still however, the trumpet of the goſpel, though a joyful ſound, often reminds him to renew his repentance, to afflict his ſoul, and to apply the atonement. And indeed they, who do not thus afflict their ſouls for ſin, ſhall be cut off from among the people, notwithſtanding the atonement and their profeſſed belief of it. But mourning for ſin makes way for heavenly joy; and from his depth of humiliation, the Chriſtian ſoars nearer heaven, and leaves the world further and further beneath. A ſtranger and pilgrim here below, his home and heart are above; where his Saviour, who once tabernacled on earth, now in human nature dwells in glory: and as his aſſurance increaſes of "a building not made with hands eternal in the hea-"vens," he becomes deſirous of departing hence, and being "with Chriſt which is far better:" for though he has holy feaſts from time to time on earth, yet they ſuffer many interruptions, and have much alloy; and he expects fulneſs of joy at God's right hand for evermore. Now may the God of all grace prepare the heart of the writer and readers of theſe obſervations, for this ſelf ſame thing, and give us the earneſt of his Spirit, through Chriſt Jeſus. Amen.

9 And it ſhall be Aaron's and his ſons, and they ſhall eat it in the holy place: for it is moſt holy unto him, of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, by a perpetual ſtatute.

12 And they put him in ward, that the mind of the LORD might be ſhewed them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV.] Ver. 5—9.] Theſe loaves of bread, one for each tribe, thus preſented before the Lord every week, and afterwards eaten by the prieſts, may typify Chriſt, as the Bread of life and the continual food of the ſouls of his people, having offered himſelf unto God for them. Or they may denote the ſervices of believers, preſented before God through him, and accepted for his ſake. Or the whole may mean the communion, betwixt our reconciled Father and his adopted children in Chriſt Jeſus; who, as it were, feaſt at the ſame table, whilſt He delights in the fruits of his Spirit in their hearts, and they are feaſted with his love. The frankincenſe placed upon each loaf for a memorial, and then burnt upon the altar (ii. 2,) may denote either the advocacy of Chriſt, or the ſweet influences of his Spirit, which are a memorial to the Lord to enſure the acceptance of the believer's perſon and ſervices. This would be a ſweet ſavour unto God, whilſt the bread would be ſerviceable to the prieſts; which applies both to the ſacrifice of Chriſt, as honourable to God and beneficial to man, and to the good works of his people. (Eph. v. 2. Phil. iv. 18.)

V. 11. Blaſphemed the name, &c.] It is ſuppoſed that, by reaſon of the diſpute betwixt this man, and the Iſraelite, he was brought before the magiſtrates, and the cauſe was by the law of God decided againſt him: and, in conſequence, that he blaſphemed, or curſed Him, before whoſe tremendous name all heaven adores and all hell trembles: the words, of the Lord, are added in the tranſlation, but with a ſort of ſolemn reverence are omitted in the original, as if the penman ſcrupled to mention whoſe name it was, that he blaſphemed. (15, 16). This blaſphemer's name is not mentioned; for he, who thus treated the holy name of God, was not diſtinguiſhed by having his vile name written in the ſacred Scripture.

V. 14. Lay their hands, &c.] As ſolemnly perſevering in their teſtimony, and as devoting the blaſphemer to death, that the guilt of ſuch a crime might not reſt on Iſrael; and avowing that his blood was upon his own head, and that all the reſt were clear.

V. 17—22.] This affair occaſioned a third interruption in giving the law, and theſe precepts are here repeated on occaſion of the conteſt with this ſon of a ſtranger; as the foregoing ſtatute was enacted on occaſion of his blaſphemy. (15, 16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Jeſus Chriſt is the Light of his church, yea the Light of the world: in and through his word He ſhines; and his miniſters in opening and alledging, in reaſoning and perſuading from the Scriptures, tend and order the light, which, by the influences of his Spirit, illuminates the minds of men unto ſalvation. But the people, who enjoy and value this light, muſt defray the expences of it, and contribute chearfully towards its ſhining brighter and wider, and continuing to future generations: and they muſt be ſpoken to for this purpoſe, if not ready of themſelves. By this light we ſhall diſcern the ſpiritual food prepared for our ſouls, firſt preſented to the Father, and then diſtributed to us; and ſhall daily, but eſpecially from ſabbath to ſabbath, 'feed on it in our hearts by faith with thankſgiving:' and in conſequence ſhall exerciſe grace well pleaſing unto the Lord, and perform good works very profitable to his people, which will again "abound in many thankſgivings "unto God," (2 Cor. ix. 11—14.) Thus we ſhall have "fellowſhip with the Father, with his Son Jeſus Chriſt," and with the brethren, by the communion of the Holy Ghoſt, and at laſt ſhall all be "preſented before the preſence "of his glory with exceeding joy."—Unequal marriages produce fatal effects even to poſterity; and contentions betw xt men often iſſue in blaſphemies againſt God: yet profligate manners give riſe to wholeſome laws. But how wicked ſoever men are, nothing muſt be done againſt them unadviſedly, or without conſulting the mind and will of God, as now completely made known to us in his holy word. And it is his will that ſtrangers, or thoſe of another religion, ſhould neither be oppreſſed, nor allowed to commit wickedneſs with impunity; but in this reſpect be treated as other members of ſociety.—Blaſphemy againſt God is in its own nature more heinous than murder; and though it frequently eſcape unpuniſhed by man, yet it ſhall by no means eſcape the righteous vengeance of God.—The ſolemn and public execution of daring offenders not only ſets a ſalutary example, but purges away national guilt; and every member of ſociety is bound to concur in his place in bringing ſuch perſons to juſtice; yet ſo that it be done with the utmoſt caution, and that they bear no teſtimony which they cannot ſtand to. What enmity againſt God muſt be in the heart of man, when curſes and blaſphemies againſt him proceed out of his mouth! And if he that deſpiſed Moſes's law died without mercy; of what puniſhment will they be thought worthy, who deſpiſe, and abuſe the goſpel of the Son of God! Let us learn then to watch againſt anger; to do no evil, but only good to all men, eſpecially to the houſehold of faith; to avoid all improper connections with wicked people, and to reverence habitually that worthy name which ſinners blaſpheme.

NOTES.

CHAP XXV.] V. 1—7.] The obſervance of this ſabbatical year might be intended to impreſs the minds of the people more forcibly with the obligation of the weekly ſabbath, and to afford all of them more leiſure for the ſtudy of the law and the buſineſs of religion; as well as give the poor ſome relaxation from their labours, and an acquiſition to their enjoyments. The people were thus taught to live by faith in God's providence, to receive their ſupply from his hand, and to be generous in the uſe of it. They were likewiſe reminded of the life of paradiſe, before ſin had laid men under the ſentence of eating bread by the ſweat of their brow; and the inſtitution might typify the believer's reſt of ſoul in Chriſt by faith on earth, and the reſt of heaven. (Note, Exod. xxiii. 11.)

V. 9.

9 Then ſhalt thou cauſe the trumpet of the jubilee to ſound, on the tenth day of the ſeventh month; in the day of atonement ſhall ye make the trumpet ſound throughout all your land.

10 And ye ſhall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it ſhall be a jubilee unto you: and ye ſhall return every man unto his poſſeſſion, and ye ſhall return every man unto his family.

11 A jubilee ſhall that fiftieth year be unto you; ye ſhall not ſow, neither reap that which groweth of itſelf in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undreſſed.

12 For it is the jubilee, it ſhall be holy unto you: ye ſhall eat the increaſe thereof out of the field.

13 In the year of this jubilee ye ſhall return every man unto his poſſeſſion.

14 And if thou ſell ought unto thy neighbour, or buyeſt ought of thy neighbour's hand, ye ſhall not oppreſs one another.

15 According to the number of years after the jubilee thou ſhalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of years of the fruits he ſhall ſell unto thee:

16 According to the multitude of years thou ſhalt increaſe the price thereof, and according to the fewneſs of years thou ſhalt diminiſh the price of it: for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he ſell unto thee.

17 Ye ſhall not therefore oppreſs one another, but thou ſhalt fear thy God; for I am the LORD your God.

18 Wherefore ye ſhall do my ſtatutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and ye ſhall dwell in the land in ſafety.

19 And the land ſhall yield her fruit, and ye ſhall eat your fill, and dwell therein in ſafety.

20 And if ye ſhall ſay, What ſhall we eat the ſeventh year? behold, we ſhall not ſow, nor gather in our increaſe:

21 Then I will command my bleſſing upon you in the ſixth year, and it ſhall bring forth fruit for three years.

22 And ye ſhall ſow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye ſhall eat of the old ſtore.

23 The land ſhall not be ſold for ever: for the land is mine, for ye are ſtrangers and ſojourners with me.

24 And in all the land of your poſſeſſion, ye ſhall grant a redemption for the land.

25 If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath ſold away ſome of his poſſeſſion, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then ſhall he redeem that which his brother ſold.

26 And

V. 9. Of the jubilee, &c.] The word rendered Jubilee denotes ſome peculiarly ſonorous or animated ſound of the ſilver trumpets; (Num. x.) This ſound was made on the evening of the great day of atonement; for the proclamation of goſpel liberty and ſalvation reſults from the ſacrifice of the Redeemer.

V. 10. Fiftieth year, &c.] This expreſſion ſeems abſolutely to decide that the year of jubilee was not the ſame with the ſeventh ſabbatical year, but the year afterwards, that is the fiftieth and not the forty-ninth year: and the only objection of any weight, which can be urged againſt this opinion, namely, the difficulty of the nation ſubſiſting for two years without ſowing their ground, is afterwards obviated, (21, 22.) This inſtitution would form a ſuitable trial of the people's faith, and afford the Lord a proper occaſion of ſhewing his power and faithfulneſs, whenever they obſerved it: but we have reaſon to think that this was but ſeldom; for we read little or nothing of the year of jubilee after it's inſtitution.

V. 13. Ye ſhall return, &c.] Thus it was provided that the lands ſhould not be alienated from the families to which they were aſſigned by lot; for they could only be diſpoſed of by leaſes, at a proportionable price, until the year of jubilee, and muſt then return either to the ſeller if living, or to his next heir. This would preſerve their tribes and families, and conſequently the genealogies, diſtinct, until the coming of the Meſſiah: it would alſo prevent the amaſſing of exorbitant wealth by ſome, and the extreme poverty of others, and promote a brotherly equality among them.

V. 20—22.] The ſabbatical year would commence from the finiſhing of the harveſt and vintage in the ſixth year: in the cloſe of the eighth year, (or the year of jubilee,) according to their civil computation, when two full years had paſſed without ſowing or reaping, the people were directed to make preparation for the harveſt in the ninth year: and it was expreſsly promiſed that the fruits of the ſixth year ſhould not only ſuffice for the ſabbatical year, but for the year of jubilee, and till the crop was ripe in the following year. As the ſixth year would bring forth fruits for three years, and not merely for two; it is evident that both the ſabbatical year and the year of jubilee were diſtinctly provided for.

V. 25—28.] The neareſt relation ought to have the firſt

26 And if the man have none to redeem it, and himſelf be able to redeem it:

27 Then let him count the years of the ſale thereof, and reſtore the overplus unto the man to whom he ſold it, that he may return unto his poſſeſſion.

28 But if he be not able to reſtore it to him, then that which is ſold ſhall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it until the year of jubilee: and in the jubilee it ſhall go out, and he ſhall return unto his poſſeſſion.

29 And if a man ſell a dwelling-houſe in a walled city, then he may redeem it within a whole year after it is ſold: within a full year may he redeem it.

30 And if it be not redeemed within the ſpace of a full year, then the houſe that is in the walled city, ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever to him that bought it throughout his generations: it ſhall not go out in the jubilee.

31 But the houſes of the villages which have no walls round about them ſhall be counted as the fields of the country; they may be redeemed, and they ſhall go out in the jubilee.

32 Notwithſtanding the cities of the Levites, and the houſes of the cities of their poſſeſſion, may the Levites redeem at any time.

33 And if a man purchaſe of the Levites, then the houſe that was ſold, and the city of his poſſeſſion ſhall go out in the year of jubilee: for the houſes of the cities of the Levites are their poſſeſſion among the children of Iſrael.

34 But the field of the ſuburbs of their cities may not be ſold; for it is their perpetual poſſeſſion.

35 And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee; then thou ſhalt relieve him: yea, though he be a ſtranger, or a ſojourner; that he may live with thee.

36 Take thou no uſury of him, or increaſe: but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee.

37 Thou ſhalt not give him thy money upon uſury, nor lend him thy victuals for increaſe.

38 I am the LORD your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, to give you the land of Canaan, and to be your God.

39 And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be ſold unto thee; thou ſhalt not compel him to ſerve as a bond-ſervant:

40 But as an hired ſervant, and as a ſojourner, he ſhall be with thee, and ſhall ſerve thee unto the year of jubilee.

41 And then ſhall he depart from thee, both he and his children with him, and ſhall return unto his own family, and unto the poſſeſſion of his fathers ſhall he return.

42 For they are my ſervants, which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: they ſhall not be ſold as bond-men.

43 Thou ſhalt not rule over him with rigour, but ſhalt fear thy God.

refuſal of the lands which were to be ſold: but if another had bought them, the kinſman had a right to redeem them at the ſame price, deducting for the time during which the purchaſer had enjoyed them: and he was in that caſe appointed to keep them for the proprietor till the year of jubilee, (Ruth iv. 6—9. Jerem. xxxii. 7—14.) Or if the ſeller afterwards were able, he might redeem his eſtate: otherwiſe it continued until the year of jubilee, when it returned to him or his family freely. This typified Chriſt, our Brother and Redeemer, who ranſoms our loſt inheritance, and will keep it for us till the day of our death, or rather till the day of judgment, when he will reſtore it free unto us: whereas that of the wicked will be forfeited for ever.

V. 29, 30.] The houſes in cities and walled towns did not mark the diſtinction of families; they were built with labour and expence, and were not the inheritance of fathers; they would alſo want continual repair, and would undergo great alterations in a little time. As theſe houſes were eſpecially uſeful for commerce, this allowance would encourage ſtrangers to come and ſettle among the Iſraelites.

V. 35—38.] (Note, Exod. xxii. 25—27.) When an Iſraelite was reduced to poverty, and lived among his brethren, as a ſtranger and ſojourner, without any poſſeſſion or inheritance, they muſt remember to treat him as a brother.

V. 39—43.] When a man was ſold for ſome debt or fraud for which he could not make reſtitution, he was liberated at the end of ſeven years. (Notes, &c. Exod. xxi. 1—6.) But if he voluntarily ſold himſelf without limitation of time; or through poverty, love to his maſter, or his wife and children, had refuſed liberty at the end of ſeven years; and perhaps if he were ſold for ſome larger debt or greater crime; he continued a ſervant for life, unleſs the year of jubilee intervened: when he was ſet at liberty, and returned with his family to his inheritance. In the mean time 44 Both thy bond-men, and thy bond-maids, which thou ſhalt have, ſhall be of the heathen that are round about you; of them ſhall ye buy bond-men and bond-maids.

45 Moreover of the children of the ſtrangers that do ſojourn among you, of them ſhall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land: and they ſhall be your poſſeſſion.

46 And ye ſhall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a poſſeſſion; they ſhall be your bond-men for ever: but over your brethren, the children of Iſrael, ye ſhall not rule one over another with rigour.

47 And if a ſojourner or ſtranger wax rich by thee, and thy brother that dwelleth by him wax poor, and ſell himſelf unto the ſtranger or ſojourner by thee, or to the ſtock of the ſtranger's family:

48 After that he is ſold he may be redeemed again; one of his brethren may redeem him:

49 Either his uncle, or his uncle's ſon, may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him, of his family, may redeem him: or, if he be able, he may redeem himſelf.

50 And he ſhall reckon with him that bought him from the year that he was ſold to him, unto the year of jubilee: and the price of his ſale ſhall be according unto the number of years; according to the time of an hired ſervant ſhall it be with him.

51 If there be yet many years behind, according unto them he ſhall give again the price of his redemption, out of the money that he was bought for.

52 And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubilee, then he ſhall count with him, and according unto his years ſhall he give him again the price of his redemption.

53 And as a yearly hired ſervant ſhall he be with him: and the other ſhall not rule with rigour over him in thy ſight.

54 And if he be not redeemed in theſe years, then he ſhall go out in the year of jubilee, both he, and his children with him.

55 For unto me the children of Iſrael are ſervants; they are my ſervants whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

time he might not be treated with rigour as a ſlave, but with kindneſs as an hired ſervant.

V. 44—46.] This might be permitted in order to typify, that none but the true Iſrael of God participate of that liberty, with which Chriſt hath made his people free. (Note, Exod. xxi. 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is a deſirable privilege to have ſeaſons of relaxation from worldly care and employments, that we may have more leiſure for the ſtudy of the Scriptures, and the concerns of our ſouls. The poor labourer alſo ſhould be allowed them; and our hearts ſhould rejoice to ſee him refreſhed from his toil, and enjoying the fruits of our liberality. All theſe ſtatutes preach to us, "to beware of covet-"ouſneſs; for a man's life conſiſteth not in the abundance "of his poſſeſſions;" to exerciſe willing dependence on God's providence for our ſupport; to be contented with, and thankful for, food and raiment; to conſider ourſelves as the Lord's tenants and ſtewards, if we have land or poſſeſſions, and to uſe them accordingly; and not only to be moderate and temperate in our enjoyments, but kind and gentle to our inferiors, ready to diſtribute, and willing to communicate to our poor brethren, after his example, "who, though he were rich, yet for our ſakes "became poor, that we through his poverty might be "rich."—He is our Redeemer, and aſſumed our nature, that he might ranſom our ſouls from Satan's bondage, into which we had been ſold for the debts we had contracted, and for the crimes we had committed; nay into which we had fooliſhly ſold ourſelves, through our love of ſinful pleaſures: and that, together with our liberty, he might alſo redeem our forfeited and waſted inheritance, without which we muſt otherwiſe have ſpent eternity in moſt miſerable want. Having paid the ranſom, and entered into poſſeſſion of the inheritance in our behalf, and in virtue of his atonement; he, by the goſpel's joyful ſound, from age to age, proclaims "liberty to the captive, and the "opening of the priſon to thoſe that are bound:" accompanying this proclamation by his powerful grace, he ſets his people at liberty, which they enjoy, together with reſt for their ſouls, and the earneſt of heaven, through faith in him and obedience to him. When they die, their ſouls aſcend to heavenly reſt; and ere long the laſt trump ſhall ſound the jubilee of the reſurrection, "the redemption "of the body," (Rom. viii. 23;) and they ſhall be then put in final and eternal poſſeſſion of the purchaſed inheritance to the praiſe of his glory: whilſt the wicked will ſink into the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever. We cannot ranſom our own ſouls, or our forfeited inheritance: but let us not neglect ſuch great ſalvation, ſo freely propoſed, and the fruit of ſuch love and of ſuch ſufferings. We cannot ranſom our fellow ſinners: but we may point out, and recommend Chriſt to them; and by his grace our holy lives may adorn his goſpel, expreſs our love and gratitude, and glorify his holy name.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI.] V. 4. I will give you rain, &c.] Theſe promiſes to Iſrael, in caſe they were obedient, ſhould be underſtood with a ſpecial reference to their national covenant. Whilſt they maintained a national regard to God's worſhip, ſabbaths, and ſanctuary, and did not turn aſide to idolatry; the Lord engaged to continue to them theſe temporal mercies and diſtinguiſhing religious advantages. (11—13.) Even among the Iſraelites, individuals were not uniformly proſperous or afflicted, according to their obedience or diſobedience: nay the contrary was ſo commonly the caſe, that the prophets and the Pſalmiſt, in ſeveral places, ſpeak of it as their temptation; (Notes, &c. Pſ. lxxiii. Jer. xii. 1, 2.) and the royal preacher declares, "that all things come alike to all," (Eccleſ. ix. 1, 2.) But national proſperity was uniformly the effect of national obedience, and national judgments the reſult of national wickedneſs. Though Iſrael was under a peculiar covenant, and no other people is governed exactly according to the ſame rule; yet ſtill God deals with nations as collective bodies: nothing but national regard to religion and righteouſneſs can enſure national proſperity; and national wickedneſs will end in the ruin of any people, eſpecially where the word of God and the light of the goſpel are afforded. Individuals will exiſt, and be judged and recompenſed, in a future world: but bodies politic will have no future exiſtence, and are therefore recompenſed in this world. Concerning individual Chriſtians, it is enough to ſay, that the Lord will afford them as much temporal proſperity, as his infinite wiſdom ſees good for them; that either from within or without, their comforts ſhall be proportioned to the ſimplicity and exactneſs of the obedience which ſprings from faith and love; and that they frequently experience the Lord's care of them and kindneſs to them in his providence, and in anſwer to their prayers, whether according to the letter of ſuch temporal promiſes or not. Their obedience has a natural tendency to exempt them from a variety of miſeries which others endure; and to ſecure them many comforts of body, mind, and circumſtances, which others enjoy not: their croſſes and afflictions are all needful and uſeful, ſanctified to them, and counterbalanced by inward peace: and upon the whole, they have even in this world, including their heavenly hope, by far the largeſt proportion of true felicity, notwithſtanding all the tribulation and perſecution they endure, the ſelf-denial they exerciſe, and the correction of their Father's love.—Theſe promiſes may alſo be conſidered as typical of the ſpiritual proſperity, health, peace, and victory, with which the Lord favours his believing people, when walking in his ways; and of the bleſſings which his church enjoys.

V. 5. Your threſhing, &c.] Large crops of corn would keep the people conſtantly employed, and conſequently well provided for all the year round. This is by ſome conſidered as an emblem of the plentiful increaſe given to the ſeed of the word, in the days of the apoſtles, and in the primitive times of Chriſtianity. (Amos ix. 13.)

V. 10. Bring forth the old, &c.] This promiſe intimated, that the people ought not, and would not be diſpoſed, to build new barns in which to hoard their plenty, as the rich fooliſh man did, (Luke xii. 15—21;) but would bring it forth to make room for the new, and ſo diſpoſe of it at a low price, or freely to the poor and needy; having a liberal heart, as well as an abundant proviſion.

V. 11,

12 And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye ſhall be my people.

13 I am the LORD your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, that ye ſhould not be their bondmen; and I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you go upright.

14 But if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all theſe commandments;

15 And if ye ſhall deſpiſe my ſtatutes, or if your ſoul abhor my judgments, ſo that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye break my covenant;

16 I alſo will do this unto you, I will even appoint over you terror, conſumption, and the burning ague, that ſhall conſume the eyes, and cauſe ſorrow of heart: and ye ſhall ſow your ſeed in vain; for your enemies ſhall eat it.

17 And I will ſet my face againſt you, and ye ſhall be ſlain before your enemies: they that hate you ſhall reign over you; and ye ſhall flee when none purſueth you.

18 And if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will puniſh you ſeven times more for your ſins.

19 And I will break the pride of your power; and I will make your heaven as iron, and your earth as braſs.

20 And your ſtrength ſhall be ſpent in vain: for your land ſhall not yield her increaſe, neither ſhall the trees of the land yield their fruits.

21 And if ye walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me; I will bring ſeven times more plagues upon you, according to your ſins.

22 I will alſo ſend wild beaſts among you, which ſhall rob you of your children, and deſtroy your cattle, and make you few in number, and your high-ways ſhall be deſolate.

23 And if ye will not be reformed by me by theſe things, but will walk contrary unto me, 24 Then will I alſo walk contrary unto you, and will puniſh you yet ſeven times for your ſins.

25 And I will bring a ſword upon you, that ſhall avenge the quarrel of my covenant: and when ye are gathered together within your cities, I will ſend the peſtilence among you; and ye ſhall be delivered into the hand of the enemy.

26 And when I have broken the ſtaff of your bread, ten women ſhall bake your bread in one oven, and they ſhall deliver you your bread again by weight: and ye ſhall eat, and not be ſatisfied.

27 And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me;

28 Then I will walk contrary unto you alſo in fury: and I, even I, will chaſtiſe you ſeven times for your ſins.

29 And ye ſhall eat the fleſh of your ſons, and the fleſh of your daughters ſhall ye eat.

30 And I will deſtroy your high places, and cut down your images, and caſt your carcaſes upon the carcaſes of your idols, and my ſoul ſhall abhor you.

31 And

V. 11, 12.] The continuance of God's ordinances amongſt the Iſraelites was the chief of theſe promiſes: but it was but a ſhadow of the privilege of every true believer; (2 Cor. vi. 18.) The expreſſion My ſoul ſhall not abhor you, is remarkable; and implies that it was an act of mere mercy that ſo holy a God did not abhor the fellowſhip of ſuch ſinners, as they were when moſt obedient; and that if they were rebellious he would abhor them. (30—44.) In the days of Joſhua, of ſome of the judges, of David and Solomon, and ſome of their ſucceſſors, theſe prophetical promiſes had their accompliſhment: and indeed this chapter and the twenty-eighth of Deuteronomy, are a prophetical abſtract of the future hiſtory of Iſrael even to this day; and it is not yet fully accompliſhed.

V. 19. Your heaven, &c.] The heavens ſhould no more give rain, than if they were iron; nor the earth any more yield corn than if it were braſs; which would effectually break the pride of Iſrael's power. This had a remarkable accompliſhment in the long famine foretold by Elijah, in the time of Ahab, (1 Kings xvii. xviii.)

V. 24. Yet ſeven times, &c.] The Lord would render their miſeries ſtill more and more dreadful: like Nebuchadnezzar's attempt, by making the furnace ſeven times hotter than uſual, to increaſe the torture of the objects of his vengeance; (Dan. iii. 19.) But this was a mere impotent fooliſh effort. While the Lord was able to accompliſh his denunciations, however aweful.

V. 29. Ye ſhall eat the fleſh, &c.] This was literally fulfilled in the ſiege of Samaria by Benhadad, (2 Kings vi. 28, 29;) in the ſiege of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, (Lam. iv. 10;) and in the laſt ſiege of Jeruſalem by the Romans, as recorded by their own hiſtorian, Joſephus.

31 And I will make your cities waſte, and bring your ſanctuaries unto deſolation, and I will not ſmell the ſavour of your ſweet odours.

32 And I will bring the land into deſolation; and your enemies which dwell therein ſhall be aſtoniſhed at it.

33 And I will ſcatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a ſword after you; and your land ſhall be deſolate, and your cities waſte.

34 Then ſhall the land enjoy her ſabbaths as long as it lieth deſolate, and ye be in your enemies' land; even then ſhall the land reſt, and enjoy her ſabbaths.

35 As long as it lieth deſolate, it ſhall reſt; becauſe it did not reſt in your ſabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it.

36 And upon them that are left alive of you, I will ſend a faintneſs into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; and the ſound of a ſhaken leaf ſhall chaſe them; and they ſhall flee, as fleeing from a ſword; and they ſhall fall when none purſueth.

37 And they ſhall fall one upon another, as it were before a ſword, when none purſueth: and ye ſhall have no power to ſtand before your enemies.

38 And ye ſhall periſh among the heathen, and the land of your enemies ſhall eat you up.

39 And they that are left of you ſhall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands; and alſo in the iniquities of their fathers ſhall they pine away with them.

40 If they ſhall confeſs their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their treſpaſs which they treſpaſſed againſt me, and that alſo they have walked contrary unto me;

41 And that I alſo have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then their uncircumciſed hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity:

42 Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and alſo my covenant with Iſaac, and alſo my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I will remember the land.

43 The

V. 31. I will not ſmell, &c.] The Lord would no longer regard the burning of incenſe, or ſacrifices, though they preſerved the form of godlineſs among the people; (Iſaiah, i. 11—15. lxvi. 3.)

V. 34, 35.] This was fulfilled in the Babyloniſh captivity; and is a prediction of the ſin of Iſrael as well as of their puniſhment, which ſhews that they ſcarcely ever regarded the appointments of the foregoing chapter; (2 Chron. xxxvi. 21.)

V. 39. In the iniquities of their, &c.] The people would lie under the load of guilt, which had been accumulating for ages, ſo long as they continued impenitent in their own tranſgreſſions, and would pine away in deſpair of redreſs till brought to repent and ſubmit to God.

V. 40. If they ſhall confeſs, &c.] Thus previouſly to the deliverance of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, we find Daniel, (and doubtleſs numbers concurred with him,) confeſſing his ſins and thoſe of his people before the Lord in deep humiliation, (Dan. ix.) And afterwards previouſly to their further eſtabliſhment in Judea, we find Ezra and Nehemiah, and the people with them, doing the ſame; and in language which ſeems evidently to refer to this chapter; (Ezra. ix. Neh. ix.)

V 41—45.] Pride, impenitency, love of ſin, and enmity to Jehovah and his worſhip, proved the hearts of the people to be uncircumciſed, that is unrenewed by divine grace: when this change took place they would be humbled before God, and acknowledge his juſtice in all their ſufferings; they would ſeek forgiveneſs from his mercy, and be diſpoſed to return to their duty: then would he remember and deal with them according to the covenant made with their fathers. A glorious accompliſhment of this part of the prophecy may hereafter be expected, in the converſion of the Jews to Chriſt: as many of the aweful threatenings of this chapter ſeem to be expreſs predictions of the preſent diſperſion of the Jews, which has continued above 1700 years; and as they ſtill are marvellouſly preſerved a diſtinct people and pine away in unrepented wickedneſs, eſpecially for the crucifixion and perſevering rejection of their promiſed Meſſiah. (Rom. xi. 25—28.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our true intereſt and happineſs conſiſt in worſhipping the Lord, giving him our hearts, hallowing his ſabbaths, reverencing his ſanctuary; and doing every thing with a believing regard to that Saviour, "in whom dwelleth all "the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily." It is true our obedience cannot juſtify us: but that obedience, which takes its riſe from repentance towards God, and faith in and love to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and conſiſts in an humble attendance on the ordinances, and an unreſerved obedience to the commandments of the Lord, will both evince that we are juſtified, and have peace with Him, and will induce peace and ſpiritual conſolations into our hearts, with the hope of glory, and the bleſſing of God upon our families and poſſeſſions: ſo that the moſt afflicted ſtate of ſuch a Chriſtian ſhall be more comfortable than any ungodly proſperity. This frame of mind is the health of the ſoul, and the antepaſt of heaven; whilſt God ſets up his tabernacle in us, and dwells and walks with us, as the ſure pledge of eternal glory. But wilful ſin, even in a believer, will grieve the Spirit, cloud this bright proſpect, and bring darkneſs and diſtreſs into the ſoul, as well as 43 The land alſo ſhall be left of them, and ſhall enjoy her ſabbaths, while ſhe lieth deſolate without them: and they ſhall accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity; becauſe, even becauſe they deſpiſed my judgments, and becauſe their ſoul abhorred my ſtatutes.

44 And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not caſt them away, neither will I abhor them, to deſtroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the LORD their God.

45 But I will for their ſakes remember the covenant of their anceſtors, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt in the ſight of the heathen, that I might be their God: I am the LORD.

46 Theſe are the ſtatutes, and judgments, and laws, which the LORD made between him and the children of Iſrael in mount Sinai, by the hand of Moſes.

chaſtiſements from his heavenly Father's rod.—Righteouſneſs alſo exalteth a nation, and, amongſt other bleſſings, enſures the continuance of the goſpel with it. But it is truly wonderful that the Lord hath not long ſince ſo abhorred this our ſinful land, as to deprive us of our other manifold mercies, and eſpecially of his deſpiſed and abuſed word of ſalvation! Sooner or later, however, ſin will be the ruin, as well as reproach of every people: and our national violation of God's ſabbaths, contempt of his ordinances, oppoſition to his truths, and abhorrence of his commandments; after our manifold rebukes, dangers, and deliverances, which were intended to bring us to repentance and upright obedience, have a very gloomy aſpect on this yet favoured land. If we continue ſtill to walk contrary to God, we may expect that he will puniſh us ſeven times, yea ſeventy times ſeven, more than thoſe late checks of which we ſo loudly complained; and that he will avenge the quarrel of his goſpel upon us: and if He who has all creatures in his hand, as miniſters of his vengeance by which to fight againſt his enemies, ſhould ſet his face againſt us, who can conjecture where it will end? Oh! that, being deeply humbled before God and ingenuouſly confeſſing our ſins, we might by a general revival of religion and reformation of manners, with the harmonious concurrence of all ranks and orders of men, avert the riſing ſtorm before it burſt upon us! But though national judgments, ſuch as deſolating war, peſtilence, and famine, be dreadful; yet they are but temporal evils: perſonal judgments alone are eternal: let every ſinner then tremble for himſelf, take warning and flee from the wrath to come.—The career of iniquity commences in contempt of God's ſtatutes, and hatred of his ſervice: ingratitude and abuſe of his mercies ſoon iſſue in the hardening of the heart under afflictions, and againſt convictions. Such perſons walking contrary to God, will find that he walks contrary to them: and as they turn their face from him; he will ſet his face againſt them, will abhor them, purſue them with one miſery after another, and at length utterly deſtroy them if they continue impenitent: and the ſtouteſt of them will find their hearts wax faint and tremble, and perceive that they have no power to reſiſt or eſcape, when he ariſes to execute vengeance.—But if at length any poor ſinner be deeply humbled, and confeſs his guilt, and cry for mercy through faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and according to the covenant made with ſinners in him; God will remember that covenant, and pardon that ſinner according to the multitude of his mercies: ſo that none need deſpair, and pine away in their iniquities. Whilſt we joyfully avail ourſelves of ſuch a precious privilege; and are confirmed in our faith by the deſolate and diſperſed condition of the diſobedient Iſraelites: let us not abhor and deſpiſe them; but compaſſionate and pray for them that they may at length be remembered according to the covenant made with their fathers. And let us take warning not to imitate their infidelity, and not to truſt in external diſtinctions. God grant that we may in this our day conſider the things which belong to our eternal peace.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII.] V. 2—8.] By theſe vows the Iſraelites upon many occaſions might be diſpoſed to dedicate themſelves, or their children, to the immediate ſervice of the Lord in the ſanctuary for life: but as the prieſts and Levites were ſet apart by God himſelf for that ſervice, and none were allowed to interfere with their work, ſuch vows were not greatly encouraged. The Gibeonites were afterwards employed "as hewers of wood and drawers of "water," for the tabernacle; and perhaps ſome others, who refuſed to redeem themſelves, performed menial ſervices, as aſſiſtants to the prieſts and Levites. Probably theſe as well as the Gibeonites, were called Nethinim, or dedicated perſons, of whom we ſhall read hereafter. Samuel was thus dedicated by his mother; (1 Sam. i. 11. 24—28;) and not being redeemed, he was employed about the old, even thy eſtimation ſhall be fifty ſhekels of ſilver, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary.

4 And if it be a female, then thy eſtimation ſhall be thirty ſhekels.

5 And if it be from five years old even unto twenty years old, then thy eſtimation ſhall be of the male twenty ſhekels, and for the female ten ſhekels.

6 And if it be from a month old even unto five years old, then thy eſtimation ſhall be of the male five ſhekels of ſilver, and for the female thy eſtimation ſhall be three ſhekels of ſilver.

7 And if it be from ſixty years old and above; if it be a male, then thy eſtimation ſhall be fifteen ſhekels, and for the female ten ſhekels.

8 But if he be poorer than thy eſtimation, then he ſhall preſent himſelf before the prieſt, and the prieſt ſhall value him: according to his ability that vowed ſhall the prieſt value him.

9 And if it be a beaſt, whereof men bring an offering unto the LORD, all that any man giveth of ſuch unto the LORD ſhall be holy.

10 He ſhall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good: and if he ſhall at all change beaſt for beaſt; then it and the exchange thereof ſhall be holy.

11 And if it be any unclean beaſt, of which they do not offer a ſacrifice unto the LORD; then he ſhall preſent the beaſt before the prieſt:

12 And the prieſt ſhall value it, whether it be good or bad; as thou valueſt it, who art the prieſt, ſo ſhall it be.

13 But if he will at all redeem it, then he ſhall add a fifth part thereof unto thy eſtimation.

14 And when a man ſhall ſanctify his houſe to be holy unto the LORD; then the prieſt ſhall eſtimate it, whether it be good or bad: as the prieſt ſhall eſtimate it, ſo ſhall it ſtand.

15 And if he that ſanctified it will redeem his houſe, then he ſhall add the fifth part of the money of thy eſtimation unto it, and it ſhall be his.

16 And if a man ſhall ſanctify unto the LORD ſome part of a field of his poſſeſſion: then thy eſtimation ſhall be according to the ſeed thereof: an homer of barley ſeed ſhall be valued at fifty ſhekels of ſilver.

17 If he ſanctify his field from the year of jubilee, according to thy eſtimation it ſhall ſtand.

18 But if he ſanctify his field after the jubilee, then the prieſt ſhall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, even unto the year of the jubilee, and it ſhall be abated from thy eſtimation.

19 And if he that ſanctified the field will in any wiſe redeem it, then he ſhall add the fifth part of the money of thy eſtimation unto it, and it ſhall be aſſured to him.

20 And if he will not redeem the field, or if the ſanctuary from his childhood, long before the age when the Levites entered upon their office. Perhaps ſome of theſe perſons, who, from ſingular affection to the tabernacle and the worſhip of God, thus dedicated themſelves or their children, were thus employed: yet in general they were allowed, or even ordered, to be redeemed, at the valuation here preſcribed; which was equitable and moderate, and was reduced ſtill lower in caſe of poverty.

V. 9—13.] If any particular animal was thus vowed unto the Lord, or dedicated to him, it was to be accounted holy, and muſt not be exchanged, but muſt be ſacrificed, provided it were fit for ſacrifice: otherwiſe it was to be valued and ſold; but at a dearer rate to him who vowed it, than to another perſon, as a rebuke for his raſhneſs and inconſtancy. Some ſuppoſe that the money was put into the treaſury of the ſanctuary to defray the expences of the worſhip there performed: others that the prieſts had it for their own uſe.—The difference between this ſingular vow and ordinary vows, ſeems to have been this: the ordinary vow was made, when in queſt of ſome bleſſing, or when ſome ſpecial mercy was received, the perſon who vowed, engaged to offer certain ſacrifices of burnt-offerings or peace-offerings unto the Lord; and it included nothing elſe. But a ſingular vow was the ſolemn dedication of a man's perſon or child, or ſome part of his property, to the immediate uſe of the ſanctuary, or of the prieſts; with ſpecial deſignation, whether fit for ſacrifice or not.

V. 16. Some part of a field, &c.] A man was not allowed to alienate his whole patrimony, but only ſome part of a field in this manner: he might expreſs his goodwill for the houſe of God, but he muſt not impoveriſh his own family.

An homer, &c.] That is, as much land as required an homer of barley to ſow it. An omer was only the tenth part of an ephah; an homer contained ten ephahs, or about eight buſhels Wincheſter meaſure.

V. 20—24.] If the perſon who dedicated his land refuſed to redeem it, it became the perpetual inheritance of the

if he have ſold the field to another man, it ſhall not be redeemed any more.

21 But the field, when it goeth out in the jubilee, ſhall be holy unto the LORD, as a field devoted: the poſſeſſion thereof ſhall be the prieſts'.

22 And if a man ſanctify unto the LORD a field which he hath bought, which is not of the fields of his poſſeſſion;

23 Then the prieſt ſhall reckon unto him the worth of thy eſtimation, even unto the year of the jubilee, and he ſhall give thine eſtimation in that day, as a holy thing unto the LORD.

24 In the year of the jubilee the field ſhall return unto him of whom it was bought, even to him to whom the poſſeſſion of the land did belong.

25 And all thy eſtimations ſhall be according to the ſhekel of the ſanctuary: twenty gerahs ſhall be the ſhekel.

26 Only the firſtling of the beaſts, which ſhould be the LORD's firſtling, no man ſhall ſanctify it: whether it be ox or ſheep, it is the LORD's.

27 And if it be of an unclean beaſt, then he ſhall redeem it according to thine eſtimation, and ſhall add a fifth part of it thereto: or if it be not redeemed, then it ſhall be ſold according to thy eſtimation.

28 Notwithſtanding, no devoted thing that a man ſhall devote unto the LORD, of all that he hath, both of man and beaſt, and of the field of his poſſeſſion, ſhall be ſold or redeemed: every devoted thing is moſt holy unto the LORD.

29 None devoted, which ſhall be devoted of men, ſhall be redeemed; but ſhall ſurely be put to death.

the prieſts; and could only be leaſed out till the year of jubilee: conſequently a man could not thus alienate ſuch land, as was by other regulations appointed to return, at the year of jubilee, to the family of which it had been bought.

V. 26, 27.] As this firſtling was the Lord's before, it would have been a ſolemn mockery to pretend to make it a matter of a ſingular vow; for it was already appointed to be ſacrificed (Exod. xiii. 15). But if an unclean firſtling were thus dedicated to God, the owner might redeem it, as another unclean firſtling, (Exod. xiii. 13.) though not with a lamb, but with it's eſtimation in money, adding to it a fifth part: and if he refuſed to redeem it, it was not killed, but ſold for the benefit of the prieſts, or the ſupport of the ſanctuary.

V. 28. Devoted, &c.] This was another kind of vow, by which perſons or things were ſolemnly devoted under a curſe to utter deſtruction, in ſome way ſuppoſed to be for the honour of God. Thus the Lord himſelf devoted the Canaanites and Amalekites in general, and Jericho in particular. Thus the Iſraelites devoted the cities of Arad to utter deſtruction (Numb. xxi. 1—3). Probably Jephtha's vow, and his performance of it, aroſe from a miſconſtruction of this law; for whatever was thus devoted was ſurely to be put to death: yet the people reſcued Jonathan, whom his father Saul had thus raſhly and unwittingly devoted (1 Sam. xiv. 24—28. 38—45).

V. 30—34.] Theſe laws would prevent the introduction of a modus in collecting the tithes, as well as impropriations; and many other methods, which have reduced almoſt to beggary the clergy in many places, for whoſe maintenance they were originally given. Whatever may be ſaid for theſe things, where tithes are only an human conſtitution; it would certainly have been wrong, where they were a divine appointment: and this law evidently teaches, that they, "who labour in the word and doctrine," have a right to a maintenance, and ought not to be defrauded of it (Numb. xviii. 20—32).

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is good to be zealouſly affected, and liberally diſpoſed to the ſervice and ſanctuary of the Lord: but conſideration ſhould precede, and prudence ſhould direct, the application: or raſh vows, and inconſtancy in performing them, will diſhonour God and embarraſs our own minds.—We ſhould dedicate ourſelves and our families to the ſervice of God, according to the ſituation of life in which the providence of God has placed us: but may we not aptly accommodate theſe "ſingular vows of perſons," to the caſe of thoſe, who, perhaps with good intention but great impropriety, are determined to leave their proper employments, and to enter into the miniſtry; or thoſe, who reſolve to bring up their children to that ſacred office, before they can know whether they will be properly qualified or diſpoſed for ſuch a ſervice? Too many ſeem to forget, that there are other ways of glorifying God, and ſerving his church, beſides preaching the goſpel: and though no general rules can be preſcribed in ſuch caſes; yet much caution, deliberation, prayer, patient waiting upon God, and ſubmiſſion to his providence, ſhould precede every perſon's leaving another calling, to enter into the miniſtry. Nor ſhould any reſolutions, or vows, be conſidered binding unleſs the Lord allow them, by giving proper qualifications and diſpoſitions, and opening a regular door of admiſſion in his 31 And if a man will at all redeem ought of his tithes, he ſhall add thereto the fifth part thereof.

32 And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatſoever paſſeth under the rod, the tenth ſhall be holy unto the LORD.

providence. Otherwiſe ſuch perſons had better endeavour themſelves, and bring up their children, to honour God by their example, influence, and ſubſtance in a private character: for the Lord to this day will chooſe his own miniſters whom he will employ in his ſanctuary, without regarding our deſires and intentions.—Our houſes, lands, cattle, and ſubſtance, muſt be poſſeſſed, and uſed to the glory of God; and a portion dedicated immediately to the ſupport of his worſhip, and to promote his cauſe, is acceptable to him, if done with a conſtant and willing mind, and in prudence and equity.—But the Lord neither approves of thoſe, who grudge his ſervants their ſupport; nor of thoſe, who injure their families, and perhaps their creditors, by an imprudent or oſtentatious profuſion in theſe reſpects; nor of thoſe who raſhly engage, and inconſtantly retract their engagements.—But let us not forget that we ſinners were devoted to utter deſtruction, as under the curſe of a broken law: and that Jeſus willingly devoted himſelf to be made a curſe for us, and taſted the bitterneſs of death, yea the wrath of the Father, for our redemption. The doom of thoſe who neglect this great ſalvation will be irreverſible; and they will be bid to "depart from "him accurſed into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil "and his angels." Let us then flee to him for refuge; and receiving the atonement, let us yield ourſelves to him, without wiſhing or deſiring a change, to be unto him a holy people, that "his name may be glorified in us," living, and dying, and for ever, "and we in him, accord-"ing to the grace of our God, and of the Lord Jeſus "Chriſt." THE FOURTH BOOK OF MOSES

NUMBERS.

This is called THE BOOK OF NUMBERS from the ſeveral numberings of the people, and of the Levites which it records. It derives this name, (as the preceding books do theirs) from the Greek Tranſlation called the Septuagint; but the names of the other books ſtand in the original Greek, while the name of this book is tranſlated into Engliſh. It begins with an account of the arrangement of the twelve tribes into the regular encampments, in four diviſions under their ſeveral leaders, around the tabernacle; the care of which and of all it's furniture was committed to the Levites, in three diviſions, according to their families. The hiſtory of Iſrael afterwards proceeds: and the ſacred penman having recorded that inſtance of rebellion, which provoked God "to ſwear in his wrath that they "ſhould not enter into his reſt;" gives an account of the continuance of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs for almoſt thirty-nine years of that period: and the whole is intermixed with many laws, moral and ceremonial. It would not conſiſt with brevity to deſcend to particulars, which will appear at the head of each chapter: ſuffice it to obſerve, that the whole is calculated to illuſtrate the ſcriptural doctrine of the juſtice, holineſs, truth, goodneſs, and mercy of God; and of the rebellion, unbelief, ingratitude, and perverſeneſs of man. The divine diſpenſations towards Iſrael, here recorded, had a tendency to humble and prove them; to diſtinguiſh betwixt betwixt the true believer and the hypocrite; to lead them all into an acquaintance with the Lord, and themſelves; to wean them from ſelf-confidence, and to induce them to truſt in God; to render them watchful, and to fill them with reverential fear of him; and ſo to train them up for the conqueſt of Canaan, and for adhering to their God and religion, when put in poſſeſſion of that promiſed land. Theſe and other ſimilar leſſons they might learn from their own rebellions, and ſubmiſſions, and from all the Lord's judgments and mercies towards them: and if we duly attend we may receive profitable inſtructions of the ſame kind, for our warning, encouragement, and eſtabliſhment in the faith.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, in the wilderneſs of Sinai, in the tabernacle of the congregation, on the firſt day of the ſecond month, in the ſecond year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, ſaying,

2 Take ye the ſum of all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, with the number of their names, every male by their poll;

3 From twenty years old and upward, all that are able to go forth to war in Iſrael: thou and Aaron ſhall number them by their armies.

4 And with you there ſhall be a man of every tribe, every one head of the houſe of his fathers.

5 And theſe are the names of the men that ſhall ſtand with you: Of the tribe of Reuben; Elizur, the ſon of Shedeur.

6 Of Simeon; Shelumiel, the ſon of Zuriſhaddai.

7 Of Judah; Nahſhon, the ſon of Amminadab.

8 Of Iſſachar; Nathaneel, the ſon of Zuar.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 2, 3.] Though the ſum total in this chapter be exactly the ſame with that which is mentioned before, (Ex. xxxviii. 25—28); the numbering cannot be the ſame: for that preceded the conſtruction of the tabernacle, which was ſet up on the firſt day of the firſt month, and the baſes were formed of the ſilver collected upon that occaſion; whereas this was ordered on the firſt day of the ſecond month. The Levites were exempted both from the tribute, and from the war, and conſequently were not included in either account. None ſeem to have been numbered, who were unſerviceable, whether through age, or infirmities; but, as "there was not one feeble perſon among their tribes," when they left Egypt, we may ſuppoſe there were very few at this time. Each tribe reckoned in even numbers, no leſs ſum than fifty being mentioned, and that but in one inſtance. Probably they either had been before, or were now, ranked under rulers of thouſands, of hundreds, and of fifties; and were regiſtered accordingly with the omiſſion of the odd numbers: and the alterations had been ſo few ſince the former account was taken, that it made no difference in the round ſum of thouſands and hundreds.—They were numbered in order to illuſtrate the divine faithfulneſs in thus increaſing the ſeed of Jacob; to prepare the way for their regular encampment and government, and for their being trained up for the wars and conqueſt of Canaan; and to aſcertain their genealogies, in order to the diviſion of the land by lot.

and they declared their pedigrees after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, by their poll.

19 As the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo he numbered them in the wilderneſs of Sinai.

20 And the children of Reuben, Iſrael's eldeſt ſon, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the numbers of the names, by their poll, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war:

21 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Reuben, were forty and ſix thouſand and five hundred.

22 Of the children of Simeon, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, thoſe that were numbered of them, according to the number of the names, by their poll, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war:

23 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Simeon, were fifty and nine thouſand and three hundred.

24 Of the children of Gad, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

25 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Gad, were forty and five thouſand ſix hundred and fifty.

26 Of the children of Judah, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

27 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Judah, were threeſcore and fourteen thouſand and ſix hundred.

28 Of the children of Iſſachar, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

29 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Iſſachar, were fifty and four thouſand and four hundred.

30 Of the children of Zebulun, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

31 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Zebulun, were fifty and ſeven thouſand and four hundred.

32 Of the children of Joſeph, namely, of the children of Ephraim, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

33 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Ephraim, were forty thouſand and five hundred.

34 Of the children of Manaſſeh, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

35 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Manaſſeh, were thirty and two thouſand and two hundred.

36 Of the children of Benjamin, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

V. 26, 27.] Jacob had given Judah the pre-eminence in his prophetical bleſſing; and that tribe was now intended to have the precedency in the encampments of Iſrael: with reference to each of theſe events, God had increaſed them more than any of their brethren; and to more than double the number of ſome of the tribes.—Ephraim and Manaſſeh, according to the ſame prophecy, were numbered as diſtinct tribes, and Ephraim had the ſuperiority, as it was foretold; and Joſeph indeed appears "a fruitful bough:" yet the tribe of Judah was more numerous, by one thouſand nine hundred men, than theſe two tribes united. (32—35).

their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

39 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Dan, were threeſcore and two thouſand and ſeven hundred.

40 Of the children of Aſher, by their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

41 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Aſher, were forty and one thouſand and five hundred.

42 Of the children of Naphtali, throughout their generations, after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

43 Thoſe that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Naphtali, were fifty and three thouſand and four hundred.

44 Theſe are thoſe that were numbered, which Moſes and Aaron numbered, and the princes of Iſrael, being twelve men: each one was for the houſe of his fathers.

45 So were all thoſe that were numbered of the children of Iſrael, by the houſe of their fathers, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war in Iſrael;

46 Even all they that were numbered were ſix hundred thouſand and three thouſand and five hundred and fifty.

47 But the Levites, after the tribe of their fathers, were not numbered among them.

48 For the LORD had ſpoken unto Moſes, ſaying,

49 Only thou ſhalt not number the tribe of Levi, neither take the ſum of them among the children of Iſrael;

50 But thou ſhalt appoint the Levites over the tabernacle of teſtimony, and over all the veſſels thereof, and over all things that belong to it: they ſhall bear the tabernacle, and all the veſſels thereof, and they ſhall miniſter unto it, and ſhall encamp round about the tabernacle.

51 And when the tabernacle ſetteth forward, the Levites ſhall take it down; and when the tabernacle is to be pitched, the Levites ſhall ſet it up: and the ſtranger that cometh nigh ſhall be put to death.

52 And the children of Iſrael ſhall pitch their tents, every man by his own camp, and every man by his own ſtandard, throughout their hoſts.

53 But the Levites ſhall pitch round about the tabernacle of teſtimony, that there be no wrath upon the congregation of the children of Iſrael: and the Levites ſhall keep the charge of the tabernacle of teſtimony.

54 And the children of Iſrael did according to all that the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo did they.

CHAP.

V. 53. No wrath, &c.] There would have been wrath upon the congregation, if the ſervice of the ſanctuary had been neglected; or if the people had indiſcriminately entered into the tabernacle, or attempted to remove it when they marched.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When we obſerve the faithfulneſs of God to his promiſes, however large, and however improbable the performance might appear; we may take courage in expecting and praying for the accompliſhment of thoſe which yet remain to be fulfilled, to ourſelves, and to the church of God. Whilſt we reflect with aſtoniſhment on the manner in which this immenſe multitude of men, beſides women, children, and ſtrangers, were fed, watered, and provided for in the wilderneſs; we may learn to truſt the Lord for ſuch things as are needful for us and our families: and when we recollect how ſoon, and in what manner their carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs; we may be reminded to revere the aweful juſtice of God; to prepare for death, which is continually making ſuch ravages; and to repent, and depart from ſin which produces ſuch fatal effects.—We here alſo ſee, as in a glaſs, the true Iſrael of God; a number, which no man can number, yet all known by name, and written in the book of life by the Captain of our ſalvation. They are his willing ſubjects, and do not "deſpiſe dominion," whether of magiſtrates or miniſters, as acting by commiſſion from him; they are likewiſe men of peace, yet marſhalled, armed, and prepared for battle: and they are daily aſſaulted, whilſt on earth, by many enemies; but under the command and protection of their Captain, they ſhall all finally, one after another, be crowned conquerors.—Nor are miniſters diſcharged from this war; but muſt be careful "not to entangle themſelves with the "affairs of this life, that they may pleaſe him, who hath "choſen them to be ſoldiers," yea, officers in his army; and they muſt learn "to endure hardſhip as good ſoldiers." If they are exempted from ſecular concerns, it is in order that they may be the more given up to the ſtudy and preaching of the word of God and prayer, which are the chief weapons of their warfare; by means of which they may endeavour to avert the wrath of God from the people. As Chriſtians are ſeparated from the world; ſo miniſters ſhould be ſtill more detached from it's purſuits and employments, and "examples to the flock;" 'not,' ſays Mr. Henry, 'affecting to ſeem greater, but aiming to be really better, 'every way better, than others.'

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 2. Far off, &c.] The Iſraelites encamped in four grand diviſions with the tabernacle in the centre; yet at ſome diſtance, as a token of awe and reverence. The ſanctuary and the ark, as pledges of Jehovah's ſpecial favour, were in reality their glory and defence; and yet they were poſted as if they had been the guardians of them, and no enemy could approach them without forcing the way through their hoſts. Though religion be indeed our protection, yet it is our duty to ſupport it's cauſe and intereſt with our whole power and ability.—This encampment is computed to have framed a moveable city of twelve miles ſquare: and many think that the door of every tent faced the tabernacle, that thence the people might worſhip towards this token of God's preſence upon a mercy ſeat.

V. 3. Judah, &c.] The tribe of Judah, from which Chriſt ſprang, was appointed to the higheſt ſtation, and under it were ranked the tribes of Iſſachar and Zebulun, Judah's younger brethren by the ſame mother.—The tribe of Reuben, Jacob's eldeſt ſon, though degraded, was appointed to lead the ſecond ſquadron, under whom ranked the tribe of Simeon his younger brother, and that of Gad, the eldeſt ſon of Zilpah, whom Leah gave to Jacob to wife.—The three tribes deſcended from Rachel formed the third ſquadron: and the three other tribes deſcended from the concubines formed the fourth, under the command of a captain of the tribe of Dan; concerning whom Jacob propheſied; "Dan ſhall judge his people, as one of the "tribes of Iſrael."—Thus the whole arrangement was formed in evident wiſdom, as well as uncontroulable ſovereignty, ſo as to conduce to peace and perpetuate relative affection.

V. 5. Nethaneel.] The remembrance of the God of their fathers, which many of the Iſraelites retained during their bondage in Egypt, appears from the names which they gave their children: As Nethaneel, which ſignifies, the gift of God: Eliab, my God a father: Elizur, my God a rock: Shelumiel, God my peace: Eliaſaph, my God hath added: Eliſhamah, my God hath heard, &c.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord by his over-ruling providence doth as certainly, though with leſs obſervation, appoint the bounds of our habitation, and our rank in life, as he did the encampments of Iſrael in the wilderneſs. It is therefore our duty and intereſt to be contented with our place, and to endeavour to occupy it in a proper manner; without attempting to deſert it, or wiſhing to change it; without envying, murmuring, ambition, or covetouſneſs.—And if he, "who "ordereth all things after the counſel of his own will," hath allotted our ſtation near to his word and ordinances; and hath given us precious faith in the divine Redeemer, we bered thereof, were forty and ſix thouſand and five hundred.

12 And thoſe which pitch by him ſhall be the tribe of Simeon: and the captain of the children of Simeon ſhall be Shelumiel the ſon of Zuriſhaddai.

13 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were fifty and nine thouſand and three hundred.

14 Then the tribe of Gad: and the captain of the ſons of Gad ſhall be Eliaſaph the ſon of Reuel.

15 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were forty and five thouſand and ſix hundred and fifty.

16 All that were numbered in the camp of Reuben were an hundred thouſand and fifty and one thouſand and four hundred and fifty, throughout their armies: and they ſhall ſet forth in the ſecond rank.

17 Then the tabernacle of the congregation ſhall ſet forward, with the camp of the Levites in the midſt of the camp: as they encamp ſo ſhall they ſet forward, every man in his place, by their ſtandards.

18 On the weſt ſide ſhall be the ſtandard of the camp of Ephraim, according to their armies: and the captain of the ſons of Ephraim ſhall be Eliſhama the ſon of Ammihud.

19 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were forty thouſand and five hundred.

20 And by him ſhall be the tribe of Manaſſeh: and the captain of the children of Manaſſeh ſholl be Gamaliel the ſon of Pedahzur.

21 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were thirty and two thouſand and two hundred.

22 Then the tribe of Benjamin: and the captain of the ſons of Benjamin ſhall be Abidan the ſon of Gideoni.

23 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were thirty and five thouſand and four hundred.

24 All that were numbered of the camp of Ephraim were an hundred thouſand and eight thouſand and an hundred, throughout their armies: and they ſhall go forward in the third rank.

25 The ſtandard of the camp of Dan ſhall be on the north ſide by their armies: and the captain of the children of Dan ſhall be Ahiezer the ſon of Ammiſhaddai.

26 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were threeſcore and two thouſand and ſeven hundred.

27 And thoſe that encamp by him ſhall be the tribe of Aſher: and the captain of the children of Aſher ſhall be Pagiel the ſon of Ocran.

28 And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were forty and one thouſand and five hundred.

we have abundant reaſon to be thankful for ſuch diſtinguiſhing grace; and though in a wilderneſs, in a cottage; in poverty, we have no reaſon, and ſurely we ſhall have no diſpoſition, to envy thoſe who poſſeſs ſtately manſions, elegant gardens, or cultivated eſtates, but have no lot in Iſrael, no inheritance in Canaan.—Our God is a God of order, and a God of peace: and commands that all things in his church ſhould be done "decently and in order;" and "that all things be done in peace."—It would be well if in attempting to accompliſh the former purpoſe, according to their own idea of decency and order, all denominations of Chriſtians had not too much loſt ſight of the latter injunction. It is deſirable that all true Chriſtians ſhould be of one judgment: but if that cannot be obtained, it is of great importance that they be of one heart: and that, like theſe four ſquadrons of Iſrael, they live at peace with one another; and in their different encampments ſurround the ark, as all of one family, embarked in one common intereſt, and marching to the ſame heavenly Canaan: and that they be upon their guard againſt the ſuggeſtions of thoſe enemies, who would perſuade them to quarrel about their different enſigns, and to draw the ſword of war againſt their brethren; inſtead of being valiant for the truth, and againſt the common enemies of their religion.—Then would the church be comely, and alſo "terrible as an army with "banners;" and not the leſs ſo for being divided into different ſquadrons, encamped or marching ſeparately; provided each diviſion vied with all the others, which ſhould be moſt zealous 33 But the Levites were not numbered among the children of Iſrael; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

7 And they ſhall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation, before the tabernacle of the congregation, to do the ſervice of the tabernacle.

8 And they ſhall keep all the inſtruments of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the children of Iſrael, to do the ſervice of the tabernacle.

zealous for the ark, and for the cauſe of God and truth; and moſt careful to "adorn the doctrine of God our Sa-"viour in all things."—Let then brotherly love continue: and may the Lord proſper the attempts, and increaſe the numbers, of thoſe who "endeavour to keep the unity of the "Spirit in the bond of peace!"

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. The generations, &c.] Moſes's ſons are not at all mentioned, being numbered among the ordinary Levites, by a ſingular inſtance of diſintereſted moderation, and ſubmiſſion to the appointment of God; who, in proof of the divine legation of his ſervant, willed him to act in a manner ſo contrary to all other eminent men: for they almoſt univerſally ſeek the advancement of their poſterity. Aaron is here firſt mentioned, becauſe the honour of the prieſthood was conferred upon him.

V. 4. In the ſight, &c.] That is, according to Aaron's direction; that, by attending to his prudent counſel, they might be preſerved from the ſin and puniſhment of their brethren. Their regular and reverential miniſtrations would afford much conſolation to Aaron after his affliction.

V. 5—10.] There was now much work to be done, and only three prieſts to perform the whole: ſome aſſiſtants were therefore neceſſary to attend on the more ordinary ſervices, whilſt they ſprinkled the blood, burnt the fat, offered incenſe, &c; eſpecially when the tabernacle was to be taken down, and carried with them in their march. That no improper perſons, none who were not called of God, might be employed, the tribe of Levi was on this occaſion ſet apart for theſe ſervices. To this tribe Moſes and Aaron belonged: it had been ſignalized by it's zeal againſt idolatry in the matter of the golden calf, and was by far the ſmalleſt tribe of all: and in ſhort it ſeemed good in the ſight of God to chooſe the Levites to approach to him, in preference to the other Iſraelites. Several intimations had before been given of this purpoſe of God: and the Levites ſeem not to have been included among thoſe who paid the half ſhekel, any more than among thoſe who were numbered for ſoldiers: but at this time it was more fully and expreſsly declared.

V. 39.

11 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,
12 And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Iſrael, inſtead of all the firſt-born that openeth the matrix among the children of Iſrael; therefore the Levites ſhall be mine,
13 Becauſe all the firſt-born are mine; for, on the day that I ſmote all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt, I hallowed unto me all the firſt-born in Iſrael, both man and beaſt; mine they ſhall be: I am the LORD.
14 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes in the wilderneſs of Sinai, ſaying, 15 Number the children of Levi, after the houſe of their fathers, by their families: every male from a month old and upward ſhalt thou number them.
16 And Moſes numbered them according to the word of the LORD, as he was commanded.
17 And theſe were the ſons of Levi, by their names; Gerſhon, and Kohath, and Merari.
18 And theſe are the names of the ſons of Gerſhon, by their families; Libni, and Shimei.
19 And the ſons of Kohath, by their families; Amram, and Izehar, Hebron, and Uzziel.
20 And the ſons of Merari, by their families; Mahli, and Muſhi: theſe are the families of the Levites, according to the houſe of their fathers.
21 Of Gerſhon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimites: theſe are the families of the Gerſhonites.
22 Thoſe that were numbered of them according to the number of all the males from a month old and upward, even thoſe that were numbered of them, were ſeven thouſand and five hundred.
23 The families of the Gerſhonites ſhall pitch behind the tabernacle weſtward.
24 And the chief of the houſe of the father of the Gerſhonites ſhall be Eliaſaph the ſon of Lael.
25 And the charge of the ſons of Gerſhon, in the tabernacle of the congregation, ſhall be the tabernacle, and the tent, the covering thereof, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.
26 And the hangings of the court, and the curtain for the door of the court, which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and the cords of it, for all the ſervice thereof.
27 And of Kohath was the family of the Amramites, and the family of the Izeharites, and the family of the Hebronites: and the family of the Uzzielites: theſe are the families of the Kohathites.
28 In the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were eight thouſand and ſix hundred, keeping the charge of the ſanctuary.
29 The families of the ſons of Kohath ſhall pitch on the ſide of the tabernacle ſouthward.
30 And the chief of the houſe of the father of the families of the Kohathites ſhall be Elizaphan the ſon of Uzziel.
31 And their charge ſhall be the ark, and the table, and the candleſtick, and the altars, and the veſſels of the ſanctuary wherewith they miniſter, and the hanging, and all the ſervice thereof.
32 And Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt ſhall be chief over the chief of the Levites, and have the overſight of them that keep the charge of the ſanctuary.
33 Of Merari was the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Muſhites: theſe are the families of Merari.
34 And thoſe that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were ſix thouſand and two hundred.
35 And the chief of the houſe of the father of the families of Merari was Zuriel, the ſon of Abihail: theſe ſhall pitch on the ſide of the tabernacle northward.
36 And under the cuſtody and charge of the ſons of Merari ſhall be the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the ſockets thereof, and all the veſſels thereof, and all that ſerveth thereto.
37 And the pillars of the court round about, and their ſockets, and their pins, and their cords.
38 But thoſe that encamp before the tabernacle toward the eaſt, even before the tabernacle of the congregation eaſtward, ſhall be

Moſes, and Aaron, and his ſons, keeping the charge of the ſanctuary for the charge of the children of Iſrael: and the ſtranger that cometh nigh ſhall be put to death.

39 All that were numbered of the Levites, which Moſes and Aaron numbered at the commandment of the LORD, throughout their families, all the males, from a month old and upward, were twenty and two thouſand.

40 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Number all the firſt-born of the males of the children of Iſrael, from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names.

41 And thou ſhalt take the Levites for me, (I am the LORD) inſtead of all the firſt-born among the children of Iſrael; and the cattle of the Levites, inſtead of all the firſtlings among the cattle of the children of Iſrael.

42 And

Ver. 39. All, &c.] The ſum total of the Levites was 22,300: but the 300 are ſuppoſed to be the firſt-born, who were already devoted to the Lord: and we muſt acknowledge a peculiar interpoſition of Providence in this near coincidence in the numbers of the Levites, and of the firſt-born.

V. 41—43.] The firſt-born in any company of people muſt in general amount to the proportion of one in eight, or ten at leaſt; whereas the number here mentioned, probably was not one in fifty of all the males young and old: for there were above 600,000 adults, and perhaps as many under age. Some ſuppoſe that none were numbered, but ſuch as were unmarried, and ſo not become heads of families themſelves; and that the firſt-born Egyptians alſo, who were deſtroyed, were thus accounted: but even theſe muſt have formed a much larger portion. I therefore accede to the ſentiment of ſuch as think that none were numbered, but thoſe who had been born after the deſtruction of the firſt-born of Egypt. This indeed ſeems the meaning of the law, (Ex. xiii. 2,) which referred to the future and not to the paſt; and it is evident that the firſtlings of the cattle were thus reckoned. Indeed 45,000 of both ſexes, which is rather more than double the firſt-born males, ſeems a vaſt number of firſt-born children within the ſpace of one year: but upon reflection we ſhall find it no ways improbable that amongſt 1,200,000 perſons of both ſexes, who were above twenty years of age, (and many might marry much younger than that age,) there ſhould be within that time near 50,000 marriages; that is about the twelfth part of the company of marriageable perſons. Eſpecially when we conſider that multitudes might be inclined to marry, when they found they were about to enjoy liberty: and when they recollected that the promiſes made to Iſrael peculiarly reſpected a very rapid increaſe of their numbers; and that there would be a very great bleſſing upon them in this reſpect in conſequence of it. If we admit of this ſolution, the firſt-born Iſraelites were all unfit for ſervice on this emergency: and as they were the heirs of their ſeveral families, when they were grown up, they probably would not have been very willing to be ſervants to the prieſts; conſequently the change would be as acceptable to the relations of thoſe who were ſet aſide, as to thoſe who were ſubſtituted in their ſtead, (xviii. 2). Yet it ſeems, that, though the Levites and their poſterity were thus dedicated to God, it was only in lieu of the firſt-born at that time amongſt them; and that the law concerning the preſentation and redemption of the firſt-born was in force through all ſucceeding generations, until the days of Chriſt, (Luke ii. 23).

V. 44—51.] Either it was determined by lot, who ſhould pay the redemption-money, and for whom the Levites ſhould be accepted; or it was paid by a common tax: or, as ſome think, they began with the eldeſt, and ſo the youngeſt not being changed paid the money.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilſt we conſider Jeſus, our great High Prieſt, appointed of the Father, and intruſted with the charge of the ſanctuary and of the whole congregation, and keeping that charge with unremitting attention, entire faithfulneſs, love, and power; we ſhould recollect, that his miniſters, as preſented unto him and miniſtering before him, have under him a ſolemn charge committed to them alſo: they are called upon to wait in their office; to ſerve the Lord with reverence, to offer no ſtrange fire, doing nothing of their own head, or in their own ſpirit; and with all diligence and fidelity to follow the inſtructions and copy the example of their Lord. But it is of the utmoſt importance that each ſhould know his own poſt and duty; that no part of the work may be neglected; and that there may be no interference, and no occaſion for envy, ambition, or diſcontent. No ſervice required by ſuch a maſter can be either mean or hard: for he will put honour upon the faithful in the loweſt ſituation, and will provide aſſiſtance where the work is too laborious. They alſo, who are not engaged in the miniſtry, have a work to do, and a charge to keep; and muſt remember that all men are the Lord's by creation, and all true Chriſtians are his by redemption; and that as the miniſtry was appointed for their benefit, they are required to ſtrengthen the hands, and to encourage the hearts, of thoſe who miniſter before the Lord in their behalf. Bleſſed be God we may all at preſent come even into the holieſt without danger of death, nay with aſſurance of acceptance and life eternal, if we come by faith in Jeſus Chriſt. Still however we muſt regret that the Lord's people form ſo ſmall a proportion of the whole multitude of mankind, and ſhould be reminded to pray for the ſending forth of more faithful miniſters; for when they are increaſed, it is a hopeful ſign that the Lord has much work to do in increaſing his church. Nor let us forget, that the children, though unfit for ſervice, were numbered as part of this holy tribe; "for of ſuch is the "kingdom of God:" but whilſt we deſire that our offſpring ſhould be numbered among the Lord's peculiar people, and excel in holineſs; let us, after the example of Moſes, be indifferent about every other diſtinction, either for them or for ourſelves.

NOTES.

42 And Moſes numbered, as the LORD commanded him, all the firſt-born among the children of Iſrael.

43 And all the firſt-born males, by the number of names, from a month old and upward, of thoſe that were numbered of them, were twenty and two thouſand two hundred and threeſcore and thirteen.

44 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

45 Take the Levites inſtead of all the firſt-born among the children of Iſrael, and the cattle of the Levites inſtead of their cattle, and the Levites ſhall be mine: I am the LORD.

46 And for thoſe that are to be redeemed of the two hundred and threeſcore and thirteen of the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael, which are more than the Levites;

47 Thou ſhalt even take five ſhekels apiece by the poll; after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary ſhalt thou take them: (the ſhekel is twenty gerahs:)

48 And thou ſhalt give the money wherewith the odd number of them is to be redeemed unto Aaron and to his ſons.

49 And Moſes took the redemption-money of them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites.

50 Of the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael took he the money; a thouſand three hundred and threeſcore and five ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary.

51 And Moſes gave the money of them that were redeemed unto Aaron and to his ſons, according to the word of the LORD, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 3. From thirty years, &c.] The people were numbered for war from twenty years of age; but the Levites were not numbered for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, till they were thirty. This however had ſpecial reference to the charge and burden of removing the tabernacle: for they entered as probationers at twenty-five, (viii. 24—26); and in David's time, when the work was more extenſive but not ſo heavy, they were admitted at twenty years old, (1 Chron. xxiii. 24—28). Jeſus Chriſt deferred entering his public work, till he was thirty years of age: John Baptiſt ſeems to have begun his miniſtry rather earlier in life. The Levites had alſo an honourable exemption from this employment after twenty years ſervice, though they were ſtill to be occupied in one way or other, (viii. 26). Theſe laws are not binding in the letter of them upon the miniſters of the goſpel; but they afford much uſeful practical inſtruction, as it will be ſeen in the proper place

V. 5. When, &c.] The law prohibiting any, but the High Prieſt one day in the year, to enter into the moſt holy place, muſt have admitted of an exception, whilſt the Iſraelites were continually removing in the wilderneſs: that exception therefore was expreſsly made, and the directions given relating to it, which muſt be religiouſly obſerved, or the ſervice could not be ſafely performed, Uzzah loſt his life, and David was greatly diſcompoſed in ſpirit, through inattention in this matter long after. (Notes, &c. 2 Sam. vi. 6—11. 1 Chron. xiii. 9—14. xv. 1, 2. 12—15.)

V. 6. The covering, &c.] Theſe coverings were not intended for ſecurity and decent reſpect, but for concealment: and they not only marked the reverence due to holy things, but the myſteriouſneſs of the things ſignified by thoſe types, and the darkneſs of that diſpenſation. Some ſuppoſe that the cloth of blue repreſented the azure firmament, which interpoſes betwixt us and the majeſty of heaven.

V. 13,

7 And upon the table of ſhew-bread they ſhall ſpread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the diſhes, and the ſpoons, and the bowls, and covers to cover withal: and the continual bread ſhall be thereon.

8 And they ſhall ſpread upon them a cloth of ſcarlet, and cover the ſame with a covering of badgers' ſkins, and ſhall put in the ſtaves thereof.

9 And they ſhall take a cloth of blue, and cover the candleſtick of the light, and his lamps, and his tongs, and his ſnuff-diſhes, and all the oil-veſſels thereof, wherewith they miniſter unto it.

10 And they ſhall put it, and all the veſſels thereof, within a covering of badgers' ſkins, and ſhall put it upon a bar.

11 And upon the golden altar they ſhall ſpread a cloth of blue, and cover it with a covering of badgers' ſkins, and ſhall put to the ſtaves thereof.

12 And they ſhall take all the inſtruments of miniſtry, wherewith they miniſter in the ſanctuary, and put them in a cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of badgers' ſkins, and ſhall put them on a bar.

13 And they ſhall take away the aſhes from the altar, and ſpread a purple cloth thereon:

14 And they ſhall put upon it all the veſſels thereof wherewith they miniſter about it, even the cenſers, the fleſh-hooks, and the ſhovels, and the baſons, all the veſſels of the altar; and they ſhall ſpread upon it a covering of badgers' ſkins, and put to the ſtaves of it.

15 And when Aaron and his ſons have made an end of covering the ſanctuary, and all the veſſels of the ſanctuary, as the camp is to ſet forward; after that, the ſons of Kohath ſhall come to bear it: but they ſhall not touch any holy thing, leſt they die. Theſe things are the burden of the ſons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation.

16 And to the office of Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt pertaineth the oil for the light, and the ſweet incenſe, and the daily meat-offering, and the anointing oil, and the overſight of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, in the ſanctuary, and in the veſſels thereof.

17 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes and unto Aaron, ſaying,

18 Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites:

19 But thus do unto them, that they may live, and not die, when they approach unto the moſt holy things; Aaron and his ſons ſhall go in, and appoint them every one to his ſervice, and to his burden.

20 But they ſhall not go in to ſee when the holy things are covered leſt they die.

21 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

22 Take alſo the ſum of the ſons of Gerſhon, throughout the houſes of their fathers, by their families:

23 From thirty years old and upward unto fifty years old ſhalt thou number them; all that enter in to perform the ſervice, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

24 This is the ſervice of the families of the Gerſhonites, to ſerve, and for burdens.

25 And they ſhall bear the curtains of the tabernacle, and the tabernacle of the congregation, his covering, and the covering of the badgers' ſkins that is above upon it, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

26 And the hangings of the court, and the hanging for the door of the gate of the court, which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and their cords, and all the inſtruments of their ſervice, and all that is made for them; ſo ſhall they ſerve.

30 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old ſhalt thou number them, every one that entereth into the ſervice to do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation.

31 And this is the charge of their burden according to all their ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation; the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and ſockets thereof,

32 And the pillars of the court round about, and their ſockets, and their pins, and their cords, with all their inſtruments, and with all their ſervice: and by name ye ſhall reckon the inſtruments of the charge of their burden.

33 This is the ſervice of the families of the ſons of Merari, according to all their ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation, under the hand of Ithamar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt.

34 And Moſes and Aaron, and the chief of the congregation, numbered the ſons of the Kohathites, after their families and after the houſe of their fathers;

35 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the ſervice for the work in the tabernacle in the congregation.

36 And thoſe that were numbered of them, by their families, were two thouſand ſeven hundred and fifty.

37 Theſe were they that were numbered of the families of the Kohathites, all that might do ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation, which Moſes and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the LORD by the hand of Moſes.

38 And thoſe that were numbered of the ſons of Gerſhon, throughout their families, and by the houſe of their fathers,

39 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the ſervice for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation;

40 Even thoſe that were numbered of them, throughout their families, by the houſe of their fathers, were two thouſand and ſix hundred and thirty.

41 Theſe are they that were numbered of the families of the ſons of Gerſhon, of all that might do ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation, whom Moſes and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the LORD.

42 And thoſe that were numbered of the families of the ſons of Merari, throughout their families, by the houſe of their fathers,

V. 44. Three thouſand, &c.] The family of Merari contained a leſs number in the whole, than either of the other families in the tribe of Levi; yet there was among them the moſt effective men, and they were charged with the heavieſt part of the ſanctuary. The ſum total of effective Levites was very ſmall, compared with that of the other tribes; yet there would be more by far than could at once be employed in this ſervice. But they might carry by turns, and eaſe one another, and thus do the whole expeditiouſly and cheerfully. They would alſo have their own tents to remove, and their own families to take care of.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Though the miniſter of the Lord muſt not ſtrive, nor war with carnal weapons; yet he muſt "enter into the hoſt of "the Lord;" and both in his perſonal conflict againſt ſin and Satan, and in doing the work of the tabernacle of the congregation, muſt boldly fight the good fight of faith with the proper weapons of his warfare, ſound doctrine, fervent prayer, and an holy example. Peculiar gravity, prudence, humility, ripeneſs of judgment and experience, meekneſs and patience are neceſſary for the proper performance of the miniſterial duty, to the glory of God, to the edification of the church, and to the ſilencing of gainſayers; and miniſters are expoſed to many temptations from the ſmiles and frowns of men, from popularity and oppoſition. It is therefore far more adviſable for thoſe who are intended for this ſacred ſervice, to ſpend much previous time in retirement, ſtudy, meditation, and communion with God; that they may come forth well prepared and after their families, were three thouſand and two hundred.

45 Theſe be thoſe that were numbered of the families of the ſons of Merari, whom Moſes and Aaron numbered, according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moſes.

46 All thoſe that were numbered of the Levites, whom Moſes and Aaron and the chief of Iſrael numbered, after their families, and after the houſe of their fathers;

47 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that came to do the ſervice of the miniſtry, and the ſervice of the burden in the tabernacle of the congregation;

48 Even thoſe that were numbered of them, were eight thouſand and five hundred and fourſcore.

49 According to the commandment of the LORD they were numbered by the hand of Moſes, every one according to his ſervice, and according to his burden: thus were they numbered of him, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

furniſhed for uſefulneſs, when a proper occaſion is afforded: than that they ſhould, by an indiſcreet and hurtful zeal, be allowed or encouraged to violate the apoſtle's rule, (1 Tim. iii. 6). From the neglect of attending to this caution, many miſchiefs have ariſen both to individuals, and to the cauſe of God. Nor is that time loſt, which is ſpent in preparation for this important ſervice. When, however, men are entered, and have health and ſtrength, and work aſſigned them, they ſhould loſe no time, nor miſs any opportunities of uſefulneſs; for ſuch loſt opportunities may be regretted, but cannot be recalled. When the faithful ſervants of God grow in years, and their natural vigour abates, they muſt not be cenſured, if they labour not ſo much as they formerly did, eſpecially in thoſe ſervices which require bodily exertion. Even if it pleaſe God to lay them quite aſide by ſickneſs and infirmity, they may ſtill ſerve the church of God by their prayers, and examples of faith, patience, and obedience; and they are ſtill entitled to reſpect, and maintenance from it. They ought not indeed, and will not deſire, to ceaſe from labour whilſt they are capable of it: but they muſt not murmur, if they are thus diſcharged, or if they ſee others "increaſe whilſt they decreaſe." For the Lord will do his work by a ſucceſſion of ſervants; and he will ſhew them all in their turns that he can do without them; that the work is all in his hand; that while he employs them, he does not ſtand in need of them; and that he can eaſily ſend out others in their ſtead when they are no longer ſerviceable.—Though we are not under the comparative obſcurity and ſeverity of the Moſaic diſpenſation; yet we ſhould remember that heavenly things muſt be treated with reverence, and not curiouſly, contemptuouſly, or preſumptuouſly enquired into. Nor is this only to be noted, in regard to the greater and more aweful myſteries of religion, but with reſpect to every thing pertaining to it; for it is very dangerous to attempt being wiſe above what is written, or to intrude into thoſe things over which God hath purpoſely thrown a vail. And the miniſters of God, and thoſe who have attained to a ſuperior degree of influence, or authority, ſhould caution and hinder their juniors, or the people, from ſuch intruſion. Indeed the rule holds good in all things: we ought to prevent others from committing ſin to the utmoſt of our ability, and as far as conſiſts with other relative duties; and we are acceſſary to the guilt and the ruin of thoſe who periſh through our neglect. But though the Lord is great and holy, and vengeance belongeth unto him; and though we are mean, polluted, and guilty creatures; we may yet approach him with ſafety, comfort, and confidence, in the way which he hath opened, in the means which he hath appointed, and according to the directions which he hath preſcribed: but not otherwiſe.—In this moveable world changes await us; but wherever we remove, we muſt be ſure to take our God and religion with us, to prefer his houſe and worſhip to our temporal intereſts, and to ſerve him with the prime of our health and ſtrength.—Ere long this earthly houſe of our tabernacle will be taken down: but if it hath been an habitation of God through the Spirit; this great and ſolemn removal will be all under the hand of Jeſus, our merciful High Prieſt; he will give his angels a charge to convey our ſouls inviſibly to glory; and all the conſtituent parts of the tabernacle ſhall, by his power, be brought together to heaven, and there raiſed up again incorruptible, immortal, and glorious; and ſo ſhall we be ever with the Lord; therefore let us quicken and comfort ourſelves and each other with theſe words. V. 6.

they defile not their camps, in the midſt whereof I dwell.

4 And the children of Iſrael did ſo, and put them out without the camp: as the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſo did the children of Iſrael.

5 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

6 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, When a man or woman ſhall commit any ſin that men commit, to do a treſpaſs againſt the LORD, and that perſon be guilty;

7 Then they ſhall confeſs their ſin which they have done; and he ſhall recompenſe his treſpaſs with the principal thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him againſt whom he hath treſpaſſed.

8 But if the man have no kinſman to recompenſe the treſpaſs unto, let the treſpaſs be recompenſed unto the LORD, even to the prieſt, beſide the ram of the atonement whereby an atonement ſhall be made for him.

9 And every offering of all the holy things of the children of Iſrael, which they bring unto the prieſt, ſhall be his.

10 And every man's hallowed things ſhall be his: whatſoever any man giveth the prieſt, it ſhall be his.

11 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

12 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, If any man's wife go aſide, and commit a treſpaſs againſt him,

13 And a man lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her huſband, and be kept cloſe, and ſhe be defiled, and there be no witneſs againſt her, neither ſhe be taken with the manner;

14 And the ſpirit of jealouſy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and ſhe be defiled; or if the ſpirit of jealouſy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and ſhe be not defiled;

15 Then ſhall the man bring his wife unto the prieſt, and he ſhall bring her offering for her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley-meal;

V. 6. That men, &c.] Theſe words intimate that men are very prone to acts of fraud and diſhoneſty, and that they are very common among them; though every one of them be "a treſpaſs againſt the Lord," (Lev. vi. 1—7.)

V. 8. If the man, &c.] If the perſon injured were dead, or removed to a great diſtance, and had left no near relation to whom the reſtitution might properly be made; the prieſt was appointed to receive it, when the criminal offered the treſpaſs-offering. Doubtleſs real poverty would excuſe a man from making reſtitution: yet this exception is not made; for men are ready enough to find out excuſes for themſelves, where their own intereſt is concerned. They therefore who eſtabliſh general ſcriptural rules of duty, ſhould not be cenſured though they mention not every particular exception; for they are warranted in doing ſo by the word of God.—This law ſhews the abſolute neceſſity of reſtitution in one form or other, to the injured perſon, to his relations, to the poor, or to pious uſes; for, as Mr. Henry obſerves, 'It is certain, while that, which is 'got by injuſtice, is knowingly retained in the hands, the 'guilt of the injuſtice remains upon the conſcience, and is 'not purged by ſacrifice or offering, prayers or tears; for 'it is one and the ſame continued act of ſin perſiſted in.' Some ſay, that this doctrine tends to embarraſs tender conſciences: but be that as it will, it is the doctrine of right reaſon, and of the word of God; and it ſeems rather calculated to detect hypocrites, and to direct the tender conſcience to a proper conduct, which ſpringing from faith in Chriſt will make way for inward peace.

V. 9, 10.] This would encourage and recompenſe the prieſts' conſtant attendance on their work: for it is God's command, (though ſeldom man's rule) that the miniſter, who does the moſt work in due manner, ſhould have the beſt maintenance.

V. 12. If any man's wife, &c.] This remarkable law would be a powerful preſervative to the wives in Iſrael in the hour of temptation, when opportunity, importunity, and ſecrecy were combined; and would alſo induce them to watch againſt all occaſions of exciting ſuſpicion in the breaſts of their huſbands. On the other hand it would prevent cruel treatment, which ſuch ſuſpicions might occaſion, "through the hardneſs of their hearts," when the crime could not be proved, nor the rage of jealouſy allayed: and it would leſſen the nnmber of haſty divorces. It would alſo prevent the guilty from eſcaping with impunity, and the innocent from continuing under injurious ſuſpicions; and in many ways ſubſerve the intereſts of purity and of domeſtic peace, both by always hanging over the heads of the perſons concerned, as it were, for their warning; and by being at ſome times carried into execution.

V. 13. No witneſs, &c.] The adulterer and adultereſs were both ordered to be put to death; when they were detected and the fact proved, (Lev. xx. 10): but when the huſband entertained ſuſpicions, and could not bring proof, he was allowed, and the wife was called upon, to make this ſolemn appeal to an heart-ſearching God.

V. 15. Barley-meal, &c.] This coarſe offering, without oil or frankincenſe, implied the baſeneſs of the crime of which the woman was ſuſpected, and the mournful ſtate of the family. It was a memorial, as ſolemnly referring the deciſion to the Lord, and calling upon him to bring the culprit's iniquity to remembrance, and to puniſh it, in caſe ſhe were guilty.

V. 17.

meal; he ſhall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincenſe thereon; for it is an offering of jealouſy, an offering of memorial, bringing iniquity to remembrance.

16 And the prieſt ſhall bring her near, and ſet her before the LORD.

17 And the prieſt ſhall take holy water in an earthen veſſel; and of the duſt that is in the floor of the tabernacle the prieſt ſhall take, and put it into the water.

18 And the prieſt ſhall ſet the woman before the LORD, and uncover the woman's head, and put the offering of memorial in her hands, which is the jealouſy-offering: and the prieſt ſhall have in his hand the bitter water that cauſeth the curſe.

19 And the prieſt ſhall charge her by an oath, and ſay unto the woman, If no man have lain with thee, and if thou haſt not gone aſide to uncleanneſs with another inſtead of thy huſband, be thou free from this bitter water that cauſeth the curſe:

20 But if thou haſt gone aſide to another inſtead of thy huſband, and if thou be defiled, and ſome man hath lain with thee beſide thine huſband;

21 Then the prieſt ſhall charge the woman with an oath of curſing: and the prieſt ſhall ſay unto the woman, The LORD make thee a curſe and an oath among thy people, when the LORD doth make thy thigh to rot, and thy belly to ſwell:

22 And this water that cauſeth the curſe ſhall go into thy bowels, to make thy belly to ſwell, and thy thigh to rot. And the woman ſhall ſay, Amen, amen.

23 And the prieſt ſhall write theſe curſes in a book, and he ſhall blot them out with the bitter water;

24 And he ſhall cauſe the woman to drink the bitter water that cauſeth the curſe: and the water that cauſeth the curſe ſhall enter into her, and become bitter.

25 Then the prieſt ſhall take the jealouſy-offering out of the woman's hand, and ſhall wave the offering before the LORD, and offer it upon the altar.

26 And the prieſt ſhall take an handful of the offering, even the memorial thereof, and burn it upon the altar, and afterward ſhall cauſe the woman to drink the water.

27 And when he hath made her to drink the water, then it ſhall come to paſs, that if ſhe be defiled, and have done treſpaſs againſt her huſband, that the water that cauſeth the curſe ſhall enter into her, and become bitter, and her belly ſhall ſwell, and her thigh ſhall rot: and the woman ſhall be a curſe among her people.

28 And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean; then ſhe ſhall be free, and ſhall conceive ſeed.

29 This is the law of jealouſies, when a wife goeth aſide to another inſtead of her huſband, and is defiled;

30 Or when the ſpirit of jealouſy cometh upon

V. 17. Holy water, &c.] The water of the laver, in which the prieſts were uſed to waſh, was put into a mean earthen veſſel, with the duſt of the tabernacle in it in order for the woman to drink. This implied the diſgrace which ſhe lay under, and the ſhame to which ſhe would be expoſed if guilty, as well as the puniſhment that ſhe would juſtly endure; in which every thing relating to the worſhip of a holy God, would, as it were, combine together for her deſtruction, and enter into her bowels with an aweful curſe. —This water was called the bitter water, from the bitter effects, which would follow when drunk by a guilty perſon.

V. 19. Inſtead of, &c.] Or, being under the power of thy huſband; that is, being a married woman, which was the grand aggravation of the crime.

V. 22. Amen, amen.] This two-fold ſolemn conſent of the woman to the aweful appeal to God, referred to both parts of it, and implied a hearty deſire to be dealt with according to her guilt or innocence; and an acknowledgment of the righteouſneſs of God in inflicting this dreadful vengeance upon thoſe who were guilty. Such an appeal to God could not be made by a guilty perſon, without the moſt infidel hardneſs of heart, and preſumptuous defiance of him. The Jewiſh writers ſay, that if the woman refuſed the oath, and confeſſed her guilt, ſhe was not put to death, but only divorced without a dowry.

V. 23. In a book, &c.] That is on a piece of parchment, or ſomewhat uſed for writing on; the writing was waſhed off into the water, as if the curſe were thus transferred to the water, and infuſed in it.

V. 27. And, &c.] This water could produce no harm by its own natural efficacy, or hurt any innocent perſon. But if any woman added the aweful guilt of ſuch perjury to adultery, God would ſupernaturally thus puniſh her. The Jews have a tradition that the adulterer would alſo be ſeized with, and die of a ſimiliar diſeaſe; which probably was not unlike in its nature to that upon him, and he be jealous over his wife, and ſhall ſet the woman before the LORD, and the prieſt ſhall execute upon her all this law:

31 Then ſhall the man be guiltleſs from iniquity, and this woman ſhall bear her iniquity.

that loathſome diſeaſe, with which God in theſe latter ages has ſhewn his abhorrence of lewdneſs; though more immediate in its effects.

V. 31. Guiltleſs, &c.] Though the huſband's jealouſy were groundleſs, yet he ſhould not be accounted guilty, if he took this method of clearing up the matter: but otherwiſe it would lead him to do thoſe things which would bring guilt upon him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The people of God ſhould withdraw and be ſeparate from ſuch as are unclean, through the dominion of indulged iniquity, and exclude them, as far as they are able, from their fellowſhip; and if, under the maſk of hypocriſy, they will affront the Lord, and profane his holy ordinances, by an unhallowed intruſion, they do it at their peril: aſſuredly ſuch ſhall never enter "that holy city, where the taber-"nacle of God ſhall be with men, and he will dwell with "them," (Rev. xxi. 3. 27;) but will be without, "where there is weeping, and wailing, and gnaſhing of "teeth." Among them will moſt certainly be found thoſe unrighteous perſons, who have unjuſtly obtained, and as unjuſtly keep poſſeſſion of, their neighbour's property: and the man who pretends to piety, and profeſſes faith in the atonement of Chriſt, and thus encourages himſelf in diſhoneſty, as groſsly affronts the Lord, as he, who ſubſtitutes his honeſty or morality in the ſtead of the Redeemer's merits and ſacrifice, and in contempt of them, as the price of his acceptance with God.—The confeſſion, the reſtitution, and the treſpaſs-offering, muſt always go together.—God's abhorrence of, and vengeance againſt adultery, appear conſpicuous in this chapter: and though we have no law of a jealouſy-offering to detect, nor any other law to execute puniſhment upon, adulterers and adultereſſes: and they may either conceal or glory in their ſhame, and the impunity with which they tranſgreſs: yet they may be ſure their ſin will at laſt find them out; for God himſelf will detect the moſt ſecret, and confound the moſt daring offenders. And as his providence ſtamps infamy upon ſinners of this claſs, in thoſe dreadful diſeaſes with which he viſits them, and with which they infect, plague, and curſe one another in this world; ſo his word denounces the ſevereſt vengeance againſt them in the world to come. But all approaches to, and occaſions or appearances of, this horrid crime muſt be ſtudiouſly avoided: and married perſons eſpecially ſhould act in ſuch a manner as to inſpire mutual confidence in each other; and ſhould avoid every intimacy, and every word and look, which may excite uneaſineſs in the other's breaſt. For conjugal affection is prone to jealouſy, and Satan delights in exciting "a ſpirit "of jealouſy" in the hearts of huſbands and wives; knowing that it is alike tormenting to ſuſpect or to be ſuſpected. He knows alſo that ſuch ſuſpicions ſubvert domeſtic peace, ſet aſide family religion and the proper education of children, and expoſe to manifold temptations to every kind of ſin, on each ſide: ſo that what begun with heedleſs imprudence and groundleſs jealouſy, often terminates in deep criminality and the moſt fatal conſequences. We ſhould therefore watch and pray, and avoid the appearances and beginnings of evil; and be careful that we neither heedleſsly excite, nor cauſeleſsly entertain, thoſe tormenting ſuſpicions which lead to ſuch direful evils. If, however, we have a clear conſcience and a true faith, we may bear up under the vileſt aſperſions; and God in due time will clear up our characters by one means or other, while we thus commit them to his keeping, and convert our affliction into a bleſſing. Whether it be our croſs to ſuſpect, or to be cauſeleſsly ſuſpected, in this or any other caſe, Chriſtianity will teach us how to obtain comfort under it and extract good from it. But how ſhould men tremble at the thoughts of appealing to God, when their own hearts condemn them! "for God is greater than their hearts, and knoweth all things," and will be ſure one day tremendouſly to revenge ſuch a daring affront.—Senſual luſts will ſurely end in bitterneſs: and they who delight in curſing ſhall be filled with it. Finally, they who allow hypocriſy and iniquity in their hearts, under a profeſſion of faith, will find that all the truths of God's word (by which the true believer becomes joyful and fruitful in the works of righteouſneſs;) all the ordinances of his houſe, and all the diſpenſations of his providence, will concur to increaſe their guilt, obduracy, and condemnation.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI.] V. 2. Vow of a Nazarite, &c.] The word Nazarite ſignifies ſeparation. Some were appointed by the Lord himſelf, before their birth, to be Nazarites all their days, as Sampſon, (Judg. xiii. 7;) and John the Baptiſt, (Luke i. 15.) Samuel was devoted by his mother to be a perpetual Nazarite, when he was "aſked of the "Lord," before his conception, (1 Sam. i. 11:) and the family of the Rechabites were a ſort of Nazarites from one generation to another, by the injunction of Jonadab their progenitor, (Jer. xxxv.) But in general the Nazarites became ſuch by a voluntary vow, which any perſon

3 He ſhall ſeparate himſelf from wine, and ſtrong drink, and ſhall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of ſtrong drink, neither ſhall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat moiſt grapes, or dried.

4 All the days of his ſeparation ſhall he eat nothing that is made of the vine-tree, from the kernels even to the huſk.

5 All the days of the vow of his ſeparation there ſhall no razor come upon his head; until the days be fulfilled, in the which he ſeparateth himſelf unto the LORD, he ſhall be holy, and ſhall let the locks of the hair of his head grow.

6 All the days that he ſeparateth himſelf unto the LORD, he ſhall come at no dead body.

7 He ſhall not make himſelf unclean for his father, or for his mother, for his brother, or for his ſiſter, when they die; becauſe the conſecration of his God is upon his head.

8 All the days of his ſeparation he is holy unto the LORD.

9 And if any man die very ſuddenly by him, and he hath defiled the head of his conſecration; then he ſhall ſhave his head in the day of his cleanſing, on the ſeventh day ſhall he ſhave it.

10 And on the eighth day he ſhall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons, to the prieſt, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

11 And the prieſt ſhall offer the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, and make an atonement for him, for that he ſinned by the dead, and ſhall hallow his head that ſame day.

12 And he ſhall conſecrate unto the LORD the days of his ſeparation, and ſhall bring a lamb of the firſt year for a treſpaſs-offering: but the days that were before ſhall be loſt, becauſe his ſeparation was defiled.

might make, of peculiar ſeparation from the world and devotedneſs to the exerciſes of religion, for a limited time and under certain regulations. (Notes, xxx.) It is numbered among the diſtinguiſhing favours which God conferred on Iſrael, that "he raiſed up of their young men for Nazarites," (Amos ii. 11;) whence we may infer, that their prayers, examples, and inſtructions, were conſidered as a public bleſſing. Chriſt was called a Nazarene, out of reproach, as having lived at Nazareth; yet the Scripture was thus fulfilled, that he ſhould be ſo called: but it is not agreed what Scripture foretold this. He was not a Nazarite according to the letter of the law, but he was the ſubſtance of this ſhadow; ſeparated by the Father and by his own voluntary undertaking, to glorify God in the redemption of his church; he would have nothing to do with the intoxicating pleaſures of the world and ſin; he touched no unclean thing, was ſeparate from ſinners, and perſevered in his purpoſe, till he had fulfilled his appointed time of tribulation, ſelf-abaſement, and ſuffering on earth; then, though perfectly obedient to the law, he finiſhed the whole of his engagement by his ſacrifice on the croſs; and riſing from the dead, aſcended into heaven, to drink, with his redeemed people in his Father's kingdom, the new wine of heavenly joy, (Matt. xxvi. 29.) His diſciples alſo are Nazarites, ſeparated from the world, abſtaining from worldly luſts, and given up to ſerve God and their generation.

V. 3, 4.] The drinking of wine was an emblem, both in it's nature and effects, of the intoxicating pleaſures of ſin and ſenſe; from this in every form, and from all approaches to it, the Nazarites were commanded to abſtain. There is nothing in Scripture which bears the moſt remote affinity to the religious orders of the church of Rome, except theſe Nazarites: but mark the difference, or rather the contrariety. The religious in that church are forbidden to marry; but no ſuch reſtriction was laid upon the Nazarites. They are commanded to abſtain from meats; but the Nazarites might eat any food allowed the other Iſraelites. They are not generally prohibited wine, not even on faſting days; but the Nazarites might not drink it at any time. Their vow is perpetual to the end of their lives; the Nazarites vow was only for a limited time, at their own diſcretion; and in certain caſes not unleſs allowed by huſbands or parents. Much of the ſame contrariety is obſervable in other rules of men's invention for faſting, and for ſingular ſanctity.

V. 5. All, &c.] By this growth of hair the Nazarites were known in the ſtreets, (Lam. iv. 7, 8.) It had a ſingular appearance of mortification to the world, and diſregard to the body. It might alſo denote their peculiar ſubjection to the Lord, (1 Cor. xi. 10—15.)

V. 7. Unclean, &c.] That is, he muſt not attend their funerals; thus the Nazarites ranked with the High Prieſt. (Notes, Lev. xxi.)

V. 9—12.] There was no penalty appointed to be inflicted upon thoſe who wilfully violated their vow of being Nazarites, nor any ſacrifice required of them: they muſt anſwer for ſuch profane trifling with the Lord another day. But if, by the ſudden death of any perſon near them, they contracted uncleanneſs, they would not only be unclean ſeven days, and require purifying as other Iſraelites did, (xix. 11, 12;) but muſt offer ſeveral ſacrifices of atonement for ſin, loſe all the paſt time, and begin over again to conſecrate their appointed ſeaſon of ſeparation to the Lord. No ceremonial uncleanneſs cauſed this interruption, except the touch of the dead body of man; whoſe death came in by ſin, and was thus accounted unclean, till the death,

13 And this is the law of the Nazarite: When the days of his ſeparation are fulfilled, he ſhall be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation;

14 And he ſhall offer his offering unto the LORD, one he-lamb of the firſt year without blemiſh for a burnt-offering, and one ewe-lamb of the firſt year without blemiſh for a ſin-offering, and one ram without blemiſh for peace-offerings.

15 And a baſket of unleavened bread, cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and wafers of unleavened bread anointed with oil, and their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings.

16 And the prieſt ſhall bring them before the LORD, and ſhall offer his ſin-offering, and his burnt-offering.

17 And he ſhall offer the ram for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, with the baſket of unleavened bread: the prieſt ſhall offer alſo his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

18 And the Nazarite ſhall ſhave the head of his ſeparation at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; and ſhall take the hair of the head of his ſeparation, and put it in the fire which is under the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings.

19 And the prieſt ſhall take the ſodden ſhoulder of the ram, and one unleavened cake out of the baſket, and one unleavened wafer, and ſhall put them upon the hands of the Nazarite, after the hair of his ſeparation is ſhaven.

20 And the prieſt ſhall wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD: this is holy for the prieſt, with the wave-breaſt, and heave-ſhoulder: and after that the Nazarite may drink wine.

21 This is the law of the Nazarite who hath vowed, and of his offering unto the LORD for his ſeparation, beſides that that his hand ſhall get: according to the vow which he vowed, ſo he muſt do after the law of his ſeparation.

22 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

23 Speak unto Aaron, and unto his ſons, ſaying, On this wiſe ye ſhall bleſs the children of Iſrael, ſaying unto them,

24 The LORD bleſs thee, and keep thee;

25 The LORD make his face ſhine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee;

26 The LORD lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace.

27 And

death, burial, and reſurrection of Chriſt, as it were, ſanctified death and the grave to his people. But the ſoul dead in ſin, and the dead works attending that ſtate, are ſtill as polluted and polluting as ever.

V. 13—20.] By theſe ſacrifices and ceremonies at the expiration of his term, the Nazarite was taught to confeſs that his performance of the vow needed atonement and forgiveneſs, being mixed with ſin; to acknowledge that the honour of all, which was done well, belonged to the Lord; and that, though he was no longer a Nazarite, he was ſtill by duty and choice the devoted ſervant of the Lord, and conſidered communion with a reconciled God as the delight of his ſoul. The hair was ſhaven off, as a token that the vow was accompliſhed; and was burnt, not on the altar, as if it could make atonement, but under the peace-offerings, implying the gracious acceptance of ſuch ſervices by a God of peace and love.

V. 21. Beſides that, &c.] If the Nazarite were poor this ſacrifice would be accepted: but if he had it in his power, it would be proper to offer free-will offerings alſo. It ſeems the pious friends of the Nazarites frequently were at charges with them on theſe occaſions, and they feaſted together on the ſacrifices, (Acts xxi. 23—26.)

V. 23. Ye ſhall bleſs, &c.] The prieſts in this action typified the Lord Jeſus, who came to bleſs us, "and whilſt he was bleſſing his diſciples, was parted from them, and "was taken up into heaven." As the miniſters of the Lord, they very ſolemnly prayed for, and pronounced a bleſſing upon, the people. The apoſtolical epiſtles are moſt of them cloſed with a ſimilar benediction: and it has been a common and very proper cuſtom, for the miniſter, in Chriſtian aſſemblies, to diſmiſs the congregation in the ſame manner; both as expreſſing his affectionate good-will to them, and his fervent prayers for them; and as aſſuring them in the Name of God, that a bleſſing will attend on thoſe who are indeed the Lord's believing people: for hypocrites have no ſhare in theſe ſpecial benefits.

V. 24—26.] The word JEHOVAH is three times ſolemnly repeated in this benediction, and the Jews themſelves have ſuppoſed that there is ſome great myſtery contained in that repetition. When we compare it with the form of Chriſtian baptiſm, "Into the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt;" with the bleſſing Paul pronounces on the Corinthians, which is in common uſe amongſt us, (2 Cor. xiii. 14;) and with St. John's ſalutation of the churches, (Rev. i. 4, 5:) we can be at no loſs to determine what that myſtery is. Sinners are bleſſed with ſpiritual bleſſings by the triune God of ſalvation, the Father who choſe, the Son who redeemed, and the Holy Ghoſt who ſanctifieth, all the elect people of God.—To be in in body and ſoul under the almighty protection of God our Saviour; to enjoy his favour, as the ſmile of a loving father, or as the enlightening chearing beams of the ſun, whilſt he mercifully forgives our ſins, pities our ſorrows, ſupplies our wants, ſatisfies our deſires, and communicates ſweet peace to the conſcience and conſolation to the heart; and whilſt he graciouſly accepts our perſons and ſervices, and prepares us by his grace for eternal glory: theſe things form the ſubſtance of this bleſſing, and the ſum total of all bleſſings; and in ſuch a rich inventory, worldly joys are not worthy to be mentioned.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilſt we rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, as undertaking and perſevering in the work, for which he had ſeparated and ſanctified himſelf, without contracting any defilement, or ſhrinking from any ſelf-denial or ſuffering, till he had completed his deſign, and arrived with honour and glory unſpeakable at the joy ſet before him: let us not forget, that he is not only our Surety, but alſo our Example. For his ſake we muſt renounce worldly pleaſures, abſtain from fleſhly luſts, ſeparate from ſinners, touch no unclean thing, be indifferent about the outward indulgence or adorning of our bodies, be intent about the inward feeding and adorning of our ſouls, make an open profeſſion of our faith, moderate our natural affections, be abſtracted from worldly cares, be ſpiritually minded and devoted to God's ſervice, zealous for his glory, and deſirous to be an example and a bleſſing to his people, and all around us.—If after profeſſion of faith in Chriſt, any wilfully and finally apoſtatize and return to wickedneſs, "there remains no other ſacrifice; "but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery "indignation," (Heb. x. 26, 27.) The true Nazarite, however, will never thus deliberately and entirely renounce his vow of ſeparation: but he may and will inadvertently commit ſin and contract defilement; and then muſt he renew his repentance, exerciſe faith in the one great ſacrifice of Chriſt, and begin all over again, as when he firſt "fled for "refuge to the hope ſet before him." And when the Chriſtian is finiſhing his courſe of faith and holineſs, of ſelf denial and bearing the croſs daily, and is about to cloſe his eyes in death, and open them in the realms of uninterrupted joy: he will ſtill acknowledge that he has nothing to truſt to, but the blood of Chriſt our great ſacrifice for ſin; as the beſt which he hath done has been mixed with ſin, and needs forgiveneſs; he will give the glory to the Lord of all that he hath done in any meaſure well; will value reconciliation and communion with God as his only confidence and comfort; and will depart with thankful acknowledgments for the paſt, perhaps with joyful, at leaſt with peaceful, expectations for the future, to go and drink the new wine of the kingdom with his beloved Redeemer in the realms of bliſs.—Then indeed will the great High Prieſt pronounce him bleſſed in the name of the triune Jehovah, which is put upon him; then will he ſhine and ſmile upon him ineffable joys; then will he wipe all tears from his eyes, and be gracious to him for ever. In hopes of this immortal crown, let us here chearfully endure the croſs: let us fear nothing but diſhonouring our profeſſion: let us ever be prepared for the approach of death, which often comes "very ſuddenly." Let us be very watchful in a world ſo full of pollutions; let us remember, that the higher we ſtand in profeſſion of holineſs, the ſlighter inadvertency will diſgrace us and diſhonour our God. And may the Lord keep, and bleſs and comfort in life, and at death, and for ever, with all the bleſſings of ſalvation, the writer and every reader of theſe remarks, Amen!

NOTES.

CHAP. VII.] V. 1. Fully, &c.] Thoſe things which were expreſsly commanded were firſt performed, before theſe voluntary oblations were preſented, as expreſſions of the good will of the princes to the ſervice of God. There is unto the ſons of Gerſhon, according to their ſervice.

8 And four waggons and eight oxen he gave unto the ſons of Merari, according unto their ſervice, under the hand of Ithamar, the ſon of Aaron, the prieſt.

9 But unto the ſons of Kohath he gave none; becauſe the ſervice of the ſanctuary belonging unto them was, that they ſhould bear upon their ſhoulders.

10 And the princes offered for dedicating of the altar, in the day that it was anointed, even the princes offered their offering before the altar.

11 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, They ſhall offer their offering, each prince on his day, for the dedicating of the altar.

12 And he that offered his offering the firſt day was Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah.

13 And his offering was one ſilver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty ſhekels, one ſilver bowl of ſeventy ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, both of them were full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

14 One ſpoon of ten ſhekels of gold, full of incenſe:

15 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the firſt year, for a burnt-offering:

16 One kid of the goats for a ſin-offering:

17 And for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the firſt year. This was the offering of Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab.

18 On the ſecond day Nethaneel the ſon of Zuar, prince of Iſſachar, did offer.

19 He offered for his offering one ſilver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty ſhekels, one ſilver bowl of ſeventy is ſome difficulty in ſettling the date of this chapter; whether it comes in here in its proper order; or whether the things recorded in it were antecedent to ſeveral of the tranſactions before related. But it ſeems ſufficient for all uſeful purpoſes to obſerve, that the tabernacle was erected, the prieſts conſecrated, the camp formed, the Levites appointed to their work, and all things put into a regular train for carrying on the ſervice of the ſanctuary, before theſe oblations were made. And as the Scripture is not, it is not neceſſary that we ſhould be, very exact in aſcertaining dates. Some ſuppoſe that the twelve days, appointed for the oblation of the princes, were coincident with the giving of many of the laws already mentioned, and immediately followed the conſecration of the ſanctuary and of the prieſts.

V. 7—9.] The ſockets of ſilver and braſs alone are computed to have weighed more than eight tons, which would be fully ſufficient to load theſe four waggons: ſo that the ſons of Merari would ſtill have much to carry upon their ſhoulders; as probably the ſons of Gerſhon alſo had. The Kohathites had in all but a moderate weight; and in reverence to the ſacred things, they were ordered to be carried at all times upon the ſhoulders of the Levites of the family of Kohath. The prieſts were of this family, and aſſiſted in the ſervice. The neglect of this rule was David's firſt and chief miſtake, when Uzzah was ſmitten.

V. 10. And the princes, &c.] It is probable that there was ſome difference of rank, and of poſſeſſions, among the Iſraelites, even in their Egyptian bondage: and conſequently at their departure, their chief men would obtain a larger portion of the ſpoil of Egypt; by which means they were enabled to preſent theſe oblations. Though ſome perſons conjecture, that the princes not only offered in the behalf, but at the expence of their ſeveral tribes.

V. 11. The Lord ſaid, &c.] As the princes were preparing to bring their oblations all together, the Lord gave this order, both to prevent confuſion, to increaſe the ſolemnity, that the prieſts might not be over-burdened with work, and that they might have leiſure to grow more expert by daily practice. And, as a large proportion of the ſacrifices was feaſted upon, both by the prieſts and people, it would alſo prevent exceſs or waſte, and promote hoſpitality, to have only one oblation at a time. The princes offered in the ſame order, in which the tribes had been arranged in the encampment, (which is an argument that they offered after the camp was formed:) and, though one tribe was more numerous and wealthy than another, they all preſented exactly the ſame oblations and ſacrifices; for they were all equally intereſted in the ſanctuary and worſhip of God, and were all willing to expreſs an equal affection for them. Every one's offering is nevertheleſs particularly mentioned; for the Lord takes pleaſure in accepting and recording the willing ſervices of his people.

V. 12. Nahſhon, &c.] Nahſhon is the only one, who is not called a prince in the hiſtory of this tranſaction. Some ſuppoſe that this was an humiliating circumſtance intended to counterbalance his pre-eminence; that he might not be exalted above meaſure: others conjecture, that this title was omitted, becauſe it was reſerved for Chriſt, who was to deſcend from this tribe.

V. 13, 14.] The ſilver chargers or diſhes might be uſeful for the meat-offerings, and to contain the fleſh of the ſacrifices, when the prieſts feaſted upon it. The ſilver bowls would be uſeful for the drink-offerings and to receive the blood for ſprinkling: and the golden ſpoons were ſuited to the ſervice of the altar of incenſe. Probably the princes had noticed, that the furniture for the tabernacle was not, in theſe particulars, ſuited to the reſt, or was not ſufficient for the purpoſe.

33 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the firſt year, for a burnt-offering:

34 One kid of the goats for a ſin-offering:

35 And for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the firſt year. This was the offering of Elizur the ſon of Shedeur.

36 On the fifth day Shelumiel the ſon of Zuriſhaddai, prince of the children of Simeon, did offer.

37 His offering was one ſilver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty ſhekels, one ſilver bowl of ſeventy ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

42 On the ſixth day Eliaſaph the ſon of Deuel, prince of the children of Gad, offered.

43 His offering was one ſilver charger, of the weight of an hundred and thirty ſhekels, a ſilver bowl of ſeventy ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

48 On the ſeventh day Eliſhama the ſon of Ammihud, prince of the children of Ephraim, offered.

49 His offering was one ſilver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty ſhekels, one ſilver bowl of ſeventy ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

50 One golden ſpoon of ten ſhekels full of incenſe:

51 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the firſt year, for a burnt-offering:

52 One kid of the goats for a ſin-offering:

53 And for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of of the first year. This was the offering of Elishama the son of Ammihud.

54 On the eighth day offered Gamaliel the son of Padahzur, prince of the children of Manasseh.

55 His offering was one silver charger, of the weight of an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

60 On the ninth day Abidan, the son of Gideoni, prince of the children of Benjamin, offered.

61 His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, a silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

62 One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense:

63 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

64 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

65 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Abidan the son of Gideoni.

89 And when Moſes was gone into the tabernacle of the congregation to ſpeak with him, then he heard the voice of one ſpeaking unto him from off the mercy-ſeat that was upon the ark of teſtimony, from between the two cherubims: and he ſpake unto him.

AND the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

2 Speak unto Aaron, and ſay unto him, When thou lighteſt the lamps, the ſeven lamps ſhall give light over againſt the candleſtick.

3 And Aaron did ſo: he lighted the lamps thereof over againſt the candleſtick; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

4 And this work of the candleſtick was of beaten gold; unto the ſhaft thereof, unto the flowers thereof, was beaten work: according unto the pattern which the LORD had ſhewed Moſes, ſo he made the candleſtick.

5 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

6 Take the Levites from among the children of Iſrael, and cleanſe them.

7 And thus ſhalt thou do unto them, to cleanſe them: Sprinkle water of purifying upon them, and let them ſhave all their fleſh, and let them waſh their clothes, and ſo make themſelves clean.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They, whom the providence of God hath diſtinguiſhed as princes, nobles, or wealthy perſons, ſhould diſtinguiſh themſelves by taking the lead and ſetting the example in every good work; with liberal hearts deviſing liberal things: for this is the proper improvement of their talents. It is alſo very deſirable that a liberal mind ſhould be under the direction of prudence and diſcretion: and that ſuch perſons ſhould advert to the circumſtances of the times, to the ſtate of the church and its miniſters, and to the neceſſities of thoſe around them; that none of their bounty may be waſted in uſeleſs expence, but all wiſely directed to the ſubſtantial benefit of thoſe who need it.—The people of God have no occaſion to be diſcouraged in the proſpect either of heavy ſervices, or of fiery trials: for he can ſend them ſeaſonable and unexpected relief whenever he pleaſes; and will be ſure to proportion his aſſiſtance to their neceſſities.—Every thing in the worſhip of God ſhould be done decently and in order, and as may beſt promote edification. On ſome occaſions it may be proper to employ much time, and expend much money in his ſervice. And the growing Chriſtian will not be weary or complain of this; but will account it his gain, his pleaſure, and his honour to be thus occupied.—All our works of piety and charity muſt be accompanied with an humble acknowledgment of our ſinfulneſs, and a believing dependence on the ſacrifice of Chriſt; they muſt ſpring from love to our reconciled God, gratitude for the bleſſings of redemption, and unreſerved ſurrender of ourſelves unto him; and a diſpoſition to delight in doing his will, and in rendering him all the praiſe. Such good works are "ſpiritual ſacrifices acceptable to God, "through Jeſus Chriſt." The Lord will delight to honour thoſe, who thus honour him. He will remember and record their expreſſions of faith and love. He will in this world commune with ſuch diſciples from his mercy-ſeat, between the cherubim, by anſwering their prayers, and counſelling and comforting their hearts: and he will at the day of judgment publiſh to the whole aſſembled world, diſtinctly and particularly, the fruits of holineſs which by his grace they produced on earth, as evincing them the heirs of the kingdom prepared for his people, from before the foundation of the world. (Notes, &c. Matt. xxv. 31—46.)

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII.] V. 2. Over againſt, &c.] The candleſtick was all in one piece; but the ſeven lamps were formed ſeparate, and might be taken off, or fixed upon the candleſtick, as occaſion required. It is a tradition of the Jews, that the middle lamp was lighted from the altar of burnt-offering and the other lamps from it; which being done, each lamp gave light to that part of the ſanctuary, that was "over againſt it," and the whole was lighted. Thus the light, which comes from Chriſt by his word and Spirit, is inſtrumentally communicated from one to another in the church of God, and every true miniſter, and believer in his place, gives light over againſt him; and the light is diffuſed wider and wider: (Notes, &c. Matt. v. 14—16. Phil. ii. 15.)

V. 7. Cleanſe them, &c.] The Levites were not diſtinguiſhed

8 Then let them take a young bullock with his meat-offering, even fine flour mingled with oil, and another young bullock shalt thou take for a sin-offering.

9 And thou shalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt gather the whole assembly of the children of Israel together.

10 And thou shalt bring the Levites before the LORD, and the children of Israel shall put their hands upon the Levites:

11 And Aaron shall offer the Levites before the LORD, for an offering of the children of Israel, that they may execute the service of the LORD.

12 And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks: and thou shalt offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, unto the LORD, to make an atonement for the Levites.

13 And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, and offer them for an offering unto the LORD.

14 Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel; and the Levites shall be mine.

15 And after that shall the Levites go in to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt cleanse them, and offer them for an offering.

16 For they are wholly given unto me from among the children of Israel; instead of such as open every womb, even instead of the first-born of all the children of Israel, have I taken them unto me.

17 For all the first-born of the children of Israel are mine, both man and beast: on the day that I smote every first-born of the land of Egypt I sanctified them for myself.

18 And I have taken the Levites for all the first-born of the children of Israel.

19 And I have given the Levites as a gift to Aaron, and to his sons, from among the children of Israel, to do the service of the children of Israel in the tabernacle of the congregation, and to make an atonement for the children of Israel: that there be no plague among the children of Israel, when the children of Israel come nigh unto the sanctuary.

20 And Moses, and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Israel, did to the Levites according unto all that the LORD commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did the children of Israel unto them.

21 And the Levites were purified, and they washed their clothes: and Aaron offered them as an offering before the LORD; and Aaron made an atonement for them to cleanse them, 22 And after that went the Levites in to do their service in the tabernacle of the congregation before Aaron, and before his sons: as the LORD had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they unto them.

23 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

24 This is it that belongeth unto the Levites; tinguished from the other Israelites by any prescribed garments; nor were they washed, or anointed, in the manner the priests were: but though they were set apart with less solemnity, to mark the inferiority of their office, and because they were not so expressly typical of Christ as the priests; yet there was equally a remembrance of sin, both in its guilt and defilement, and of the need of atonement and sanctification, in the separation of them to their office. Their clothes were washed; they were sprinkled with the water of purifying, (xix. Ezek. xxxvi. 25—27;) a sin-offering, and a burnt-offering were sacrificed in their behalf; and they shaved all their flesh, according to the ceremony of the leper's purification. (Lev. xiv. 8.) This might denote the "laying apart all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness;" (Jam. i. 21;) the mortification of natural depravity, and the renouncing of all unnecessary worldly avocations and employments, that they might more entirely devote all their time and attention to the services assigned them.

V. 10. Shall put their hands, &c.] By this ceremony the people expressed their ready consent to the substitution of the Levites in the stead of the first-born, and their surrender of them to the Lord for the purpose of serving at the sanctuary.

V. 19. A gift to Aaron, &c.] When Aaron had offered the Levites as an offering unto the Lord; the Lord gave them back to Aaron, who might now with comfort make use of their assistance, "in, or at the tabernacle;" that is, in the court thereof; or "about the tabernacle," that is, when it was removed. They likewise assisted in the offering those sacrifices by which atonement was made. This and the other services being duly performed, without any unallowed intrusion of the other tribes, would preserve the people from those terrible effects of the divine displeasure, which they might otherwise have apprehended.

V. 24. From, &c.] At the age of twenty-five the Levites began to attend upon the ordinary services of the tabernacle; vites; from twenty and five years old and upward they shall go in to wait upon the service of the tabernacle of the congregation:

25 And from the age of fifty years they shall cease waiting upon the service thereof, and shall serve no more;

26 But shall minister with their brethren in the tabernacle of the congregation, to keep the charge, and shall do no service. Thus shalt thou do unto the Levites touching their charge.

CHAP. IX.

Contains, 1st. Some explanatory additions respecting the observance of the Passover, 1—14. 2. The cloud directing the marches and encampments of Israel in the wilderness, 15—23.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying,

2 Let the children of Israel also keep the passover at his appointed season.

3 In the fourteenth day of this month at even ye shall keep it in his appointed season: according to all the rites of it, and according to all the ceremonies thereof, shall ye keep it.

4 And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, that they should keep the passover.

5 And they kept the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month at even in the wilderness of Sinai: according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did the children of Israel.

but were neither required, nor allowed, to assist in its removal, till they were thirty years old. Probably at the age of twenty-five the Levites were, in after-ages, solemnly admitted to their office, according to the prescribed order of this chapter.

V. 26. Shall minister, &c.] It appears that the Levites, above fifty years of age, might superintend and assist their junior brethren in the ordinary offices; and give them, and the people counsel and instruction: but they were exempted from carrying the tabernacle, and from other laborious services.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Jesus Christ is the only Light of our dark sinful world; in virtue of his atonement he diffuses by his holy word divine light around: and all, which is called illumination, that is not derived from, or does not accord to, that light, is but the greater and more dangerous darkness. (Notes, Isaiah viii. 20. Matt. vi. 22, 23.) Ministers, in searching the Scriptures, and comparing one part of them with another, and the whole with what they experience in themselves and observe around them; and imparting the knowledge thus acquired by preaching the gospel, and by various other methods, are in their several places, "burning and shining lights," communicating the light, which they have received from Christ, to those over against them, in their congregations and neighbourhoods: and many private Christians do the same in their several connections; especially if their knowledge and profession of the truth be accompanied with the ornament and light of an holy and exemplary conversation. In this way one is enlightened from another, and the light of truth and righteousness will be diffused ere long through all the nations of the earth.—But so depraved and polluted is every one, born of Adam's fallen race, that none can in any way approach or serve God, except as a humble penitent he plead guilty, depend upon the Saviour's atoning blood, and be sanctified by the participation of his Holy Spirit, poured upon him as purifying water. And if the heart be cleansed by divine grace, the outward conduct and conversation will be clean likewise.—The Lord himself hath provided for, and appointed the method and means of, our cleansing; and given us "exceeding great and precious promises," for our encouragement in using those means; but having these promises, we are exhorted "to cleanse ourselves from all filthi-"ness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of "God," (2 Cor. vii. 1.) and to lay aside and put off our sinful pursuits and indulgences, that we may serve God with our bodies and our souls, which are his, having been bought with a price. Every Christian should be thus cleansed from sin, separated from the world, and presented to the Lord, as a living sacrifice holy and acceptable to him: but the ministers of Christ especially. When they are regularly appointed to the sacred office, with the approbation of their brethren and of the church of God, and when they are faithful and diligent in their work, so far from being considered as an useless part of the community, as they are often profanely represented; they may fairly be shewn to be the most useful members of society, by their examples, labours, and prayers, in repressing sin which is the ruin of, and in promoting righteousness which exalteth, any people; and in making known that great atonement by which the wrath of God is averted from our guilty souls, and from guilty nations. Persons of another stamp, called ministers, are not pleaded for: but those who act up to their character should never be deserted of men, and will never be forsaken of God in their old age; as they will be useful by their counsel and influence, when they can no longer labour; and "when the chief Shep-"herd shall appear, they shall receive a crown of glory "which fadeth not away." (Note, 1 Pet. v. 1—4.)

NOTES.

CHAP. IX.] V. 1—5.] This chapter is dated before any other of the events recorded in this book. Some suppose that the Passover was no more celebrated from this time till the people arrived in Canaan; that the law did not require that it should be kept in the wilderness, (Exod. xii. 25. Josh. v. 10;) and that the interruption intimated these ordinances to be only a shadow of good things to come,

6 And there were certain men who were defiled by the dead body of a man, that they could not keep the paſſover on that day; and they came before Moſes and before Aaron on that day:

7 And thoſe men ſaid unto him, We are defiled by the dead body of a man; wherefore are we kept back, that we may not offer an offering of the LORD in his appointed ſeaſon among the children of Iſrael?

8 And Moſes ſaid unto them, Stand ſtill, and I will hear what the LORD will command concerning you.

9 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

10 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, If any man of you, or of your poſterity, ſhall be unclean by reaſon of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he ſhall keep the paſſover unto the LORD.

11 The fourteenth day of the ſecond month at even they ſhall keep it, and eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs.

12 They ſhall leave none of it unto the morning, nor break any bone of it: according to all the ordinances of the paſſover they ſhall keep it.

13 But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to keep the paſſover, even the ſame ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people; becauſe he brought not the offering of the LORD in his appointed ſeaſon, that man ſhall bear his ſin.

14 And if a ſtranger ſhall ſojourn among you, and will keep the paſſover unto the LORD; according to the ordinance of the paſſover, and according to the manner thereof, ſo ſhall he do: ye ſhall have one ordinance, both for the ſtranger, and for him that was born in the land.

15 And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up the cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the teſtimony: and at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire until the morning.

16 So it was alway: the cloud covered it by day, and the appearance of fire by night.

17 And when the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, then after that the children of Iſrael journeyed: and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Iſrael pitched their tents.

18 At the commandment of the LORD the children of Iſrael journeyed, and at the commandment of the LORD they pitched: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle they reſted in the tents.

19 And when the cloud tarried long upon the tabernacle many days, then the children of Iſrael kept the charge of the LORD, and journeyed not.

20 And ſo it was when the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle; according to the commandment of the LORD they abode in their tents, and according to the commandment of the LORD they journeyed.

21 And ſo it was when the cloud abode from even unto the morning, and that the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they journeyed: whether it was by day or by night that the cloud was taken up, they journeyed.

22 Or whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, remaining thereon, the children come, and not intended for perpetuity in the church. It is indeed remarkable that many parts of the ceremonial law, notwithſtanding the preciſion with which they were delivered, were but little attended to by the people of Iſrael. Upon this ſuppoſition, there was occaſion for this renewed commandment, if the Paſſover was again to be celebrated in the wilderneſs, in order to its being obſerved more properly after their arrival in Canaan. (Notes, &c. Exod. xii.)

V. 6—8.] Though the laws reſpecting ceremonial defilement had not hitherto been explicitly given, yet ſeveral intimations had been made, which created ſcruples in the conſciences of theſe perſons: they counted it their duty and privilege to eat the Paſſover, but feared to eat it with their uncleanneſs upon them: they were deſirous of knowing the Lord's will that they might do it, and therefore very properly referred the caſe to the deciſion of Moſes. And he with equal propriety declined the determination of it by his own judgment, and applied for direction to the Lord; who provided as follows for this caſe, and ſome other unavoidable hindrances.

V. 15. Tent of, &c.] The tent of the teſtimony was the weſt end of the tabernacle over the moſt holy place, where was the ark of the covenant, with the tables of the law, which teſtified Iſrael to be the Lord's people, and him to be their God. (Note, Exod. xxv. 16.)

dren of Israel abode in their tents, and journeyed not: but when it was taken up they journeyed.

23 At the commandment of the LORD they rested in their tents, and at the commandment of the LORD they journeyed: they kept the charge of the LORD, at the commandment of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are so immersed in the things of time and sense, that the most pure minds have need to be stirred up, by way of remembrance, to perform such things as they have before been instructed in and attended to, (2 Pet. i. 12—15. iii. 1.) But when such reminding has its proper effect; when men consider attendance on the ordinances of God as their privilege, and every impediment as their affliction, it is a very hopeful token.—Alas! in what a sad dilemma are multitudes of professing Christians! they are habitually unclean through indulged lusts and unrepented sins, and cannot approach the Lord's table without a presumptuous profanation: yet in staying away they neglect 'their 'bounden duty and service;' and virtually confess that they have no part in Christ, but are liable to bear the heavy load of their own iniquity, and to be cut off by the righteous judgment of God; not so much for disregarding the outward sign of salvation, as for neglecting the great salvation itself. Yet when their uncleanness becomes their burden, and they sincerely enquire what they must do? the case grows more hopeful. For they are directed to the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness; and having been "washed, and sanctified, and justified in the name of "the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God," they may, when occasion is again afforded them, approach with comfort to partake of that holy ordinance. But all should reflect, that if they are not prepared for the Lord's table, they are not fit for death and judgment; and if they be, it is very sinful to neglect this profession of our faith in, and love and obligations to, him who loved us and gave himself for our sins; and with his dying lips said to his disciples, "do this in remembrance of him."—Under difficulties and distress of conscience it is very proper to consult pious and faithful ministers, and plainly to state the case unto them. And it becomes them to be accessible, and tender to such conscientious enquirers: and not only to offer them the best counsel they can; but in doubtful cases to take time for deliberation, and consulting the word of God, in order to give them a satisfactory solution: and as the Lord makes a difference between occasional defilements and presumptuous disobedience, they should do the same. We may often without our own fault, be deprived of the opportunity of attending on God's ordinances; but we shall not lose the blessing, if our hearts be right with God: and when we have necessarily been kept away at one time, we should be doubly careful to improve the next opportunity. —Blessed be God, that we strangers of the Gentiles are admitted to participate in the blessings of Christ our Passover, who is sacrificed for us: but let us be careful to celebrate the sacred feast after the prescribed manner; as true penitents and spiritual pilgrims, with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.—Though we are not under the miraculous direction of the cloud: yet God's providence appoints the bounds of our habitation, and God's word is the perfect and sufficient rule of our conduct. Wherever our lot is cast, let us study contentment there. Whenever we are called upon to remove, let us be careful that we act according to God's commandment, and in dependence on his promises: and when we pass through temptation and tribulation, or the gloomy vale of death, if his presence go with us, we must be safe, and shall be happy. Let us beg of Him, therefore, to choose for us our places of abode in this world, our time of removal out of it, and our everlasting inheritance; for he never chose amiss for those, that were enabled to refer all their concerns to his decision.

NOTES.

CHAP. X.] V. 2—10.] These trumpets, besides their direct usefulness, were evidently intended to typify the preached gospel. The priests alone were allowed to blow them; and as they were at that time but two priests, the sons of Aaron the High Priest, but two trumpets were ordered to be made: but we read afterwards, (2 Chron. v. 12.) "of one hundred and twenty priests sounding with "trumpets." In allusion to the uses assigned to them in this and other places, (Lev. xxiii. 24. xxv. 9. Joel ii. 15, 16,) we may observe that the preached gospel sounds the alarm to sinners; calls them to repent of their sins; proclaims liberty to the captives and slaves of Satan; collects together the spiritual worshippers of God in all ages and nations, to keep their solemn fasts of godly sorrow, and feasts of holy joy; summons them to become strangers and pilgrims upon earth, and both directs and encourages their heavenly journey; excites them to combat against Satan,

5 When ye blow an alarm, then the camps that lie on the east parts shall go forward.

6 When ye blow an alarm the second time, then the camps that lie on the south side shall take their journey: they shall blow an alarm for their journeys.

7 But when the congregation is to be gathered together ye shall blow, but ye shall not sound an alarm.

8 And the sons of Aaron the priests shall blow with the trumpets: and they shall be to you for an ordinance for ever throughout your generations.

9 And if ye go to war in your land against the enemy that oppresseth you, then ye shall blow an alarm with the trumpets; and ye shall be remembered before the LORD your God, and ye shall be saved from your enemies.

10 Also in the day of your gladness, and in your solemn days, and in the beginnings of your months, ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace-offerings; that they may be to you for a memorial before your God: I am the LORD your God.

11 And it came to pass, on the twentieth day of the second month, in the second year, that the cloud was taken up from off the tabernacle of the testimony.

12 And the children of Israel took their journeys out of the wilderness of Sinai; and the cloud rested in the wilderness of Paran.

13 And they first took their journey, according to the commandment of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

14 In the first place went the standard of the camp of the children of Judah, according to their armies: and over his host was Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

15 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Issachar was Nethaneel the son of Zuar.

16 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Zebulun was Eliab the son of Helon.

17 And the tabernacle was taken down; and the sons of Gershon and the sons of Merari set forward, bearing the tabernacle.

18 And the standard of the camp of Reuben set forward, according to their armies: and over his host was Elizur the son of Shedeur.

19 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Simeon was Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai.

20 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Gad was Eliasaph the son of Deuel.

21 And the Kohathites set forward, bearing the sanctuary; and the other did set up the tabernacle against they came.

22 And the standard of the camp of the children of Ephraim set forward, according to their armies: and over his host was Elishama the son of Ammihud.

23 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Manasseh was Gamaliel the son Pedahzur.

24 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Benjamin was Abidan the son of Gideoni.

Satan, the world, and sin; and animates them with the assurance of victory; leads their attention to, explains, and suitably affects them with, the doctrine of the sacrifice of Christ; and is a constant memorial of the Lord's gracious presence with them, for their encouragement and protection, and for a terror and dismay to their enemies; (2 Chron. xiii. 12. Isaiah xxvii. 13. lviii. 1.) It is also necessary that it give a distinct, precise, and intelligible sound, according to the persons addressed, or the end proposed, whether for conviction, humiliation, consolation, exhortation, reproof, or instruction; for "if the trum-"pet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself "for the battle?" (1 Cor. xiv. 7—9.)

V. 11—13.] After the Israelites had continued nearly a year at mount Sinai, (Exod. xix. 1.) to settle every thing respecting their future worship, they began their march to Canaan: whither they might speedily have arrived, had they not renewed their rebellions. This may typify, that though true religion often begins with the knowledge of the holy law of God, and that humiliation for sin which thence results: yet we must not always abide there, but go on towards perfection, in an acquaintance with Christ and his gospel, and those effectual encouragements, motives, and assistances to holiness which it proposes, (Heb. vi. 1, 2.)—Previously to the removal of the cloud the people had had an express command to set out on their journey, (Deut. i. 6—8.) In consequence of this we may suppose, that they got all ready for their march; when the removing of the cloud gave the signal for their actually setting off.

V. 21. Did set up the tabernacle, &c.] That is, the Gershonites and Merarites, who marched before the rest for that purpose, (17.)

V. 25. The rearward, &c.] This division not only rearward of all the camps throughout their hoſts: and over his hoſt was Ahiezer the ſon of Ammiſhaddai.

26 And over the hoſt of the tribe of the children of Aſher was Pagiel the ſon of Ocran.

27 And over the hoſt of the tribe of the children of Naphtali was Ahira the ſon of Enan.

28 Thus were the journeyings of the children of Iſrael, according to their armies, when they ſet forward.

29 And Moſes ſaid unto Hobab, the ſon of Raguel the Midianite, Moſes' father-in-law, We are journeying unto the place of which the LORD ſaid, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good; for the LORD hath ſpoken good concerning Iſrael.

30 And he ſaid unto him, I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred.

31 And he ſaid, Leave us not, I pray thee; foraſmuch as thou knoweſt how we are to encamp in the wilderneſs, and thou mayeſt be to us inſtead of eyes.

32 And it ſhall be, if thou go with us, yea, it ſhall be, that what goodneſs the LORD ſhall do unto us, the ſame will we do unto thee.

33 And they departed from the mount of the LORD three days journey: and the ark of the covenant of the LORD went before them in the three days journey, to ſearch out a reſting-place for them.

34 And the cloud of the LORD was upon them by day when they went out of the camp.

35 And it came to paſs, when the ark ſet forward, that Moſes ſaid, Riſe up, LORD, and let thine enemies be ſcattered; and let them that hate thee flee before thee.

36 And when it reſted he ſaid, Return, O LORD, unto the many thouſands of Iſrael.

brought up the rear of Iſrael, but gathered under it the mixt multitude which followed them.

V. 29. Hobab, the ſon of Raguel, &c.] It is moſt probable that Jethro was the ſame perſon with Reuel, or Raguel, and that Hobab was his ſon and Moſes' brother-in-law; who had remained with the Iſraelites, when his father had departed from them, or had come to them afterwards, (Exod. ii. 18. iii. 1. xviii.)

V. 31, 32.] Though the people were under the immediate direction of God in their march: yet in reſpect of the conveniences or inconveniences of the places through which they paſſed, they might receive profitable cautions and inſtructions from a perſon acquainted with the deſert.—Some however render the words, "thou "mayeſt be to us inſtead of eyes," in the paſt tenſe, and interpret it as a thankful acknowledgment of the advantages which Iſrael had derived from Hobab's counſel and direction; for which they could make him no amends, except he would go with them, and ſhare the kindneſs which the Lord had in reſerve for them. We may ſuppoſe that Hobab was withdrawn from his firſt purpoſe, and accompanied them. We ſhall hereafter read of his poſterity.

V. 33. The ark, &c.] It is doubtful whether the ark was carried ſeparately before the camp, or with the other ſacred things in the midſt of it: though the former ſuppoſition agrees beſt with the account here given. The cloud however, which above was diffuſed as a canopy over the heads of the people in the day, and afforded light to them all by night, ſo reſted beneath upon the ark, that in directing their march, the ark on which it reſted might very properly be ſaid to go before them, to ſingle out the particular ſpot on which they were to halt for refreſhment; and after three days the ſpot on which they were to encamp.

V. 35, 36.] Moſes as the leader, though Aaron was the High Prieſt, ſolemnly addreſſed the Lord in this emphatic prayer; which David uſed, probably on a ſimilar occaſion, (Pſalm lxviii. 1.) The expreſſion, "the many "thouſands of Iſrael," is in the original, the thouſand thouſands of Iſrael, among whom Moſes thus beſought the Lord again to manifeſt his preſence, and take up his reſidence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ſounding of the trumpet of the goſpel, being God's appointed ordinance, demands the ſerious attention of all to whom it is ſent. Let our character, experience, ſituation, duty, or trials be what they may, this trumpet, when properly uſed by the miniſters of Chriſt, will give ſuch a certain diſtinct ſound, as at one time or other exactly to ſuit our caſe, and to afford us that warning, direction, encouragement, or exhortation, of which we ſtand in need; and in this manner we ſhould expect to be taught, counſelled, and comforted of the Lord. But they who ſound this trumpet ought to be very ſkilful, experienced, faithful, tender, and obſervant both of the word of God, of their own hearts, and of the ſituations of the people; leſt they give falſe alarms, or neglect to give the alarm when it is neceſſary, (Ezek. xxxiii. 2—9;) leſt by an uncertain ſound they encourage thoſe who need reproof; or diſcourage the hearts of thoſe who ſhould be comforted; or in any other way defeat thoſe ends for which the preaching of the word is intended.—"Bleſſed is the people who know this joyful "ſound," (Pſalm lxxxix. 15—18,) and underſtand its diſtinct meaning, whether it call them to watch and pray, to weep, or to rejoice, to attack their enemies or to reſiſt their aſſaults, to march forwards with alacrity or to endure the labours of the way with patient perſeverance; and who ſo underſtand its ſound, as to pay it that prompt and implicit obedience, which the diſciplined ſoldier doth to the ſound of the trumpet, yet exactly diſtinguiſhing the true ſignal from every kind of falſe alarm. Such perſons will never want warning, encouragement, guidance, inſtruction, struction, or counsel, through the whole of their journey: Though they have here no continuing city, but are always removing from one wilderness to another: yet by hearkening to the sound of the gospel, they will follow the ark in all their removals and be taught habitually to depend on the promises, the power, faithfulness, love, and meritorious mediation of the Son of God, to obey his commands, and imitate his example in their proper place and station, and ever to abide under the care of his providence, enjoy the comforts of his Spirit, and have fellowship with him in his ordinances. Thus will the Lord himself go before them to find them out resting-places from time to time by the way; he will give them rest to their souls on earth, until he bring them to his heavenly rest; he will arise to scatter his and their enemies, and all that hate him shall flee before him; and he will return to and continue with every individual, and with all the thousands of Israel, always even unto the end of the world: for his promise is, that he will never leave them nor forsake them, and this is the substance of all their prayers and desires.—Whilst we are thus journeying to the place of which the Lord has spoken to us, and hath promised to give us; we should endeavour, by our general good behaviour and tranquil chearfulness, by special acts of kindness, and by pressing exhortations and persuasions, to induce our relatives, friends, and neighbours to attend us in our pilgrimage: endeavouring to convince them, that the Lord is with us, that he hath spoken good concerning us, that he hath good in reserve for us, and that it is for their true advantage to accompany us; frankly proposing to them a participation in all our privileges and comforts, and assuring them of all the kindness which God shall enable us to do unto them. By persevering attempts of this kind, and by fervent prayers for them, we may frequently overcome the reluctancy of those, who at first were unwilling to renounce the pleasures of sin, or the interests of the world, were loth to encounter the hardships of the journey, or valued not the promised inheritance.—Though in every thing our dependence must be ultimately placed upon the Lord; yet we may use the services of men as instruments of good to us, and should in our turn aim to be instrumental to the good of others: and thus we may be as eyes, and ears, and hands to each other, for our mutual comfort, and to the glory of our common Lord, (Note, 1 Cor. xii. 15—26.)

We should also be careful, that we begin every undertaking, especially those in which the public and the church of God are concerned, with earnest prayer for direction, assistance and success: and not only should ministers, but magistrates and princes also, be men of prayer, as well as men of activity, integrity, and ability; for whatever talents and instruments are employed, the Lord alone sends prosperity. Finally, in all our supplications at the throne of grace, the many thousands of Israel should be remembered by us.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI.] V. 1. The people complained, &c.] The people were as complainers; that is, they secretly murmured against Moses, and against the Lord.—When we consider the wonderful works wrought for them before their eyes; the excellent laws they had received; the mild government under which they lived; the manner in which their camp was victualled, watered, guarded, and guided; and the tokens which they enjoyed of the Lord's special presence and favour; we are ready to enquire, what grounds of complaint they could have? But some would be dissatisfied that they and their friends were excluded from the government, and the priesthood; some would fret at being kept so long in the wilderness; others would be weary, (though their feet did not swell,) with marching for three days together without resting; and various occasions of discontent would be found among so vast a multitude. Since the affair of the golden calf the people had appeared obedient and tractable, and the rulers liberal and chearful in affording their assistance: but their evil dispositions, though overawed, were not slain; soon therefore they revived, and produced more fatal effects than ever.—The people seem to have been slain, as Nadab and Abihu had been, by fire from the Lord, or by flashes of lightning, probably from the fiery pillar. Though they had several times before murmured against the Lord, they had not been thus punished; for not having known so much of the Lord's will, nor seen so much of his glory, nor experienced so much of his kindness, they were more excusable before than at this time.—Yet even now the fire consumed only some of those who resorted to the uttermost parts of the camp, to associate with the mixt multitude that followed them. (4.)

V. 3. And, &c.] Taberah signifies burning.

V. 4. The mixt multitude, &c.] This lusting for other food melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlick:

6 But now our ſoul is dried away: there is nothing at all, beſides this manna, before our eyes.

7 And the manna was as coriander-ſeed, and the colour thereof as the colour of bdellium.

8 And the people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and baked it in pans, and made cakes of it: and the taſte of it was as the taſte of freſh oil.

9 And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it.

10 Then Moſes heard the people weep throughout their families, every man in the door of his tent: and the anger of the LORD was kindled greatly; Moſes alſo was diſpleaſed.

11 And Moſes ſaid unto the LORD, Wherefore haſt thou afflicted thy ſervant? and wherefore have I not found favour in thy ſight, that thou layeſt the burden of all this people upon me?

12 Have I conceived all this people? have I begotten them, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay unto me, Carry them in thy boſom, (as a nurſing father beareth the ſucking child,) unto the land which thou ſwareſt unto their fathers?

13 Whence ſhould I have fleſh to give unto all this people? for they weep unto me, ſaying, Give us fleſh, that we may eat.

14 I am not able to bear all this people alone, becauſe it is too heavy for me.

15 And if thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of hand, if I have found favour in thy ſight; and let me not ſee my wretchedneſs.

16 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Gather unto me ſeventy men of the elders of Iſrael, whom thou knoweſt to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may ſtand there with thee.

17 And I will come down, and talk with thee there; and I will take of the Spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they ſhall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyſelf alone.

food than manna began among the mixt multitude, but ſpeedily ſpread among the Iſraelites; who were not only guilty of diſcontent, and inordinate deſire of fleſh to eat, but limited the power of God, as if it were impoſſible for him to give them it in their preſent circumſtances. (Pſalm lxxviii. 19—31.)

V. 7—9.] Theſe particulars are here mentioned concerning the manna, in order to illuſtrate the goodneſs of the Lord to Iſrael in giving them, without trouble or expence, ſo ſuitable, nouriſhing, and palatable a food; and which afforded them variety alſo, by the different ways in which it might be prepared. Thus the ingratitude, and unreaſonableneſs of the people in their luſtings were ſtrongly marked.—We do not read that they were ſickly, or feeble, through feeding continually upon manna: though the greedineſs of their appetite for other food drank up their ſpirits, and cauſed "their ſoul to dry away."—And, though it would not have been right to have ſlain all their numerous flocks and herds, neither would the whole have ſatisfied their luſtings: yet, had they not been too covetous, or too deſirous of dainty-meats, they might from time to time have feaſted upon fleſh, by preſenting in turn peace-offerings to the Lord. But to their diſſatisfied mind every thing appeared worthleſs in compariſon of the Egyptian diet, which yet was probably nothing better than the ordinary food of the pooreſt people.

V. 10. Every man, &c.] The former complaining was only a ſecret diſcontent, but this broke out into an open and general diſſatisfaction, and portended a revolt.

V. 11—15.] Moſes had indeed a very difficult and troubleſome work aſſigned him: and the expreſſive ſimilitude he uſed, would be better underſtood by the Iſraelites, than it is by us; being taken from the circumſtance of the fathers carrying the young children during their long marches in the wilderneſs, for which the mothers would generally be unable. Yet he cannot be excuſed in imitating the people in their murmurs againſt the Lord; in complaining of the honours and favours beſtowed upon him; in expoſtulating with God as if he dealt unkindly and unjuſtly with him; in magnifying his own ſervices, and ſpeaking as if he were required to ſupply the people with fleſh; and above all in begging for immediate death, as his only poſſible relief, and the greateſt inſtance of favour which the Lord could ſhew him.

V. 16. Whom thou knoweſt, &c.] Moſes had ſaid, that "he was not able to bear all the people alone." (14.) The Lord therefore graciouſly condeſcended to aſſign him helpers, whom he might chooſe for himſelf, out of ſuch perſons, as he knew to be elders, not only in reſpect of years, but in wiſdom and ability, and in the influence and authority which they poſſeſſed in their ſeveral tribes and diviſions. It is moſt probable, that in conſequence of Jethro's advice, (Exod. xviii. 17—26,) Moſes before this had aſſiſtants in the adminiſtration of juſtice, and in the affairs of civil government. But it had been reſerved to him "to be for the people to Godward." In this department the Lord, on this occaſion, appointed him co-adjutors, endued with ſpecial wiſdom and grace for that ſervice; whoſe aſſiſtance, counſel, influence, and authority, he might uſe in allaying the tumults, quieting the minds, or oppoſing the violence of the people when rebellious. The Sanhedrim, or council of ſeventy perſons, in the after-ages of the Jewiſh nation, ſeems to have been a continuance or imitation of this council aſſigned to Moſes.

V. 17. I will take of the Spirit, &c.] Not that Moſes

18 And

18 And say thou unto the people, Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh: (for ye have wept in the ears of the LORD, saying, Who shall give us flesh to eat? for it was well with us in Egypt:) therefore the LORD will give you flesh, and ye shall eat.

19 Ye shall not eat one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, nor twenty days;

20 But even a whole month, until it come out at your nostrils, and it be loathsome unto you: because that ye have despised the LORD which is among you, and have wept before him, saying, Why came we forth out of Egypt?

21 And Moses said, The people among whom I am are six hundred thousand footmen; and thou hast said, I will give them flesh, that they may eat a whole month.

22 Shall the flocks and the herds be slain for them, to suffice them? or shall all the fish of the sea be gathered together for them, to suffice them?

23 And the LORD said unto Moses, Is the LORD's hand waxed short? thou shalt see now whether my word shall come to pass unto thee, or not.

24 And Moses went out, and told the people the words of the LORD, and gathered the seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them round about the tabernacle.

25 And the LORD came down in a cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the Spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass that, when the Spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, and did not cease.

26 But there remained two of the men in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad and the name of the other Medad: and the Spirit rested upon them, (and they were of them that were written, but went not out unto the tabernacle,) and they prophesied in the camp.

27 And there ran a young man, and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp.

28 And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of Moses, one of his young men, answered, and said, My lord Moses, forbid them.

29 And Moses said unto him, Envieſt thou for my sake? Would God that all the LORD's people were prophets, and that the LORD would put his Spirit upon them.

30 And Moses gat him into the camp, he and the elders of Israel.

31 And there went forth a wind from the LORD, and brought quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp, as it were a day's journey on this side, and as it were a day's journey on the other side, round about the camp, and as it were two cubits high upon the face of the earth.

32 And the people stood up all that day, and all that night, and all the next day, and they gathered the quails: he that gathered least gathered would on this account have less of the influences of the Spirit of truth, wisdom, boldness, power, and holiness: but the elders would be endued with a measure of the same Spirit, that they might be enabled and disposed cordially to concur with him in salutary measures, for the people's good.

V. 18. Sanctify, &c.] The people were about to witness an extraordinary manifestation of the divine power in sending them flesh to eat: but as they had greatly displeased the Lord by lusting for it and tempting him, they might expect a display also of his righteous indignation; except, by humbling themselves, seeking forgiveness of their sins, and being found in a better frame of spirit, they averted the impending storm.

V. 20. Until, &c.] Such plenty was about to be afforded the people, and they would feast on it so greedily, as at last entirely to loath the food they had so inordinately craved.

V. 21—23.] Some suppose that this was only the language of Moses's admiration, and an enquiry into the method how this wonderful provision was to be furnished; (Luke i. 34.) But the Lord's answer implies that there was some mixture of unbelief in it; (Luke i. 18. Mark vi. 37, viii. 4;) which was the more faulty, when he had seen such effects of the divine power in Egypt, and at the Red Sea; nor was the Lord's hand shortened. Moses however seems to have been fully satisfied with this further assurance; without being informed of the way in which the extraordinary provision would be made.

V. 25. They prophesied, &c.] These persons spake in so fluent and edifying a manner, in exhorting the people, and in praising God, and were so raised above themselves in wisdom and utterance, that all around them were sensible they spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost; which was a divine sanction given to their appointment, as Moses's helpers.

V. 26. There, &c.] Some suppose that these two persons were ceremonially unclean; others, that they humbly declined so arduous an office, or were loth to engage in it; but in the camp the Spirit of God singled them out, and they prophesied.

V. 28, 29.] Joshua would have had Eldad and Medad silenced, lest they should occasion a schism, or rival Moses; but Moses was not afraid of such effects from that Spirit which God had put upon him and them.

gathered ten homers; and they ſpread them all abroad for themſelves round about the camp.

33 And while the fleſh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the LORD was kindled againſt the people; and the LORD ſmote the people with a very great plague.

34 And he called the name of that place Kibroth-hattaavah; becauſe there they buried the people that luſted.

35 And

V. 32. Ten homers.] An homer contained near eight buſhels: this is however an immenſe proportion for every individual, or even for every head of a family, and various conjectures have been framed to reduce the quantity. But the whole was intended to illuſtrate the power of God, and the eagerneſs with which the people ſeized upon this proviſion.

V. 34. Kibroth-hattaavah,] Or, the graves of luſt. The ſin of the people did not conſiſt in deſiring ſuitable food, or in eating ſuch as the Lord ſent them; but in eagerly craving unneceſſary indulgence, and intemperately gratifying their appetites when it was put in their way. The Lord, having therefore ſhewn his power by ſending this immenſe ſupply, puniſhed their diſcontent, ingratitude, and luſt, and by a peſtilence executed immediate vengeance on the ringleaders of the rebellion, (Pſalm cvi. 14, 15. Deut. ix. 22.) What multitudes are there in all places, who ſhorten their lives by exceſs of one kind or other; and whoſe ſepulchres might juſtly be called Kibroth-hattaavah, "becauſe there they buried the people "that luſted!"

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Fallen man is a diſcontented creature: having forſaken his proper reſt, no wonder that he feels himſelf uneaſy and wretched, how much ſoever he is proſpered or diſtinguiſhed. Pride, ambition, ſenſuality, covetouſneſs, and malice are diſeaſes of the ſoul, which cannot be abated, but will be increaſed, by indulgence; and they who are under the power of them, like a perſon in a fever, will ever be deſirous of changing their place or poſture; as if that were the cauſe of the diſquietude which ſprings merely from diſtemper. Whilſt this is the caſe, every providence and appointment of God will excite the ſecret or the open complaint: and though diſcontent may have and will have its degrees and paroxiſms; yet there is no cure, till the ſoul return to its reſt, in the knowledge, love, and favour of God, and in a cordial reliance on his wiſdom and acquieſcence in his will. The Lord ſees and hears, and is diſpleaſed at our murmurs, though concealed from men: the greater kindneſs we have received from him, the ſeverer correction we may expect when we thus offend: and they, who at preſent eſcape his chaſtening rod, will at length experience the dreadful effects of his fiery indignation. Indeed we all have been, and are, ſo culpable in this reſpect, as well as in others, that we have reaſon to admire and adore his patience with us, that we have been ſpared whilſt others have been puniſhed.—Sinners are under much greater obligations to their praying friends, than they are aware of; and many will cry to them to adviſe them and pray for them in their diſtreſſes and dangers, who deſpiſed and hated them before. But it is eſpecially happy for us, that Jeſus ever liveth to make interceſſion for us, when in our troubles we cry unto him for help, and to quench the fire of divine wrath which our ſins have kindled. Yet alas! how ſoon do we forget the ſmart and terror of our chaſtiſements, and relapſe into our former offences with ſtill deeper aggravation, and when we are ſurrounded with mercies, we are capable of overlooking them all, and of deeming one ſlight inconvenience an intolerable grievance! On the other hand, forgetting the anguiſh under which we have groaned in ſome former ſituation, from which we are now delivered, (Ex. i. 14. ii. 23, 24. iii. 7—9.) we can murmur and fret at the abſence of one imaginary or worthleſs advantage, which we then poſſeſſed: and ſcarcely any of our repinings ariſe from the want of things really needful and proper for us; but from the want of ſuch things, as are in one way or other fuel to our luſts. Nay, the very choiceſt bleſſings which God can beſtow, even the very goſpel of our ſalvation, will be ſlighted and deſpiſed by us, if we have not every thing exactly to our mind, when we are under the influence of this evil diſeaſe. We can readily blame and expreſs our aſtoniſhment at the perverſeneſs of the Iſraelites: but their conduct is only a picture of our heart, a fair ſpecimen of human nature; and we have every one of us murmured and complained before now, with as little reaſon, and with as much folly and ingratitude as they did. Let us then watch our own hearts, let us repreſs the firſt emotions of diſcontent and inordinate deſire; let us conſider frequently how many unmerited mercies we worthleſs ſinners enjoy; let us pray earneſtly for grace to teach us, "to be ſatisfied with ſuch things as "we have;" and to refer to the wiſdom, love, and faithfulneſs of God the choice of the kind, meaſure, time, and manner of receiving all our temporal ſupplies.—In general the Lord ſees it beſt for thoſe whom he loves, to be confined to the neceſſaries of life, to be poor, to fare hardly, and to receive their ſupply from day to day. And whatever the world, or the mixed multitude of mere profeſſors, may think; an inheritance in heaven, and proviſion by the way, ſought daily by prayer, and received in gratitude from our heavenly Father's love, though mean and ſcanty, is "better than the "riches of many wicked;" has in it more ſweetneſs, and leſs vexation and temptation. But if the Lord ſometimes ſurround his people with plenty, it is not for an occaſion of exceſs, but for a trial of their temperance and moderation, and that they may have a ſufficiency for every good work: and to abuſe ſuch abundance proves a carnal ſenſual mind, and will expoſe a man to the heavy wrath of God, (Luke xvi. 19—26.) Againſt ſuch luxury and exceſs every true Chriſtian ſhould, by his example at leaſt, enter his proteſt: but alas! too many are more apt to catch the infection of luſting and ſelf-indulgence from the world around them, or from the more worthleſs kind of profeſſors, than to manifeſt a decided diſapprobation of it: and many of us, though ſurrounded with far greater variety than the Iſraelites were, are ready to complain, that we are out-done in wealth, ſplendour, and the pride of life by our neighbours: and perhaps at ſome times are ready even to grow weary of our pilgrimage; to think that it was well with us when when we were in Egypt; to allow a hankering after forſaken pleaſures, almoſt to covet our former bondage, and to enquire why we came forth thence? If we are conſcious that this hath been the ſecret thought of our heart, let us repent without delay, and intreat God that it may be forgiven; leſt he ſend us thoſe things which we have inordinately deſired, and with his heavy indignation render them a curſe to us: (1 Cor. x. 6. 10—13.) It is not for want of power or love, that he doth not at all times indulge the deſires of his people; but becauſe his wiſdom ſees that thoſe things which they deſire as a bleſſing would be injurious to them; in which, if they do not acquieſce, he will perhaps be induced to convince them by their bitter experience that it was ſo.—We have continually cauſe to obſerve that the moſt eminent ſaints were evidently defective in the exerciſe of their ſtrongeſt graces; and even the meek and patient Moſes manifeſted a diſtruſt, peeviſhneſs, and want of ſubmiſſion, which can by no means be excuſed, though it may eaſily be accounted for. Hence we may learn that none have any thing to truſt in but the mercy of God, and the merits of Chriſt, and to watch and pray leſt we enter into temptation; and ſeeing eminent poſts are confeſſedly ſuch heavy burdens, to be contentedly obſcure, and quietly to bear our lighter croſs: nor let us forget that death is ſeldom wiſhed for, but at a time, when we are at leaſt in a frame to meet it properly and comfortably.—But the Lord is very gracious: he conſiders the trials and the weakneſs of his people; and will both forgive their ſins, commune with them, ſend them help in their troubles, and out-do their largeſt hopes and expectations. He can eaſily multiply the number, as well as increaſe the ability, of his miniſters: and though the ſpirit, which naturally is in us luſteth to envy, both in behalf of ourſelves, our friends, and our party, and diſpoſes us to wiſh to ſilence thoſe who follow not with us, (Luke ix. 49, 50;) yet the Lord gives more grace, and they who are wiſely zealous for his glory, and truly love the ſouls of men, will rejoice in the increaſe of uſeful inſtruments, though they ſhould rival and eclipſe themſelves, (John iii. 26—30.) If all the preſent number of the Lord's people were renderedp rophets, real, able, authoriſed miniſters of Chriſt, by the ſupply of the Spirit of Chriſt; the world is wide enough, and there might be work enough for them all in calling ſinners to repentance towards God, and faith in the Lord Jeſus. Finally let us ſeek for thoſe pleaſures, which ſatisfy but never ſurfeit, and which will endure and increaſe for evermore.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII.] V. 1. Miriam, &c.] Miriam is here mentioned firſt; becauſe probably ſhe was the firſt, and the moſt criminal, in this tranſgreſſion. There are two Ethiopias mentioned in Scripture; the one in Africa ſouth of Egypt, the other in Aſia which is the ſame with ſome part of Arabia. Zipporah, being a Midianite, is ſuppoſed to have been called an Ethiopian by way of contempt. It is probable that the people thought that Zipporah had too much influence with Moſes, and were piqued, that they had not been conſulted in the choice of the elders: and it is not unlikely that there had been ſome private jar between Miriam and Zipporah, which had given occaſion to this diſſatisfaction. Perhaps they thought his marriage to a woman of another nation a diſgrace to him; and that he ought to put her away, and marry an Iſraelite.

V. 3. Was very meek, &c.] Moſes, writing as moved by the Holy Ghoſt, impartially records his own faults, and unreſervedly ſpeaks of the grace of God beſtowed upon him. Being thus ſingularly meek, he took no notice of the affair, to reſent it or to puniſh any perſons for their miſconduct.

V. 6—8.] Aaron and Miriam had been ſummoned to the tabernacle, probably by an audible voice from the cloud, where the Lord thus expoſtulated with them. Occaſionally by dreams and viſions the Lord made himſelf known, and revealed his will, to other prophets: but to Moſes, he ſpake openly and conſtantly, as a man with his friend. He alſo was admitted to "behold the ſimilitude of the Lord;" the "expreſs image of his perſon," even his eternal Son appearing in viſible glory. This Aaron and Miriam knew, and could not deny: and as Moſes had been honoured and favoured ſo far above them, they ſhould have been afraid of oppoſing him.

V. 9.

8 With him will I ſpeak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark ſpeeches; and the ſimilitude of the LORD ſhall he behold: wherefore then were ye not afraid to ſpeak againſt my ſervant Moſes?

9 And the anger of the LORD was kindled againſt them, and he departed.

10 And the cloud departed from off the tabernacle; and, behold, Miriam became leprous, white as ſnow: and Aaron looked upon Miriam, and, behold, ſhe was leprous.

11 And Aaron ſaid unto Moſes, Alas! my lord, I beſeech thee, lay not the ſin upon us, wherein we have done fooliſhly, and wherein we have ſinned.

12 Let her not be as one dead, of whom the fleſh is half conſumed, when he cometh out of his mother's womb.

13 And Moſes cried unto the LORD, ſaying, Heal her now, O God, I beſeech thee.

14 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, If her father had but ſpit in her face, ſhould ſhe not be aſhamed ſeven days? Let her be ſhut out from the camp ſeven days, and after that let her be received in again.

15 And Miriam was ſhut out from the camp ſeven days: and the people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again.

16 And afterward the people removed from Hazeroth, and pitched in the wilderneſs of Paran.

V. 9, 10.] The removal of the cloud expreſſed the Lord's diſpleaſure, as if he would leave ſuch a provoking people; and Miriam as the ringleader became leprous: though Aaron in honour of the prieſthood was ſpared; being ſeverely rebuked in her puniſhment, and in being the prieſt appointed to examine and pronounce her leprous.

V. 14, 15.] If Miriam had provoked her father to diſgrace her by ſome marked expreſſion of anger, ſhe would have expreſſed her ſorrow and ſhame on the occaſion by a temporary ſolitude. A ſimilar conduct under the divine rebuke was preſcribed her. When ſhe honoured God in leading the praiſes of Iſrael, (Exod. xv,) ſhe was honoured as one of the chief ornaments of the nation: but now for her contempt of God ſhe is lightly eſteemed, and even expelled the camp as if ſhe were a diſgrace to it!—In the mean time the people tarried for her; both as a rebuke to them, who were diſpoſed to join ſuch oppoſition to Moſes and to the Lord; and as a decent reſpect for Miriam.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They, who are eſpecially honoured of God, muſt expect the ſevereſt and moſt repeated trials from men; and even from thoſe whom they moſt love, and to whom they have been moſt uſeful. The contentions among brethren, and among believers are not the only effects of remaining pride, ambition, envy, and ſelfiſhneſs; but ſhould be traced back to the malicious policy of Satan, who thus deviſes to diſgrace the goſpel, and to weaken the hands and diſcourage the hearts of its beſt friends: and when the mind is diſpoſed for ſuch conteſts, the moſt frivolous and groundleſs pretences will ſuffice to excite or to vindicate them. They who are expoſed to ſuch provocations will need much meekneſs, and waiting ſimply upon the Lord will from him receive it: and the leſs anxious we are to juſtify or avenge ourſelves, the more certainly will the Lord plead our cauſe, and clear our character from every unjuſt aſperſion.—As it was ſo criminal and dangerous to oppoſe the faithful and honoured ſervant of the Lord: how dreadful will be their doom who diſhonour, deſpiſe, or oppoſe "his beloved Son, in whom he is well pleaſed!" (Heb. iii. 1—6.)—They, who exalt themſelves, and ambitiouſly purſue honours, will be abaſed, and fall into diſgrace if not into deſtruction; and they, who ſpeak againſt the Lord's ſervants, may ſoon be conſtrained to make the moſt humiliating ſubmiſſions and ſupplications to them, and to confer on them the moſt honourable titles and commendations. But it is well when rebukes produce penitent confeſſions and retractations: ſuch offenders, though corrected and diſgraced, ſhall be pardoned: the Lord's people, though they have been injured by them, will readily pray for them with all earneſtneſs: Jeſus himſelf will intercede for them: they ſhall in due time be reſtored to their comfortable fellowſhip with God, and his church, and with renewed ſtrength purſue their heavenly pilgrimage. But it was happy for Aaron, and it is well for us, that the church of God hath ſuch an High Prieſt as "became us, who is holy, harmleſs, and undefiled, ſepa-"rate from ſinners, and made higher than the heavens." (Heb. vii. 25—27.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII.] V. 2. Send thou men, &c.] The Iſraelites were arrived at the ſouthern border of the land; and might have gone up and taken immediate poſſeſſion, had not this breach intervened. We find elſewhere, (Deut. i. 20—23.) that the people firſt propoſed to Moſes this deſign of ſpying out the land; who not ſuſpecting the diſtruſt and unbelief which had ſuggeſted it, was pleaſed with the propoſal and conſulted the Lord about it. He permitted it to be ſo, and gave orders for the ſpies to be ſent; becauſe he had been provoked by their former rebellions, and in order to a further diſcovery of their wickedneſs unto the children of Israel: of every tribe of their fathers shall ye send a man, every one a ruler among them.

3 And Moses, by the commandment of the LORD, sent them from the wilderness of Paran: all those men were heads of the children of Israel.

4 And these were their names: Of the tribe of Reuben; Shammua, the son of Zaccur.

5 Of the tribe of Simeon; Shaphat, the son of Hori.

6 Of the tribe of Judah; Caleb the son of Jephunneh.

7 Of the tribe of Issachar; Igal, the son of Joseph.

8 Of the tribe of Ephraim; Oshea, the son of Nun.

9 Of the tribe of Benjamin; Palti, the son of Raphu.

10 Of the tribe of Zebulun: Gaddiel, the son of Sodi.

11 Of the tribe of Joseph, namely, of the tribe of Manasseh; Gaddi, the son of Susi.

12 Of the tribe of Dan; Ammiel, the son of Gemalli.

13 Of the tribe of Asher; Sethur, the son of Michael.

14 Of the tribe of Naphtali; Nahbi, the son of Vophsi.

15 Of the tribe of Gad; Geuel, the son of Machi.

16 These are the names of the men which Moses sent to spy out the land. And Moses called Oshea the son of Nun, Jehoshua.

17 And Moses sent them to spy out the land of Canaan, and said unto them, Get you up this way southward, and go up into the mountain;

18 And see the land what it is; and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak, few or many;

19 And what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad; and what cities they be that they dwell in, whether in tents, or in strong holds;

20 And what the land is, whether it be fat or lean, whether there be wood therein or not: and be ye of good courage, and bring of the fruit of the land. (Now the time was the time of the first-ripe grapes.)

21 So they went up, and searched the land from the wilderness of Zin unto Rehob, as men come to Hamath.

22 And they ascended by the south, and came unto Hebron, where Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai, the children of Anak, were, (Now Hebron was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt.)

23 And they came unto the brook of Eshcol, and cut down from thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bare it between two upon a staff; and they brought
